2. To strike with wonder or astonishment by something sudden, unexpected, or remarkable, either in conduct, words, or story, or by the appearance of something unusual. Thus we are surprised at desperate acts of heroism, or at the narration of wonderful events, or at the sight of things of uncommon magnitude or curious structure.—3. To confuse; to throw the mind into disorder by something suddenly presented to the view or to the mind.

Up he starts, discover'd and surpris'd. Milton.

SURPRISE, n. The act of coming upon unawares, or of taking suddenly and without preparation. The fort was taken by surprise.—2. The state of being taken unexpectedly.—3. An emotion excited by something happening suddenly and unexpectedly, as something novel told or presented to view. Nothing could exceed his surprise at the narration of these adventures. It expresses less than wonder and astonishment.—4.† A dish with nothing in it.

SURPRISED, pp. Come upon or taken unawares; struck with something novel or unexpected.

SURPRIS'ER, n. One who surprises.

SURPRISING, ppr. Falling on or taking suddenly or unawares; striking with something novel; taking by a sudden or unexpected attack.—2. a. Exciting surprise; extraordinary; of a nature to excite wonder and astonishment; as, surprising bravery; surprising patience; a surprising escape from danger.

SURPRISINGLY, adv. In a manner or degree that excites surprise. He exerted himself surprisingly to save the life of his companion.

SURPRISINGNESS, n. State of being surprising.

SUR'QUEDRY,† n. [sur and Norm. Fr. cuider, to think. Qu. Sp. cuidar, to heed. See HEED.] Overweening pride; arrogance.

SURREBUT', v. i. [sur and rebut.] In legal pleadings, to reply, as a plaintiff, to a defendant's rebutter.

SURREBUT'TER, n. The plaintiff's reply in pleading to a defendant's rebutter.

SURREIN'ED,† a. Overridden or injured.

SURREJOIN', v. i. [sur and rejoin.] In legal pleadings, to reply, as a plaintiff to a defendant's rejoinder.

SURREJOIN'DER, n. The answer of a plaintiff to a defendant's rejoinder.

SURREN'DER, v. t. [Fr. se rendre, to yield. Surrender is probably a corruption of se rendre.] 1. To yield to the power of another; to give or deliver up possession upon compulsion or demand; as, to surrender one's person to an enemy, or to commissioners of bankrupt; to surrender a fort or a ship. [To surrender up is not elegant.]—2. To yield; to give up; to resign in favour of another; as, to surrender a right or privilege; to surrender a place or an office.—3. To give up; to resign; as, to surrender the breath.—4. In law, to yield an estate, as a tenant, into the hands of the lord for such purposes as are expressed in the act.—5. To yield to any influence, passion, or power; as, to surrender one's self to grief, to despair, to indolence, or to sleep.

SURREN'DER, v. i. To yield; to give up one's self into the power of another. The enemy seeing no way of escape, surrendered at the first summons.

SURREN'DER, n. The act of yielding or resigning one's person or the possession of something, into the power of another; as, the surrender of a castle to an enemy; the surrender of a right or of claims.—2. A yielding or giving up.—3. In law, the yielding up of an estate for life, or for years, to him that has the immediate estate in reversion or remainder, and is either in fact or in law.—Surrenders in fact, must be made by deed which is the allowable evidence.—A surrender in law, is one which may be implied, and generally has reference to estates or tenancies from year to year, &c.—Surrender of tithes, in Scots law, the submission of tithes made to the crown. [See TEINDS.]

SURREN'DERED, pp. Yielded or delivered to the power of another; given up; resigned.

SURRENDEREE', n. In law, a person to whom the lord grants surrendered land; the cestuy que use.

SURREN'DERING, ppr. Yielding or giving up to the power of another; resigning.

SURREN'DEROR, n. The tenant who surrenders an estate into the hands of his lord.

> Till the admittance of cestuy que use, the lord takes notice of the surrenderor as his tenant. Blackstone.

SURREN'DRY, n. A surrender. [Surrender is the most elegant and best authorized.]

SURREP'TION, n. [L. surreptus, surrepo; sub and repo, to creep.] A coming unperceived; a stealing upon insensibly. [Little used.]

SURREPTI''TIOUS, a. [L. surreptitius, supra.] Done by stealth or without proper authority; made or introduced fraudulently; as, a surreptitious passage in a manuscript.

> A correct copy of the Dunciad, the many surreptitious ones have rendered necessary. Letter to Publisher of Dunciad.

SURREPTI''TIOUSLY, adv. By stealth; without authority; fraudulently.

SUR'ROGATE, n. [L. surrogatus, surrogo, subrogo; sub and rogo, to propose. Rogo, to ask or propose, signifies primarily to reach, put, or thrust forward; and subrogo is to put or set in the place of another.] In a general sense, a deputy; a delegate; a substitute; a person appointed to act for another, particularly the deputy of an ecclesiastical judge, most commonly of a bishop or his chancellor.

SUR'ROGATE, v. t. To put in the place of another. [Little used.]

SUR'ROGATESHIP, n. The office of surrogate.

SURROGA'TION, n. The act of substituting one person in the place of another. [Little used.]

SURROGA'TUM, n. [L.] In Scots law, that which comes in place of something else.

SURROUND', v. t. [sur and round, Fr. rond.] 1. To encompass; to environ; to inclose on all sides; as, to surround a city. They surrounded a body of the enemy.—2. To lie or be on all sides of; as, a wall or ditch surrounds the city.

SURROUND'ED, pp. Encompassed; inclosed; beset.

SURROUND'ING, ppr. Encompassing; inclosing; lying on all sides of.

SURROUND'ING, n. An encompassing.

SUR'ROY, or SOUTH'ROY, n. In her., the ancient title of the king-at-arms, for the south ports of England, now called Clarencieux.

SUR'SHARP, n. In music, the fifth tetrachord above.

SURSOL'ID, n. [sur and solid, or surdesolid.] A name given by the early algebraists to the fifth power of a number; or the product of the fourth multiplication of a number considered as the root. Thus $3 \times 3 = 9$, the square of 3, and $9 \times 3 = 27$, the third power or cube, and $27 \times 3 = 81$, the fourth power, and $81 \times 3 = 243$, which is the sursolid of 3.

SURSOL'ID, a. Denoting the fifth power.—Sursolid problem, is that which cannot be resolved but by curves of a higher kind than the conic sections. [Little used.]

SURTOUT, n. [Fr. sur-tout, over all.] Originally a man's coat to be worn over his other garments, but in modern usage, an upper coat with wide skirts reaching down to near the knees, and enveloping the thighs.—2. In her., an escutcheon of pretence, placed upon the centre of a shield of arms, is often said to be in surtout.

SUR'TURBRAND, n. Fibrous brown coal or bituminous wood; so called in Iceland.

SUR'VEILLANCE, n. [Fr.] Watch; inspection; oversight.

SURVENE, v. t. [Fr. survenir; sur and venir, to come.] To supervene; to come as an addition; as, a suppuration that survenes lethargies. [Little used.]

SURVEY', v. t. [Norm. surveer, surveoir; sur and Fr. voir, to see or look, contracted from L. video, videre.] 1. To inspect or take a view of; to overlook; to view with attention, as from a high place; as, to stand on a hill, and survey the surrounding country. It denotes more particular and deliberate attention than look or see.—2. To view with a scrutinizing eye; to examine.

> With such alter'd looks,
> All pale and speechless, he survey'd me round. Dryden.

3. To examine with reference to condition, situation, and value; as, to survey a building, to determine its value and exposure to loss by fire.—4. To determine the boundaries and superficial extent of fields, estates, tracts of ground, &c.; to determine the form and dimensions of the plans of towns, the courses of roads, rivers, &c.—5. In milit. affairs, to ascertain and represent on paper the roads, rivers, hills and marshes of a country, in order to obtain a knowledge of the positions which may be occupied as fields of battle, or as quarters, &c.—6. To examine or ascertain the position and distances of objects on the shore of the sea, the depth of water, nature of the bottom, and whatever may be necessary to facilitate the navigation of the waters and render the entrance into harbours, sounds, and rivers easy and safe. Thus officers are employed to survey the coast and make charts of the same.—7. To examine and ascertain, as the boundaries and royalties of a manor, the tenure of the tenants, and the rent and value of the same.—8. To examine and ascertain, as the state of agriculture.

SUR'VEY, n. [formerly accented on the last syllable.] 1. An attentive view; a look or looking with care. He took a survey of the whole landscape.

> Under his proud survey the city lies. Denham.

2. A particular view; an examination of all the parts or particulars of a thing, with a design to ascertain the condition, quantity, or quality; as, a survey of the stores, provisions, or munitions of a ship. So also a survey of roads and bridges is made by proper officers; a survey of buildings is intended to ascertain their condition, value, and exposure to fire. A survey of land, as of fields, estates, tracts of country, &c., consists in determining by measurement, laying down angles and taking levels, the dimensions, forms, and boundaries, of such portions of ground, and representing the same upon paper [See SURVEYING.] A survey of a harbour, sound, or coast comprehends an examination of the distance and bearing of points of land, isles, shoals, depth of water, course of channels, &c. A survey of agriculture includes a view of the state of property, buildings, fences, modes of cultivation, crops, gardens, orchards, woods, live-stock, &c. And in general, survey denotes a particular view and examination of anything.—3. In the U. States, a district for the collection of the customs, under the inspection and authority of a particular officer.—Trigonometrical survey, a survey on a large scale, for determining the length of an arc of the meridian, from which the true figure and magnitude of the earth may be ascertained; for determining the geographical position of the principal places of a country, with a view to give greater accuracy to maps and charts; and for determining the difference of longitude between two observations, as those of Greenwich and Paris. [See TRIGONOMETRICAL.]

SURVEYAL, n. Survey; a viewing.

SURVEYED, pp. Viewed with attention; examined; measured.

SURVEYING, ppr. Viewing with attention; examining particularly; measuring.

SURVEYING, n. In practical math., measuring and delineating portions of the surface of the earth with their divisions and features, and computing of their extent. [See TRIGONOMETRICAL.] The principal instruments employed by the surveyor are, the chain for measuring linear distances, commonly called Gunter's chain; the theodolite for the measurement of angles, accompanied by a compass and needle, for determining the bearings; the plane table, the cross-staff or optical square; rods for measuring offsets; levelling staves; a spirit level; and prismatic compasses. In the higher departments of surveying, instruments of the most refined description must be employed, and processes of calculation deduced from mathematics of the highest order.—Marine surveying, consists in determining the forms of coasts and harbours, the positions and distances of objects on the shore, of islands, rocks and shoals, the entrances of rivers, the depth of water, nature of the bottom. [See SOUNDINGS.] — Military surveying, consists chiefly in ascertaining and representing on paper the principal features of a country, as roads, rivers, hills, marshes, with the view of ascertaining the best positions for fields of battle, or for quarters; and also the facilities which may be afforded for the march of an army.

SURVEYOR, n. An overseer; one placed to superintend others.—2. One that views and examines for the purpose of ascertaining the condition, quantity, or quality of anything; as, a surveyor of land; a surveyor of highways; surveyors of ordnance.—Surveyors of the navy, officers, belonging to the navy board, who are invested with the charge of building and repairing ships of the navy, at the different dockyards.

SURVEYOR-GEN'ERAL, n. A principal surveyor; as, the surveyor-general of the king's manors, or of woods and parks in England.—2. In the U. States, the chief surveyor of lands; as, the surveyor-general of the United States, or of a particular state.

SURVEYORSHIP, n. The office of a surveyor.

SURVIEW',† v. t. To survey.

SUR'VIEW,† n. Survey.

SURVISE,† v. t. [Fr. sur and viser.] To look over.

SURVI'VAL, n. [See SURVIVE.] A living beyond the life of another person, thing, or event; an outliving.

SURVI'VANCE, n. Survivorship. [Little used.]

SURVIVE, v. t. [Fr. survivre; sur and vivre, to live; It. sopravvivere; Sp. sobrevivir; L. supervivo.] 1. To outlive; to live beyond the life of another; as, the wife survives her husband; or a husband survives his wife.—2. To outlive anything else; to live beyond any event. Who would wish to survive the ruin of his country? Many men survive their usefulness or the regular exercise of their reason.

SURVIVE, v. i. To remain alive.

> Try pleasure,
> Which when no other enemy survives.
> Still conquers all the conquerors. Denham.

SURVI'VENCY, n. A surviving; survivorship.

SURVIVER, n. One that outlives another. [See SURVIVOR.]

SURVIVING, ppr. Outliving; living beyond the life of another, or beyond the time of some event.—2. a. Remaining alive; yet living; as, surviving friends or relatives.

SURVIVOR, n. One who outlives another.—2. In law, the longer liver of two joint tenants, or of any two persons who have a joint interest in anything.

SURVIVORSHIP, n. The state of outliving another.—2. In law, the right of a joint tenant or other person who has a joint interest in an estate, to take the whole estate upon the death of the other. When there are more than two joint tenants, the whole estate remains to the last survivor by right of survivorship.—2. In the doctrine of annuities, a question of life contingencies is said to be one of survivorship, when a reversionary benefit is contingent upon the circumstance of some life or lives surviving some other life or lives, in such a manner that it shall be necessary to calculate the chance of one individual dying before another in every year of life. Thus, the question of finding the premium of an assurance on the death of A, provided B die first, is one of survivorship. Questions of this sort are readily solved by means of tables constructed for the purpose.

SUS, n. [L.] The generic name for the animal which is well known by the name of the hog. [See SUIDÆ.]

SUSCEPTIBIL'ITY, n. [from susceptible.] The quality of admitting or receiving either something additional, or some change, affection, or passion; or the tendency to admit or receive; as, the susceptibility of colour in a body; susceptibility of culture or refinement; susceptibility of love or desire, or of impressions.

waved or spotted with white. It is found in Bohemia, and as far north as Siberia, and has a particular taste for flesh, not sparing even its own species There are some species in America. It is named also the earless marmot.

SUSPECT', v. t. [L. suspectus, suspicio; sub and specio, to see or view.] 1. To mistrust; to imagine or have a slight opinion that something exists, but without proof, and often upon weak evidence or no evidence at all. We suspect not only from fear, jealousy, or apprehension of evil, but in modern usage, we suspect things which give us no apprehension.

> Nothing makes a man suspect much, more than to know little. Bacon.
> From her hand I could suspect no ill. Milton.

2. To imagine to be guilty, but upon slight evidence or without proof. When a theft is committed, we are apt to suspect a person who is known to have been guilty of stealing; but we often suspect a person who is innocent of the crime.—3. To hold to be uncertain; to doubt; to mistrust; as, to suspect the truth of a story.—4. To hold to be doubtful. The veracity of a historian, and the impartiality of a judge, should not be suspected.—5. To conjecture.

SUSPECT' v. i. To imagine guilt.

> If I suspect without cause, why then let me be your jest. Shak.

SUSPECT', a. Doubtful. [Not much used.]

SUSPECT',† n. Suspicion.

SUSPECT'ABLE, a. That may be suspected. [Little used.]

SUSPEC'TANT, or SPEC'TANT, ppr. In her., looking upwards, the nose bendways.

SUSPECT'ED, pp. Imagined without proof; mistrusted.

SUSPECT'EDLY, adv. So as to excite suspicion; so as to be suspected.

SUSPECT'EDNESS, n. State of being suspected or doubted.

SUSPECT'ER, n. One who suspects.

SUSPECT'FUL, a. Apt to suspect or mistrust.

SUSPECT'ING, ppr. Imagining without evidence; mistrusting upon slight grounds.

SUSPECT'LESS, a. Not suspecting; having no suspicion.—2. Not suspected; not mistrusted.

SUSPEND', v. t. [Fr. suspendre; L. suspendo; sub and pendo, to hang.] 1. To hang; to attach to something above; as, to suspend a ball by a thread; to suspend the body by a cord or by hooks; a needle suspended by a lodestone.—2. To make to depend on. God hath suspended the promise of eternal life on the condition of faith and obedience.—3. To interrupt; to intermit; to cause to cease for a time.

> The guard nor fights nor flies; their fate so near
> At once suspends their courage and their fear. Denham.

4. To stay; to delay; to hinder from proceeding for a time.

> Suspend your indignation against my brother. Shak.
> I suspend their doom. Milton.

5. To hold in a state undetermined; as, to suspend one's choice or opinion. —6. To debar from any privilege, from the execution of an office, or from the enjoyment of income.

> Good men should not be suspended from the exercise of their ministry and deprived of their livelihood, for ceremonies which are acknowledged indifferent. Sanderson.

7. To cause to cease for a time from operation or effect; as, to suspend the habeas corpus act.—To suspend an officer in the army, is to deprive him, on account of some misconduct, of his pay and render him incapable of exercising the duties of his office, during the pleasure of the commander-in-chief.—To suspend an officer in the navy, is to put him under arrest for some misconduct. [See SUSPENSION.]

SUSPEND'ED, pp. Hung up; made to depend on; caused to cease for a time; delayed; held undetermined; prevented from executing an office or enjoying a right.

SUSPEND'ER, n. One that suspends.—2. Suspenders, plur. straps worn for holding up pantaloons, &c.; braces. [American, or local.]

SUSPEND'ING, ppr. Hanging up; making to depend on; intermitting; causing to cease for a time; holding undetermined; debarring from action or right.

SUSPENSA'TION, n. A temporary cessation.

SUSPENSE, n. (suspens'.) [L. suspensus.] A state of uncertainty; indetermination; indecision. A man's mind is in suspense, when it is balancing the weight of different arguments or considerations, or when it is uncertain respecting facts unknown, or events not in his own power.

Ten days the prophet in suspense remain'd. Denham.

2. Stop; cessation for a time.

A cool suspense from pleasure or from pain. Pope.

3. In law, suspension; a temporary cessation of a man's right; as when the rent or other profits of land cease by unity of possession of land and rent.

SUSPENSE, a. (suspens'.) Held from proceeding; held in doubt or expectation. [Little used.]

SUSPENSIBIL'ITY, n. The capacity of being suspended or sustained from sinking; as, the suspensibility of indurated clay in water.

SUSPENS'IBLE, a. Capable of being suspended or held from sinking.

SUSPEN'SION, n. [Fr. from L. suspensio. See SUSPEND.] 1. The act of hanging up, or of causing to hang by being attached to something above.—2. The act of making to depend on any thing for existence or taking place; as, the suspension of payment on the performance of a condition.—3. The act of delaying; delay; as, the suspension of a criminal's execution; called a respite or reprieve.—4. Act of withholding or balancing the judgment; forbearance of determination; as, the suspension of opinion, of judgment, of decision, or determination. Suspension of judgment often proceeds from doubt or ignorance of facts.—5. Temporary cessation; interruption; intermission; as, the suspension of labour or of study; the suspension of pain.—6. Temporary privation of powers, authority, or rights; usually intended as a censure or punishment; as, the suspension of an ecclesiastic or minister for some fault. This may be merely a suspension of his office, or it may be both of his office and his income. A military or naval officer's suspension takes place when he is arrested.—7. Prevention or interruption of operation; as, the suspension of the habeas corpus act.—8. In rhet., a keeping of the hearer in doubt and in attentive expectation of what is to follow, or what is to be the inference or conclusion from the arguments or observations.—9. In law, the temporary stop of a man's right, as when a seignory, rent, or other profit out of land, by reason of the unity of possession of the seignory, rent, &c., and of the land out of which they issue, lies dormant for a time.—10. In Scots law, the name of a process in the supreme civil or criminal court, by which execution or diligence on a sentence or decree is stayed until the judgment of the supreme court is obtained on the point. In civil causes, the party complaining presents a bill of suspension to the lord ordinary on the bills, setting forth that diligence has been used or threatened in virtue of the decree or warrant to which he objects, and after stating the circumstances of the case, and his cause of complaint, his bill concludes that the diligence or execution in question ought to be suspended, and therefore he prays for letters of suspension in the premises, and offers caution to implement the decree of which he complains, and to pay the expenses of the process, if the court shall so decide. If the lord ordinary thinks that the complainer has made out a sufficient prima facie case, he pronounces an interlocutor, sisting execution in the meanwhile, and appointing the bill of suspension to be answered. Afterwards, the lord ordinary resumes consideration of the bill along with the answers (if lodged), and if he still thinks that there is ground for the objection to the diligence or execution, he passes the bill of suspension, or grants warrant for expeding letters of suspension at the signet, whereby the cause is brought formally into the court of session. If, on the other hand, the lord ordinary be of opinion, either on considering the bill itself, or on resuming consideration of it with answers, that there is no just ground of complaint, he refuses the bill, and the diligence or execution is in consequence allowed to proceed. His decision, however, is subject to the review of the court. [See BILL.]—11. In mech., points of suspension, in a balance, are the points in the axis or beam where the weights are applied, or from which they are suspended.—12. In music, every sound of a chord to a given base, which is continued to another base, is a suspension.—Suspension of arms, in war, a short truce or cessation of operations agreed on by the commanders of the contending parties, as for burying the dead, making proposals for surrender, or for peace, &c.—Suspension and interdict, in Scots law, a judicial remedy competent in the bill chamber of the court of session, where there has been no decree, nor any proceeding which can issue in a decree, but where the object is to stop or interdict some act or to prevent some encroachment on property or possession, or in general to stay any unlawful proceeding. The remedy is applied for by a bill of suspension and interdict. [See INTERDICT.]—Suspension and liberation. In Scots law, where a debtor has been incarcerated in consequence of diligence on a decree, or on any other warrant of incarceration, he may apply in the bill chamber for redress by a bill of suspension and liberation, and if he can satisfy the lord ordinary on the bills that his imprisonment has been wrongful or illegal, the bill of suspension and liberation, after it has been answered, will be passed. The procedure in this case is analogous to that in ordinary suspensions.

SUSPEN'SION-BRIDGE, n. A structure which is hung and stretched across some chasm, water-course, or other space, over which it is designed to form a passage. In modern structures of this sort, the leading features for the most part consist in fixing securely, in the two opposite banks, the extremities of strong chains, which, being carried over piers or pillars, reach across the space to be passed in such a manner that each portion of chain intercepted between two piers is allowed naturally to assume, by its weight, the figure of the curve named the catenarian. From these chains, a platform for the roadway is suspended by means of a series of equidistant vertical rods. The largest suspension bridge is that over the Menai Strait, the distance between the points of suspension being 560 feet.

SUSPENS'IVE, a. Doubtful.—Suspensive conditions, in Scots law, conditions precedent, or conditions without the purification of which the contract cannot be completed.

SUSPENS'OR, SUSPENS'ORY, n. In sur., a bag-truss. It is applied in cases of hernia.—2. In bot., a name given to the ends by which the embryo of some plants is suspended from the foramen or opening of the seed.

SUSPENS'ORY, a. That suspends; suspending; as, a suspensory muscle.

SUSPENS'ORY, n. That which suspends or holds up; a truss.

SUS'PICABLE,† a. [L. suspicor.] That may be suspected; liable to suspicion.

SUSPI''CION, n. [Fr. from L. suspicio. See SUSPECT.] The act of suspecting; the sentiment or passion which is excited by signs of evil without sufficient proof; the imagination of the existence of something without proof, or upon very slight evidence, or upon no evidence at all. Suspicion often proceeds from the apprehension of evil; it is the offspring or companion of jealousy.

Suspicions among thoughts, are like bats among birds; they ever fly by twilight. Bacon.

SUSPI''CIOUS, a. [L. suspiciosus.] 1. Inclined to suspect; apt to imagine without proof.

Nature itself, after it has done an injury, will ever be suspicious, and no man can love the person he suspects. South.

2. Indicating suspicion or fear.

We have a suspicious, fearful, constrained countenance. Swift.

3. Liable to suspicion; adapted to raise suspicion; giving reason to imagine ill; as, an author of suspicious innovations.

I spy a black suspicious threat'ning cloud. Shak.

4. Entertaining suspicion; given to suspicion.

Many mischievous insects are daily at work to make men of merit suspicious of each other. Pope.

SUSPI''CIOUSLY, adv. With suspicion.—2. So as to excite suspicion.

SUSPI''CIOUSNESS, n. The quality of being liable to suspicion, or liable to be suspected; as, the suspiciousness of a man's appearance, of his weapons, or of his actions.—2. The quality or state of being apt to suspect; as, the suspiciousness of a man's temper or mind.

SUSPI'RAL, n. [L. suspiro, to breathe; sub and spiro.] 1. A breathing-hole; a vent or ventiduct.—2. A spring of water passing under ground toward a cistern or conduit. [Local.]

SUSPIRA'TION, n. [L. suspiratio, suspiro, to sigh; sub and spiro, to breathe.] The act of sighing or fetching a long and deep breath; a sigh.

SUSPIRE, v. i. [supra.] To sigh; to fetch a long deep breath; to breathe. [Little used.]

SUSPIRED,† pp. or a. Wished for; desired.

SUS'SEX MARBLE, n. In geol., a fresh water deposit which constitutes a member of the Wealden group. It occurs in layers varying from a few inches to upwards of a foot in thickness, the layers being separated by seams of clay or loose friable limestone. It occurs in great abundance in the Weald of Sussex; hence the name. It is of various shades of grey and bluish grey, mottled with green and yellow; it bears a high polish, and is extensively used for architectural and ornamental purposes.

Wild Swan or Hooper (Cygnus ferus).

and small pools of fresh water, rather than the sea or the larger lakes. They are among the most ornamental of all the water birds, on account of their great size, the gracefulness of their forms and motions, and the snowy whiteness of the plumage of those species with which we are most familiar. The species which inhabit or visit Britain are the tame swan, Cygnus olor, the wild swan or hooper, C. ferus, and the Bewick swan, C. bewickii. The black swan, C. atratus, is an

Black Swan (Cygnus atratus).

Australian species, about the size of the tame swan. Like the white swan, it is frequently kept as an ornament in parks in this country. In England, the swan is said to be a bird-royal, in which no subject can have property, when at large in a public river or creek, except by grant from the crown. In creating this privilege, the crown grants a swan-mark for a game of swans. The swan-marks are made upon the upper mandible, with a knife or other sharp instrument. Several species of swans are found in other parts of the world.

SWANG, n. A piece of low land or green sward, liable to be covered with water. [Local.]

SWEDENBOR'GIANS, n. The followers of Emanuel Swedenborg, a Swedish nobleman, born at Stockholm in 1689. He professed himself to be the founder of the New Jerusalem church, alluding to the New Jerusalem spoken of in the book of the Revelation, and conceived that the members of this church were gifted with peculiar insight into spiritual things. The Swedenborgians believe that the regenerate man is in direct communication with angels, and with heaven. They maintain that the sacred Scriptures contain three distinct senses, called celestial, spiritual, and natural, which are united by correspondences, and are accommodated respectively to particular classes, both of men and angels. They date the second advent of Christ from the year 1757, and the commencement of the New Jerusalem church. In the United States the Swedenborgians are numerous, and they have several chapels in London, and other large towns.

SWEDENBOR'GIANISM, n. The doctrines and practice of the Swedenborgians.

SWE'DISH, a. Pertaining to Sweden.

SWED'ISH, n. The language of the Swedes.

SWIFT, a. [Sax. swift, from swifan, to turn, to rove, to wander, to whirl round; D. zweeven, to rove, to hover, to fluctuate; G. schweben, to wave, soar, or hover. The latter appear to be formed on the root of wave. See SWIVEL and WAFT] 1. Moving a great distance, or over a large space in a short time; moving with celerity or velocity; fleet; rapid; quick; speedy. We say, swift winds, a swift stream, swift lightnings, swift motion, swift as thought, a fowl swift of wing, a man swift of foot. Swift is applicable to any kind of motion.—2. Ready; prompt.

Let every man be swift to hear, slow to speak, slow to wrath; James i.

3. Speedy; that comes without delay.

There shall be false teachers among you, who shall privily bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction; 2 Pet. ii.

SWIFT, n. The current of a stream. [Little used.]—2. In domestic affairs, a reel or turning instrument for winding yarn. [This is a sense directly from the Saxon verb.]—3. The Cypselus murarius, Temminck, the largest and most powerful flier of the swallow tribe which visits this country. It has probably the most imperfect feet of any known bird. Owing to their extreme shortness, it is unable to walk, except with a most constrained and hobbling gait, and with the assistance of the wings. It lives habitually, and pursues its prey at a greater height from the ground than the swallows, and it constructs its nest at a more lofty elevation, choosing the crevices of steeples and towers, and the crannies of rocks. During the long summer days it often passes sixteen hours in vigorous continued flight. The swift is among the last of our swallows in its arrival, and the first to depart. Another species, the white-bellied or Alpine swift (Cypselus Alpinus, Temminck) is known in this country, but it is only a rare straggler. The weight of the swift is most disproportionately small to its extent of wing, the former being scarcely an ounce, the latter eighteen inches; the length of the body being near eight inches.—4. The common newt or eft, a species of lizard.

SWIFT'ER, n. In a ship, a rope used to confine the bars of the capstan in their sockets, while men are turning it; also, a rope used to encircle a boat longitudinally, to strengthen and defend her sides from the impulse of other boats. SWIL'LEY, n. A coal field of small extent. [Provincial.]

SWILL'ING, ppr. Swallowing excessive quantities of liquors.

SWILL'INGS, n. Swill.

SWIM, v. i. pret Swam; pp. Swum, [Sax swimman; D. zwemmen, to swim; zwymen, to swoon; G. schwemmen, schwimmen; Sw. svima, to swoon.] 1. To float; to be supported on water or other fluid; not to sink. Most species of wood will swim in water. Any substance will swim, whose specific gravity is less than that of the fluid in which it is immersed.—2. To move progressively in water by means of the motion of the hands and feet, or of fins. In Paris, boys are taught to swim by instructors appointed for that purpose.

Leap in with me into this angry flood,
And swim to yonder point. Shak

3. To float; to be borne along by a current. In all states there are men who will swim with the tide of popular opinion.—4. To glide along with a smooth motion, or with a waving motion.

She with pretty and with swimming gait... Shak.

5. To be dizzy or vertiginous; to have a waving motion of the head or a sensation of that kind, or a reeling of the body. The head swims when we walk on high.—6. To be floated; to be overflowed or drenched; as, the earth swims in rain.

Sudden the ditches swell, the meadows swim. Thomson.

All the night I make my bed to swim; I water my couch with my tears; Ps. vi.

7. To overflow; to abound; to have abundance.

They now swim in joy. Milton.

SWIM, v. t. To pass or move on; as, to swim a stream. Deer are known to swim rivers and sounds.

Sometimes he thought to swim the stormy main. Dryden.

2. To immerse in water that the lighter parts may swim; as, to swim wheat for seed.

SWIM, n. The bladder of fishes, by which they are said to be supported in water; motion on the water; as, in swimming.

SWIM'MER, n. One that swims.—2. A protuberance on the leg of a horse.—3. A bird that swims, as the duck and goose.

SWIM'MERS, or SWIM'MING-BIRDS, n. The Palmipedes of Cuvier, and the Natatores of Illiger, an order of web-footed aquatic birds formed for swimming. Their feet are placed far back on the body, attached to short and compressed tarsi, and with palmated toes, Their dense and polished plumage, saturated with oil, and the thickly set down which is next to their skin, protect these birds from the water in which they live. The bill is long, enabling them to search for their food below water while they swim on the surface. Their sternum is very long, affording a complete guard to the greater part of their viscera, having on each side but one emargination or oval foramen filled up with membrane. Cuvier divides this order into four families. 1. The Brachypteræ, comprehending the grebes, divers, guillemots, auks, and penguins. 2. The Longipennes, including the petrels, puffins, albatrosses, gulls, terns, noddies, and skimmers. 3. Totipalmantæ, comprehending the pelicans, cormorants, frigate birds, boobies, and darters. 4. The Lamellirostres, comprehending the swans, geese, ducks, and mergansers.

SWIM'MERS, n A tribe of spiders (Araneidæ natantes), which live in water, and there spin their webs to entrap their prey.

SWIM'MING, ppr. Floating on a fluid; moving on a fluid; having a waving or reeling motion; overflowing; abounding.

SWIM'MING, n. The act of sustaining the body in water, and of moving in it; as fishes, which are assisted in this action by their air-bladder and fins. Amphibious animals also possess this faculty to a greater or less extent. Swimming, as applied to human beings, is the act or art of balancing the body on or near the surface of the water, and of making a progress through it. A great proportion of the animal tribes are furnished with a greater or less capacity for swimming either in water or on its surface, but man is unqualified for swimming without learning to do so as an art, owing to the structure of his body. The head by its gravity naturally sinks in water, and thus causes drowning, unless it, or at least the mouth, can be kept above the surface by art. The art of swimming, which can be acquired by exercise only, chiefly consists in keeping the head above water, and using the hands and feet as oars and helm. The best school for swimming is deep water, and the best teacher the frog. Swimming is a highly useful exercise; it strengthens the abdominal muscles, the muscles of the chest, the organs of respiration, the spine, neck, and arms. It increases courage, and furnishes an agreeable excitement. It also affords us the means of preserving our lives or those of others in perilous situations.—2. Dizziness.

SWIM'MINGLY, adv. Smoothly; without obstruction; with great success. [Not elegant.]

SWIN'DLE, v. t. [D. zwendelen.] To cheat and defraud grossly, or with deliberate artifice; as, to swindle a man out of his property.

SWIN'DLER, n. [G. schwindler.] A cheat; a rogue; one who defrauds grossly, or one who makes a practice of defrauding others by imposition or deliberate artifice.

SWIND'LING, n. The practices of a swindler. When a person by the assumption of a false character, or by a false representation of some sort, obtains the possession of money or other property from another or others, and appropriates it to himself, he is said to be guilty of swindling, and is liable to punishment by law.

SWINE, n. sing. and plur. [Sax. swin; G. schwein; L. suinus. It is found in the Fr. marsouin, a porpoise; L. mare, the sea, and swine; the sea-hog; Port. suino, pertaining to swine.] A hog; a pachydermatous mammal of the genus Sus, which furnishes man with a large portion of his most nourishing food. The fat or lard of this animal enters into various dishes in cookery. The numerous varieties of the hog or swine cultivated in Britain, are partly the result of climate and keep in the European variety, and partly the effects of crossing with the Chinese hog. Berkshire, in England, has long been famous for its breed of swine. [See SUIDÆ.]

SWINE-BREAD, n. A kind of plant, truffle.

SWINE-CASE, SWINE-COAT, SWINE-CRUE, n. A hog-sty; a pen for swine. [Local.]

A vowel may form a syllable by itself, as a, the definite, or in amen; e in even; o in over, and the like. A syllable may also be formed of a vowel and one consonant, as in go, do, in, at; or a syllable may be formed by a vowel with two articulations, one preceding, the other following it, as in can, but, tun; or a syllable may consist of a combination of consonants, with one vowel or diphthong, as strong, short, camp, voice.

A syllable sometimes forms a word, and is then significant, as, in go, run, write, sun, moon. In other cases, a syllable is merely a part of a word, and by itself is not significant. Thus ac, in active, has no signification. At least one vowel or open sound is essential to the formation of a syllable; hence in every word there must be as many syllables as there are single vowels, or single vowels and diphthongs. A word is called according to the number of syllables it contains; viz., monosyllable, a word of one syllable; dissyllable, a word of two syllables; trisyllable, a word of three syllables; polysyllable, a word of many syllables.—2. A small part of a sentence or discourse; something very concise. This account contains not a syllable of truth.

Before a syllable of the law of God was written. Hooker.

SYL'LABLE,† v. t. To utter; to articulate.

SYL'LABUB, n. A compound drink made of wine and milk; a different orthography of Sillabub.

SYL'LABUS, n. [L. from the same source as syllable.] An abstract; a compendium containing the heads of a discourse; a course of lectures, a book, &c.

SYLLEP'SIS, n. [Gr. σύλληψις. See SYLLABLE.] 1. In gram., a figure by which we conceive the sense of words otherwise than the words import, and construe them according to the intention of the author; otherwise called substitution.—2. The agreement of a verb or adjective, not with the word next to it, but with the most worthy in the sentence; as, rex et regina beati.

SYLLEP'TICAL, a. Relating to or implying syllepsis.

SYLLEPTI'CALLY, adv. By way of syllepsis.

SYL'LOGISM, n. [L. syllogismus; Gr. συλλογισμος: συν, with, and λεγω, to speak; λογιζομαι, to think.] A form of reasoning or argument, consisting of three propositions, of which the two first are called the premises, and the last the conclusion. In this argument, the conclusion necessarily follows from the premises; so that if the two first propositions are true, the conclusion must be true, and the argument amounts to demonstration. Thus, a plant has not the power of locomotion; an oak is a plant; therefore an oak has not the power of locomotion. These propositions are denominated the major, the minor, and the conclusion. The three propositions of a syllogism are made up of three ideas or terms, and these terms are called the major, the minor, and the middle. The subject of the conclusion is called the minor term; its predicate is the major term, and the middle term is that which shews the connection between the major and minor term in the conclusion; or it is that with which the major and minor terms are respectively compared. Syllogisms are divided by some into single, complex, conjunctive, &c., and by others into categorical, hypothetical, conditional, &c. The figure of a syllogism is the proper disposition of the middle term with reference to the major and minor terms. The figures are generally reckoned three. The mood of a syllogism is the designation of its three propositions, according to their quantity and quality. The quantity and quality of propositions, in logic, are marked by arbitrary symbols, as A, E, I, O. Every assertion may be reduced to one of four forms—the universal affirmative, marked by A; the universal negative, marked by E; the particular affirmative, marked by I; and the particular negative, marked by O. From these, by combination, all syllogisms are derived. In order to remember the figures, certain words have been long used by writers on logic, which make a grotesque appearance; but which nevertheless are of considerable use. Thus, under the first figure, we have Barbara, Celarent, Darii, Ferio; under the second, Cesare, Camestres, Festino, Baroko; and under the third, Darapti, Disamis, Datisi, Felapton, Bokardo, Feriso. Each of these words designates a particular mood. The rules of syllogism may be thus briefly expressed: 1. One at least of the premises must be affirmative, and one at least universal; 2. The middle term must enter universally in one of the premises; and, 3. The conclusion must not speak of any term in a wider sense than it was spoken of in the premise in which it entered. A term universally spoken of is either the subject of a universal affirmative, or the predicate of any negative. Syllogisms are nothing else than reasoning reduced to form and method, and all that passes under the name of reasoning, unless it can be made syllogistic, is no reasoning at all, but a mass of words without meaning. The syllogism is the instrument of self-examination, and the last weapon of resort in dispute; and a bad syllogism, with one of the premises implied only, and not expressed, is the first resource of fallacy. To bring forward the suppressed premise, is the visible destruction of every argument which is logically bad.

SYLLOGIS'TIC, } SYLLOGIS'TICAL, } a. Pertaining to a syllogism; consisting of a syllogism; or of the form of reasoning by syllogisms; as, syllogistic arguments or reasoning.

SYLLOGIS'TICALLY, adv. In the form of a syllogism; by means of syllogisms; as, to reason or prove syllogistically.

SYLLOGIZA'TION, n. A reasoning by syllogisms.

SYL'LOGIZE, v. i. To reason by syllogisms.

Men have endeavoured to teach boys to syllogize, or to frame arguments and refute them, without real knowledge. Watts.

SYL'LOGIZER, n. One who reasons by syllogisms.

SYL'LOGIZING, ppr. Reasoning by syllogisms.

SYLPH, n. [Fr. sylphide; Gr. σιλφη, a moth, a beetle.] An imaginary being inhabiting the air, so named by the Rosicrucians and Cabalists.

SYLPH'ID, n. A diminutive of sylph.

SYLPH'-LIKE, a. Resembling a sylph.

SYL'VA, n. [L., a wood or forest.] In poetry, a poetical piece composed in a start or kind of transport.—2. A collection of poetical pieces of various kinds.—3. A work containing a botanical description of the forest trees of any region or country.—4. The forest trees themselves of any region or country.

SYL'VAN. See SILVAN.

SYL'VAN, n. A fabled deity of the wood; a satyr; a faun; sometimes perhaps, a rustic.

Her private orchards, wall'd on ev'ry side,
To lawless sylvans all access deny'd. Pope.

SYL'VANITE, n. Native tellurium, a metallic substance discovered in Transylvania.

SYL'VATE, n. A compound of sylvic acid with a base.

SYLVAT'IC, a. Sylvan; relating to woods.

SYLVES'TRIAN, a. Sylvan; inhabiting the woods.

SYL'VIA, n. A genus of slender-billed song-birds, including the Black-cap, S. atricapilla, and Garden Warbler, S. hortensis. They are, next to the Nightingales, the most distinguished for the variety and modulation of their notes.

SYL'VIADÆ. The name given by Vigors to a family of dentirostral birds, comprehending the warblers of British ornithologists.

SYL'VIC ACID, n. An acid extracted from common resin or rosin by weak alcohol, and purified by stronger alcohol. It crystallizes in minute prisms, and consists of 20 atoms of carbon, 16 of hydrogen, and 2 of oxygen.

SYM'BAL. See CYMBAL.

SYM'BOL, n. [L. symbolum; Gr. συμβολον: συν, with, and βαλλω, to throw; συμβαλλω, to compare.] 1. The sign or representation of any moral thing by the images or properties of natural things. Thus the lion is the symbol of courage; the lamb is the symbol of meekness or patience. Symbols are of various kinds, as types, enigmas, parables, fables, allegories, emblems, hieroglyphics, &c. —2. An emblem or representation of something else. Thus in the eucharist, the bread and wine are called symbols of the body and blood of Christ.—3. A letter or character which is significant. The Chinese letters are most of them symbols. The symbols in algebra are arbitrary.—4. In medals, a certain mark or figure representing a being or thing, as a trident is the symbol of Neptune, the peacock of Juno, &c.—5. Among Christians, an abstract or compendium; the creed or a summary of the articles of religion.—6.† Lot; sentence of adjudication.—Mathematical symbols, letters and characters which represent quantities or magnitudes, and point out their relations. The symbols generally recognized by mathematicians, consist of the capitals of the Roman alphabet, and the small letters of the Italic; the small letters of the Greek alphabet, and such capitals as are distinguishable from the corresponding Roman ones; the Arabic numerals and occasionally the Roman ones; accents, figures and letters, superfixed and suffixed; as, a'', $a_{,,}$; a^2, a_2; a^m, a_v; the signs, $+$, $-$, $\times$, $\div$, $:$, $\surd$; the integral sign $\int$ with its limits expressed; as, in $\int_a^b$; the symbols of nothing and infinity, 0 and ∞; brackets and parentheses, &c., [ ], ( ), { }, &c.; the sign of equality $=$; the signs of greater and less, $>$ $<$.—Chemical symbols. [See under CHEMICAL.] In Scots law, heritable property is transferred by the delivery of symbols. Thus, lands are resigned by a vassal to his superior by the symbol of staff and baton. In giving sasine of lands, the symbols are earth and stone of the lands; of an annual rent out of lands, earth and stone, with a penny money; of fishings, net and cobble; of mills, clap and hopper; of houses within a burgh, hasp and staple; of patronage teinds, a sheaf of corn; of patronage, a psalm-book, and the keys of the church; of jurisdictions, the book of court. The law, however, regarding the transference of heritable property, has recently been much simplified, and many of these symbolical acts are no longer requisite. [See SASINE.]

SYMBOL'IC, SYMBOL'ICAL, a. Representative; exhibiting or expressing by resemblance or signs; as, the figure of an eye is symbolical of sight and knowledge. The ancients had their symbolical mysteries.

> The sacrament is a representation of Christ's death, by such symbolical actions as he appointed. Taylor.

Symbolical philosophy, is the philosophy expressed by hieroglyphics.—Symbolical books, the name given by the Lutherans to their standard books of faith and discipline, and now by extension applied to the standards of other bodies of Christians.—Symbolical attributes, certain symbols, by which artists distinguish the various evangelists, apostles, saints, &c., in their representations.

SYMBOL'ICALLY, adv. By representation or resemblance of properties; by signs; typically. Courage is symbolically represented by a lion.

SYMBOL'ICS, n. The name given by the Germans to the study of the symbols and mysterious rites of antiquity; and also the study of the history and contents of christian creeds and confessions of faith.

SYM'BOLISM, n. Among chemists, consent of parts.

SYMBOLIZA'TION, n. [See SYMBOLIZE.] The act of symbolizing; resemblance in properties.

SYM'BOLIZE, v. i. [Fr. symboliser.] To have a resemblance of qualities or properties.

> The pleasing of colour symbolizeth with the pleasing of a single tone to the ear; but the pleasing of order doth symbolize with harmony. Bacon.

> They both symbolize in this, that they love to look upon themselves through multiplying glasses. Howell.

SYM'BOLIZE, v. t. To make to agree in properties.—2. To make representative of something.

> Some symbolize the same from the mystery of its colours. Brown.

SYM'BOLIZED, pp. Made to agree in properties.

SYM'BOLIZING, ppr. Representing by some properties in common; making to agree or resemble in properties.

SYMBOL'OGY, n. The art of expressing by symbols.

SYM'METRAL, a. [from symmetry.] Commensurable.

SYMME'TRIAN, SYM'METRIST, n. [from symmetry.] One eminently studious of proportion or symmetry of parts.

SYMMET'RICAL, a. [from symmetry.] Proportional in its parts; having its parts in due proportion, as to dimensions; as, a symmetrical body or building; having that obvious relation of equal and similar figures, which refers to their position merely, and consists in their corresponding portions being placed on different sides of the same straight line.—2. In bot., flowers are symmetrical when the segments of the calyx, the petals and the stamens are regular, equal, and alike.—3. In ancient geometry, commensurable; thus, two magnitudes, which admitted of a common measure, were said to be symmetrical.—Symmetrical solids, a name given by Legendre to these solids which, though equal and similar, cannot be made to coincide, or to fill the same space, as is the case with equal and similar plane figures. If a regular pyramid, having for its base an isosceles triangle, be cut by a plane passing through its vertex, and bisecting the base of the isosceles triangle, and also passing through the opposite angle of the same triangle, the figures on each side of the cutting plane will be symmetrical solids. The two hands furnish an example of symmetrical solids; they give the idea of equality of size, similarity of form, and symmetry of disposition, but yet they cannot be made to coincide or occupy the same space; so as, for instance, to fit exactly the same glove. In alge., a function is said to be symmetrical with respect to any two letters, when it would undergo no change if these letters were interchanged, or if each were made to take the place of the other. Also, an expression is said to be symmetrical with respect to any number of letters, when any two of them whatsoever may be interchanged without alteration of the function.

SYMMET'RICALLY, adv. With due proportion of parts.

SYMMET'RICALNESS, n. State or quality of being symmetrical.

SYM'METRIZE, v. t. To make proportional in its parts; to reduce to symmetry.

SYM'METRIZED, pp. Made proportional.

SYM'METRIZING, ppr. Reducing to symmetry.

SYM'METRY, n. [Gr. συμμετρια: συν, with, together, and μετρον, measure; μετρεω, to measure; Fr. symetrie.] A due proportion of the several parts of a body to each other; adaptation of the dimensions of the several parts of a thing to each other; or the union and conformity of the members of a work to the whole.—2. That relation of equal and similar figures which refers to their position merely, and consists in their uniformity as regards the answering of one portion to another, or in their corresponding portions being similarly placed on different sides of the same straight line, so that coincidences cannot be obtained without turning one figure round that straight line. If the front of a building be symmetrical, and a vertical line be drawn through the middle of the elevation, then the two lateral portions are not only equal and similar, but also symmetrical; the right hand side stands in the right hand portion of space with respect to the dividing line, and in exactly the same manner as the left-hand side stands in the left-hand portion of space. In the letter W there is a want of symmetry, but not in O: to make W symmetrical, both the inner lines should be made thin, and both the outer ones thick.—3. In the fine arts generally, proportion; harmony; the most proper relation of the measure of parts to each other, and to the whole. In the same sense we speak of the symmetry of animal bodies.—Uniform symmetry, in architecture, is where the same ordonnance reigns throughout the whole.—Respective symmetry, is where only the opposite sides are equal to each other.

SYMPATHET'IC, SYMPATHET'ICAL, a. [Fr. sympathique. See SYMPATHY.] 1. Pertaining to sympathy.—2. Having common feeling with another; susceptible of being affected by feelings like those of another, or of feelings in consequence of what another feels; as, a sympathetic heart.—3. In med., the term sympathetic is applied to symptoms and affections, which occur in parts more or less remote from the primary seat of disease, and are occasioned by some nervous connection of the parts. A disease which is immediately preceded and occasioned by another disease, is sometimes said to be sympathetic, in contradistinction from idiopathic, which is applied to a disease not preceded or occasioned by any other; but, in this case, the term symptomatic is not only more appropriate, but more commonly employed.—4. Among alchemists, an epithet applied to a kind of powder, possessed of the wonderful property that if spread on a cloth dipped in the blood of a wound, the wound will be healed, though the patient is at a distance. This opinion is discarded as charlatanry.—5. In anat., the term sympathetic is applied to that system of nerves, which takes its origin from the semilunar ganglion in the centre of the epigastrium, and is sent to the whole nutritive system, and also to the organs of reproduction.—Sympathetic ink, a species of ink or liquor with which, when a person writes upon paper, the writing is invisible until heat or some re-agent is applied. Most of the acids or saline solutions, being diluted and used to write with, become visible by heating before the fire. A diluted solution of cobalt affords an ink which becomes green when held before the fire. If a weak solution of galls be used, the writing will be invisible till the paper is moistened with a weak solution of sulphate of iron. The diluted solutions of gold and silver remain colourless upon the paper till exposed to the sun's light. — Sympathetic sounds, sounds produced in one musical instrument by sounding another near it. The harmonies of the Æolian harp are sympathetic sounds, being produced by the communication of motion from one string to another, through the medium of intervening air.—Sympathetic disease, one which is produced by a remote cause, as when a fever follows a local injury.—Sympathetic cures, cures pretended or real, the operation of which is attributed to a certain sympathy of the sufferer with other individuals, or with spirits, animals, stars, plants, &c. A full belief in the efficacy of such means of cure, has a great effect in such diseases as are seated in the nervous system. — Sympathetic powder, a powder chemically prepared from green or blue vitriol.

SYMPATHET'ICALLY, adv. With sympathy or common feeling; in consequence of sympathy; by communication from something else.

SYM'PATHIST, n. One who feels sympathy.

SYM'PATHIZE, v. i. [Fr. sympathiser. See SYMPATHY.] 1. To have a common feeling, as of bodily pleasure or pain.

> The mind will sympathize so much with the anguish and debility of the body, that it will be too distracted to fix itself in meditation. Buckminster.

2. To feel in consequence of what another feels; to be affected by feelings similar to those of another, in consequence of knowing the person to be thus affected. We sympathize with our friends in distress; we feel some pain when we see them pained, or when we are informed of their distresses, even at a distance. It is generally and properly used of suffering or pain, and not of pleasure or joy. It may be sometimes used with greater latitude.—3.† To agree; to fit.

SYM'PATHIZING, ppr. Feeling mutually, or in consequence of what another feels.

SYM'PATHY, n. [Gr. συμπαθεια, συμπαθεω: συν, with, and παθος, passion.] 1. Fellow feeling; the quality of being affected by the affection of another, with feelings correspondent in kind, if not in degree. We feel sympathy for another when we see him in distress, or when we are informed of his distresses. This sympathy is a correspondent feeling of pain or regret. Sympathy is often an imitative faculty, sometimes exercised involuntarily, frequently without consciousness. Thus we yawn when we see others yawn, and are made to laugh by the laughing of another.

> Sympathy is produced through the medium of organic impression. Chipman.

> I value myself upon sympathy; I hate and despise myself for envy. Kames.

2. An agreement of affections or inclinations, or a conformity of natural temperament, which makes two persons pleased with each other.

> To such associations may be attributed most of the sympathies and antipathies of our nature. Anon.

3. In med., a correspondence of various parts of the body in similar sensations or affections; or an affection of the whole body or some part of it, in consequence of an injury or disease of another part, or of a local affection. Thus, a contusion on the head will produce nausea and vomiting. This is said to be by sympathy, or consent of parts.—4. In nat. hist., a propension of inanimate things to unite, or to act on each other. Thus we say, there is a sympathy between the lodestone and iron. —5. In the fine arts, conformity of the parts to each other; but in painting, it usually signifies the effective union of colours.

SYMPEP'SIS, n. In med., a ripening of inflammatory humours.

SYMPHO'NIA, n. [L.] A symphony.

SYMPHO'NIOUS, a. [from symphony.] Agreeing in sound; accordant; harmonious.

> Sounds
> Symphonious of ten thousand harps. Milton.

SYM'PHONIST, n. A composer of symphonies or instrumental music.

SYM'PHONIZE, v. i. To agree with; to harmonize.

SYM'PHONY, n. [L. symphonia; Fr. symphonie; Gr. συμφωνια: συν, with, and φωνη, voice.] 1. A consonance or harmony of sounds, agreeable to the ear, whether the sounds are vocal or instrumental, or both.

> The trumpets sound,
> And warlike symphony is heard around. Dryden.

2. An ancient musical instrument, supposed by some to be of the lyre kind, and by others a sort of drum, used as an accompaniment. — 3. In modern usage, a musical composition for a full band of instruments, and formerly called an overture. It generally consists of four movements; a brilliant allegro, which is commonly preceded by a short, serious, slow introductory movement; an andante varied, or an expressive adagio; a minuet with its trio; and a finale of rapid motion. The term symphony is also applied to an instrumental passage which usually introduces a piece of vocal music, or is brought in at the close, or occurs during some pause of the voice. Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, are the greatest modern composers of symphonies.

SYMPHORICAR'POS, } n. A genus of SYMPHO'RIA, } plants, nat. order Caprifoliaceæ, the species of which are natives of North and South America. They are elegant bushy shrubs, with small white or rose-coloured flowers. S. vulgaris is known by the name of common St. Peter's wort, and S. racemosus by that of snowberry. This latter has become very common in our gardens.

SYM'PHYSIS, n. [Gr. συμφυσις: συν, together, and φυω, to grow.] 1. In anat., the union of bones by cartilage; a connection of bones without a movable joint.—2. In sur., a coalescence of a natural passage; also, the first intention of cure in a wound.

SYMPHY'TUM, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Boraginaceæ. The species are rough herbaceous plants, with broad leaves and terminal twin racemes of flowers. They inhabit chiefly Europe and Asia. S. officinalis, or common comfrey, is found in Britain on the banks of rivers and ditches. Its root abounds in a mucilage, which is useful in irritations of the throat, intestines, and bladder. There are several other species.

SYMPIESO'METER, n. [Gr. συμπιεζω, to compress, and μετρον, measure.] A kind of barometer, contrived by Mr. Adie of Edinburgh, for measuring the weight of the atmosphere by the compression of a column of gas. It consists of a glass tube about 18 inches long, having the lower end bent up like the tube of the wheel barometer, each end being terminated by an elongated bulb. The upper end is hermetically sealed, but the lower end is left open. The upper part of the tube is filled with hydrogen gas, and the lower part with some fixed oil. The pressure of the atmosphere is exerted upon the surface of the oil, which is exposed to it in the turned up open end of the tube. This pressure causes the oil to stand at a certain height in the tube, and to produce a certain compression in the column of hydrogen gas. As the atmospheric pressure becomes greater, the oil will rise, and the gas will be compressed into less space. The change in the bulk of the gas caused by a change in the atmospheric pressure is measured by a scale. The sympiesometer is a useful instrument, but inferior in accuracy to the common barometer.

SYM'PLESITE, n. In min., a mineral of an indigo colour.

SYMPLOCAR'PUS, n. A genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Araceæ. The S. fœtida, skunk cabbage, is a powerful antispasmodic, and also an expectorant. It has a considerable reputation in North America as a palliative in paroxysms of asthma.

SYM'PLOCE, n. [Gr. συμπλοκη: from συν, together, and πλοκη, a twisting or folding.] In rhet., a figure where several sentences or clauses have the same beginning and the same end.

SYM'PLOCOS, n. A genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Styraceæ. The species are trees inhabiting North and South America, and tropical Asia. They all possess an astringent principle in their leaves, and some, as S. tinctoria, dyer's symplocos, sweet leaf or yellow leaf, are used in dyeing.

SYMPO'SIA, n. plur. [συμποσιον, a feast.] The feasts of the ancient Greeks.

SYMPOSIAC, a. (sympo'ziac.) [Gr. συμποσια, a drinking together; συν, together, and πινω, to drink.] Pertaining to compotations and merry-making; happening where company is drinking together; as, symposiac meetings.

> Symposiac disputations. [Not much used.] Arbuthnot.

SYMPO'SIAC, n. A conference or conversation of philosophers at a banquet.

SYMPO'SIARCH, n. [Gr. συμποσιον, a feast, and αρχη, a ruler.] In antiquity, the director or manager of a feast, who was sometimes appointed by the person at whose charge the entertainment was made, or selected by the suffrages of the party.

SYMPOS'IAST, n. One who drinks or makes merry with others.

SYMPOSIUM, n. (sympo'zium.) [supra.] A drinking together; a merry feast.—2. A banquet among philosophers.

SYMP'TOM, n. [Fr. symptome; Gr. συμπτωμα, a falling or accident, from συν, with, and πιπτω, to fall.] 1. Properly, something that happens in concurrence with another thing, as an attendant. Hence in med., any affection which accompanies disease; a perceptible change in the body or its functions, which indicates disease. The causes of disease often lie beyond our sight, but we learn the nature of them by the symptoms. Particular symptoms, which more uniformly accompany a morbid state of the body, and are characteristic of it, are called pathognomonic, or diagnostic symptoms. Symptoms are best divided into essential, which are peculiar to certain diseases; accidental, produced by some circumstance of unusual occurrence; and common, which are met with alike in various complaints.—2. A sign or token; that which indicates the existence of something else; as, open murmurs of the people are a symptom of disaffection to law or government.

SYMPTOMAT'IC, } a. Pertaining
SYMPTOMAT'ICAL, } to symptoms; happening in concurrence with something; indicating the existence of something else.—2. In med., a symptomatic disease is one which proceeds from some prior disorder in some part of the body. Thus a symptomatic fever may proceed from local injury or local inflammation. It is opposed to idiopathic.—3. According to symptoms; as, a symptomatical classification of diseases.

SYMPTOMAT'ICALLY, adv. By means of symptoms; in the nature of symptoms.

SYMPTOMATOL'OGY, n. [Gr. συμπτωμα, and λογος, discourse.] The doctrine of symptoms; that part of the science of medicine which treats of the symptoms of diseases.

SYN. A Greek preposition or prefix (Συν), corresponding to the Latin prefix con, and signifying with, together, a uniting, a joining or agreeing. Before certain consonants it is changed into syl, sym, &c., and sometimes the final consonant is dropped.

SYNÆ'RESIS, n. [Gr συναιρεσις.] In gram., the contraction of two syllables or two vowels into one, by suppressing one of the syllables, or by the formation of a diphthong; as, ne'er for never, Atreides for Atreïdes.

SYNAGOG'ICAL, a. [from synagogue.] Pertaining to a synagogue.

SYNAGOGUE, n. (syn'agog.) [Fr. from Gr. συναγωγη: συν, together, and αγω, to drive; properly an assembly.] 1. A congregation or assembly of Jews, met for the purpose of worship or the performance of religious rites.—2. The house appropriated to the religious worship of the Jews. Authors are not agreed about the time when the Jews first began to have synagogues. Some suppose them as old as the ceremonial law, and others fix their beginning after the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity. Synagogues were erected not only in towns and cities, but also in the country, especially near rivers, that they might have water for their purifications and ceremonies. Jerusalem is said to have contained 480 synagogues. The synagogue was governed by a council or assembly, over whom was a president called the ruler of the synagogue. The service consisted of prayers, reading the Scriptures, and preaching and expounding of them. The chief ruler, or one of the council, gave permission to read and expound the law, and appointed who should do it. The synagogue service was at first confined to the Sabbath days and festivals, but was latterly extended to Mondays and Thursdays.—3. The court of the seventy elders among the Jews, called the great synagogue or sanhedrim.

SYN'AGRIS, n. A fish caught in the Archipelago, resembling the dentex. It has a sharp back, and is reckoned a species of Sparus.

SYNALE'PHA, } n. [Gr. συναλοιφη.]
SYNALŒ'PHA, } In gram., a contraction of syllables by suppressing some vowel or diphthong at the end of a word, before another vowel or diphthong; as, he'll run, for he will run.

SYNALLAGMAT'IC, a. In civil law, an epithet applied to a contract imposing reciprocal obligations.

SYNAN'THEROUS, a. In bot., a name applied to syngenesian or composite plants, with the anthers united so as to form a tube round the style.

SYN'APTASE, n. In chem., a peculiar compound discovered in certain oily seeds, as in almonds, and named emulsine by Wohler and Liebig.

SYN'ARCHY, n. [Gr. συναρχια.] Joint rule or sovereignty.

SYNARTHRO'SIS, n. [Gr. συν, with, and αρθροω, to articulate.] Union of bones without motion; close union; as in sutures, symphysis, and the like.

SYNAX'IS, n. [Gr., from συναγω, to congregate; συν, and αγω.] A congregation; also, a term formerly used for the Lord's supper.

SYNCARP'OUS, a. [Gr. συν, and καρπος, fruit.] In bot., having the carpels of a compound fruit completely united; as in the apple and pear.

SYNCATEGOREMAT'IC, n. In logic, a word which cannot be used as a term by itself; as an adverb or preposition.

SYNCHONDRO'SIS, n. [Gr. συν, and χονδρος, cartilage.] The connection of bones by means of cartilage or gristle, as in the vertebræ.

SYNCHORE'SIS, n. [Gr. συγχωρησις, concession.] In rhet., a figure wherein an argument is scoffingly conceded, for the purpose of retorting more pointedly.

SYN'CHRONAL, a [Gr. συν, with, and χρονος, time.] Happening at the same time; simultaneous.

SYN'CHRONAL, n. [supra.] That which happens at the same time with something else, or pertains to the same time.

SYNCHRON'ICAL, a. [See SYNCHRONISM.] Happening at the same time; simultaneous.

SYNCHRON'ICALLY, adv. In a synchronical manner.

SYN'CHRONISM, n. [Gr. συν, with, and χρονος, time.] Concurrence of two or more events in time; simultaneousness. —2. A tabular arrangement of history by which contemporary persons and things in different countries are brought together.

SYNCHRONIS'TIC, a. Synchronous; pertaining to synchronism; as, synchronistic tables.

SYNCHRONIZA'TION, n. The concurrence of events in respect of time.

SYN'CHRONIZE, v. i. To concur at the same time; to agree in time.

SYNCHRONO'LOGY, n. Knowledge of, or reference to, contemporaneous events or things.

SYN'CHRONOUS, a. Happening at the same time; simultaneous.

SYN'CHRONOUSLY, adv. [supra.] At the same time.

SYN'CHYSIS, n. [Gr. συν and χυω.] Confusion; derangement; confusion of words in a sentence; derangement of humours in the eye.

SYN'CIPUT, n. Sinciput,—which see.

SYNCLI'NAL LINE OR AXIS. [Gr. συγκλινω, to bend down.] In geol., where the strata dip downward in opposite directions, as in a valley, the imaginary line of their junction towards which the strata on each side descend, is called the synclinal line or axis, in opposition to anticlinal line or axis. [See ANTICLINAL.]

SYN'COPATE, v. t. [See SYNCOPE.] To contract, as a word, by taking one or more letters or syllables from the middle.—2. In music, to prolong a note begun on the unaccented part of a bar, to the accented part of the next bar; or to connect the last note of a bar with the first of the following; or to end a note in one part, in the middle of a note of another part.

SYN'COPATED, pp. Contracted by the loss of a letter from the middle of the word.—2. Inverted, as the measure in music.

SYN'COPATING, ppr. Contracting by the loss of a letter in the middle of a word.

SYNCOPA'TION, n. The contraction of a word by taking a letter, letters, or a syllable from the middle.—2. In music, an interruption of the regular measure; an inversion of the order of notes; a prolonging of a note begun on the unaccented part of a bar, to the accented part of the next bar; also, a driving note, when a shorter note at the beginning of a measure is followed by two or more longer notes before another short note occurs, equal to that which occasioned the driving, to make the number even.

SYN'COPE, n. [Gr. συγκοπη, from συγκοπτω: συν, and κοπτω, to cut off.] 1. In music, the same as syncopation; the division of a note introduced when two or more notes of one part answer to a single note of another.—2. In gram., an elision or retrenchment of one or more letters or a syllable from the middle of a word.—3. In med., a fainting or swooning; a diminution or interruption of the motion of the heart, and of respiration, accompanied with a suspension of the action of the brain and a temporary loss of sensation, volition, and other faculties.

SYN'COPIST, n. One who contracts words.

SYN'COPIZE, v. t. To contract by the omission of a letter or syllable.

SYN'CRATISM, n. Syncretism,—which see.

SYN'CRETISM, n. [Gr. συγκρασις.] In philosophy, the blending of the tenets of different schools into one system, so as to produce a union among different sects.—2. In religion, a comprehensive scheme of Christian doctrines designed to unite different religious parties or sects.

SYNCRETIS'TIC, a. Pertaining to the Syncretists.

SYN'CRETISTS, n. In eccles. history, the followers of Callixtus, a Lutheran divine, and professor of theology at Helmstädt, who, about the beginning of the 17th century, endeavoured to frame a religious system which should unite together the different professors of Christianity.

SYN'CRISIS, n. In rhet., a figure by which opposite things or persons are compared.

SYNDAC'TYLES, n. [Gr. συν, and δακτυλος, a finger or toe.] A group of perching birds, including those which have the external toe nearly as long as the middle one, and united to it as far as the second joint. This group contains the bee-eaters, motmots, kingfishers, todies, and hornbills.

SYNDACTY'LIC, } a. Having the SYNDACT'YLOUS, } characteristics of the syndactyles.

SYNDESMO'SIS, n. [Gr. συνδεσμος, a ligament.] A species of symphysis, or mediate connection of bones, in which they are united by ligament; as the radius with the ulna.

SYN'DIC, n. [L. syndicus; Gr. συνδικος: συν, with, and δικη, justice.] An officer of government, invested with different powers in different countries; a kind of magistrate intrusted with the affairs of a city or community. In Geneva, the syndic was the chief magistrate. Almost all the companies in Paris, the university, &c., had their syndics. The university of Cambridge has its syndics.

SYN'DICATE, n. In some countries on the European Continent, a council; a branch of government.

SYN'DICATE, v. t. To judge, or to censure.

SYN'DROME, n. [Gr. συνδρομη, a running together.] 1. Concurrence.—2. In med., the concourse or combination of symptoms in a disease.

SYNEC'DOCHE, n. [Gr. συνεκδοχη: συν and εκδεχομαι, to take.] In rhet., a figure or trope by which the whole of a thing is put for a part, or a part for the whole; as the genus for the species, or the species for the genus, &c.

SYNECDOCH'ICAL, a. Expressed by synecdoche; implying a synecdoche.

SYNECDOCH'ICALLY, adv. According to the synecdochical mode of speaking.

SYNE'CHIA, n. [Gr. συνεχεια, continuity; adherence.] A concretion of the iris with the cornea, or with the capsule of the crystalline lens.

SYNECPHONE'SIS, n. [Gr.] A contraction of two syllables into one.

SYN'EPY, n. [Gr. συνεπεια, union of sounds.] The interjunction of words in uttering the clauses of sentences.

SYNERGET'IC, } SYNERGIS'TIC, } a. Coöperating.

SYNER'GISTS, n. [Gr. συνεργια, coöperation.] A party in the Lutheran church, who, about the end of the 16th century, denied that God was the sole agent in the conversion of sinners, and affirmed that man coöperated with divine grace in the accomplishment of this work.

SYNGENE'SIA, n. [Gr. συν, with, and γενεσις, generation.] The name of the nineteenth class of plants in the sexual system of Linnæus, consisting of those plants of which the anthers are united Syngenesia (Senecio Jacobæo).

1. Floret magnified. 2. Section of floret magnified.

into a tube, the filaments on which they are supported being mostly separate and distinct. The flowers are compound. There are five orders, namely, Polygamia æqualis, Polygamia superflua, Polygamia frustranea, Polygamia necessaria, and Polygamia segregata. The thistle, tansy, daisy, southernwood, sunflower, and marigold, are examples.

SYNGENE'SIAN, } SYNGENE'SIOUS, } a. Pertaining to the class Syngenesia.

SYNGNA'THA, n. [Gr. συν, with, and γναθος, a jaw.] The name given by Dr. Leach to an order of insects, belonging to the class Myriapoda, comprehending the species of that class which were included by Linnæus under the head Scolopendra.

SYNGNA'THIANS, n. A family of fishes belonging to the order Lophobranchii, characterized by having the mouth drawn out into a sort of tube or pipe. The type of the family is the genus Syngnathus, or pipe-fish.

SYN'GRAPH, } SYN'GRAPHA, } n. [Gr. συν and γραφη.] A writing signed by both parties to a contract or bond.

SYNIZE'SIS, n. [Gr. συνιζω, to meet.] A closed pupil; an obliteration of the pupil of the eye, causing a total loss of vision.

SYNNEURO'SIS, n. [Gr. συν and νευρον, a nerve.] In anat., the connection of parts by means of ligaments, as in the movable joints.

SYN'OCHA, n. [Gr.] A simple continuous phlogistic fever, not becoming atonic or asthenic, in its course and progress.

SYN'OCHUS, n. [Gr.] A simple continuous fever, commonly said to be phlogistic in its early stage, and atonic or asthenic in its progress; a mixed fever.

SYN'OD, n. [Gr. συνοδος, a convention, συν and οδος, way.] 1. In church history, a council or meeting of ecclesiastics to consult on matters of religion. Synods are of four kinds, 1. General or ecumenical, which are composed of bishops from different nations. 2. National, in which the bishops of one nation only meet, to determine points of doctrine or discipline. 3. Provincial, in which the bishops of one province only meet. This is called a convocation. 4. Diocesan. In the established church of Scotland, a provincial synod is one of the church courts, composed of the several presbyteries within the bounds prescribed by the general assembly, or of the ministers and elders who stand on the roll as constituent members of such presbyteries. The synod is a court of review immediately above the presbytery. Its meetings are generally held twice a year, though in some remote districts only once. Every ecclesiastical question which has been under the consideration of a presbytery within the provincial district, may be competently brought under the review of the synod. It has, besides, an original jurisdiction, as well on subjects of general interest, as with regard to the conduct of its own members, and can both give authoritative directions to the presbyteries, and originate propositions to the general assembly on any subject which seems to require its influence or authority. On the other hand, every judgment of a synod as an inferior court, may be brought under the review of the general assembly by reference, complaint, or appeal. But in every question, not carried to the general assembly, the judgment of the synod (if it has not gone beyond its jurisdiction) is final. Synods whose boundaries are contiguous correspond with one another, by sending one minister and one elder, who are entitled to sit and vote with the other members of the synod to which they are sent. The number of synods is sixteen. The synod is opened by the moderator of the preceding synod, and after the roll is made up, a new moderator, who must be a minister, is elected. Other presbyterian bodies have synods, which are similarly constituted. The convocations of the English clergy are provincial synods, but they have virtually expired.—2. A meeting, convention, or council; as, a synod of gods.

Let us call to synod all the blest. Milton.

3. In astron., a conjunction of two or more planets or stars in the same optical place of the heavens.

SYN'ODAL, n. Anciently, a pecuniary rent, paid to the bishop or archdeacon at the time of his Easter visitation, by every parish priest; a procuration.

Synodals are due of common right to the bishop only. Gibson.

2. Constitutions made in provincial or diocesan synods, are sometimes called synodals.

SYN'ODAL, } SYNOD'IC, } SYNOD'ICAL, } a. Pertaining to a synod; transacted in a synod; as, synodical proceedings or forms; a synodical epistle.—Synodical month, in astron., is the period from one conjunction of the moon with the sun to another. This is called also a lunation, because in the course of it the moon exhibits all its phases. This month consists of 29 days, 12 hours, 44 minutes, 2·87 seconds.—Synodic revolution of a planet, with respect to the sun, is the period which elapses between two consecutive conjunctions or oppositions. The duration of this period is easily determined when the difference between the mean motion of the planet and sun, in a given interval of time, is known; for this difference is to 360° as the given interval to the synodic revolution.

SYNOD'ICALLY, adv. By the authority of a synod.

SYNOM'OSY, n. [Gr. συνωμοσια: συν, with, and ομνυμι, to swear.] Sworn brotherhood; a society in ancient Greece, nearly resembling a modern political club.

SYNON'YMA, n. plur. Words having the same signification. But synonyms is a regular English word.

SYNON'YMAL,† a. Synonymous.

SYNON'YMALLY,† adv. Synonymously.

SYN'ONYME, } SYN'ONYM, } n. [Gr. συνωνυμος: συν, with, and ονομα, name.] A name, noun, or other word having the same signification as another, is its synonym. Thus valour and courage, are regarded as synonyms; so also, virtue and goodness; vice and wickedness. Strictly speaking, words having exactly the same signification do not exist in any language. Different dialects of the same language may indeed have different words of the same meaning, but as soon as these pass from the dialect into the literary or generally adopted language, they either take the place of some other word of the same signification, or receive themselves a new shade of meaning, and are then added to the others. Still, it is true, that the similarity in the meaning of words is often so great, that much discrimination is required to ascertain the different shade of each word. Such words may be frequently used for one another, and this interchange produces a pleasing variety in composition, and is necessary in poetry. Synonymes form an important object of philological study, and demand, on the part of the inquirer, great knowledge of the principles of language. Blair, Booth, and Crabb have written on English synonymes

He has extricated the synonyms of former authors. Coxe's Russ.

SYNON'YMIST, n. One who synonymizes. Specially, among botanists, a person who collects the different names or synonyms of plants, and reduces them to one another.

SYNON'YMIZE, v. t. To express the same meaning in different words.

SYNON'YMIZED, pp. Expressed in different words.

SYNON'YMIZING, ppr. Expressing the same thing in different words.

SYNON'YMOUS, a. Expressing the same thing; conveying the same idea. We rarely find two words precisely synonymous. Wave and billow are sometimes synonymous, but not always. When we speak of the large rolling swell of the sea, we may call it a wave or a billow; but when we speak of the small swell of a pond, we may call it a wave, but we may not call it a billow.

SYNON'YMOUSLY, adv. In a synonymous manner; in the same sense; with the same meaning. Two words may be used synonymously in some cases and not in others.

SYNON'YMY, n. The quality of expressing the same meaning by different words.—2. In rhet., a figure by which synonymous words are used to amplify a discourse.

SYNOP'SIS, n. [Gr. συνοψις: συν, with, and οψις, view.] A general view, or a collection of things or parts so arranged as to exhibit the whole or the principal parts in a general view.

SYNOP'TIC, SYNOP'TICAL, a. Affording a general view of the whole, or of the principal parts of a thing; as, a synoptic table.

SYNOP'TICALLY, adv. In such a manner as to present a general view in a short compass.

SYNORHIZ'OUS, a. [Gr. συν, with, and ῥιζα, a root.] Synorhizous plants are those of which the seeds have the point of the radicle incorporated with the albumen; as the pines, firs, coniferæ, and other polycotyledonous plants.

SYNO'VIA, n. [Gr. συν, with, and L. ovum, an egg.] In anat., the fluid secreted into the cavities of joints, for the purpose of lubricating them, and to facilitate their motions. It is glairy, and resembles the white of an egg; hence the name.

SYNO'VIAL, a. [supra.] Pertaining to synovia; secreting a lubricating fluid; as, the synovial membrane; synovial gland.

SYNTAC'TIC, SYNTAC'TICAL, a. [See SYNTAX.] Pertaining to syntax, or the construction of sentences. —2. According to the rules of syntax or construction.

SYNTAC'TICALLY, adv. In conformity to syntax.

SYN'TAX, SYNTAX'IS, n. [L. syntaxis; Gr. συνταξις: συν, together, and τασσω, to put.] 1. In gram., the construction of sentences, the due arrangement of words and sentences, according to established usage. Syntax includes concord and regimen, or the agreement and government of words. Words, in every language, have certain connections and relations, as verbs and adjectives with nouns, which relations must be observed in the formation of sentences. A gross violation of the rules of syntax is a solecism.—2.† Connected system or order; union of things.

SYNTERE'SIS, n. [Gr. συν and τηρεω.] Remorse of conscience.

SYNTERET'IC, a. Preserving health.

SYNTET'IC, a. Wasting with consumption.

SYNTEX'IS, n. [Gr.] A deep consumption.

SYN'THESIS, n. [Gr. συνθεσις: συν, and τιθημι, to put or set.] 1. Composition, or the putting of two or more things together, as in compound medicines.—2. In logic, composition, or that process of reasoning in which we advance by a regular chain from principles before established or assumed, and propositions already proved, till we arrive at the conclusion. Synthesis is also called the direct method or composition, and is the reverse of analysis or resolution. It is the method followed in Euclid's Elements of Geometry, and most demonstrations of the ancient mathematicians, which proceed from definitions and axioms, to prove propositions, &c., and from those propositions proved, to prove others. Synthesis and analysis are much blended together in the exact sciences, and it may be doubted whether pure synthesis or pure analysis exists in large quantities, in an unmixed state in any science whatever. [See ANALYSIS.]—3. In sur., the operation by which divided parts are united.—4. In chem., the uniting of elements into a compound; the opposite of analysis, which is the separation of a compound into its constituent parts. That water is composed of oxygen and hydrogen, is proved both by analysis and synthesis. The terms synthesis and analysis in chemistry are synonymous with composition or combination, and decomposition.

SYNTHET'IC, SYNTHET'ICAL, a. Pertaining to synthesis; consisting in synthesis or composition; as, the synthetic method of reasoning, as opposed to the analytical.

SYNTHET'ICALLY, adv. By synthesis; by composition.

SYN'THETIZE, v. t. To unite in regular structure. [Not much used.]

SYN'TOMY, n. [Gr. συντομια.] Brevity; conciseness.

SYNTON'IC, a. [Gr. συν, with, and τονος, tone] In music, sharp; intense.

SY'PHERING, n. In ship-building, the lapping of the edge of one plank over the edge of another in constructing the bulk-heads.

SYPH'ILIS, n. [A term coined by Fracastorius, and introduced into nosology by Sauvages. Its etymology is unknown.] Lues venerea, or the venereal disease, a disease characterized by ulcers of a peculiar character on the genitals, succeeded by inguinal buboes. So far, the disease is local. The indications of a constitutional affection are ulcers in the throat, copper-coloured eruptions on the skin, pains in the bones, nodes, &c. This malady is exclusively contagious.

SYPHILIT'IC, a. Pertaining to syphilis.

SYPH'ILOID, a. [syphilis, and Gr. ειδος, resemblance.] Resembling syphilis; as, syphiloid affections.

SY'PHON, n. [Gr. σιφων.] A tube or pipe. More correctly Siphon,—which see.

SY'REN. See SIREN.

SYR'IAC, n. The language of Syria, especially the ancient language of that country. It differs very little from the Chaldee or Eastern Aramaic.

SYR'IAC, a. [from Syria.] Pertaining to Syria, or its language; as, the Syriac version of the Pentateuch; Syriac Bible.

SYR'IACISM, n. A Syrian idiom.

SYR'IAN, a. Pertaining to Syria.

SYR'IAN, n. A native or inhabitant of Syria.

SYR'IANISM, n. A Syrian idiom, or a peculiarity in the Syrian language.

SYR'IASM, n. The same as Syrianism.

SYRIN'GA, n. [Gr. συριγξ, συριγγος, a pipe.] The lilac, a genus of plants, nat. order Oleaceæ. The species are deciduous shrubs, natives of Europe, and the colder parts of Asia. The leaves are simple, the flowers are purple or white, very fragrant, and arranged in thyrsoid terminal panicles. —S. vulgaris, the common lilac, is one of the commonest ornaments of our shrubberies, blossoming together with the laburnum in May. [See LILAC.] Other species are, S. josikea, the Josikas lilac, a native of Transylvania; S. persica, the Persian lilac; S. chinensis, the Chinese lilac; S. emodi, a native of Kumaon, near the Himalaya; and S. villosa, found on mountains about Pekin in China. The name syringa is improperly applied to the species of Philadelphus or Mock-orange.

SYRINGE, n. (syr'inj.) [supra.] A portable hydraulic instrument of the pump kind, commonly employed to draw in a quantity of water or other fluid, and to squirt or eject the same with violence. In its simplest form it consists of a small cylindrical tube with an air-tight piston or sucker, to the rod of which a ring or other convenient handle is attached. The lower end of the cylinder terminates in a small tube, which being immersed in any fluid, and the piston then drawn up, the fluid is forced into the body of the cylinder by the atmospheric pressure. By pushing back the piston to the bottom of the cylinder, the contained fluid is expelled in a small jet, and with a force proportioned to the power applied to the piston. The syringe acts on the principle of the sucking pump, and is used by surgeons, &c., for washing wounds, for injecting fluids into animal bodies, and other purposes. It is also employed as a pneumatic machine for condensing or exhausting the air in a close vessel, but for this purpose two valves are necessary. In the condensing syringe the valves open downwards and close upwards; but in the exhausting syringe they open upwards, and close downwards, as in the common air-pump.

SYR'INGE, v. t. To inject by means of a pipe or syringe; to wash and cleanse by injections from a syringe.

SYR'INGED, pp. Injected by means of a pipe or syringe.

SYRINGO'DEA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Ericaceæ. The species are natives of the Cape of Good Hope; they are erect shrubs, with loose leaves and large showy flowers, which are crowded at the tops of the branches on every side, and form a spike-like inflorescence. In their cultivation they are treated the same way as heaths.

SYRINGODEN'DRON, n. [Gr. συριγξ, a pipe, and δενδρον, a tree.] The name given by Count Sternberg to many species of Sigillaria, (a genus of extinct fossil trees,) on account of the parallel pipe-shaped flutings, which extend from the top to the bottom of their trunks. Those trunks are without joints, and many of them attain the size of forest trees.

SYRINGOT'OMY, n. [Gr. συριγξ, a pipe, and τεμνω, to cut.] The operation of cutting for the fistula.

SYR'INX, n. [Gr. συριγξ, a pipe.] In sur., a fistula.—2. In music, a wind instrument composed of reeds of different lengths, tied together. It is also known by the name of Pandean pipes, its invention having been ascribed to Pan.

SYR'MA, n. [Gr.] A long dress, reaching to the ground, worn by tragic actors.

SYR'PHIDÆ, n. A family of dipterous insects of the section Brachystoma of Macquart. The species frequent flowers and woods. Some of them inhabit the nests of the humble bees, to which they bear a striking resemblance. The genus syrphus is the type of the family.

SYRT, n. [L. syrtis.] A quicksand; a bog.

SYR'TIC, a. Relating to a syrt; sandy; boggy.

SYR'TIS, n. plur. Syrtes. [L.] A quicksand. [Not English.] The Greeks and Romans gave the name syrtes to the two gulfs on the northern coast of Africa, one of which they called Syrtis major, and the other Syrtis minor. Both were the terror of the ancient mariners from their drawing in ships, and swallowing them up in their sandy shoals. The greater syrtis is now called the gulf of Sidra, and the lesser the gulf of Khabs.

SYR'UP, or SIR'UP, n. [Fr. syrop; Low L. sirupus, or syrupus; from Gr. συριας οπος, succus syriacus, because the use of syrups originated with the Syrians. But perhaps the word is derived from Arab. sirab, a drink, a potion, a medicated drink; Ar. sherâb, a beverage; sharâbah, a draught.] Syrups are medicinal solutions of sugar, either in water alone, as in simple syrup, or in liquids charged with some peculiar principle of an active kind, such as senna or buckthorn, or merely grateful from their colour or fragrance, or both; such as syrup of violets. There is almost an endless variety of syrups, but few of them possess medical properties to any important extent SYR'UPED, or SIR'UPED, a. Moistened or tinged with syrup.

SYR'UPY, or SIR'UPY, a. Like syrup, or partaking of its qualities.

SYSSARCO'SIS, n. [Gr. συν, with, and σαρξ, flesh.] A species of union of bones, in which one bone is united to another by means of an intervening muscle.

SYSTAL'TIC, a. In med., having alternate contraction and dilatation.

SYS'TASIS, n. [Gr. συστασις.] The consistence of a thing; constitution. [Little used.]

SYS'TEM, n. [Fr. système; L. systema; Gr. συστημα: συν and ιστημι, to set.] 1. Any combination of things acting together; an assemblage of things adjusted into a regular whole; or a whole plan or scheme consisting of many parts connected in such a manner as to create a chain of mutual dependences; or a regular union of principles or parts forming one entire thing, or an assemblage of facts, or of principles and conclusions scientifically arranged, or disposed according to certain mutual relations, so as to form a complete whole. Thus we say, a system of logic, a system of philosophy, a system of government, a system of principles, the solar system, the Copernican system, a system of divinity, a system of law, a system of morality, a system of husbandry, a system of botany or of chemistry. System is sometimes nearly synonymous with classification, and sometimes with hypothesis or theory. Thus we speak of a mythological system, or a chronological system, in the historical sciences; of a botanical system, or a mineralogical system, in natural science; and of the Copernican, Ptolemaic, or Tychonic system, in astronomy. The purpose of a system is to classify the individual subjects of our knowledge in such a way as to enable us readily to retain and employ them, and at the same time to illustrate each by showing its connection with all. The constituent parts of a system are a fundamental principle which serves as a basis for the whole, and a large collection of facts, from which the various laws are to be deduced, which themselves all flow together into the common principle.—2. Regular method or order.—3. In astron., any hypothesis or theory of the disposition and arrangements of the heavenly bodies, by which their phenomena, their motions, changes, &c., are explained. When such a theory embraces only the sun and the planetary bodies connected with him, it is termed the solar or planetary system; but when it embraces the fixed stars also, or the whole material creation generally, it is termed a system of the universe, or of the world. The most celebrated systems of the world are the following:—1. The Ptolemaic system, framed by the Greek astronomer Ptolemy. According to this system, the earth is an absolutely fixed centre, and the heavens are considered as revolving about it from east to west, and carrying along with them all the heavenly bodies, the stars and planets, in the space of twenty-four hours. 2. The Copernican system, taught by Copernicus in the beginning of the 16th century. According to this system, the sun is supposed to be at rest in the centre of the universe, and the earth and the several planets to revolve about him as a centre, while the moon and the other satellites revolve about their primaries in the same manner. The heavens and fixed stars are here supposed to be at rest, and their apparent diurnal motions are imputed to the earth's motion from west to east. 3. The Tychonic system, proposed by Tycho de Brahe, towards the latter end of the 16th century. According to this system, the sun is a centre of motion to all the planets which revolve round it, while the sun and planetary orbits are carried together round the earth as a fixed centre. 4 The Newtonian system, so named as being adopted by Sir Isaac Newton. In this system there is no fixed centre, the sun only approximating to that character from its greater magnitude. The orbits of the planets, which all revolve round the sun, are approximately represented by ellipses, exactly by ellipses of which the elements vary. The Newtonian system, which is the only one admitted in modern astronomy, is frequently called the Copernican, from its rejecting what Copernicus rejected, but it is far from receiving all that Copernicus received. The term system is frequently applied to the subdivisions of the solar system; thus we have the terrestrial, Jovial, Saturnian, Uranian systems.—4. In anat. and phys., an assemblage of parts or organs which are essentially necessary to the performance of some animal function, as the absorbent system, the nervous system, the vascular system. The whole human body, as an assemblage of parts, is also often termed the system.—5. In the fine arts, a collection of the rules and principles upon which an artist works.—6. In music, an interval compounded or supposed to be compounded of several lesser intervals, as the fifth, octave, &c., the elements of which are called diastems.

SYSTEMAT'IC, } a. Pertaining to SYSTEMAT'ICAL, } system; consisting in system; methodical; formed with regular connection and adaptation or subordination of parts to each other, and to the design of the whole; as a systematic arrangement of plants or animals; a systematic course of study.—2. Proceeding according to system or regular method; as, a systematic writer.

SYSTEMAT'ICALLY, adv. In the form of a system; methodically.

SYS'TEMATISM, n. Reduction of facts to a system

SYS'TEMATIST, n. One who forms a system, or reduces to system.

SYS'TEMATIZE, or SYS'TEMIZE, v. t. To reduce to system or regular method; as, to systematize the principles of moral philosophy; to systematize plants or fossils.

SYS'TEMATIZED, } pp. Reduced to SYS'TEMIZED, } system or method.

SYSTEMATI'ZER, } n. One who re-
SYS'TEMIZER, } duces things to system.

SYS'TEMATIZING, } ppr. Reducing SYS'TEMIZING, } to system or method.

SYSTEMATOLO'GY, n. A treatise or discourse on the various systems.

SYSTEM'IC, a. Pertaining to a system.—Systemic circulation, the circulation of the blood through the body generally, as distinguished from that other circulation which is confined to the respiratory organs and the heart, or the respiratory circulation.

SYS'TEM-MAKER, n. One who forms a system.

SYS'TEM-MONGER, n. One given to the forming of systems.

SYS'TOLE, n. [Gr. συστολη, from συστελλω, to contract; συν and στελλω, to send.] 1. In gram., the shortening of a long syllable.—2. In anat., the contraction of the heart and arteries, for expelling the blood, and carrying on the circulation. [See DIASTOLE.]

SYSTOL'IC, a. Relating to systole; contracting.

SYS'TYLE, n. [Gr. συν, with or together, and στυλος, a column.] In arch., an intercolumniation of two diameters.

SYTHE. See SCYTHE.

SYXHEN'DEMAN,† n. A man, in Anglo-Saxon times, worth six hundred shillings.

SYZY'GIUM, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Myrtaceæ. The species inhabit tropical countries; they are trees or shrubs of a highly ornamental appearance from their smooth shining leaves, which are opposite and entire.—S. guineense, which grows on the coast of Guinea and Senegal, has been employed as a remedy in rheumatism.—S. jambolanum is extensively cultivated in the East Indies on account of its edible fruit, sometimes called Java plum by Europeans, but Jamoon by the natives. It is of a rich purplish colour, but of a subastringent sweetish taste, which is more agreeable to the native than to the European palate. The bark is astringent, and dyes of a brown colour; the wood is hard and durable, and much employed.

SYZ'YGY, n. [Gr. συζυγια: συν and ζυγοω, to join.] The conjunction or opposition of a planet with the sun, or of any two of the heavenly bodies. On the phenomena and circumstances of the syzygies, depends a great part of the lunar theory.—2. [L. syzygia.] In gram., the coupling of different feet together in Greek or Latin verse.

T IS the twentieth letter of the English Alphabet, and a close consonant. It represents a close joining of the end of the tongue to the root of the upper teeth, as may be perceived by the syllable at, et, ot, ut, in attempting to pronounce which, the voice is completely intercepted. It is therefore numbered among the mutes, or close articulations, and it differs from d chiefly in its closeness; for in pronouncing ad, ed, we perceive the voice is not so suddenly and entirely intercepted, as in pronouncing at and et. T by itself has one sound only, as in take, turn, bat, bolt, smite, bitter. So we are accustomed to speak; but in reality, t can be hardly said to have any sound at all. Its use, like that of all mute articulations, is to modify the manner of uttering the vocal sound which precedes or follows it. When t is followed by h, as in think and that, the combination really forms a distinct sound for which we have no single character. This combination has two sounds in English; aspirated, as in think, and vocal, as in that. The letters ti, before a vowel, and unaccented, usually pass into the sound of sh, as in nation, motion, partial, substantiate; which are pronounced nashon, moshon, parshal, substanshate. In this case, t loses entirely its proper sound or use, and being blended with the subsequent letter, a new sound results from the combination, which is in fact a simple sound. In a few words, the combination of ti has the sound of the English ch, as in Christian, mixtion, question. T is convertible with d. Thus the Germans write tag, where we write day, and gut, for good. It is also convertible with s and z, for the Germans write wasser, for water, and zahm, for tame. T. as an abbreviation, stands for theologia; as, S. T. D sanctæ theologiæ doctor, doctor of divinity. In ancient monuments and writings, T. is an abbreviature which stands for Titus, Titius, or Tullius. As a numeral, T, among the Latins, stood for 160, and with a dash over the top, $\bar{T}$, for 160,000. In music, T is the initial of tenor, vocal and instrumental; of tacet, for silence, as adagio tacet, when a person is to rest during the whole movement. In concertos and symphonies, it is the initial of tutti, the whole band, after a solo. It sometimes stands for tr. or trillo, a shake. —T-bandage, a bandage so named from its figure. It is principally used for supporting the dressings after the operation for fistula in the anus, in diseases of the perinæum, and those of the groin, anus, &c. —T-square, an instrument much used in drawing plans of architectural and mechanical objects. It consists simply of two slips of hard wood or mahogany, a and b, whose edges are dressed truly straight and parallel; the former, called the blade, is much thinner than the stock, b, into which one of its extremities is fixed firmly at right angles; consequently, when the stock is applied to the edges of a rectangular board on which the paper is stretched, a pen or pencil pressed tightly against the blade will trace straight lines parallel or at right angles to each other, as may be required. Sometimes a shifting stock, c, is also applied in the manner represented in the figure for the convenience of drawing oblique lines parallel to each other.

TAB, n. The latchet of a shoe fastened with a string, or otherwise. [Local.] —2. The end of a lace; a tag. [Local.] —3. A cap border, worn in the inside of a lady's bonnet.—4. A cup. [Local.] TABA'NIDÆ, n. A family of dipterous insects. The genus Tabanus, which is the type of the family, comprehends the gad-flies.

TABA'NUS, n. The horse-fly or gad-fly.

TA'BARD, TA'BERD, TA'BERT, TA'BELD, } n. [Fr. tabarre, from tabardum, low Latin.] An ancient close-fitting garment, open at the sides, with wide sleeves, or flaps, reaching to the elbows. It was worn over the body armour, and generally emblazoned. At first the tabard was very long, reaching to the mid-leg, but it was afterwards made shorter. It was at first chiefly worn by the military, but afterwards became an ordinary article of dress among other classes in France and England in the middle ages. In this country the tabard is now only worn by heralds.

Tabard, Sir John Cornwall, Ampthill church, Beds.

TAB'ARDER, n. One who wears a tabard.

TABARDEERS, n. A name formerly given to the scholars at Oxford, who wore the tabard.

TAB'ARET, n. A stout satin-striped silk, used for furniture.

TABASHEER, n. A Persian word signifying a concretion found in the joints of the bamboo, said by Dr. Russel to be the juice of the plant thickened and hardened; by others, to be pure silex. It is highly valued in the East Indies as a medicine, for the cure of bilious vomitings, bloody flux, piles, &c.; but its medicinal virtues seem to be more imaginary than real.

TAB'BIED, pp. Watered; made wavy.

TAB'BINET, n. A more delicate kind of tabby; taffety.

TAB'BY, a. [See the noun.] Brinded; brindled; diversified in colour; as, a tabby cat.

TAB'BY, n. [Fr. tabis; It. Sp. and Port. tabi; G. tobin; Arm. taftas, taffeta. Qu. Fr. taveler, to spot.] 1. The name formerly given to a kind of rich silk and other stuffs watered or figured, by being passed through a calender, the rollers of which are variously engraved. The engraved parts, pressing unequally upon the stuff, renders the surface unequal, so as to reflect the rays of light differently, and produce the appearance of waves. The same effect may be produced by folding the stuffs in a particular manner, and subjecting them to pressure.—2. A mixture of lime with shells, gravel, or stones in equal proportions, with an equal proportion of water, forming a mass, which when dry, becomes as hard as rock. This is used in Morocco instead of bricks for the walls of buildings.—3. A cat. [Colloq.]—4. An old maiden lady; an ancient spinster. [Trivial, and used in contempt.]

TAB'BY, v. t. To water or cause to look wavy; as, to tabby silk, mohair, ribbon, &c. This is done by a calender without water.

TAB'BYING, n. The passing of stuffs under a calender to give them a wavy appearance, called also watering.

TABEFAC'TION, n. [L. tabeo, to waste, and facio, to make. See TABEFY.] A wasting away; a gradual losing of flesh by disease.

TAB'EFY, v. i. [Heb. and Ch. דאב, daab, to pine: or Ar. tabba, to be weakened, to perish.] To consume; to waste gradually; to lose flesh. [Little used.]

TABEL'LION, n. [Fr.; L. tabellio, from tabula, a tablet.] A kind of secretary or notary. Such a functionary existed under the Roman empire; and, during the old system, in France.

TAB'ERD. See TABARD.

TAB'ERN, n. A provincial name for a cellar.

TAB'ERNACLE, n. [L. tabernaculum, a tent, from taberna, a shop or shed, from tabula, a board; or rather from its root. See TABLE.] 1. A tent; Numb. xxiv.; Matt. xvii.—2. A temporary habitation.—3. Among the Jews, a movable building, so contrived as to be taken to pieces with ease and reconstructed, for the convenience of being carried during the wanderings of the Israelites in the wilderness. It was of a rectangular figure, thirty cubits long, ten broad, and ten high. The interior was divided into two rooms or compartments by a vail or curtain, and it was covered with four different spreads or carpets. The outer or larger compartment was called the holy place, being that in which incense was burned, and the shew-bread exhibited; and the inner the most holy place, or holy of holies, in which was deposited the ark of the covenant. The word tabernacle is also applied to the temple; Ps. xv.—Feast of tabernacles, the last of the three great annual festivals of the Israelites, which required the presence of all the people in Jerusalem. Its object was to commemorate the dwelling of the people in tents during their journeys in the wilderness, and it was also a feast of thanksgiving for the harvest and vintage. It was celebrated in autumn at the conclusion of the vintage, and lasted eight days, during which the people dwelt in booths made in the streets, in courts, or on the tops of their houses, of the leafy branches of certain trees. These booths were intended to represent the tents in which the Israelites dwelt in the wilderness. [See Lev. xxiii.]—4. A small temple; a place of worship; a sacred place. The meeting houses of the Methodists are often called tabernacles.—5. Our natural body; 2 Cor. v.; 2 Pet. i.—6. God's gracious presence, or the tokens of it; Rev. xxi. 7. An ornamented chest placed on Roman catholic altars as a receptacle of the ciborium and pyxis.—8. In Goth. arch., a canopied stall or niche; a cabinet or shrine ornamented with open-worked tracery, &c.; an arched canopy over a tomb; also, a tomb or monument.

TAB'ERNACLE, v. i To dwell; to reside for a time; to be housed; as we say, Christ tabernacled in the flesh.

TAB'ERNACLE, a. In arch., like a tabernacle; richly and quaintly ornate; as, tabernacle work.

TABERNAC'ULAR, a. Latticed.

TABERNÆMONTA'NA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Apocynaceæ. T. utilis is the Hya-Hya or Cow-tree of Demerara, the thick juice of which is used as milk.

TA'BES, n. [L.] A dysthetic or cachectic disease, characterized by a gradually progressive emaciation of the whole body, accompanied with languor, depressed spirits, and, for the most part, imperfect or obscure hectic, without any topical affection of any of the viscera of the head, chest, or belly. Tabes and consumption are different diseases. The name tabes is now retained for only two forms of disease: 1. Tabes mesenterica, that wasting of the body which follows scrofulous inflammation of the mesenteric glands; and, 2. Tabes dorsalis, which denotes an impairment of general health, attended by emaciation, muscular debility, and signs of nervous exhaustion, occasioned by an inordinate indulgence of the sexual appetite. It is so called from the weakness which it causes in the back and loins.

TABET'IC, a. Tabid; affected with tabes.

TAB'ID, a. [Fr. tabide; L. tabidus, from tabeo, to waste.] Wasted by disease.

> In tabid persons, milk is the best restorative. Arbuthnot.

TAB'IDNESS, n. State of being wasted by disease.

TABINET'. See TABBINET.

TAB'ITUDE, n. [L.] The state of one affected with tabes.

TAB'LATURE, n. [from table.] Painting on walls and ceilings; a single piece comprehended in one view, and formed according to one design.—2. In music, the expression of sounds or notes of composition by letters of the alphabet or ciphers, or other characters not used in modern music. In a stricter sense, the manner of writing a piece for the lute, theorbo, guitar, bass viol, or the like; which is done by writing on several parallel lines, (each of which represents a string of the instrument,) certain letters of the alphabet, referring to the frets on the neck of the instrument, each letter directing how some note is to be sounded. This mode of writing music has long been disused.—3. In anat., a division or parting of the skull into two tables.

TA'BLE, n. [Fr. from L. tabula; It. tavola; W. tavell, a flat mass, a tablet, a slice, a spread; tâb, tâv, a spread, an extended surface; tavlu, to throw, to project; tavu, to spread or overspread; Sax. tæfl, a die; a table-man; D. tafel, a board, a table, whence in ships, tafferel; G. and Sw. tafel, a board or table; Russ. id.; Fr. tableau, a picture.] 1. A flat surface of some extent, or a thing that has a flat surface; as, a table of marble.—2. An article of furniture, consisting usually of a frame with a surface of boards or of marble, supported by legs, and used for a great variety of purposes, as for holding dishes of meat, for writing on, &c.

> The nymph the table spread. Pope.

3. Fare or entertainment of provisions; as, he keeps a good table.—4. The persons sitting at table or partaking of entertainment.

> I drink to th' general joy of the whole table. Shak.

5. A tablet; a surface on which any thing is written or engraved. The ten commandments were written on two tables of stone; Exod. xxxii.

> Written . not on tables of stone, but on fleshly tables of the heart; 2 Cor. iii.

6. A picture, or something that exhibits a view of anything on a flat surface.

> Saint Anthony has a table that hangs up to him from a poor peasant. Addison.

7. Among Christians, the table, or Lord's table, is the sacrament, or holy communion of the Lord's supper.—8. The altar of burnt-offering; Mal. i.—9. In arch., a tablet; a flat surface, generally rectangular, charged with some ornamental figure. When it projects from the naked of the wall it is termed a raised or projecting table; when it is not perpendicular to the horizon, it is called a raking table: and when the surface is rough, frosted, or vermiculated, it is called a rustic table.—10. In persp., a plain surface, supposed to be transparent and perpendicular to the horizon. It is called also perspective plane.—11. In anat., a division of the cranium or skull. The cranium is composed of two tables or laminæ, with a cellular structure between them, called the meditullium or diploë.—12. In the glass manufacture, a circular sheet of finished glass, usually about four feet in diameter. Twenty-four tables make a case.—13. In literature, an index; a collection of heads or principal matters contained in a book, with reference to the pages where each may be found; as, a table of contents.—14. A synopsis; many particulars brought into one view.—15. The palm of the hand.

> Mistress of a fairer table
> Hath not history nor fable. B. Jonson

16. Draughts; small pieces of wood shifted on squares.

> We are in the world like men playing at tables. Taylor.

17. In math. and physics, tables are systems of numbers calculated to be ready for expediting operations, or for exhibiting the measures or values of some property common to a number of different bodies, in reference to some common standard; as, tables of logarithms, tables of annuities, tables of rhumbs, tables of the powers or roots of the different numbers, tables of multiplication, tables of specific gravity, of refractive powers, of the expansions of bodies by heat, &c.—18. Astronomical tables are computations of the motions, places and other phenomena of the planets, both primary and secondary.—19. In chem., a list or catalogue of substances or their properties; as, a table of known acids; a table of acidifiable bases; a table of binary combinations; a table of specific gravities.—20. In general, any series of numbers formed on mathematical or other correct principles. Thus we have chronological tables, tables of mortality, &c.—21. A division of the ten commandments; as, the first and second tables. The first table comprehends our more immediate duties to God; the second table, our more immediate duties to each other.—22. Among jewellers, a table diamond or other precious stone, is one whose upper surface is quite flat, and the sides only cut in angles.—23. A list or catalogue; as, a table of stars.—Raised table, in sculp., an embossment in a frontispiece for an inscription or other ornament, supposed to be the abacus of Vitruvius.—Round table: Knights of the round table were a military order instituted by Arthur, the first king of the Britons, A. D. 516.—Twelve tables, the laws of the Roman republic, so called because they were cut in tablets of bronze, and set up in a public place. These laws were drawn up by the Decemvirs, B. C. 451, and hence they were at first called the laws of the Decemvirs. They were originally only ten in number, but two more were added to them B. C. 450. The twelve tables are called by Livy the source of public and private law; and the text of them was preserved down to the latest age of Roman literature. They formed the basis of the greater part of Roman jurisprudence.—To turn the tables, to change the condition or fortune of contending parties; a metaphorical expression taken from the vicissitudes of fortune in gaming.—To serve tables, to provide for the poor; or to distribute provisions for their wants; Acts vi.

TA'BLE, v. i. To board; to diet or live at the table of another. Nebuchadnezzar tabled with the beasts.

TA'BLE, v. t. To form into a table or catalogue; as, to table fines. In England, the chirographer tables the fines of every county, and fixes a copy in some open place of the court.—2. To board; to supply with food.—3. To let one piece of timber into another by alternate scores or projections from the middle.—4. To lay or place upon a table.—5. To enter upon the record; as, to table charges against some one, to table a motion to be considered at a subsequent meeting. [Used exclusively of business meetings, whether public or private.]

TA'BLE, a. Appertaining to, or provided for a table; as, table-flaps, or table-beer.—2. Plane; level; as, table land.

TAB'LEAU, n. [Fr.] A picture; a striking and vivid representation.—2. Performers grouped in a dramatic scene.

TAB'LEAUX VI'VANTS. [Fr. living pictures.] An amusement in which groups of persons are so dressed and placed, as to represent some interesting scene in the works of distinguished painters or authors. Such representations are frequently resorted to in Germany and France, on festive occasions.

TA'BLE-BED, n. [table and bed.] A bed in the form of a table.

TA'BLE-BEER, n. [table and beer.] Beer for the table, or for common use; small beer.

TA'BLE-BELL, n. A small bell to be used at table for calling servants.

TA'BLE-BOOK, n. [table and book.] A book on which any thing is engraved or written without ink; tablets.

> Put into your table-book whatever you judge worthy. Dryden.

TA'BLE-CLOTH, n. [table and cloth.] A cloth for covering a table, particularly for spreading on a table before the dishes are set for meals.

TA'BLE-COVER, n. [table and cover.] A cloth, made of wool, flax, cotton, &c., usually woven or stamped with a pattern, and laid on a table between meal-times.

TA'BLED, pp. Formed into a table; placed upon a table.

TA'BLE D'HOTE. (täbl dōt.) [Fr.] A common table for guests at a French hotel. The same phrase is used in Belgium, Germany, Switzerland, &c.; an ordinary.

TA'BLE-LANDS, n. [table and land.] The name given to extensive plains which are much elevated above the level of the sea, and have steep acclivities on every side, and therefore differ from other plains, which are either not much elevated, or attain their elevation by imperceptible degrees. The chief table-lands are those among the Andes, those of Mexico, those of Southern Africa, and the immense plains in Central Asia, to the north and north-east of Hindostan. A table-land is also frequently called a plateau.

TA'BLE-LINEN, n. Table-cloths, napkins, &c. [In Scotland, formerly called napery, from napperie, Fr.]

TA'BLE-MAN, n. [table and man.] A man at draughts; a piece of wood.

TA'BLE-MONEY, n. In mar. affairs, an allowance to flag-officers in addition to their pay, as a compensation for the necessary expenses which they are put to in furnishing their tables.

TA'BLER, n. One who tables or boards.

TA'BLE-RENTS, n. Rents paid to bishops, &c., reserved and appropriated to their table or housekeeping.

TA'BLES, n. plur. An old game resembling backgammon.—2. In Scottish eccles. hist., the designation given to the permanent council held in Edinburgh for managing the affairs of the covenanters, during the reign of Charles I. This council is said to have been so named from a green table at which the members sat.

TA'BLE-SHORE, n. In mar. lan., a low level shore.

TA'BLE-SPAR. See TABULAR-SPAR.

TA'BLE-SPOON, n. A large spoon used at table.

TA'BLE-SPOON'FUL, n. The full, or once filling, of a table-spoon. Plural, table-spoonfuls.

TA'BLE-SPORT,† n. Amusement at table.

TAB'LET, n. A small table or flat surface.—2. Something flat on which to write, paint, draw, or engrave.—In antiquity, tablets covered with wax, paper, or parchment, were used as ordinary writing materials. Tablets of ivory, metal, stone, or other substance were also used in judiciary proceedings, and all public acts and monuments were in early ages preserved on such materials.

> Through all Greece the young gentlemen learned to design on tablets of boxen wood. Dryden.
> The pillar'd marble, and the tablet brass. Prior.

3. In arch., a word synonymous with table. [See TABLE, No. 9.] Some writers use it to designate a horizontal projection from the surface of a wall; as, earth-tablet, base-tablet, &c.—4. A medicine in a square form. Tablets of arsenic were formerly worn as a preservative against the plague. A solid kind of electuary or confection, made of dry ingredients, usually with sugar, and formed into little flat squares; called also lozenge and troche; also applied to anything made up in a flat square shape, as a tablet of soap.

TA'BLE-TALK, n. [table and talk.] Conversation at table or at meals.

> He improves by the table-talk. Guardian.

TA'BLE-TALK'ER, n. A conversationist; one who studies to lead or outshine others in table-talk; a verbal monopolist.

TA'BLING, ppr. Boarding; forming into a table; letting one timber into another by scores; placing upon a table.

TA'BLING, n. A forming into tables; a setting down in order.—2. The letting of one timber into another by alternate scores or projections, as in ship-building.—3. In sail-making, a broad hem made on the skirts of sails by turning over the edge of the canvas, and sewing it down.—4. Among Scotch builders, a term used to designate the coping of very common houses.—Tabling of fines, in law, the forming into a table or catalogue the fines, acknowledged in the court of common pleas. This is done by an officer called the chirographer. [See CHIROGRAPH, CHIROGRAPHER.]—Tabling of a summons. In Scots law, it was the practice in former times to set down in a table all summonses, to be called in their turns; those from each quarter into which Scotland was divided, having a particular quarter of the year allotted to them. The setting down of a summons in such a table, was called tabling of the summons. [See SUMMONS, CALLING OF A SUMMONS, under CALLING.]

TABLINUM, n. [L.] An apartment in a Roman house in which records were kept and the hereditary statues placed. It entered immediately from the Atrium.

TABOO', n. In the isles of the Pacific, a word denoting prohibition or religious interdict, which is of great force among the inhabitants.

TABOO', v. t. To forbid, or to forbid the use of; to interdict approach or use; as, to taboo the ground set apart as a sanctuary for criminals. Tabooed ground is held sacred and inviolable.

TA'BOR, TA'BOUR, n. [W. tabwrz; Ir. tabar; Old Fr. tabour. This, in some languages, is written tambour, and timbrel. The atabal of the Spaniards is probably of the same family. It is probably named from striking, beating; Eng. tap, Gr. τυπτω, Syr. tabal, Ar. tab'ua.] A small drum used as an accompaniment to a pipe or fife.

TA'BOR, TA'BOUR, v. i. To strike lightly and frequently.

> Her maids shall lead her as with the voice of doves, taboring upon their breasts; Nah. ii.

2. To play on a tabor or little drum.

TA'BORER, TA'BOURER, n. One who beats the tabor.

TAB'ORET, TAB'OURET, n. [from tabor.] A small tabor.

TAB'ORINE, TAB'OURINE, n. [Fr. tabourin; from tabor.] A tabor; a small drum, in form of a sieve; also called a tambourine.

TA'BORITE, n. A name given to certain Hussites, or Bohemian reformers, in the 15th century: so named from Tabor, a hill-fort, which was their stronghold, called after Mount Tabor, in Palestine.

TAB'OURET, n. [Fr.] A convex seat without arms or back, made of gilt wood, cushioned and stuffed, covered with silk cloth, and ornamented with silk lace, fringe, tassels, &c.

TAB'RERE,† n. A taborer.

TAB'RET, n. [See TABOR.] A tabor; 1 Sam. xviii.

TAB'ULAR, a. [L. tabularis, from tabula, table.] 1. In the form of a table; having a flat or square surface.—2. Having the form of laminæ or plates.—3. Set down in tables; as, a tabular list of substances.—4. Set in squares.—Tabular crystal, one in which the prism is very short. Tabular spar, in mineral., a silicate of lime, generally of a greyish white colour. It occurs either massive or crystallized, in rectangular four-sided tables. Tabular spar is the schaalstein of Werner, and the prismatic augite of Jameson. It occurs in primary rocks in Norway and other places.—Tabular structure, in mineral., a form of structure consisting of parallel plates, separated by regular seams. It is the consequence of crystallization, and is not uncommonly confounded with stratification.—Tabular differences, in logarithmic tables of numbers, a column of numbers marked D, consisting of the differences of the logarithms taken in succession, each number being the difference between the successive logarithms in the same line with it. When the difference is not the same between all the logarithms in the same line, the number which answers most nearly to it, one part taken with another, is inserted. In the common tables of logarithms, the logarithms of all numbers from 1 to 10,000 can be found by inspection, but by the aid of the tabular differences, the logarithms of numbers between 10,000 and 1,000,000 may be found. Also, by the aid of the same differences, the number corresponding to any given logarithm can be found to 5 or 6 places. In logarithmic tables of sines, tangents, secants, cosines, cotangents, and cosecants, there are three columns of tabular differences in each page. The first of these is placed between the sines and cosecants, the second between the tangents and cotangents, and the third between the secants and cosines. These numbers are the differences between the logarithms on the left hand, against which they are placed, and the next lower, increased in the proportion of 100 to 60. The use of these differences is to facilitate the finding of the logarithmic sine, tangent, secant, &c., for any given degrees, minutes, and seconds, or the degrees, minutes, and seconds corresponding to any given logarithmic sine, tangent, secant, &c.

TAB'ULA RA'SA. [L.] A smoothed tablet. A term applied, figuratively, to the mind; and said of that of an infant, &c.

TAB'ULATE, v. t. To reduce to tables or synopses.—2. To shape with a flat surface.

TAB'ULATED, pp. Having a flat or square flat surface; as, a tabulated diamond.

TABULA'TION, n. In stat. science, the art or act of forming tables; or throwing data into a tabular form.

TACAMAHA'CA, TAC'AMAHAC, n. The popular name of Icica tacamahaca, a tree of South America; also of Calophyllum tacamahaca, a tree of Madagascar and the Isle of Bourbon; and, according to the younger Michaux (but probably by mistake), of Populus balsamifera, a tree of North America.—2. A resin, the produce of Calophyllum tacamahaca or calaba; and of Elaphrium tomentosum, sometimes called Fagara octandra, a tree of the island of Curaçoa, and other islands in its neighbourhood.

TAC'CA, n. A genus of plants, the type of the nat. order Taccaceæ. The species inhabit the hotter parts of India and the South Sea islands. F[illegible] the tub[illegible] pinnatifida, dubia and montana, a white, highly nutritious substance, like arrow-root, is separated, which is employed as an article of diet by the inhabitants of the Malayan Peninsula, and the Moluccas. The petioles and stalks of T. pinnatifida, boiled for some time, are also employed as articles of diet in China and Cochin-China. In Singapore, T. cristata is called water-lily.

TA'CE. [L. taceo.] A term used in Italian music, directing to be silent.

TACHO'METER, n. [Gr. ταχυς, quick, and μετρον, measure.] A contrivance for the purpose of indicating small variations in the velocity of machines. A cup, partly filled with mercury, and attached to a spindle, is whirled round by the machine, and the centrifugal force produced by this whirling, causes the mercury to recede from the centre and rise upon the sides of the cup. As this effect is produced by the velocity of the machine, so it is proportionate to that velocity, and subject to corresponding variations.

TACHYDIDAX'Y, n. [Gr. ταχυς, quick, and διδαχη, teaching.] A short method of imparting knowledge.

TACHYDROM'IAN, n. A bird of the genus Tachydromus; one of a tribe of Saurians, of the same name.

TACHY'DROMUS, n. According to Illiger, a genus of wading birds, the cursorius of Lacepede. The same name is given by Fitzinger to a subgenus of Saurian reptiles, found in the Indian islands and China.

TACHYGRAPH'IC, TACHYGRAPH'ICAL. a. Written in short hand.

TACHYG'RAPHY, n. [Gr. ταχυς, quick, and γραφω, to write.] The art or practice of quick writing. Sometimes written tacheography [We now use stenography, and short hand writing.]

TACH'YLITE, n. A mineral resembling obsidian, supposed also to be similar to the pyre. It is found in small masses at Säsabühl, near Göttingen in basalt and wacke.

TACHY'PETES, n. Vieillot's generic name for the frigate bird; the Pelecanus aquilus, Linn.

TAC'IT, a. [Fr. tacite; L. tacitus, from taceo, to be silent, that is, to stop, or to close. See TACK.] Silent; implied, but not expressed. Tacit consent is consent by silence, or not interposing an objection. So we say, a tacit agreement or covenant of men to live under a particular government, when no objection or opposition is made; a tacit surrender of a part of our natural rights; a tacit reproach, &c.—Tacit relocation. [See RELOCATION.]

TAIL'ZIE, } n. [Fr. tailler, to cut off.]
TAIL'YIE, } In Scots law, the technical term corresponding with the English word Entail, which now generally supersedes it in colloquial use, even in Scotland. The term, in its largest acceptation, signifies any deed, by which the legal course of succession is cut off, and an arbitrary one substituted. But it is usually applied to a deed framed in terms of the statute 1685, c. 22, and intended for the purpose of securing the descent of an heritable estate to the series of heirs or substitutes called to the succession by the maker of the tailzie. Any person is allowed to tailzie his lands and estates, and to prescribe to the heirs such conditions as he pleases. But to constitute an effectual entail he must prohibit the institute, or person to whom the estate is conveyed, in the first place, and the substitutes, who are afterwards to succeed, from selling, alienating, or disponing the estate, altering the order of succession, or contracting debt, and thereby causing the estate to be adjudged. The clauses essentially necessary to give effect to an entail are, 1st, Prohibitions against altering the order of succession, against alienating the land, and against contracting debts, whereby the lands may be burdened or affected by diligence; 2d, Irritant clauses, declaring that all deeds executed, whereby the course of succession may be altered, or the lands sold or conveyed away, and all debts contracted, contrary to the above prohibitions, shall be void and null; and, 3d, Resolutive clauses, declaring that if any of the heirs of entail shall act contrary to all or any of the prohibitions, he shall forfeit his right to the lands entailed, sometimes for himself only, and in other cases for all the heirs who may take the succession as his descendants. But in the deed of entail, as now in use, a variety of other clauses are usually added. An entail is not effectual till recorded in the register of entails at Edinburgh, and followed by infeftment.

TĀINT, v. t. [Fr. teindre, to dye or stain; L tingo; Gr. τεγγω, to dye, literally to dip, primarily to thrust, the sense of L. tango; and n not being radical, the real word is tego or tago, coinciding with Eng. duck; hence its sense in extinguo. See DYE, ATTAINT, and TINGE.] 1. TAKE, v. t. pret. Took; pp. Taken. [Sax. tæcan, to take, and to teach; also thicgan, to take, as food; Sw. taga; Dan. tager; Ice taka; Gr. δειχνυμι; L. doceo. This word seems to be allied to think, for we say, I think a thing to be so, or I take it to be so. It seems also to be allied to Sax. teogan, to draw, to tug, L. duco; for we say, to take a likeness, and to draw a likeness We use taking also for engaging, attracting. We say, a child takes to his mother or nurse, and a man takes to drink; which seem to include attaching and holding. We observe that take and teach are radically the same word.] 1. In a general sense, to get hold or gain possession of a thing in almost any manner, either by receiving it when offered, or by using exertion to obtain it. Take differs from seize, as it does not always imply haste, force, or violence. It more generally denotes to gain or receive into possession in a peaceable manner, either passively or by active exertions. Thus, —2. To receive what is offered.

> Then I took the cup at the Lord's hand; Jer. xxv.

3. To lay hold of; to get into one's power for keeping.

> No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge; Deut. xxiv.

4. To receive with a certain affection of mind. He takes it in good part; or he takes it very ill. -5. To catch by surprise or artifice; to circumvent.

> Men in their loose unguarded hours they take,
> Not that themselves are wise, but others weak. Pope.

6. To seize; to make prisoner. The troops entered, slow, and took three hundred janizaries.

> This man was taken by the Jews; Acts xxiii.

7. To captivate with pleasure; to engage the affections; to delight.

TAL'BOT, n. A kind of hound, and probably the oldest of our slow hounds. He had a broad mouth; very deep chops; very long and large pendulous ears; was fine coated and usually pure white. This was the hound formerly known as St. Hubert's breed, and it is probably the origin of the present blood-hound.

TAL'BOTYPE, n. A photogenic process invented by Mr. H. Fox Talbot, in which paper, prepared in a particular manner, is used instead of the silvered plates of M. Daguerre. The process has also been termed calotype. [See DAGUERREOTYPE, PHOTOGENIC DRAWINGS.]

TALC, n. [G. talk, isinglass; talg, tallow; Sw. talk, talg, id.; Dan. tælg, talg, tallow, and talk, talgsteen, tallow-stone; D. talk, tallow; Port. and Sp talco.] A magnesian mineral, consisting of broad, flat, smooth laminæ or plates, unctuous to the touch, of a shining lustre, translucent, and often transparent. By the action of fire, the laminæ open a little, the fragment swells, and the extremities are with difficulty fused into a white enamel. When rubbed with resin, talc acquires positive electricity. Its prevailing colours are white, apple-green, and yellow. There are three principal varieties of talc, common, earthy, and indurated. Its constituents are silex and magnesia, with small quantities of potash, alumina, oxide of iron, and water. It is used in many parts of India and China, as a substitute for window glass; indurated talc is used for tracing lines on wood, cloth, &c., instead of chalk. Talc is met with in several parts of Scotland, chiefly in connection with serpentine, and on the Continent. Several varieties are found in India and Ceylon.

TALC'ITE, n. In mineral., the same as nacrite,—which see.

TAL'ENT, n. [L. talentum; Gr. ταλαντον, from ταλαω, to bear, allied to L. tollo. The word is said to have originally signified a balance or scales.] 1. Among the ancients, a weight, and a coin. The true value of the talent cannot well be ascertained, but it is known that it was different among different nations. The Attic talent, the weight, contained 60 Attic minæ, or 6000 Attic drachmæ, equal to 56 pounds, eleven ounces, English troy weight. The mina being reckoned equal to £3 4*s.* 7*d.* sterling, the talent was of the value of £193 15*s.* sterling. Other computations make it £243 15*s.* sterling. The Romans had the great talent and the little talent; the great talent is computed to be equal to £99 6*s.* 8*d.* sterling, and the little talent to £75 sterling.—2. Talent, among the Hebrews, was also a gold coin, the same with a shekel of gold; called also stater, and weighing only four drachmas. But the Hebrew talent of silver, called cicar, was equivalent to three thousand shekels, or ninety-three pounds, twelve ounces avoirdupois, and its value as silver money, £396 5*s.* 10*d.*—3. Faculty; natural gift or endowment; a metaphorical application of the word, said to be borrowed from the Scriptural parable of the talents; Matth. xxv.

> He is chiefly to be considered in his three different talents, as a critic, a satirist, and a writer of odes. Dryden.
> 'Tis not my talent to conceal my thoughts. Addison.

4. Eminent abilities; superior genius; as, he is a man of talents. [Talent, in the singular, is sometimes used in a like sense.] — 5. Particular faculty; skill. He has a talent at drawing.—6. [Sp. talante, manner of performing any thing, will, disposition.] Quality; disposition.

TAL'ENTED, a. Furnished with talents; possessing skill or talents. [This word is formed like a participle, but without a verb, like bigoted, turreted, targeted.]

TA'LES, n. [L. talis, plur. tales.] In law, tales de circumstantibus, spectators in court, from whom the sheriff is to select men to supply any defect of jurors who are impanneled, but who may not appear, or may be challenged. In practice, this seldom occurs, except in the case of special jury trials, when the talesmen are taken from the common jury panel in the same court.—Talesmen, persons selected to fill up a jury in the case above stated. Tales book, a book containing the names of such as are admitted of the tales.

TA'LESMAN, n. In English law, a person summoned to act as a juror from among the by-standers in open court.

TĀLETELLER, n. One who tells tales or stories.

TALE'-WISE, a. Being in the manner of a tale.

TALIACO'TIAN OPERATION. A surgical operation for the restoration of lost noses. It is so named from the discoverer Taliacotius or Tagliacozzi, professor of anatomy and surgery at Bologna, towards the end of the 16th century. The operation, according to the discoverer's method, is effected by partially detaching a portion of the skin of the arm, moulding it into the proper shape, causing adhesion, and, after a time, finally detaching it from the arm, so that it remains in its new situation. Of late years several successful operations for new noses have been performed, and this is now always done by turning down a flap of integument from the forehead.

TALIE'RA, TALLIE'RA PALM, n. The Corypha talliera, an elegant stately species of palm inhabiting Bengal. It has gigantic fan-shaped leaves, which are used by the natives of India to write upon with their steel stiles, and for other purposes.

TA'LIO, LEX TALIO'NIS. [L.] The law of retaliation, according to which the punishment inflicted is the same in kind and degree as the injury; as an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, &c. This mode of punishment was established by the Mosaic law; Lev. xxiv. 20.

TA'LION, n. Law of retaliation.

TAL'IPAT, TAL'IPUT PALM, n. The Corypha umbraculifera; a gigantic palm, inhabiting Ceylon, with immense fan-shaped leaves resembling those of the Talliera Palm. [See FAN PALM.]

TAL'IPED, n. [L. talus, an ankle, and pes, a foot.] The disease called club-foot; also, a person affected with this disease.

TAL'ISMAN, n. [Gr. τέλεσμα, tribute, or τελεσμός, accomplishment, both from τελέω, to terminate. A term introduced into medicine by Apollonius of Lydana.] 1. A magical figure cut or engraved under certain superstitious observances of the configuration of the heavens, to which wonderful effects are ascribed; or it is the seal, figure, character, or image of a heavenly sign, constellation, or planet, engraven on a sympathetic stone, or on a metal corresponding to the star, in order to receive its influence. The talismans of the Samothracians were pieces of iron, formed into images and set in rings, &c. They were held to be preservatives against all kinds of evils. Talismans are of three kinds, astronomical, magical, and mixed. Hence,—2. Something that produces extraordinary effects; as, a talisman to destroy diseases.

TALISMAN'IC, TALISMAN'ICAL, a. Magical; having the properties of a talisman or preservative against evils by secret influence.

TALK, v. i. (tauk.) [Dan. tolker; Sw tolka, to interpret, translate, explain; D. tolken, id.; Russ. tolkuyu, id. This is probably the same word differently applied. The word is formed from tell. See TELL, for the Danish and Swedish.] 1. To converse familiarly; to speak, as in familiar discourse, when two or more persons interchange thoughts.

> I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, but I will not eat with you. Shak.

> In Æsop's time
> When all things talk'd, and talk'd in rhyme. Trumbull.

TALKY, a. (tauk'y.) Talkative. [Vulgar.]

TALL, a. [W. tal; taldu, to grow tall. The primary sense is to stretch or extend; W. tellu, to stretch; Sp. talla, raised work, also stature; talle, shape, size; tallo, a shoot or sprout; talludo, tall, slender; talon, the heel, that is, a shoot; Port. talo, a stalk; taludo, stalky; Ar. taula, to be long, to spread, to be extended, to defer or delay, that is, to draw out in time, Eng. dally, allied probably to L. tollo, Gr. τέλλω. In Sw. tall is a pine-tree.] 1. High in stature; long and comparatively slender; applied to a person, or to a standing tree, mast, or pole. Tall always refers to something erect, and of which the diameter is small in proportion to the height. We say, a tall man or woman, a tall boy for his age; a tall tree, a tall pole, a tall mast; but we never say, a tall house or a tall mountain. The application of the word to a palace or its shadow, in Waller, is now improper.

> Dark shadows cast, and as his palace tall. Waller.

2. Sturdy; lusty; bold. [Unusual.]

TAL'LAGE, TAL'LIAGE, n. [Fr. tailler, to cut off. See TAIL.] Anciently, a general word including all subsidies, taxes, tenths, fifteenths, or other burdens or charges laid upon any person. It was generally, however, confined in its sense to taxes received by the king. When it was paid out of knight's fees, it was called scutage; when by cities and burghs, talliage; when upon lands not held by military tenure, hidage.

TAL'LAGE, v. t. To lay an impost.

TAL'LIED, pp. Scored with correspondent notches; fitted; suited.

TAL'LIER, n. One who keeps a tally. From this word is derived our modern word teller. [See TALLY.]

TALL'NESS, n. Height of stature. [See TALL.]

TAL'LŌW, n. [Dan. tælg; D. talk; G. and Sw. talg; Eth. talal, to be fat; Ar. talla, to be moist.] The fat of oxen, sheep, deer, and goats, melted and separated from the fibrous, or membranous matter which is naturally mixed with it. When pure, tallow is white and nearly tasteless; but the tallow of commerce usually has a yellow tinge. All the different kinds of tallow consist chiefly of stearine with a little oleine; but that of the goat contains also hircine in small quantity. In com., tallow is divided into various kinds according to its qualities, of which the best are used for the manufacture of candles, and the inferior for making soap, greasing machinery, and several other purposes. Tallow is also much used in the dressing of leather. It is imported in large quantities from Russia. The fat of swine we never call tallow, but lard. The fat of bears we call bear's grease. —Mineral tallow, the same as hatchetine,—which see.

TAL'LŌW, v. t. To grease or smear with tallow.

TAL'LŌW-CANDLE, n. A candle made of tallow.

TAL'LOW-CATCH,† n. A receptacle for tallow.

TAL'LOW-CHANDLER, n. [chandler is generally supposed to be from the Fr. chandelier, and the word to signify tallow-candler, a maker of candles; for in Fr. chandelier is a tallow-chandler. See CORN-CHANDLER.] One whose occupation is to make, or to make and sell tallow candles.

TAL'LOWED, pp. Greased or smeared with tallow.

TAL'LOW-FACED, a. Having a sickly complexion; pale.

TAL'LOW-GREASE, n. Tallow, especially candle-fat. [Familiar, and local.]

TAL'LOWING, ppr. Greasing with tallow.

TAL'LOW-TREE, n. A tree of the genus Stillingia, the S. sebifera, growing in China. [See STILLINGIA.]

TAL'LOWY, a. Greasy; having the qualities of tallow.

TAL'LY, n. [Fr. tailler, Port. talhar, Sp. tallar, to cut. See TAIL.] 1. A piece of wood on which notches or scores are cut, as the marks of number. In purchasing and selling, it was customary for traders to have two sticks, or one stick cleft into two parts, and to mark with scores or notches on each, the number or quantity of goods delivered, or what was due between debtor and creditor, the seller or creditor keeping one stick, and the purchaser or debtor, the other. Before the use of writing, or before writing became general, this or something like it, was the usual method of keeping accounts, and it is still customary among small publicans, milk-men and others, to keep the account or score of a debt by notches. In the Exchequer, tallies were formerly used, which answered the purpose of receipts as well as simple records of matters of account. Hence the origin of exchequer bills. In former times of financial difficulty, (from the period of the Norman conquest,) the practice had been to issue exchequer tallies. An exchequer tally was an account of a sum of money lent to the government, or of a sum for which the government would be responsible. The tally itself consisted of a squared rod of hazel or other wood, having on one side notches, indicating the sum for which the tally was an acknowledgment. On two other sides opposite to each other, the amount of the sum, the name of the payer, and the date of the transaction, were written by an officer called the writer of the tallies. This being done the rod was then cleft longitudinally in such a manner that each piece retained one of the written sides, and one half of every notch cut in the tally. One of these parts was kept in the exchequer, and the other only issued. When the part issued was returned to the exchequer (usually in payment of taxes), the two parts were compared, as a check against fraudulent imitation. Hence our corresponding practice with cheques, and the origin of the term we employ when we say, that a cheque should tally with its counterpart. Hence also the terms "Bill," Norman French, bille, a baton; billet, a short piece of wood, and the origin of the phrase, being on the "staff," as applied to officers in the pay of the crown. The size of the notches made on the tallies varied with the amount. The notch for £100 was the breadth of a thumb; for £1 the breadth of a barley corn. A penny was indicated by a slight slit. Clumsy as this contrivance may appear, it was effectual in the prevention of forgery. Tallies were finally discontinued in the exchequer in 1834. The tellers of the exchequer derived their name from the word tally, teller being originally written tallier. Many different kinds of tally are used in gardens and arboretums, for the purpose of bearing either numbers referring to a catalogue, or the names of the plants near which they are placed. It is quite an error to suppose that promissory notes, supported by the credit of government, are a modern invention. They existed for six centuries in this country before the introduction of paper-money; the only difference between the modern and the ancient system is, that the promissory notes which are now made of paper, were formerly made of wood.—2. One thing made to suit another.

They were framed the tallies for each other. Dryden.

TAL'LY, v. t. To score with correspondent notches; to fit; to suit; to make to correspond.

They are not so well tallied to the present juncture. Pope.

2. In seamanship, to pull aft the sheets or lower corners of the main and fore sail.

TAL'LY, v. i. To be fitted; to suit; to correspond.

I found pieces of tiles that exactly tallied with the channel. Addison.

TAL'LY,† adv. Stoutly; with spirit.

TAL'LY HO, the huntsman's cry to his hounds.

TAL'LYING, ppr. Fitting to each other; making to correspond.—2. Agreeing; corresponding. —3. Hauling aft the corners of the main and fore sail.

TAL'LYMAN, n. [tally and man.] One who sells for weekly payment.—2. One who keeps the tally, or marks the sticks.

TAL'LY-SHOP, n. A shop or store at which goods or articles are sold on the tally system. [See TALLY TRADE.]

TAL'LY TRADE, n. A system of dealing carried on in London and other large towns, by which shopkeepers furnish certain articles on credit to their customers, the latter agreeing to pay the stipulated price by certain weekly or monthly instalments. The goods thus furnished are usually of inferior quality, and the prices exorbitant. The system is fraught with much mischief to those (chiefly mechanics, labourers, porters, &c.) who resort to tally-shops.

TAL'MUD, n. [Ch. from למד lamad, to teach.] The body of the Hebrew laws, traditions, and explanations; or the book that contains them. The Talmud contains the laws, and a compilation of expositions of duties imposed on the people, either in scripture, by tradition, or by authority of their doctors, or by custom. It consists of two parts, the Mishna and the Gemara; the former being the written law, and the latter a collection of traditions and comments of Jewish doctors.

TAL'MUDIC, } a. Pertaining to the TALMU'DICAL, } Talmud; contained in the Talmud; as, Talmudic fables.

TAL'MUDIST, n. One versed in the Talmud.

TALMUDIST'IC, a. Pertaining to the Talmud; resembling the Talmud.

TAL'ON, n. [Fr. and Sp. talon, the heel, that is, a shoot or protuberance. See TALL.] 1. The claw of a fowl.—2. In arch., the name given by the French to the ogee moulding.

TALOOK'DARS, n. In India, petty zemindars, some of whom pay their rent through a superior zemindar, while others pay it directly to government.

TAL'PA, n. [L.] The mole, a genus of insectivorous mammalia. The common mole (T. europæa, Linn.,) is well known from its subterranean habits, and its vexatious burrowings in cultivated grounds. Another species, T. cæca, inhabits the south of Europe.

TAL'PIDÆ, n. The family of moles.

TA'LUS, n. [L. talus, the ankle.] 1. In anat., the astragalus, or that bone of the foot which is articulated to the leg. —2. In arch., a slope; the inclination of any work.—3. In fort., the slope of a work, as a bastion, rampart, or parapet. The upper surface of a parapet is called the superior talus or slope; and that surface of a rampart or parapet which is towards the country, or towards the town, is called the exterior, or the interior talus of the work. In this signification the word is also written Talut.—4. In geol., a sloping heap of broken rocks and stones, at the foot of any cliff.

TAMABIL'ITY, n. Tamableness,—which see.

TA'MABLE, a. [from tame.] That may be tamed; capable of being reclaimed from wildness or savage ferociousness; that may be subdued.

TA'MABLENESS, n. The quality of being tamable.

TAM'ARACK, n. Hackmatack; the American larch.

TAMARICA'CEÆ, n. A small nat. order of polypetalous exogens. The species are either shrubs or herbs, inhabiting chiefly the basin of the Mediterranean. They are all more or less astringent; and their ashes, after burning, are remarkable for possessing a large quantity of sulphate of soda. [See TAMARISK.]

TAM'ARIN, n. A small monkey of South America with large ears; the great eared monkey, Simia midas.

TAM'ARIND, n. [Sp. tamarindo; Port. plur. tamarindos; It. tamarino, tamarindi; Fr. tamarin; said to be a compound of תמר, tamar, the palm-tree, and indus or ind, the root of India.] Tamarindus, a genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Leguminosæ.

Tamarind (Tamarindus indica).

There are only two species, both of which are trees having abruptly pinnate leaves, and bearing many pairs of small leaflets and racemes of flowers. The T. indica, or East Indian tamarind, is a native of various districts of the East Indies, and also of the tropical parts of Africa. It forms a handsome tree, with spreading branches. The T. occidentalis, or West Indian tamarind, is distinguished from the other by possessing short legumes. It is a native of South America and the West India islands, forming also a large spreading tree. Both species are cultivated for the sake of their shade, and their cooling, grateful acid fruit, which is a one-celled legume, with from three to six seeds, the valves being filled with pulp between the endocarp and epicarp. The pulp, dried or packed with sugar or syrup, is imported into European countries. [See TAMARINDS.]

TAM'ARINDS, n. plur. The preserved fruit of the East and West Indian tamarind trees; that of the former being much larger than that of the latter. In the East Indies the pulp is dried either in the sun or artificially with salt added, which latter kind is sent to Europe. The West Indian tamarinds are put into jars, with layers of sugar between them, or with boiling syrup poured over them, and are called prepared tamarinds; but the East Indian tamarinds are most esteemed. Tamarinds have a sharp, penetrating, and agreeable acid taste, softened by a sweetish one. The pulp is frequently employed in medicine; it is cooling and gently laxative, and is peculiarly grateful in fevers and inflammatory diseases.

TAM'ARISK, n. Tamarix, a genus of plants, the type of the nat. order Tamaricaceæ. The species are shrubs or small trees, clothed with very small green leaves, and long spikes of pink flowers. T. gallica is a native of Tamarisk (Tamarix gallica).

France and of the Mediterranean, and is also found in England. Its ashes contain a large quantity of sulphate of soda. T. indica, or the Indian tamarisk, produces galls which are used in dyeing. The largest and most elegant species is the T. orientalis, a native of Arabia, Persia, and the East Indies. The bark of T. africana is used in medicine as a tonic, and its ashes, like those of T. gallica, yield a large quantity of sulphate of soda.

TAM'BAC, TOM'BAC, n. The white copper of the Chinese, which is a mixture of copper, nickel, and zinc, with a small proportion of iron. It is malleable, and very sonorous.—2. Agallochum, or aloes wood.

TAM'BOUR, n. [Sp. and Port. tambor, a drum; It. tamburo. The m is probably casual. See TABOUR.] 1. A small drum, used by the Biscayans as an accompaniment to the flageolet; a tambourine.—2. In arch., a term applied to the naked part of Corinthian and Composite capitals, which bear some resemblance to a drum. It is also called the vase, and campana, or the bell. Also, the wall of a circular temple surrounded with columns, and the circular vertical part of a cupola, both below and above it.—3. A little box of timber work covered with a ceiling, within the porches of certain churches. —4. A cylindrical stone, such as one of the courses of the shaft of a column.—5. In the arts, a species of embroidery, in which threads of silk, gold, or silver, are worked by needles of a peculiar form into leaves, flowers, &c., upon a stuff of silk, linen, or muslin, stretched over a circular frame, which is properly the tambour, and so named from its resemblance to a drum. Machines have, of late years, been constructed for tambour-working.—6. In fort., a kind of work formed of palisades, or pieces of wood ten feet long planted closely together, and driven firmly into the ground.

TAM'BOUR, v. t. To embroider with a tambour.

TAMBOURINE', n. (tambureen'.) [Fr. tambourin, from tambour, tabor; Sp. tamboril. See TABOR.] 1. A musical instrument of the drum species. It is much used among the Biscayans, and hence is known by the name of tambour de Basque. It consists of a piece of parchment stretched over the top of a broad hoop, which is furnished with little bells. It is sounded by sliding the fingers along the parchment, or by striking it with the back of the hand, or with the fist or the elbow. The same name is given to a kind of drum much used in Provence. Its case is longer and somewhat narrower than that of the common drum. It is beaten with a drumstick, while the performer at the same time plays with his left hand upon a small flute.—2. A lively French dance, formerly in vogue in operas.

TAM'BOUR-WORK, n. A kind of embroidery. [See TAMBOUR.]

TAME, a. [Sax. tam; Sw. tam, tamd; G. zahm. See the verb.] 1. That has lost its native wildness and shyness; mild; accustomed to man; domestic; as, a tame deer; a tame bird. — 2. Crushed; subdued; depressed; spiritless.

And you, tame slaves of the laborious plough. Roscommon.

3. Spiritless; unanimated; as, a tame poem. [Not elegant nor in use.]

TAME, v. t. [Sax. tamian, getemian; Goth. ga-tamyan; D. tammen; G. zahmen; L. domo; Gr. δαμαω: Fr. dompter; It. domare; Ch. and Heb. דמם, dum, to be silent, dumb; or Ar. hathuma, to restrain, to stop, shut, silence, subdue, tame.] 1. To reclaim; to reduce from a wild to a domestic state; to make gentle and familiar; as, to tame a wild beast.—2. To civilize; as, to tame the ferocious inhabitants of the forest.—3. To subdue; to conquer; to depress; as, to tame the pride or passions of youth.—4. To subdue; to repress; as wildness or licentiousness.

The tongue can no man tame; James iii.

TAMED, pp. Reclaimed from wildness; domesticated; made gentle; subdued.

TAMELESS, a. Wild; untamed; untamable. [Not much used.]

TAMELY, adv. With unresisting submission; meanly; servilely; without manifesting spirit; as, to submit tamely to oppression; to bear reproach tamely.

TAMENESS, n. The quality of being tame or gentle; a state of domestication.—2. Unresisting submission; meanness in bearing insults or injuries; want of spirit.

TAMER, n. One that tames or subdues; one that reclaims from wildness; as, Messrs. Van Amburgh and Carter are famed for being lion tamers.

TA'MIAS, n. The generic name of the ground-squirrels.

TAM'INE, TAM'MY, n. A strainer or bolter of hair.—2. A tamis,—which see.—3. A thin woollen or worsted stuff, highly glazed.

TAMING, ppr. Reclaiming from a wild state; civilizing; subduing.

TAM'IS, n. [Fr.] A worsted cloth, used for the purpose of straining sauces.

TAM'IS-BIRD, n. A Guinea fowl.

TAM'KIN, n. The stopper of a cannon. [See TAMPION.]

TAMP, v. t. To fill up a hole bored in a rock, for the purpose of blasting it.

TAM'PER, v. i. To meddle; to be busy; to try little experiments; as, to tamper with a disease.—2. To meddle; to have to do with without fitness or necessity.

'Tis dangerous tamp'ring with a muse. Roscommon.

3. To deal; to practise secretly.

Others tampered
For Fleetwood, Desborough, and Lambert. Hudibras.

TAM'PERING, ppr. Meddling; dealing; practising secretly.

TAM'PERING, n. The act of meddling or practising secretly.

TAMP'ING, n. [Fr. tampon?] A term used by miners to express the operation of filling up the hole bored in a rock, for the purpose of blasting it with gunpowder. The powder being first put into the hole, and a tube for a conductor of the fire, the hole is rammed to fulness with brick-dust or other matter. The same name is given to the matter thus employed.

TAM'PION, TOM'PION, n. [Fr. tampon; Arm. tapon.] The stopper of a cannon or other piece of ordnance, consisting of a cylinder of wood placed in its muzzle to prevent the admission of water.

TAM'POE, TAM'PUI, n. The fruit of the Hedycarpus malayanus, a sapindaceous plant, found plentifully in the islands of the Indian Archipelago. Tampoe is much esteemed in the East as an edible fruit.

TAM'POON†, n. A tampion.—2. The bung of a vessel.

TAM'-TAM, TOM'-TOM, n. A kind of native drum used in the East Indies and in Western Africa. The tam-tam is of various shapes; but, generally, it is made of a hollow cylinder, formed of fibrous wood, such as palm-tree, or of earthen ware, each end covered with skin. It is beat upon with the fingers, and also with the open hand, and produces a hollow monotonous sound. Public notices, when proclaimed in the bazaar or public parts of Eastern towns, are generally accompanied by the tam-tam. This is called proclamation by tam-tam.

TA'MUS, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Dioscoreaceæ. The T. communis, or common black bryony, is a very common plant in hedges and thickets throughout Europe, and is very frequent in England. It is a climbing herbaceous plant, having very large tubers and red berries. The whole plant contains a bitter acrid principle, which renders it unwholesome.

TAN, v. t. [Fr. tanner, to tan; tanne, a little black spot on the face; It. tane, tawny colour. Gregoire, in his Armoric Dictionary, suggests that this may be from tan or dan, which in Leon signifies an oak. But this is very doubtful. In Ir. tionus signifies a tanhouse, and tionsonaim, is to drop or distil. Spotting is often from sprinkling, and dyeing from dipping. In Gaelic, dean is colour. It seems to be allied to tawny, and perhaps to dun.] 1. In the arts, to convert animal skins into leather by steeping them in an infusion of oak or some other bark, by which they are impregnated with tannin or tannic acid, an astringent substance which exists in several species of bark, and thus rendered firm, durable, and in some degree impervious to water.—2. To make brown; to imbrown by exposure to the rays of the sun; as, to tan the skin.

TAN, n. The bark of the oak, willow, chestnut, larch, and other trees abounding in tannin, bruised and broken by a mill, and used for tanning hides. It bears this name before and after it has been used. Tan, after being used in tanning, is used in gardening for making hot-beds; and it is also made into cakes and used as fuel. In some places, such cakes are commonly, but improperly, called turf; thus confounding it with peat fuel, which, however, it somewhat resembles.

TANACE'TINE, n. A non-azotized compound obtained from Tanacetum vulgare. It is very bitter, and soluble in alcohol, but its nature has not yet been ascertained.

TANACE'TUM, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Compositæ, sub-order Corymbiferæ. T. vulgare, or common tansy, is a well-known plant, being abundant in Britain, and throughout Europe, on the borders of fields and road sides. Every part of the plant is bitter, and it is considered as tonic and cordial, and has been administered in medicine in cases of worms and hysteria. The young shoots yield a green colouring-matter, used by the Finlanders for dyeing their cloth of that colour. It is said that if meat be rubbed with the fresh leaves, the flesh-fly will not touch it.

TAN'AGRA, } n. A genus of passerine
TAN'AGERS, } birds of the dentirostral family, placed, in Cuvier's system, between the fly-catchers and thrushes.

Tanager (Tanagra cyanocephala).

There are several species, all resembling the finches in their habits. They are remarkable for their bright colours. They are chiefly inhabitants of the tropical parts of America.

TANAGRI'NÆ, n. The family of the tanagers.

TAN'-BED, n. [tan and bed.] In gardening, a bed made of tan; a bark bed or stove.

TAN'-HOUSE, n. A building in which tanner's bark is stored.

TAN'-PIT, n. [tan and pit.] A bark pit; a vat in which hides are laid in tan.

TAN'-SPUD, n. [tan and spud.] An instrument for peeling the bark from oak and other trees. [Local.]

TAN'-STOVE, n. [tan and stove.] A hot-house with a bark stove. Also the stove itself.

TAN'-VAT, n. [tan and vat.] A vat in which hides are steeped in liquor with tan.

TAN'-YARD, n. An inclosure where the tanning of leather is carried on.

TAN'DEM. [Horseman's Latin.] Horses are harnessed tandem when they are placed single, one before another. But tandem properly refers to time and not to length of line.

TĀNE,† pp. for ta'en, taken.

Two trophees tane from th' east and western shore,
And both these nations twice triumphed o'er. May. Virg.

TANG, n. [Gr. ταγγη, rancour; ταγγος, rancid; It. tanfo.] 1. A strong taste; particularly, a taste of something extraneous to the thing itself; as, wine or cider has a tang of the cask.—2. Relish; taste. [Not elegant.]—3. Something that leaves a sting or pain behind.

She had a tongue with a tang. Shak.

4.† Sound; tone.—5. In carpentry, the part of chisels and similar tools which is inserted into the handle.

TANG,† v. i. To ring with; to have the twang or sound of. [This may be allied to ding, dong.]

TAN'GENCIES, n. Among the ancient geometers, the problem of tangencies was a branch of the geometrical analysis, the general object of which was to describe a circle passing through given points, and touching straight lines or circles given in position, the number of data being always limited to three.

TAN'GENCY, n. A contact or touching.

TAN'GENT, n. [Fr. tangente; L. tangens, touching. See TOUCH.] In geom., a straight line which touches or meets a circle or curve in one point, and which being produced, does not cut it. Euclid has shown, that the straight line drawn at right-angles to the diameter of a circle, from the extremity of it, is a tangent to the circle. In trigonometry, the tangent of an arc or angle is a straight line touching the circle of which the arc is a part, at one extremity of the arc, and meeting the diameter passing through the other extremity. Thus, in the figure let A H be a straight line drawn touching the circle A D E at A, one extremity of the arc A B, and meeting the diameter I B produced, which passes through the other extremity B in the point H; then A H is the tangent of the arc A B, or of the angle A C B, of which A B is the measure. The tangent of an arc or angle is also the tangent of its supplement. Thus, A H is the tangent of the supplement A I, or of the angle A C I; for it is easy to see, that the definition above given applies equally to the arc A B and to the arc A I. The arc and its tangent have always a certain relation to each other; and when the one is given in parts of the radius, the other can always be computed by means of an infinite series. For trigonometrical purposes tangents for every arc from 0 degrees to 90 degrees, as well as sines, cosines, &c., have been calculated with reference to a radius of a certain length, and those or their logarithms formed into tables. In the higher geometry, the word tangent is not limited to straight lines, but is also applied to curves in contact with other curves, and also to surfaces.—Method of tangents, the name given to the calculus in its early period. When the equation of a curve is given, and it is required to determine the tangent at any point, this is called the direct method of tangents; and when the subtangent to a curve, at any point, is given, and it is required to determine the equation of the curve, this is termed the inverse method of tangents. The above terms are synonymous with the differential and integral calculus.—Tangent plane, a plane which touches a curved surface; as a sphere, cylinder, &c.—Natural tangents, tangents expressed by natural numbers.—Artificial tangents, tangents expressed by logarithms.—Line of tangents, a line usually placed on the sector and Gunter's scale, by means of which the length of the tangent to any arc having a certain radius may be determined.—Tangent screw, a screw which acts in the direction of a tangent to an arc or circle. Such screws are used to adjust theodolites and other circular instruments. [See WORM-WHEEL.]

TANGEN'TIAL, a. Pertaining to a tangent; in the direction of a tangent. —Tangential force, in circular motion, the same as centrifugal force.

TANGEN'TIALLY, adv. In the direction of a tangent.

TĂN'GHIN, n. A deadly poison obtained from the seeds of Tanghinia venenifera,—which see.—Trial by tanghin, a kind of ordeal in Madagascar, to determine the guilt or innocence of an accused person, by taking the tanghin poison. The result is entirely in the power of the administrators, who kill or favour the party, according to circumstances.

TANGHI'NIA, n. A genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Apocynaceæ. T. venenifera is a tree which produces the celebrated tanghin poison of Madagascar. The poisonous quality resides in the kernel, and one seed is said to be sufficient to kill twenty persons.

TAN'GHININE, } n. A non-azotized
TAN'GUINE, } principle obtained from the seeds of Tanghinia venenifera. It is crystallizable, very bitter and acrid, and also poisonous.

TANGIBIL'ITY, } n [from tangible.]
TAN'GIBLENESS, } The quality of being perceptible to the touch or sense of feeling.

TAN'GIBLE, a. [from L. tango, to touch.] 1. Perceptible by the touch; tactile.—2. That may be possessed or realized.

TAN'GIBLY, adv. So as to be perceptible to the touch.

TAN'GLE, v. t. [This word, if n is casual, seems to be allied to the W. tagu, to choke, Goth. taga, hair; from crowding together. In Ar. dagaa signifies to involve.] 1. To implicate; to unite or knit together confusedly; to interweave or interlock, as threads, so as to make it difficult to unravel the knot.—2. To insnare; to entrap; as, to be tangled in the folds of dire necessity.

Tangled in amorous nets. Milton.

3. To embroil; to embarrass.

When my simple weakness strays,
Tangled in forbidden ways. Crashaw.

[Entangle, the compound, is the more elegant word.]

TAN'GLE, v. i. To be entangled or united confusedly.

TAN'GLE, n. A knot of threads or other things united confusedly, or so interwoven as not to be easily disengaged; as, hair or yarn in tangles.—2. Laminaria, a genus of sea-weeds. [See LAMINARIA.]

TAN'GLED, pp. United confusedly.

TAN'GLING, ppr. Uniting without order.

TAN'GLINGLY, adv. In a tangling manner.

TAN'GLY, a. Knotted; intertwined; intricate.

TAN'GUM, } n. The primeval stock of TAN'GAN, } the piebald horse, found in Thibet, of which it is a native. It appears to be related to the Tartar horse, and to the Kiang, or wild horse of the Himalayas.

Tangum or Thibet Horse.

TAN'IST, n. [Gaelic, tanaiste, a lord, the governor of a country; in Ireland, the heir apparent of a prince; probably from tan, a region or territory, or from the Gr. δυναστης, a lord, which is from δυναμαι, to be powerful or able, the root of the Gaelic duine, a man. But both may be of one family, the root tan, ten, Gr. τεινω, L. teneo, W. tannu, to stretch, strain, or hold.] Among the descendants of the Celts in Ireland, a lord, or the proprietor of a tract of land; a governor or captain. This office or rank was elective, and often obtained by purchase or bribery.

TAN'ISTRY, n. [Gaelic, tanaisteachd.] In Ireland, a tenure of lands by which the proprietor had only a life estate, and to this he was admitted by election. The primitive intention seems to have been that the inheritance should descend to the oldest or most worthy of the blood and name of the deceased. This was in reality giving it to the strongest, and the practice often occasioned bloody wars in families.

TANK, n. [Fr. etang, a pond; Sp. estanque; Port. tanque; Sans. tanghi; Japan, tange. This seems to be from the root of stanch, to stop, to hold.] A large basin or cistern; a reservoir for water or other fluids. Tanks are generally formed by making excavations in the earth, and lining the sides and bottom with bricks, stone, timber, cast-iron, or sheet-lead, or puddling them with clay. They are covered over, and used to collect and retain water and liquid manure, for domestic and agricultural purposes. In high mountainous pastures, tanks for collecting rain-water are indispensable to supply both men and cattle with water. The same name is sometimes applied to large open receptacles or ponds, formed by excavating the ground, and disposing the removed earth in the form of banks to retain the water.—2. In the navy, a case of sheet-iron for the stowage of the ship's water. It is generally about four feet square, and contains about two tons of water. Bilge tanks of various forms are also employed.

TANK'ARD, n. [Ir. tancaird; Gaelic, tancard; tank and ard.] A large vessel for liquors, or a drinking vessel, with a cover.

Marius was the first who drank out of a silver tankard, after the manner of Bacchus. Arbuthnot.

TANKE, n. In her., a kind of deep round cap, called also a cap-tanke. It was used by the ancient servile Romans.

TAN'LING, n. One tanned or scorched by the heat of the sun.

TAN'NA, n. In India, a police station; also a military post.

TAN'NADAR, n. In India, the keeper or commandant of a tanna.

TAN'NATE, n. A salt formed by the union of tannic acid with a base; as, the tannate of potash or of magnesia. The tannates are characterized by striking a deep bluish black colour with the persalts of iron.

TAN'NED, pp. [from tan.] Converted into leather. [See TAN.]—2. Darkened by the rays of the sun.

TAN'NER, n. One whose occupation is to tan hides, or convert them into leather by the use of tan.

TAN'NER'S-BARK, n. The bark of the oak, chestnut, willow, and other trees, which abounds in tannic acid, and is employed by tanners in the preparation of leather. [See TAN.]

TAN'NERY, n. The house and apparatus for tanning.

TAN'NIC ACID, or TAN'NIN, n. A peculiar acid which exists in every part of all species of oak, especially in the bark, but is found in greatest quantity in gall-nuts. Tannic acid, when pure, is nearly white, and not at all crystalline. It is very soluble in water, and has a most astringent taste without bitterness. It combines with animal gelatine, forming an insoluble curdy precipitate, which has been called tannogelatine. It derives its name from its property of combining with the skins of animals, and converting them into leather, or tanning them. Its ultimate elements are 30 atoms of carbon, 18 of hydrogen, and 24 of oxygen. It is the active principle in almost all astringent vegetables.

TAN'NIER, n. One of the popular names of the Arum esculentum, an esculent root.

TAN'NIN, n. The name formerly applied to the tannic acid, before its acid character was known and understood. —Artificial tannin, the name given by Mr. Hatchett to a brown substance obtained by digesting powdered charcoal in nitric acid, and evaporating the solution. It has an astringent taste, and forms an insoluble compound with gelatine.

TAN'NING, ppr. Converting raw hides into leather.

TAN'NING, n. The practice, operation, and art of converting the raw hides and skins of animals into leather, by effecting a chemical combination between the gelatine of which they principally consist, and the astringent vegetable principle called tannic acid, or tannin. The object of the tanning process is, to produce such a chemical change in skins as may render them unalterable by those agents which tend to decompose them in their natural state; and in connection with the subsequent operations of currying, or dressing, to bring them into a state of pliability and impermeability to water, which may adapt them for the many useful purposes to which leather is applied. The larger and heavier skins subjected to the tanning process, as those of buffaloes, bulls, oxen, and cows, are technically called hides; while those of smaller animals, as calves, sheep, and goats, are called skins. After being cleared of the hair, wool, and fleshy parts, by the aid of lime, scraping, and other means, the skins are usually steeped in an infusion of ground oak bark, which supplies the astringent or tanning principle, and thus converts them into leather. Different tanners, however, vary much in the mode of conducting the process of tanning, and also the skins intended for different kinds of leather require to be treated differently. Various improvements have been made in the process of tanning, by which time and labour are much reduced, but it is found that 'the slow process, followed by the old' tanners, produces leather far superior to that produced by quick processes.

TAN'REC, TEN'REC, TEN'DRAC, n. The popular name of the several species of the insectivorous mammalian genus Centeres, of which there are three species. They are small quadrupeds, inhabiting Madagascar and the Isle of France.

TAN'SY, n. (s as z.) [Fr. tanaisie; It. and Sp. tanaceto; L. tanacetum.] The popular name of a genus of plants. [See TANACETUM.]

TANT, n. A small spider with two eyes and eight long legs, and of an elegant scarlet colour.

TANTAL'IDÆ, n. A family of wading birds, of which the genus Tantalus of Linn. is the type. The Tantalus religiosus is the celebrated Ibis worshipped by the ancient Egyptians.

TAN'TALISM, n. [See TANTALIZE.] The punishment of Tantalus; a teasing or tormenting by the hope or near approach of good which is not attainable.

Is not such a provision like tantalism to this people? J. Quincy.

TAN'TALITE, n. Another name for the mineral called columbite, which is found in New England and in Europe.

TANTALIZA'TION, n. The act of tantalizing.

TAN'TALIZE, v. t. [from Tantalus, in fable, who was condemned for his crimes to perpetual hunger and thirst, with food and water near him which he could not reach.] To tease or torment by presenting some good to the view and exciting desire, but continually frustrating the expectations by keeping that good out of reach; to tease; to torment.

Thy vain desires, at strife
Within themselves, have tantaliz'd thy life. Dryden.

TAN'TALIZED, pp. Teased or tormented by the disappointment of the hope of good.

TAN'TALIZER, n. One that tantalizes.

TAN'TALIZING, ppr. Teasing or tormenting by presenting to the view some unattainable good.

TAN'TALIZINGLY, adv. By tantalizing.

TAN'TALUM, n. A name once used for columbium, the metallic basis of the mineral called tantalite or columbite.

TAN'TALUS, n. [L. from Gr.] In fab. hist., a Lydian king who was condemned to be plunged in water, with choice fruits hanging over him, without the power of reaching them, to satisfy his hunger or his thirst. Hence the English word tantalize.

TANT'ALUS'S CUP, n. A philosophical toy. It consists of a siphon so adapted to a cup, that the short leg being in the cup, the long leg may go down through the bottom of it. When water is poured into the cup, it rises in the shorter leg of the siphon until it reaches up to the top of the bend of the siphon, when it flows over into the longer leg, and escapes through the bottom of the cup, so that if water is not supplied to the cup as fast as it escapes by the siphon, the cup will soon be emptied. In the toy the siphon is concealed within the figure of a man, whose chin is on a level with the bend of the siphon. Hence, as soon as the water rises up to the chin of the image, it begins to subside, so that the figure, like Tantalus in the fable, is unable to quench his thirst.

Tantalus Cup.

TANT'AMOUNT, a. [L. tantus, so much, and amount.] Equal; equivalent in value or signification; as, a sum tantamount to all our expenses. Silence is sometimes tantamount to consent.

TAN'TIVY, adv. [said to be from the note of a hunting horn; L. tanta vi.] To ride tantivy, is to ride with great speed.

TAN'TIVY,† n. [Possibly an application of the preceding word as a nickname to a rustic country gentleman.] A devoted adherent of the court, in the time of Charles II.; a royalist; an opponent of the bill of Exclusion.

Those who took the king's side were anti-Birminghams, abhorrers, and tantivies. These appellations soon became obsolete. Macaulay.

TANT'LING, n. [See TANTALIZE.] One seized with the hope of pleasure unattainable.

TANT'RUMS, n. plur. In colloq. lan., childish ill humour; high airs; as to be in the tantrums.

TAP, v. t. [Fr. taper; Arm. tapa, tapein; Dan. tapper, to throb; Gr. τυπτω, τυπος.] To strike with something small, or to strike a very gentle blow; to touch gently; as, to tap one with the hand; to tap one on the shoulder with a cane.

TAP, v. i. To strike a gentle blow. He tapped at the door.

TAP, v. t. [Sax. tæppan; D. tappen; G. zapfen.] 1. To pierce or broach a cask, and insert a tap.—2. To open a cask and draw liquor.—3. To pierce for letting out fluid; as, to tap a tumour; to tap a dropsical person.—4. To box or bore into; as, to tap a maple tree to obtain the sap for making sugar.

TAP, n. A gentle blow; a slight blow with a small thing.

She gives her right hand woman a tap on the shoulder. Addison.

2. A pipe for drawing liquor from a cask. [But in Sp. tapar is to stop, and a tap may be a stopper. In this case, the verb to tap should follow the noun.] —3. A tap-house, or tap-room.

TAP. In mech., an instrument employed for cutting the threads of internal screws or nuts. It consists simply of an external or male screw of the required size, formed of steel, and more or less tapered, portions of the threads being filed away in order to present a series of cutting edges. This being screwed into the nut in the manner of an ordinary bolt, forms the thread required.

TAPE, n. [Sax. tæppe.] A narrow fillet or band; a narrow piece of woven work, used for strings and the like; as, curtains tied with tape.

TAPE LINE, n. A painted tape, marked with inches, &c., and inclosed in a case, used by engineers, &c., in measuring.

TA'PER, n. [Sax. taper, tapur. Qu. It. doppiere, a torch, W. tampyr.] A small wax candle; a small lighted wax candle, or a small light.

Get me a taper in my study, Lucius. Shak.

TA'PER, a. [supposed to be from the form of a taper.] Regularly narrowed toward the point; becoming small toward one end; conical; pyramidical; as, taper fingers.

TA'PER, v. i. To diminish or become gradually smaller toward one end; as, a sugar loaf tapers toward a point.

TA'PER, v. t. To make gradually smaller in diameter.

TA'PERING, ppr. Making gradually smaller. — 2. a. Becoming regularly smaller in diameter toward one end; conical or pyramidal; gradually diminishing toward a point.—Tapering root, in bot., a root generally fleshy, and of an elongated conical form, either undivided or branched at its lowest extremity. The most common example is afforded by the garden carrot. In the radish it is spindle-shaped, or tapering toward both ends.

TA'PERINGLY, adv. In a tapering manner.

TA'PERNESS, n. The state of being taper.

TA'PER SHELL BIT, n. A species of boring-bit used by joiners. It is conical both within and without, and its horizontal section is a crescent, the cutting edge being the meeting of the interior and exterior conical surfaces. Its use is for widening holes in wood.

TAP'ESTRIED, pp. Ornamented with tapestry.

TAP'ESTRY, n. [Fr. tapis, a carpet; tapisserie, hangings, tapestry; L. tapes, tapestry; Fr. se tapir, to crouch, to lie flat; Sp. tapiz, tapestry, and a grass-plot; It. tappeto, a carpet; tappezzeria, tapestry; Arm. tapiçz, a carpet; tapiçziry, tapestry. Qu. from weaving or spreading.] A kind of woven hangings of wool and silk, often enriched with gold and silver, representing figures of men, animals, landscapes, &c., and used formerly for lining or covering the walls of elegant apartments, churches, &c. The French ascribe the invention to the Saracens, but it was known among Eastern nations from a very remote era. A manufactory of tapestry was established at Paris in 1606 or 1607, which was conducted by Flemish artists; but the manufactory of the Gobelins, instituted in France under Louis XIV., became the most celebrated for the beauty and strength of the cloth, for elegance of design, and happy choice of colours. The finest paintings were copied, and eminent painters employed to furnish designs. In painting, tapestry is applied to a representation of a subject in wool or silk, or both, worked on a woven ground of hemp or flax.

TAP'ESTRY, v. t. To adorn with tapestry.

TA'PET, n. [supra.] Worked or figured stuff.

TAP'ETI, n An animal of the hare kind; the Lepus Brasiliensis, a rodent mammal inhabiting South America.

TAP'ETLESS, a. Heedless; foolish. [Scotch.]

TAPE-WORM, n. [tape and worm.] A worm bred in the human intestines.

The popular name of various worms infesting the alimentary canal of different animals. They are parenchymatous entozoa, of the tenioid family. The broad tape-worm is the Bothriacephalus latus; the common tape-worm is the Tænia solium. Both of these infest the human species, and are destroyed by the oil of turpentine in cathartic doses. [See TÆNIA.]

TAP′-HOUSE, n. [tap and house.] A house where liquors are retailed; a house where beer is served from the tap.

TAPIO′CA, n. A farinaceous substance prepared in South America, from the root of Janipha, or Jatropha manihot, the bitter Cassada or Manioc plant. This root presents the union of a deadly poison with highly nutritive qualities. The former appears to reside exclusively in the juice. In preparing cassava or manioc flour, the principal product yielded by the manihot, the roots, after having undergone the preliminary process of grating, &c., are subjected in bags to pressure in a screw press. The poisonous juice thus expressed, after being allowed to stand and settle for a short time, deposits a fine floury substance, which constitutes the tapioca of commerce. Tapioca is very nutritious and easy of digestion, being free from stimulating qualities. A spurious kind of tapioca is prepared from gum and potato flour.

TA′PIR, n. A genus of pachydermatous, or thick-skinned mammals, of which three existing species, and several extinct ones, have been determined. The nose resembles a small fleshy proboscis; there are four toes to the fore feet, and three to the hind ones. The South American tapir, T. Americanus, is the size of a small ass, with a brown skin, nearly naked. The flesh is eaten. Another American species has been discovered in the Cordilleras, the back of which is covered with hair, and the bones of the nose more elongated, and approximating somewhat to the palæotherium. The T. Malayanus, or indicus, is found in the forests of Malacca and Sumatra. It is larger than the American species. The tapirs are allied both to the hog and to the rhinoceros, but they are much smaller than the latter. Fossil tapirs are scattered throughout Europe, and among them is a gigantic species, T. giganteus, Cuv., which in size must have nearly equalled the elephant.

TA′PIS, n. [Fr.] Tapestry. Formerly tapestry was used to cover the table in a council chamber; hence, to be on or upon the tapis, is to be under consideration, or on the table.

TAP′LASH, n. [from tap.] Poor beer.

TAP′PED, pp. Broached; opened.

TAP′PET, n. A small lever connected with the valve of the cylinder of a steam-engine.

TAP′PING, ppr. Broaching; opening for the discharge of a fluid.

TAP′PING, n. In surgery, paracentesis, or the operation of removing fluid from any of the serous cavities of the body, in which it has collected in large quantity; as in cases of ascites, hydrothorax, and hydrocele. It is performed by means of a trocar and a tube, in which it exactly fits.

TAP′PIT HEN, n. A colloquial phrase, denoting a tin measure containing a quart, so named from the knob on the lid, as being supposed to resemble a crested hen. [Scotch.]

TAP′ ROOM, n. A room in which beer is served from the tap.

TAP′-ROOT, n. [tap and root.] The main root of a plant, which penetrates the earth directly downward to a considerable depth.

TAP′-ROOTED, a. Having a tap-root

TAPSALTEE′RIE, adv. Topsy turvy. [Scotch.]

TAP′STER, n. One whose business is to draw ale or other liquor.

TĂ′PUL, n. In ancient armour, the sharp projecting ridge down the centre of some breastplates.

TÄR, n. [Sax. tare, tyr, tyrwa; D. teer; G. theer; Gael. teurr. In. D. teeren signifies to smear with tar or pitch, and to pine, waste, consume, digest, prey, subsist, feast, and teer is tender, as well as tar. The D. teeren is the G. zehren, Dan. tærer, Sw. tära, to fret, gnaw, consume; Eng. tare, in commerce. Tar then is from flowing, or from wasting, perhaps in combustion.] 1. A thick, impure, resinous substance, of a dark brown or black colour, obtained from pine and fir trees, by burning the wood with a close smothering heat, or by distilling it in close vessels, or ovens. It is prepared in great quantities in Norway, Sweden, Russia, Germany, North America, and in other countries where the fir and pine abound. It is also manufactured from pit coal. Tar is soluble in alcohol, ether, and in the fixed and volatile oils. It consists of resin, empyreumatic oil, and acetic acid, or vinegar. According to Reichenbach it contains the following proximate principles: paraffine eupion, creasote picamar, capnomar, and pittacal. The most important of these is creasote. Oil of tar is a brown liquid obtained by distilling tar with water. Mineral tar, a variety of bitumen resembling petroleum. Tar inspissated is called pitch, and is much used in ships and cordage.—2. A sailor; so called from his tarred clothes.

TÄR, v. t. To smear with tar; as, to tar ropes.—2.† [Sax. tiran, tyrian.] To tease; to provoke.

TARĂBE, n. A large parrot with a red head.

TAR′ANIS, n. A Celtic divinity, regarded as the evil principle, but confounded by the Romans with Jupiter.

TARANTISM. See TARENTISM.

TARANTISMUS. See TARENTISM.

TARAN′TULA, n. [See TARENTULA, which is the more correct orthography.]

TAR′AQUIRA, n. A species of American lizard.

TÄRDA′TION,† n. [L. tardo. See TARDY.] The act of retarding or delaying. [We use for this Retardation.]

TÄRDIGRADE, } TÄRDIGRADOUS, } a. [L. tardigradus; tardus, slow, and gradus, step.] Slow-paced; moving or stepping slowly.

TÄRDI′GRADES, } TÄRDI′GRADA, } n. Cuvier's name for the first family of Edentate mammals or quadrupeds, comprising, of living genera, the sloth only [See SLOTH.]

TÄRDILY, adv. [from tardy.] Slowly; with slow pace or motion.

TÄRDINESS, n. [from tardy.] Slowness, or the slowness of motion or pace.—2. Unwillingness; reluctance manifested by slowness.—3. Lateness; as, the tardiness of witnesses or jurors in attendance; the tardiness of students in attending prayers or recitation.

TÄRDITY,† n. [tarditas.] Slowness; tardiness.

TAR′DO, a. [Ital.] In music, a term signifying that the piece to which it is affixed is to be performed slowly.

TÄRDY, a. [Fr. tardif; Sp. and It. tardo, from L. tardus; from W. tariaw, to strike against, to stop, to stay, to tarry, whence target; tar, a shock; taran, that gives a shock, a clap of thunder; taranu, to thunder. We see the word is a derivative from a root signifying to strike, to clash, to dash against, hence to retard or stop.] 1. Slow; with a slow pace or motion.

And check the tardy flight of time. Sandys.

2. Late; dilatory; not being in season.

The tardy plants in our cold orchards plac'd. Waller.

You may freely censure him for being tardy in his payments. Arbuthnot.

3. Slow; implying reluctance.

Tardy to vengeance, and with mercy brave. Prior.

4.† Unwary.—5.† Criminal.—6. In colleges, late in attendance on a public exercise.

TÄRDY,† v. i. [Fr. tarder.] To delay

TÄRDY-GAITED, a. [tardy and gait.] Slow-paced; having a slow step or pace.

The mellow horn
Chides the tardy-gaited morn. Clifton.

TARE, n. [Sax. tiran, to prey upon; to consume, because it destroys the corn. See the next word.] The common name of different species of Vicia, a genus of leguminous plants, and which are also known by the name of vetch. There are numerous species and varieties of tares or vetches, many of which have been proposed to be introduced into general cultivation, but that which is found best adapted for agricultural purposes is the common tare, Vicia sativa, of which there are two principal varieties, the summer and winter tare. They afford excellent food for horses and cattle, and hence are extensively cultivated throughout Europe. [See VETCH.] The name tare is also given to two British leguminous plants of the genus Ervum, the E. hirsutum, or hairy tare, and E. tetraspermum, or smooth tare. Both are annuals, and are found growing in fields and hedges. The tare, (Zizanion,) mentioned in scripture, is supposed to be the Lolium temulentum, or darnel,—which see.

TARE, n. [Fr. id.; It. and Sp. tara; D. tarra; It. tarare, to abate; Dan. tærer, to waste, G. zehren.] In com., deficiency in the weight or quantity of goods by reason of the weight of the cask, bag, or other thing containing the commodity, and which is weighed with it; hence, the allowance or abatement of a certain weight or quantity from the weight or quantity of a commodity sold in a cask, chest, bag, or the like, which the seller makes to the buyer on account of the weight of such cask, chest, or bag. Tare is distinguished into real tare, customary tare, and average tare. The first is the absolute weight of the package; the second, its supposed weight according to the practice among merchants; and the third is the medium tare deduced from weighing a few packages and taking it as the standard for the whole. In this country the prevailing practice, as to all goods that can be unpacked without injury, is to ascertain the real tare. Sometimes, however, the buyer and seller make a particular agreement about it. When the tare is deducted, the remainder is called the nett or neat weight.—Tare and tret, a rule in arithmetic by which the neat weight of a quantity of goods is ascertained, the gross weight and the allowances for the tare and the tret being given. [See TRET.]

TARE, v. t. To ascertain or mark the amount of tare.

TARE, old pret. of Tear. We now use tore.

TÄRED, pp. Having the tare ascertained and marked.

TAREN'TISM, TARAN'TISM, n. [L. tarentismus, from tarentum.] A feigned or imaginary disease endemic in the environs of Tarentum. It was characterized by an extreme desire to dance to the sound of musical instruments, and was popularly supposed to be caused by the bite of the Tarentula. According to others, this disease consisted in a state of somnolency, which could not be overcome except by music and dancing.—2. A disease in its effects resembling St. Vitus's dance and leaping ague.

TAREN'TULA, TARAN'TULA, n. [L. diminutive of Tarentum, now Taranto, in the kingdom of Naples.] A kind of spider, the Lycosa tarantula, Tarantula (Lycosa tarantula).

a, position of the eyes.

found in some of the warmer parts of Italy. When full grown it is about the size of a chestnut, and is of a brown colour. Its bite was at one time supposed to be dangerous, and to cause the disease called tarentism,—which see; it is now known not to be worse than that of a common wasp.—2. A dance practised in the neighbourhood of Tarentum, and named from the spider already referred to.—3. An air of a light gay character, played to the dance of the same name.

TARGE, for Target, is obsolete.

TÄRG'ET, n. [Sax. targ, targa; Fr. targe; It. targa; W. targed, from taraw, to strike, whence tariad, a striking against or collision, a stopping, a staying, a tarrying; tariaw, to strike against, to stop, to tarry. We see that target is that which stops; hence, a defence; and from the root of tarry and tardy.] 1. A shield or buckler of a small kind, used as a defensive weapon in war. It was formerly much used in Scotland.—2. A mark for the artillery to fire at in their practice.

Leather-covered Highland Target.

TÄRG'ETED, a. Furnished or armed with a target.

TÄRGETEER', TÄRGETIER', n. One armed with a target.

TÄRGUM, n. [Ch. תרגום, targum, interpretation.] A translation or paraphrase of the sacred scriptures in the Chaldee language or dialect. There are ten targums extant; of which the most ancient, and the most valued by the Jews, are those of Onkelos and Jonathan Ben Uzziel. The targum of Onkelos is a paraphrase, or rather a Chaldee version of the Pentateuch, and is supposed to have been written in the first century of the Christian era. The targum of Jonathan is a paraphrase upon the greater and lesser Prophets, and is said to have been written in the third century. The targum of the Pseudo-Jonathan, and the Jerusalem targum, are both on the Pentateuch, and are of considerable antiquity. The remaining six are comparatively modern. All the targums taken together form a paraphrase of the whole of the Old Testament, except Nehemiah, Ezra, and Daniel.

TÄRGUMIST, n. The writer of a Targum.

TAR'IAN, n. The earliest form of the British shield. It was round and flat, and its exterior coating, made sometimes of bronze, was ornamented frequently with concentric circles surrounding the umbo, and studded over with little knobs beaten up from beneath.

TAR'IFF, n. [Fr. tarif; It. tariffa; Sp. tarifa, a town in Spain, at the entrance of the Straits of Gibraltar, where duties were formerly collected, hence the proper spelling would be tarif.] 1. Properly, a list or table of goods with the duties or customs to be paid for the same, either on importation or exportation, whether such duties are imposed by the government of a country, or agreed on by the princes or governments of two countries holding commerce with each other. The principle of a tariff depends upon the commercial policy of the state by which it is framed, and the details are constantly fluctuating with the change of interests and the wants of the community, or in pursuance of commercial treaties with other states. The British tariff has recently undergone several important alterations.—2. A list or table of duties or customs to be paid on goods imported or exported.

TAR'IFF, v. t. To make a list of duties on goods.

TAR'IN, n. [Fr.] A bird of the genus Fringilla, kept in cages for its beauty and fine notes; the citrinella.

TÄRING, ppr. Ascertaining or marking the amount of tare.

TÄRN, n. [Ice. tiorn.] 1. A small mountain lake, or pool.—2. A bog; a marsh; a fen. [Local.]

TÄRNISH, v. t. [Fr. ternir, ternissant.] 1. To sully; to soil by an alteration induced by the air, or by dust, and the like; to diminish or destroy lustre; as, to tarnish a metal; to tarnish gilding; to tarnish the brightness or beauty of colour.—2. To diminish or destroy the purity of; as, to tarnish reputation or honour.

TÄRNISH, v. i. To lose lustre; to become dull; as, polished substances or gilding will tarnish in the course of time. Metals tarnish by oxidation.

TÄR'NISH, n. A spot; a blot; soiled state.

TÄRNISHED, pp. Sullied; having lost its brightness by oxidation, or by some alteration induced by exposure to air, dust, and the like.

Gold and silver, when tarnished, resume their brightness by setting them over certain lyes. Copper and pewter, &c., tarnished, recover their lustre with tripoli and potashes. Cyc.

TÄRNISHING, ppr. Sullying; losing brightness.

TA'RO, n. A plant of the genus Arum, the A. esculentum, or Colocasia esculenta, Taro (Colocasia esculenta).

cultivated in the Polynesian islands for the sake of its esculent root, which, although pungent and acrid in its natural state, becomes mild and palatable by baking or boiling.

TAR'OC, n. A game at cards.

TAR'PAN, TAR'PANY, n. The wild horse, the original stock of the bay horse. Tarpans are found pure Tarpan of northern Asia.

only in Northern Asia, or the borders of China. They are not larger than an ordinary mule, are migratory, and have a tolerably acute sense of smell. Their colour is invariably tan or mouse. During the cold season their hair is long and soft, lying so close as to feel like a boar's fur, and then it is grizzled; in summer it falls much away, leaving only a certain quantity on the back and loins.

TARPAU'LIN, TARPAU'LING, TARPAW'LING, n. [from tar.] A piece of canvas well daubed with tar, and used to cover the hatchways of a ship to prevent rain or water from entering the hold.—2. A sailor's hat covered with painted or tarred cloth; a painted or tarred canvas cover generally.—3. A sailor: in contempt.

TĂRQUINISH, a. Like Tarquin, a king of Rome; proud; haughty.

TAR'RACE, TAR'RASS, TER'RASS, TRASS, n. A volcanic earth resembling puzzolana, used as a cement; or a coarse sort of plaster or mortar, durable in water, and used to line cisterns and other reservoirs of water. The Dutch tarras is made of a soft rock stone found near Cullen, on the lower part of the Rhine. It is burnt like lime, and reduced to powder in mills. It is of a grayish colour.

TAR'RAGON, n. A plant of the genus Artemisia, (A. dracunculus,) celebrated for perfuming vinegar in France.

TARRE,† v. t. To stimulate; to urge on; to provoke. [See To Tar.]

TĂRRED, pp. Smeared with tar.

TAR'RIANCE,† n. [from tarry.] A tarrying; delay; lateness.

TAR'RIED, pp. Waited for; staid; delayed.

TAR'RIER, n. A dog. [See Terrier.] —2. [from tarry.] One who tarries or delays.

TĂR'RING, ppr. Smearing with tar; impregnating with tar; as, tarring ropes; tarring yarn.

TAR'ROCK, n. A name given to the young of the Larus tridactylus, or Kittiwake gull, while in their first year. The birds in this state were at one time supposed to be a distinct species.

TAR'ROW, v. i. To delay; to hesitate; to feel reluctance; to loathe; to refuse. [Scotch.]

TAR'RY, v. i. [W. tariaw, to strike against any thing, to stop, to stay, to tarry; Ir. and Gael. tairism. It is of the same family as tardy and target. The primary sense is to thrust or drive, hence to strike against, to stop; W. tarw, L. taurus, a bull, is from the same root.] 1. To stay; to abide; to continue; to lodge.

Tarry all night and wash your feet; Gen. xix.

2. To stay behind; Exod. xii.—3. To stay in expectation; to wait.

Tarry ye here for us, till we come again to you; Exod. xxiv.

4. To delay; to put off going or coming; to defer.

Come down to me, tarry not; Gen. xlv.

5. To remain; to stay.

He that telleth lies shall not tarry in my sight; Ps. ci.

TAR'RY, v. t. To wait for.

I cannot tarry dinner.† Shak.

TĂR'RY, [from tar.] Consisting of tar, or like tar; smeared with tar.

TAR'RYING, ppr. Staying; delaying.

TAR'RYING, n. Delay; Ps. xl.

TĂRSAL, a. Pertaining to the tarsus or instep; as, the tarsal bones.

TĂRSE, the same as tarsus,—which see.

TĂRSEL, n. A kind of hawk; a tiercel.

TAR'SIER, n. A quadruped; the woolly jerboa.

TĂRSUS, n. pl. Tarsi. [Gr. ταρσος: Fr. tarse.] The instep, or that part of the foot which is between the leg and metatarsus. It is composed of seven bones, viz., the astragalus, os calcis, os naviculare, os cuboides, and three others, called ossa cuneiformia.—2. The thin cartilage situated at the edges of the eyelids to preserve their firmness and shape.—3. In entom., the last segment of the leg. It is divided into several joints, which have been supposed to represent the toes of quadrupeds. The last joint of the tarsus is generally terminated by a claw, which is sometimes single and sometimes double. In birds, the word tarsus is sometimes applied to the third segment of the leg, which corresponds with the tarsus and metatarsus conjoined.

TĂRT, a. [Sax. teart; D. taartig. See the next word.] 1. Acid; sharp to the taste; acidulous; as, a tart apple. —2. Sharp; keen; severe; as, a tart reply; tart language; a tart rebuke.

TĂRT, n. [D. taart; Sw. tart; Fr. tarte; It. torta; G. torte. The Italian and German orthography seem to connect this word with torto, L. tortus, twisted; and this may be the primary sense of tart, acid, sharp, and hence this noun, something acid or made of acid fruit. But qu.] A species of pie or pastry, consisting of fruit baked on paste.

TĂRTAN, n. [Sp. and It. tartana.] A vessel used in the Mediterranean, both for commercial and other purposes. It is furnished with a single mast on which is rigged a large lateen sail; and with a bowsprit and fore-sail.

Tartan.

When the wind is aft, a square-sail is generally hoisted like a cross-jack.

TĂRTAN, n. A well-known species of cloth, checkered or cross-barred with threads of various colours. It was originally made of wool or silk, and constituted the distinguishing badge of the Scottish Highland clans, each clan having its own peculiar pattern. An endless variety of fancy tartans are now manufactured for ladies' dresses, some of wool, others of silk, others of wool and cotton, or of silk and cotton. The word tartan is supposed to be derived from the Fr. tiretaine, which signified a kind of linsey-woolsey anciently worn by the peasants of France, and which was most probably particoloured. The name, along with the manufacture itself, seems to have been imported into Scotland from France or Germany.

TĂRTAR, n. [Fr. tartre; Sp. tartaro; from tart, acid.] 1. An acid concrete salt, called also argal or argol, deposited from wines completely fermented, and adhering to the sides of the casks in the form of a hard crust. It is white or red, according to the wine from which it is obtained, the white being most esteemed. It is a bitartrate of potash, and when purified, it is quite white, and forms cream of tartar, which is much used in dyeing, and also in medicine as a laxative and diuretic. [See Cream.]—Salt of tartar, carbonate of potash obtained by calcining cream of tartar.—Soluble tartar, a neutral or bibasic salt, obtained by adding cream of tartar to a hot solution of carbonate of potash till all effervesence ceases. It has a mild saline, somewhat bitter taste, and is used as a laxative.—Tartar-emetic, tartrate of potash and antimony, an important compound, used in medicine as an emetic, purgative, diaphoretic, sedative, febrifuge, and counter-irritant.—Tartar of the teeth, an earthy-like substance which occasionally concretes upon the teeth, and is deposited from the saliva. It consists of salivary mucus, animal matter, and phosphate of lime.—2. A person of a keen irritable temper.—3. A native of Tartary; a corruption of Tatar.—To catch a tartar, in ludicrous style, to lay hold of or encounter a person who proves too strong for the assailant.

TĂRTAR,† n. [L. Tartarus.] Hell.

TĂRTA'REAN, TĂRTA'REOUS, a. Hellish; pertaining to Tartarus.

TĂRTA'REOUS, a. Consisting of tartar; resembling tartar, or partaking of its properties.

TĂRTAR'IC, TĂRTA'REAN, a. Pertaining to Tartary, in Asia.

TĂRTAR'IC ACID, n. The acid of tartar. It exists in grape juice, in tamarinds, and several other fruits; but principally in bitartrate of potash, or cream of tartar, from which it is usually obtained. It crystallizes in large rhombic prisms, transparent and colourless, and very soluble in water. It is inodorous and very sour to the taste. A high temperature decomposes it, giving rise to several new products. The solution of tartaric acid acts with facility upon those metals which decompose water, as iron and zinc; it combines readily with alkalies, earths, and metallic oxides, forming salts called tartrates. Tartaric acid has a most remarkable disposition to form double salts, as the tartrate of potash and soda or Rochelle salts; the tartrate of potash and antimony, or tartar-emetic. In a crystallized state it is composed of 8 atoms of carbon, 4 of hydrogen, 10 of oxygen, and 2 of water; and in its dry state it is composed of 8 atoms of carbon, 2 of hydrogen, and 8 of oxygen. Tartaric acid is largely employed as a discharge in calico-printing, and for making soda powders. In medicine it is used in small doses as a refrigerant.

TĂRTARIN, TĂRTARINE, n. [from tartar.] A name given by Kirwan to fixed vegetable alkali or potassa.

TĂRTARINATED, a. Combined with tartarin.

TĂRTARIZA'TION, n. The act of forming tartar.

TĂRTARIZE, v. t. To impregnate with tartar; to refine by means of the salt of tartar.

TĂRTARIZED, pp. Impregnated with tartar; refined by tartar.—Tartarized iron, tartrate of potash and peroxide of iron, used in medicine.—Tartarized antimony, another name for tartar-emetic.

TĂRTARIZING, ppr. Impregnating with tartar; refining by means of the salt of tartar.

TĂRTAROUS, a. Containing tartar; consisting of tartar, or partaking of its qualities.

TĂRTARUM, n. A preparation of tartar, called petrified tartar.

TĂRTARUS, n. [Gr. ταρταρος.] In Greek and Roman mythol., the name of the infernal regions, in which the Titans were confined, and the shades of the wicked were punished. In the earliest mythology of the Greeks, it denoted the regions of the dead in general, or the realm of Pluto.

TĂRTISH, a. [from tart.] Somewhat tart.

TĂRTLY, adv. Sharply; with acidity.—2. Sharply; with poignancy; severely; as, to reply or rebuke tartly.—3. With sourness of aspect.

TĂRTNESS, n. Acidity; sharpness to the taste; as, the tartness of wine or fruit.—2. Sharpness of language or manner; poignancy; keenness; severity; as, the tartness of rebuke.

TĂRTRALATE, n. A salt formed by the union of tartralic acid with a base; as, the tartralate of lime, or of baryta.

TĂRTRAL'IC ACID, n. An acid formed by the action of heat on tartaric acid. It forms a transparent mass not crystalline, deliquescent and soluble in alcohol. Its composition is the same as that of crystallized tartaric acid deprived of one-fourth of its water.

TĂRTRATE, n. [from tartar.] A salt formed by the combination of tartaric acid with a base; as, tartrate of potassa; tartrate of soda. Some of the tartrates are neutral; as the tartrates of ammonia, potash, soda, and lime; others are acid, as the acid tartrate of ethyle, the acid tartrate of potash, or tartar. Tartaric acid also forms a number of double tartrates; as the tartrate of potash and ammonia, of potash and oxide of ethyle, of potash and boracic acid, of potash and soda, &c. The tartrates are amongst the most interesting of organic salts.

TĂRTRELATE, n. A salt formed by the union of tartrelic acid with a base; as, the tartrelate of lime, or of baryta.

TĂRTREL'IC ACID, n. An acid formed by the action of heat on tartaric acid. Its composition is the same as that of crystallized tartaric acid deprived of one-half of its water.

TĂRTROVIN'IC ACID, n. Acid tartrate of ethyle, a crystallizable compound obtained by the reaction of tartaric acid and alcohol on each other. It has a fine white colour, and a sweetish agreeable acidulous taste, but is destitute of smell.

TĂRTSCHE, n. A round shield formerly much in use with the Turks.

TĂRTUFFE, n. [Fr.] A hypocrite, a pretender to devotion.

TĂRTUFFISH,† a. [Fr. tartuffe, a hypocrite.] Precise; formal; hypocritical.

TAS'SES, or TAS'SETS, n. plur. Armour for the thighs; appendages to the ancient corselet, consisting of skirts of iron that covered the thighs. They were fastened to the cuirass with hooks.

TAS'SIE, n. [Fr. tasse.] A cup or vessel. [Scotch.]

TĀSTABLE, a. [from taste.] That may be tasted; savoury; relishing.

TĀSTE, v. t. [Fr. tâter, to feel; It. tastare; Norm. taster, to touch, to try; G. and D. tasten; Dan. tasser. The Dutch has toetsen, to touch, to try, to test; Dan. taster and, to attack or assault. This shows that the primary sense is to thrust or drive; allied perhaps to dash; hence to strike, to touch, to bring one thing in contact with another.] 1. To perceive by means of the tongue; to have a certain sensation in consequence of something applied to the tongue, the organ of taste; as, to taste bread; to taste wine; to taste a sweet or an acid.—2. To try the relish of by the perception of the organs of taste.—3. To try by eating a little; or to eat a little.

> Because I tasted a little of this honey; 1 Sam. xiv.

8. To experience by shedding, as blood.

> When Commodus had once tasted human blood, he became incapable of pity or remorse. Gibbon.

TĀSTE, v. i. To try by the mouth; to eat or drink; or to eat or drink a little only; as, to taste of each kind of wine.—2. To have a smack; to excite a particular sensation, by which the quality or flavour is distinguished; as, butter tastes of garlic; apples boiled in a brass-kettle, sometimes taste of brass.—3. To distinguish intellectually.

> Scholars, when good sense describing,
> Call it tasting and imbibing. Swift.

4. To try the relish of anything. Taste of the fruits; taste for yourself.—5. To be tinctured; to have a particular quality or character.

> Ev'ry idle, nice and wanton reason
> Shall, to the king, taste of this action. Shak.

6 To experience; to have perception of.

> The valiant never taste of death but once. Shak.

7. To take to be enjoyed.

> Of nature's bounty men forbore to taste. Waller.

8. To enjoy sparingly.

> For age but tastes of pleasures, youth devours. Dryden.

9. To have the experience or enjoyment of.

> They who have tasted of the heavenly gift, and the good word of God; Heb. vi.

TĀSTE, n. The act of tasting; gustation.—2. A particular sensation excited in an animal by certain bodies, which are called sapid, applied to the tongue and palate, and moistened with saliva; as, the taste of an orange or an apple; a bitter taste; an acid taste; a sweet taste. This is the original and proper meaning of the word taste; but as the qualities of bodies which produce these sensations are unknown, they have obtained the names of the sensations themselves, by substituting the cause for the effect. We possess very few words to designate the endless variety of tastes, of which we are very sensible. Tastes have been divided into simple and compound, and philosophers have endeavoured to ascertain the number of each species.—3. The sense by which we perceive the relish of a thing. The organs of this special sense, are certain parts within the cavity of the mouth, obviously so disposed as to take early cognizance of matters about to be swallowed, and to act as sentinels for the remainder of the alimentary canal, at the entrance of which they are situated. They serve to give timely notice of any acrid, caustic, or nauseous quality; of any undue temperature; of any inconvenient hardness, irregularity, size, or sharpness in the material submitted to them; and thus to protect the stomach against the intrusion of many hurtful agents. They, moreover, establish for our appetites a scale of liking and disliking. The organs of taste are confined to a portion of the tongue and a portion of the palate. The tip and sides of the tongue, and a small space at the root of it, together with a small surface at the anterior and superior part of the roof of the palate, are the only portions of surface in the cavity of the mouth and throat that can distinguish taste or sapidity from mere touch—4. Intellectual relish, or discernment; as, he had no taste of true glory.

> I have no taste
> Of popular applause. Dryden.

Note.—In this use, the word is now followed by for. "He had no taste for glory." When followed by of, the sense is ambiguous, or rather it denotes experience, trial.—5. Judgment; discernment; nice perception, or the power of perceiving and relishing excellence in human performances; the faculty of discerning beauty, order, congruity, proportion, symmetry, or whatever constitutes excellence, particularly in the fine arts and belles lettres. Or it may be defined, that faculty of the mind by which we both perceive and enjoy whatever is beautiful and sublime in the works of nature and art, the perception of these two qualities being attended with an emotion of pleasure, distinguishable from every other pleasure of our nature. This faculty relishes some things, is disgusted with others, and to many is indifferent. Taste is not wholly the gift of nature, nor wholly the effect of art. It depends much on culture. It is the joint result of natural sensibility, of a good judgment, and an intimate acquaintance with the best productions of art. We say, a good taste, or a fine taste.—6. Style; manner, with respect to what is pleasing; the pervading air, the choice of circumstances, and the general arrangement in any work of art, by which taste in the artist or author is evinced; as, a poem or music composed in good taste.—7. The choice, whether good or bad, of ornaments, of pleasures, or pursuits, by which a person is distinguished.—8.† Essay; trial; experiment.—9. A small portion given as a specimen.—10. A bit; a little piece tasted or eaten.—11. A kind of narrow ribbon.

TATTOO', v. t. [In the South Sea islands.] To prick the skin, and stain the punctured spots with a black substance, forming lines and figures upon the body. In some islands, the inhabitants tattoo the face, in others only the body. The same practice exists among other rude nations.

TATTOO', n. Figures on the body made by punctures and stains in lines and figures.

TATTOO'ED, pp. Marked by stained lines and figures on the body.

TATTOO'ING, ppr. Marking with various figures by stained lines.

TATTOO'ING, n. The name given to a practice common to several uncivilized nations, which consists in marking the skin with punctures or incisions, and introducing into the wounds coloured liquids or gunpowder, so as to produce an indelible stain, and also Tattooing.

Head of Ko-towa-towa, a New Zealand chief.

a variety of figures, on the face and other parts of the body. This practice is very prevalent among the South-sea islanders, and the word tattoo appears to be formed by a reduplication of a Polynesian verb ta, meaning to strike, in allusion to the method of performing the operation. The instruments generally used in tattooing, among the south-sea Islanders, are edged with small teeth, somewhat resembling those of a fine comb. These are applied to the skin, and being repeatedly struck with a small mallet, the teeth make the incisions required, while the colouring tincture is introduced at the same time. In some cases, however, various instruments are employed, and the operation is very tedious and painful. Degrees of rank are indicated by the greater or less surface of tattooed skin. Sometimes the whole body, the face not excepted, are tattooed; as among the New Zealanders. The age for performing the operation appears to vary from eight or ten years, up to about twenty.

TAU, n. The toad fish of Carolina, a species of Gadus, (G. tau.)—2. A species of beetle; also, a species of moth, (Phalena;) also, a kind of fly, (Musca.) —3. In her., the cross-tau, or cross of St. Anthony. It is nearly the same as the cross-potent, and derives its name from the Greek letter tau, which it resembles exactly.

Cross-Tau.

TAUGHT, a. (taut.) [from the root of tight.] In marine lan., tight; stretched out; not slack; applied to a rope or sail. As applied to a sail, it also implies a great quantity of sail set. It is sometimes written taut.

TAUGHT, pret. and pp. of Teach, pron. taut. [L. doctus.] Experience taught him wisdom. He has been taught in the school of experience.

TÄUNT, a. In mar. lan., high or tall; an epithet particularly applied to the masts when they are of an unusual length.

TÄUNT, v. t. [Qu. Fr. tancer, to rebuke or chide; W. tantiaw, to stretch; or Pers. tauanidan, to pierce with words.] 1. To reproach with severe or insulting words; to revile; to upbraid.

TAU'TIE, } of hair or wool. [Scotch.]

TAU'TOCHRONE, n. [Gr. ταυτος, the same, and χρονος time.] In mech., a curve line such, that a heavy body descending along it by gravity, will, from whatever point in the curve it begins to descend, always arrive at the lowest point in the same time. The cycloid possesses this property. Also, when any number of curves are drawn from a given point, and another curve is so drawn as to cut off from every one of them an arc, which is described by a falling particle in one given time, that arc is called a tautochrone.

TAUTOCHRO'NOUS, a. Pertaining to a tautochrone; isochronous.

TAUTOG', n. A fish, (Labrus Americanus,) found on the coast of New England, and valued for food, called also Black-fish.

TAU'TOLITE, n. A velvet-black mineral occurring in volcanic feldspathic rocks. It is supposed to be a silicate of protoxide of iron, and silicate of magnesia.

TAUTOLOG'IC, } a. [See TAUTO-
TAUTOLOG'ICAL, } LOGY.] Repeating the same thing; having the same signification; as, a tautological expression or phrase.—Tautological echo, an echo that repeats the same sound or syllable many times.

TAUTOLOG'ICALLY, adv. In a tautological manner.

TAUTOL'OGIST, n. One who uses different words or phrases in succession to express the same sense.

TAUTOL'OGIZE, v. i. To repeat the same thing in different words.

TAUTOL'OGOUS, a. Tautological.

TAUTOL'OGY, n. [Gr. ταυτολογια; ταυτος, the same, and λογος, word or expression.] A repetition of the same meaning in different words; needless repetition of a thing in different words or phrases; or a representation of any thing as the cause, condition, or consequence of itself, as in the following lines—

The dawn is overcast, the morning low'rs,
And heavily in clouds brings on the day. Addison.

TAV'ERN-MAN,† n. [tavern and man.] The keeper of a tavern.—2. A tippler.

TAW, v. t. [Sax. tawian; D. touwen. In Sax. teagan has the like signification. In Persic, tauidan, is to scrape and curry hides.] To dress white leather or alum leather; to dress and prepare skins in white, as the skins of sheep, lambs, goats, and kids, for gloves and the like.—2. To beat. [See TEW.]

TAW, n. A marble to be played with; a game at marbles.

TAW'DRILY, adv. In a tawdry manner.

TAW'DRINESS, n. [from tawdry.] Tinsel in dress; excessive finery; ostentatious finery without elegance.

A clumsy person makes his ungracefulness more ungraceful by tawdriness of dress. Richardson.

TAW'DRY, a. Very fine and showy in colours without taste or elegance; having an excess of showy ornaments without grace; as, a tawdry dress; tawdry feathers; tawdry colours.

He rails from morning to night at essenced fops and tawdry courtiers. Spectator.

TAW'DRY, n. A slight ornament.

TAW'ED, pp. Dressed and made white, as leather.

TAW'ER, n. A dresser of white leather.

TAW'ERY, n. A place where skins are tawed.

TAW'IE, a. Tame; tractable. [Scotch.]

TAW'ING, ppr. Dressing as white leather.

TAW'ING, n. The art and operation of preparing skins and forming them into white leather by imbuing them with alum, salt, and other matters.

TAW'NINESS, n. The quality of being tawny.

TAW'NY, a. [Fr. tanné, from tanner, to tan.] Of a yellowish dark colour, like things tanned, or persons who are sunburnt; as, a tawny Moor or Spaniard; the tawny sons of Numidia; the tawny lion.

TAWS, } n. A whip; a lash; the TAWSE, } ferula used by a schoolmaster. [Scotch.]

TAX, n. [Fr. taxe; Sp. tasa; It. tassa; from L. taxo, to tax. If from the Gr. ταξις, τασσω, the root was tago, the sense of which was to set, to thrust on. But this is doubtful. It may be allied to task.] 1. A rate or duty, laid by government on the incomes or property of individuals, or on the products consumed by them; the produce of such duty or rate being placed at the disposal of government, for the public good. Tax is a term of general import, including almost every species of imposition on persons or property for supplying the public treasury, as tolls, tribute, subsidy, excise, impost, or customs. But more generally, tax is limited to the sum laid upon incomes, lands, houses, horses, cattle, professions, and occupations. So we speak of a land tax, an income tax, a window tax, a tax on carriages, &c. A tax may be either direct or indirect. It is said to be direct, when it is imposed on the incomes or property of individuals; and indirect, when it is imposed on the articles on which such incomes or property are expended. A tax may also be either general or particular; that is, it may either affect all classes indiscriminately, or only one or more classes. All taxes must ultimately be paid from the revenue of a country, or from its capital or stock. Assessed taxes, those duties imposed by government on windows, carriages, horses, dogs, men-servants, &c.—2. A sum imposed on individuals or on their property for local or civic purposes. Of this nature are county rates, taxes for the repair of roads or bridges, taxes for the support of the poor, usually called poor rates; borough tolls and dues; light dues, harbour dues; police taxes, &c. So a private association may lay a tax on its members for the use of the association.—3. That which is imposed; a burden. The attention that he gives to public business is a heavy tax on his time.—4. Charge; censure.—5. Task.

TAX, v. t. [L. taxo; Fr. taxer; It. tassare.] 1. To lay, impose, or assess upon individuals a certain sum of money or amount of property, to be paid to the public treasury, or to the treasury of a corporation or company, to defray the expenses of the government or corporation, &c.

> We are more heavily taxed by our idleness, pride and folly, than we are taxed by government. Franklin.

2. To load with a burden or burdens.

> The narrator . never taxes our faith beyond the obvious bounds of probability. J. Sparks.

3. To assess, fix or determine judicially, as the amount of cost on actions in court; as, the court taxes bills of cost. —4 To charge; to censure; to accuse; usually followed by with; as, to tax a man with pride. He was taxed with presumption.

> Men's virtues I have commended as freely as I have taxed their crimes. Dryden.

[To tax of a crime, is not in use, nor to tax for. Both are now improper.]

TAXABIL'ITY, n. The state of being taxable.

TAX'ABLE, a. That may be taxed; liable by law to the assessment of taxes; as, taxable commodities.—2. That may be legally charged by a court against the plaintiff or defendant in a suit; as, taxable costs.

TAX'ABLENESS, n. The state of being taxable.

TAX'ABLY, adv. In a taxable manner.

TAXA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of gymnospermous plants, inhabiting chiefly the temperate parts of Europe, Asia, Africa, and America. The plants of this order are trees or shrubs, having a woody tissue marked with circular disks, with evergreen, and mostly narrow, rigid, entire, and veinless leaves. The order yields trees which are valued for their timber, and, like the coniferæ, possess resinous properties. The Dacridium taxifolium or Kahaterro of New Zealand acquires a height of 200 feet. [See TAXUS.]

TAXA'TIO ECCLESIAS'TICA. [L.] The name formerly given to the assessment and levy of taxes upon the property of the church, and of the clergy.

TAXA'TION, n. [Fr. from L. taxatio.] 1. A taxing; the act of laying a tax, or of imposing taxes on the subjects of a state by government, or on the members of a corporation or company by the proper authority. Taxation is probably the most difficult subject of legislation.—2. Tax; sum imposed; the aggregate of particular taxes.

> He daily such taxations did exact. Daniel.

3. That branch of political economy which explains the mode in which the revenue required for the public service may be most advantageously raised.—4. Charge; accusation. [Little used.] —5. The act of taxing or assessing a bill of costs.

TAX'ED, pp. Rated; assessed; accused.

TAX'ER, n. One who taxes.—2. In Cambridge, two officers chosen yearly to see the true gauge of weights and measures observed. [See TAXOR.]

TAX'-FREE, a. Exempt from taxation.

TAX'-GATHERER, n. A collector of taxes.

TAX'IARCH, n. [Gr. ταξιαρχης: ταξις, order, and αρχος, chief.] An Athenian military officer commanding a taxis or battalion.

TAX'ICORNS, } n. The second family
TAXICOR'NES, } of the heteromerous coleoptera in Latreille's arrangement of insects. They live on fungi, beneath the bark of trees, or on the ground under stones.

TAX'IDERMIC, a. Belonging to the art of preparing and preserving the skins of animals.

TAX'IDERMIST, n. A person skilled in preparing and preserving the skins of animals, so as to represent their natural appearance.

TAX'IDERMY, n. [Gr. ταξις, order, and δερμα, skin.] The art of preparing and preserving the skins of animals, for cabinets, so as to represent their natural appearance.

TAX'ING, ppr. Imposing a tax; assessing, as a bill of costs; accusing.

TAX'ING, n. The act of laying a tax; taxation; Luke ii.

TAX'IS, n. [Gr. ταξις, order.] In surg., an operation by which those parts which have quitted their natural situation are replaced by the hand without the assistance of instruments; as, in reducing hernia, &c.—2. In ancient arch., a term used to signify that disposition which assigns to every part of a building its just dimensions. It is synonymous with ordonnance in modern architecture.

TAXO'DIUM, n A genus of plants, nat. order Coniferæ. It has been distinguished from the genus cupressus, principally on account of the arrangement of the male catkins in racemose panicles, the small number of flowers in the female catkins, and the numbers of cotyledons possessed by the embryo. The T. distichum, or deciduous cypress, is a native of North America, where its wood is used for all the purposes to which timber is applied. The bark exudes a resin which is used by the negroes for dressing wounds.* The roots are remarkable for the production of large conical knobs, hollow inside. In America they are called cypress knees, and are used by the negroes for bee-hives.

Taxodium distichum.

TAXON'OMY, n. [Gr. ταξις order, and νομος, law.] 1. That department of natural history which treats of the laws and principles of classification.—2. The laws or principles themselves of classification.

TAX'OR, n. In the university of Cambridge, an officer appointed to regulate the assize of bread, the true gauge of weights, &c.

TAX'US, n. The yew; a genus of evergreen plants, the type of the natural order Taxaceæ. The species are natives of Europe and North America. [See YEW.]

TAY'LOR'S THEOREM. In the higher mathematics a very elegant formula, of most extensive application in analysis, discovered by Dr. Brook Taylor, and published by him in 1715. It is to the following effect. Let u represent any function whatever of the variable quantity x; then if x receive any increment, as h, let u become u'; then we shall have $u' = u + \frac{du}{dx} \cdot \frac{h}{1} + \frac{d^2u}{dx^2} \cdot \frac{h^2}{1 \cdot 2} + \frac{d^3u}{dx^3} \cdot \frac{h^3}{1 \cdot 2 \cdot 3} + \frac{d\ u}{dx} \cdot \frac{h^4}{1 \cdot 2 \cdot 3 \cdot 4} +$, &c., where d represents the differential of the function u. The great value of this theorem was overlooked till it was made the basis of the differential and integral calculus, by Lagrange, in 1772.

TA'ZEL, n. A plant; teasel, which see.

TAZ'ZA, n. [It.] In antiquities, a large basin or reservoir of water, set apart for the various lustrations which were in general use among the ancients.

TÊA, n. [Chinese, tcha or tha. Grosier. Russ. tshai; Sp. te; It. tè; Fr. thé.] 1. The dried leaves of different species of plants of the genus Thea, extensively cultivated in China. All the teas of China are in commerce brought under two distinct terms, green teas and black teas. These are produced from thea viridis, and thea bohea, both of which species yield the two kinds of tea. The difference between green and black tea is attained by means of some peculiarity in the manipulation during the process of manufacture. The black teas include bohea, congou, souchong, and pekoe; the green teas, twankay, hyson-skin, young hyson, hyson, imperial, and gunpowder. Paraguay tea is yielded by Ilex paraguensis. [See ILEX.] Tea, taken in moderation, is strengthening and exhilarating. It also has the effect of a very mild narcotic. The green varieties are more exhilarating than the black, and a strong infusion of the former, generally produces considerable excitement and wakefulness. Tea was first introduced into this country about the middle of the seventeenth century. [See THEA.]—2. A decoction or infusion of tea leaves in boiling water. Tea is a refreshing beverage.—3. Any infusion or decoction of vegetables; as, sage tea; chamomile tea, &c.

TĒA, v. i. To take or drink tea. [Provincial.]

TĒA-BOARD, n. [tea and board.] A board to put tea furniture on.

TĒA-CADDY, n. A box for holding the tea used in a household; a tea-canister.

TĒA-CANISTER, n. [tea and canister.] A canister or box in which tea is kept.

TĒA-CHEST, n. A slightly formed wooden package, covered with Chinese characters and devices, and lined with thin sheet-lead, used for sending tea in from China.

TĒA-CUP, n. [tea and cup.] A small cup in which tea is drank.

TĒA-DEALER, n. A merchant who sells teas.

TĒA-DRINK′ER, n. [tea and drinker.] One who drinks much tea.

TĒA-KETTLE, n. A portable boiler, made of copper, of brass, or of tinned or cast iron, in which water is boiled for making tea.

TĒA-LEAD, n. Thin sheet-lead, used in lining tea-chests, sent from China.

TĒA-PLANT, n. The tea-shrub. [See THEA.]

TĒA-POT, n. [tea and pot.] A vessel with a spout, in which tea is made, and from which it is poured into tea-cups.

TĒA-SAUCER, n. [tea and saucer.] A small saucer in which a tea-cup is set.

TĒA-SPOON, n. [tea and spoon.] A small spoon used in drinking tea and coffee.

TĒA-TABLE, n. [tea and table.] A table on which tea-furniture is set, or at which tea is drank.

TĒA-TREE, n. [tea and tree.] The shrub or plant that produces the leaves which are imported and called tea. [See THEA.]

TĒA′-TRAY, n. A tea-board, made of japanned sheet-iron, pasteboard, papier maché, &c.

TĒA-URN, n. A vessel in the form of a vase, placed on the tea-table, for supplying heated water for tea.

TĒACH, v. t. pret. and pp. Taught. [Sax. tæcan, to teach, and to take; L. doceo; Ir. deachtaim, to teach, to dictate; Gaelic, deachdam, which seems to be the L. dico, dicto, and both these and the Gr. δειχω, to show, may be of one family; all implying sending, passing, communicating, or rather leading, drawing.] 1. To instruct; to inform; to communicate to another the knowledge of that of which he was before ignorant.

He will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; Is. ii.

Lord, teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples; Luke ix.

2. To deliver any doctrine, art, principles, or words for instruction. One sect of ancient philosophers taught the doctrines of stoicism, another those of epicureanism.

In vain they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men; Matt. xv.

3. To tell; to give intelligence.—4. To instruct, or to practise the business of an instructor; to use or follow the employment of a preceptor; as, a man teaches a school for a livelihood.—5. To show; to exhibit so as to impress on the mind.

If some men teach wicked things, it must be that others may practise them. South.

6. To accustom; to make familiar.

They have taught their tongue to speak lies; Jer. ix.

7. To inform or admonish; to give previous notice to.

For he taught his disciples and said... Mark ix.

8. To suggest to the mind.

For the Holy Spirit shall teach you in that same hour what ye ought to say; Luke xii.

9. To signify or give notice.

He teacheth with his fingers; Prov. vi.

10. To counsel and direct; Hab. ii.

TĒACH, v. i. To practise giving instruction; to perform the business of a preceptor.

The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire; Mic. iii

TĒACH, n. [Ir. and Gaelic, teagham, to heat.] In sugar works, the last boiler.

TĒACHABLE, a. That may be taught; apt to learn; also readily receiving instruction; docile.

We ought to bring our minds free, unbiassed and teachable, to learn our religion from the word of God. Watts.

TĒACHABLENESS, n. The quality of being capable of receiving instruction; more generally, a willingness or readiness to be informed and instructed; docility; aptness to learn.

TĒACHER, n. One who teaches or instructs.—2. An instructor; a preceptor; a tutor; one whose business or occupation is to instruct others.—3. One who instructs others in religion; a preacher; a minister of the gospel.

The teachers in all the churches assembled themselves. Ralegh.

4. One who preaches without regular ordination.

TĒACHING, ppr. Instructing; informing.

TĒACHING, n. The act or business of instructing.—2. Instruction.

TĒACHLESS, a. Unteachable; indocile.

TĒAD, } † n. [L. tæda.] A torch; a
TEDE, } flambeau.

TĒAGUE, n. (teeg.) An Irishman; in contempt.

TĒAK, n. A tree of the East Indies, which furnishes an abundance of ship timber. It is the Tectona grandis. [See TECTONA.]

TĒAL, n. [D. taling.] An aquatic fowl of the genus Anas, the A. crecca, Linn., the smallest and most beautiful of the European anatidæ, or duck kind. The common teal makes its appearance in England about the end of September, and remains till spring has made considerable progress, when it generally returns again to more northern localities to breed. In many parts of Scotland, however, it remains all the year. Teals frequent fresh-water lakes, and feed on seeds, grasses, water-plants, and insects. Their flesh is much prized.

Common Teal (Anas crecca).

TĒAM, n. [Sax. team, offspring, progeny, race of descendants, hence a suit or long series; tyman, to teem, to bear, to bring forth, also to call, to summon. The primary sense is to shoot out or extend.] 1. Two or more horses, oxen or other beasts, harnessed together to the same vehicle for drawing, as to a coach, chariot, waggon, cart, plough, and the like. It has been a great question whether teams of horses or oxen are most advantageously employed in agriculture. Wherever the land is only partially cultivated, and a portion of it remains in coarse pasture, which costs little or nothing to the occupier, or where extensive open commons afford cheap food for oxen, these ought to be employed in farm labour; but where-ever arable land is the chief object of the farmer's attention, and the tillage of the soil is brought to any degree of perfection, horses should be employed. —2. Any number passing in a line; a long line.

Like a long team of snowy swans on high. Dryden.

[This is the primary sense, but is rarely used.]

TĒAM′-RAILWAY, n. A railway on which horses are used as the motive power.

TĒAMSTER, n. [team and ster.] One who drives a team.

TĒANY. In her. [See TENNE.]

TĒAR, n. [Gaelic, dear, deur; Goth. tagr, contracted in Sax. tear; G. zähre; Sw. tar; Dan. taare; W. daigyr; Gr. δακρυ: from flowing or pouring forth; Ar. tauka, to burst forth, as tears, or waduka, to drop or distil.] 1. Tears are the limpid fluid secreted by the lacrymal gland, and appearing in the eyes, or flowing from them. A tear, in the singular, is a drop or a small quantity of that fluid. Tears are excited by passions, particularly by grief. This fluid is also called forth by any injury done to the eye. It serves to moisten the cornea and preserve its transparency, and to remove any dust or fine substance that enters the eye and gives pain. Tears are a little heavier than water; they have a saline taste and an alkaline reagency, owing to the presence of free soda.—2. Something in the form of a transparent drop of fluid matter; as gums or resins exuding in the form of tears from the eye.

TĒAR, v. t. pret. Tore; pp. Torn; old pret. Tare, obs. [Sax. tæran, to tear; tiran, tyran, tyrian, tyrigan, to fret, gnaw, provoke; Russ. deru, to tear. In Sw. tära is to fret, consume, waste; Dan. tærer, id.; D. teeren, G. zehren, id. These are probably the same word varied in signification, and they coincide with L. tero, Gr. τείρω. In W. tori, Arm. torri, Corn. terhi, is to break; Ch. and Syr. תרע, tera, to tear, to rend.] 1. To separate by violence or pulling; to rend; to lacerate; as, to tear cloth; to tear a garment; to tear the skin or flesh. We use tear and rip in different senses. To tear is to rend or separate the texture of cloth; to rip is to open a seam, to separate parts sewed together.—2. To wound; to lacerate.

The women beat their breasts, their cheeks they tear. Shak.

3. To rend; to break; to form fissures by any violence; as, torrents tear the ground.—4. To divide by violent measures; to shatter; to rend; as, a state or government torn by factions.—5. To pull with violence; as, to tear the hair.—6. To remove by violence; to break up.

Or on rough seas from their foundation torn. Dryden.

7. To make a violent rent.

In the midst, a tearing groan did break
The name of Antony. Shak.

To tear from, to separate and take away by force; as, an island torn from its possessor.

The hand of fate
Has torn thee from me. Addison.

To tear off, to pull off by violence; to strip.—To tear out, to pull or draw out by violence; as, to tear out the eyes.—To tear up, to rip up; to remove from a fixed state by violence; as, to tear up a floor; to tear up the foundations of government or order.

TEAR, v. i. To rave; to rage; to rant; to move and act with turbulent violence; as a mad bull.

TEAR, n. A rent; a fissure. [Lit. us.]

TEARER, n. One who tears or rends any thing.—2. One that rages or raves with violence.

TEAR FALLING, a. [tear and fall.] Shedding tears; tender; as, tear-falling pity.

TEAR-FILLED, a. Filled with tears.

TEARFUL, a. [tear and full.] Abounding with tears; weeping; shedding tears; as, tearful eyes.

TEARING, ppr. [from tear, to rend.] Rending; pulling apart; lacerating; violent; raging.

TEARLESS, a. Shedding no tears; without tears; unfeeling.

TEAR-STAINED, a. Having traces of the passage of tears; as, tear-stained cheeks.

TEASE, v. t. (s as z.) [Sax. tæsan, to pull or tear.] 1. To comb or card, as wool or flax.—2. To scratch, as cloth in dressing, for the purpose of raising a nap.—3. To vex with importunity or impertinence; to harass, annoy, disturb, or irritate by petty requests, or by jests and raillery. Parents are often teased by their children into unreasonable compliances.

My friends tease me about him, because he has no estate. Spectator.

TEASED, pp. Carded.—2. Vexed; irritated; annoyed.

TEASEL, TEAZEL, TEAZLE, n. (tee'zl.) [Sax. tæsl.] 1. The English name of several plants of the genus Dipsacus, belonging to the nat. order Dipsaceæ. Common teasel or fuller's thistle, (D. fullonum), is a plant which grows wild in hedges, but it is cultivated in those districts of England where Common Teasel (Dipsacus fullonum).

a, Hooked scale of the Receptacle; b, Corolla slit open.

cloth is manufactured, for the sake of the awns of the head, which are employed to raise the nap of woollen cloths. For this purpose the heads are fixed round the circumference of a large broad wheel or drum, so as to form a kind of brush. The wheel is made to turn round, while the cloth is held against the brush thus formed, and the fine hooked awn of the teasel readily insinuates itself into the woollen web, and draws out with it some of the fine fibres of the wool. These are afterwards shorn smooth, and leave the cloth with the fine velvet-like nap which is its peculiar appearance. Teasels, before being used, are sorted into kings, middlings, and scrubs, according to their size. Every piece of fine broad cloth requires from 1500 to 2000 teasels to bring out the proper nap, after which they are useless.

TEASEL, TEAZLE, or TEAZEL, v. t. To cut and gather teasels.

TEASELER, TEAZLER, n. One who uses the teasel for raising a nap on cloth.

TEASELING, TEAZLING, ppr. Gathering teasels: as a noun, the cutting and gathering of teasels.

TEASER, n. One that teases or vexes.

TEASING, ppr. Combing; carding; scratching for the purpose of raising a nap; vexing with importunity.

TEAT, n. [Sax. tit, titt; G. zitze; D. tet; W. têth; Corn. titi; Ir. did; Gaelic, did; Fr. teton, breast, It. tetta; Gr. τιτθος. It coincides with tooth, teeth, in elements, and radical sense, which is a shoot.] The projecting part of the female breast; the dug of a beast; the pap of a woman; the nipple. It consists of an elastic erectile substance, embracing the lactiferous ducts, which terminate on its surface, and thus serves to convey milk to the young of animals.

TEATED, a. Having teats; having protuberances resembling the teats of animals.

TEATHE, n. The soil or fertility left on lands by feeding cattle on them. [Scotch.]

TEATHE, v. t. To feed and enrich land by feeding cattle on it. [Scotch.]

TEATHING, n. In Scotland, the practice of carrying provender to the field to be consumed there by cattle during winter, for the purpose of enriching the soil by the dung of the cattle. This practice is considered to be very objectionable. [See TATH.]

TEAZE TENON, n. In arch., a tenon on the top of a tenon, with a double shoulder and tenon from each, for supporting two level pieces of timber at right angles to each other.

TEAZEL, or TEAZLE. See TEASEL.

TE'BETH, n. [Heb.] The tenth month of the Jewish ecclesiastical year, and fourth of the civil. It answers to our December.

TECH'ILY, adv. [from techy, so written for touchy.] Peevishly; fretfully; frowardly.

TECH'INESS, n. Peevishness; fretfulness.

TECH'NIC, TECH'NICAL, a. [L. technicus; Gr. τεχνικος, from τεχνη, art, artifice, from τευχω, to fabricate, make or prepare. This word and τεκτων have the same elements.] 1. Pertaining to art or the arts. A technical word is a word that belongs properly or exclusively to an art; as, the verb to smelt, belongs to metallurgy. So we say, technical phrases, technical language. Every artificer has his technical terms.—2. Belonging to a particular profession; as, the words of an indictment must be technical.

It is of the utmost importance clearly to understand the technical terms used by the eastern theologians. Prof. Lee.

TECH'NICALLY, adv. In a technical manner; according to the signification of terms of art or the professions.

TECH'NICALNESS, TECHNICAL'ITY, n. The quality or state of being technical or peculiar to the arts.

TECH'NICS, n. The doctrine of arts in general; such branches of learning as respect the arts.

TECHNOLOG'ICAL, a. [See TECHNOLOGY.] Pertaining to technology.—2. Pertaining to the arts; as, technological institutes.

TECHNOL'OGIST, n. One who discourses or treats of arts, or of the terms of arts.

TECHNOL'OGY, n. [Gr. τεχνη, art, and λογος, word or discourse.] 1. A description of arts; or a treatise on the arts.—2. An explanation of the terms of the arts.

TECH'Y, a. [so written for touchy.] Peevish; fretful; irritable. [More correctly touchy.]

TECO'MA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Bignoniaceæ. The species are erect trees or shrubs or climbing plants, Tecoma impetiginosa.

with unequally pinnate or digitate simple leaves, with terminal panicles of yellow or flesh-coloured flowers. They are natives of the Old and New World, in tropical and sub-tropical climates. A climbing species, T. radicans, a native of North and South Carolina, of Florida, and Virginia, is a favourite in this country as an ornamental plant. From the shape of its corolla, the plant has received the name of trumpet-flower. Some of the species of Tecoma are medicinal, as T. impetiginosa, which abounds in tannin, and whose bark is bitter, mucilaginous, and used in lotions, baths, &c., in cases of inflammations of the joints and debility.

TECTIBRANCHIA'TA, n. [L. tectus, concealed or covered, and Gr. βραγχια, gills.] The fourth order of Gastropods in the arrangement of Cuvier, comprehending those species in which the gills are attached along the right side, or on the back, in form of leaves more or less divided. The mantle covers them more or less, and contains nearly always in its thickness a small shell. They resemble the Pectinibranchiata in the form of the organs of respiration, and live like them in the sea, but they are all hermaphrodites. The order contains the following genera: pleurobranchus, pleurobranchæa, aplysia, dolabella, notarchus, akera, gasteropteron, gastroplax, umbrella.

TECTO'NA, n. The teak, a genus of plants; nat. order Verbenaceæ. T. grandis, the teak-tree, is a native of different parts of India, as well as of Burmah, and of the islands from Ceylon to the Moluccas. It grows to an immense size, and is remarkable for its very large leaves, which are from 12 to 24 inches long, and from 8 to 16 broad. Teak timber is found to be excellent for ship-building, and has been called the oak of the East. It works easily, and though porous, is strong and durable; is easily seasoned, and shrinks but little; and from containing a resinous oil, it resists the action of water, as well as insects of all kinds. Besides being employed in ship-building, teak timber is extensively used in the East, in the construction of houses and temples. The tree which yields the African teak is not known. It belongs to the nat. order Euphorbiaceæ.

TECTON'IC, a. [Gr. τεκτονικος, from τευχω, to fabricate.] Pertaining to building.

TECTO'RIUM OPUS, n. [Lat.] In ancient arch., the name given to a species of plastering used on ceilings and interior walls.

TECTRI'CES, n. [from L. tego, to cover.] In ornith., the same as coverts, —which see.

TED, v. t. [W. têd and têz, [teth,] a spread; tedu, to distend.] Among farmers, to spread; to turn new mowed grass or hay from the swath, and scatter it for drying.

TED'DED, pp. Spread from the swath; as, tedded grass.

TED'DER, n. [W. tid, a chain; Ir. tead, teidin; Gaelic, tead, teidin, teud, a chain, cord, or rope; Sw. tiuder; probably from extending. See TED.] 1. A rope or chain by which an animal is tied, that he may feed on the ground to the extent of the rope and no further. Hence the popular saying, a person has gone to the length of his tedder.—2. That by which one is restrained. [See TETHER.]

TED'DER, v. t. To tie with a tedder; to permit to feed to the length of a rope or chain.—2. To restrain to certain limits.

TED'DERED, pp. Tied with a tedder; restrained to certain limits.

TED'DING, ppr. Spreading from the swath, as hay.

TED'DING, n. In agriculture, the operation of scattering, spreading, turning, and, in short, of making hay.

TE DE'UM, n. The title of a celebrated hymn or song of thanksgiving, so called from the first words, "Te Deum laudamus," We praise thee, O God. It is sung on particular occasions, as on the news of victories, and on high festival days in catholic and also in some protestant churches. In the English church, Te Deum is sung in the morning service between the two lessons.

> Te Deum was sung at St. Paul's after the victory. Bacon.

TE'DIOUS, a. [Sp. and It. tedioso, from tedio, L. tædium; probably connected with W. ted, tedder, from the sense of drawing out.] 1. Wearisome; tiresome from continuance, prolixity, or slowness which causes prolixity. We say, a man is tedious in relating a story; a minister is tedious in his sermon. We say also, a discourse is tedious when it wearies by its length or dullness.—2. Slow; as, a tedious course.

TE'DIOUSLY, adv. In such a manner as to weary.

TE'DIOUSNESS, n. Wearisomeness by length of continuance or by prolixity; as, the tediousness of an oration or argument.—2. Prolixity; length.—3. Tiresomeness; quality of wearying; as, the tediousness of delay.—4. Slowness that wearies.

TE'DIUM, n. [L. tædium.] Irksomeness; wearisomeness.

TE'DIUM-STRICKEN, a. Struck with irksomeness.

TEE, n. In India, an umbrella in general; also, an umbrella of open iron-work, covering the Buddhist pagodas of Ava and Pegu.

TEEM, v. i. [Sax. tyman, to bring forth, to bear; team, offspring; also tyman, teaman, to call, to summon; D. teemen, to whine, to cant, that is, to throw.] 1. To bring forth, as young.

> If she must teem,
> Create her child of spleen. Shak.

2. To be pregnant; to conceive; to engender young.

> Teeming buds and cheerful greens appear. Dryden.

3. To be full; to be charged; as a breeding animal; to be prolific. Every head teems with politics.—4. To bring forth; to produce, particularly in abundance. The earth teems with fruits; the sea teems with fishes.

TEEM, v. t. To produce; to bring forth.

> What's the newest grief?
> Each minute teems a new one. Shak.

[This transitive sense is not common.] —2.† To pour.

TEEMER, n. One that brings forth young.

TEEMFUL, a. Pregnant; prolific.—2. Brimful.

TEEMING, ppr. Producing young; fruitful; prolific; replete with.

TEEMLESS, a. Not fruitful or prolific; barren; as, the teemless earth.

TEEN,† n. [infra.] Grief; sorrow.

TEEN,† v. t. [Sax. teonan, tynan, to irritate.] To excite; to provoke.

TEENS, n. [from teen, ten.] The years of one's age reckoned by the termination teen. These years begin with thirteen, and end with nineteen. Miss is in her teens.

TEESDA'LIA, n. A genus of cruciferous plants, so named after Mr. Teesdale, an English botanist. Class Tetradynamia, order Siliculosa, Linn. The species, which are not important, are small annual smooth herbs, with stalked expanded vertical leaves, and flowers usually small and white. T. nudicaulis is a British species, found in sandy and gravelly places.

TEETH, plur. of Tooth,—which see.—In the teeth, directly; in direct opposition; in front.

> Nor strive with all the tempest in my teeth. Pope.

Teeth, or cogs of a wheel, in mech., are projecting pieces which may be either formed on, or inserted into, the rim of a wheel which is intended to transmit motion from one axis to another, by the intervention of a similar wheel. The teeth being disposed at equal distances on the rims of both, when one wheel is turned its teeth enter successively the spaces between those of the other, thereby imparting motion to it. Toothed wheels are most frequently employed in machinery to transmit motion from one axis to another, and to regulate the relative velocities of two shafts; the larger one being termed the wheel, and the smaller the pinion. The velocities of revolution of every wheel and pinion which work in one another, have the same proportion as their number of teeth taken in a reverse order; so that by this means the relative velocities of wheels and pinions may be accurately determined according to any proposed rate, and consequently the relative velocities of the shafts which they turn. The teeth of wheels require to be formed with the utmost accuracy, according to certain mathematical curves, as that of the epicycloid, in order that the motion may be transmitted with the requisite smoothness and uniformity. [See WHEEL.]

TEETH, v. i. [from the noun.] To breed teeth.

TEETHING, ppr. Breeding teeth; undergoing dentition.

TEETHING, n. The operation or process of the first growth of teeth, or the process by which they make their way through the gums, called dentition.

TEE'-TOTAL, a. Pertaining to tee-totallers, or to abstinence societies; as, a tee-total meeting; a tee-total pledge, TEE-TO'TALISM, n. The principles or practice of tee-totallers.

TEE-TO'TALLERS, n. The name assumed by those who form themselves into societies, pledging themselves to abstain not only from ardent spirits, but from wines, and all fermented liquors. The professed object of such societies is to repress drunkenness, and to introduce a habit of total abstinence from all intoxicating liquors among all classes. [See TEMPERANCE.]

TEE-TO'TUM, n. A top-shaped toy for children, put in motion by twirling. It is usually made of ivory, and has letters cut upon the thickest part, which is polygonal, not round.

TEG, TEGG, n. A female fallow-deer; a doe in the second year.—2. A young sheep, older than a lamb.

TEG'MEN, n. plur. Tegmina, [L.] A covering. [See TEGUMENT.]

TEGMENTUM, plur. Tegmenta, n. [L.] In bot., the scaly coat which covers the leaf buds of deciduous trees.

TEG'ULAR, a. [L. tegula, a tile, from tego, to cover or make close.] Pertaining to a tile; resembling a tile; consisting of tiles.

TEG'ULARLY, adv. In the manner of tiles on a roof.

TEG'UMENT, TEG'MEN, n. [L. tegumentum, from tego, to cover.] A cover or covering. In anat., common teguments is the general name given to the cuticle, rete mucosum, skin, and adipose membrane, as being the covering of every part of the body except the nails.—2. In bot. [See TEGMENTUM]—3. In entom., a term applied to the coverings of the wings of the order Orthoptera, or straight-winged insects. [See INTEGUMENT.]

TEGUMENT'ARY, a. Pertaining to teguments, or consisting of teguments.

TEHEE', n. A laugh, so named from the sound.

TEHEE', interj. Expressing a laugh.

TEHEE', v. i. To laugh contemptuously or insolently; to titter. [A cant word.]

TEIL, TEIL-TREE, n. [L. tilia; Ir. teile.] The lime-tree, otherwise called the linden.

TEINDS, n. plur. [Suio-Goth. tiende, the tenth part.] In Scotch law, the name for tithes. After the reformation, the whole teinds of Scotland were transferred to the crown, or to private individuals, called titulars, to whom they had been granted by the crown, or to feuars, or renters from the church, or to the original founding patrons, or to colleges or pious institutions. By a succession of decrees and enactments these tithes were generally rendered redeemable at a fixed valuation, but the clergy have now no right to the teinds beyond a suitable provision, called a stipend; so that teinds may now be described as that portion of the estates of the laity which is liable to be assessed for the stipend of the clergy. As a fund for the stipends of clergymen, teinds are under the administration of the court of session.—Court of teinds, a court in Scotland, otherwise called Commissioners of teinds. The powers conferred on this court are exercised by the judges of the court of session, as a parliamentary commission; but the court is distinct from the court of session, having a special jurisdiction, and a separate establishment of clerks and officers. Its jurisdiction extends to all matters respecting valuations and sales of teinds, augmentations of stipends, prorogations of tacks, and of teinds, and (with consent of three-fourths of the heritors of the respective parishes) the disjunction or annexation of parishes, and the building of new churches, &c. An appeal lies from this court to the house of lords.

TEIN'OSCOPE, n. [Gr. τεινω, to extend, and σκοπεω, to see.] The name given by Sir David Brewster to an optical instrument, formed by combining prisms of the same kind of glass in such a manner that the chromatic aberration of the light is corrected. Dr. Brewster has proposed the construction of the object-glasses of telescopes on this principle.

TEINT, n. [Fr. teint, from teindre, L. tingo, to dye.] Colour; tinge. [See TINT.]

TELAMO'NES, n [Gr. from ταλαω, to support.] In arch., figures of men employed as columns or pilasters to support an entablature, in the same manner as caryatides. They were called Atlantes by the Greeks. [See ATLANTES.]

TEL'ARY, a. [L. tela, a web.] 1. Pertaining to a web.—2. Spinning webs; as, a telary spider. [Little used.]

TEL'EGRAPH, n. [Gr. τηλε, at a distance, and γραφω, to write.] A machine for communicating intelligence from a distance by various signals or movements previously agreed on; which signals represent letters, words, or ideas which can be transmitted from one station to another, as far as the signals can be seen. The name semaphore is applied to some of the machines used for effecting telegraphic communication [see SEMAPHORE], and this term, in an extended signification, may be considered to embrace every means of conveying intelligence by gestures and visible signals, as flags, lanterns, rockets, blue lights, beacon fires, &c.; or by audible signals, as the firing of guns, the blowing of trumpets, the beating of drums, &c.; as well as by the machines called telegraphs or semaphores. For day signals the telegraph usually consists of a post of sufficient height, with two arms movable on the same pivot on the top of it, and a short arm, called the indicator, attached to one side of the upright post. The signals are made by varying the position of two arms, while the indicator shews the order or direction in which the signals are to be reckoned; that is, whether from right to left, or from left to right. To adapt the telegraph for night signals, a lantern is fixed to the pivot on which the arms move, and one is also attached to the extremity of each arm. In the management of a fleet at sea, telegraphic communication is indispensable. In the British navy, the signals are generally made by flags. The common or optical telegraph, which is always useless in hazy weather, is now superseded by the application of electricity or galvanism to the rapid communication of intelligence.—Electric telegraph, an apparatus for transmitting intelligence by means of voltaic electricity. Telegraphs of this kind are very various in the mechanical details of their construction; but they all depend on the electro-magnetic influence which a voltaic current is capable of exercising in its passage between the poles of the generating battery. The course through which the current proceeds from, and returns to, the battery, is its circuit, and may be indefinitely prolonged by a conducting medium. A first and necessary, and, therefore, a general condition of the application of this agency to telegraphic purposes, consists consequently in the establishment of a connection between the telegraphic stations by at least one wire. This wire must likewise communicate at each extremity with an apparatus adapted to render the dynamical effects of the current visible in a definite and intelligible manner, and must likewise have communication with a voltaic generator. The common arrangement is such, that by turning a small handle at either station, complete metallic connection is obtained between the apparatus at the two stations, through the wire passing between them. The batteries are connected by wires with plates of metal at some depth in the ground, the moisture of which serves instead of a second wire to return the current to the generating battery. This circuit can be completed and broken, and the direction of the current reversed in the operation of telegraphing, by simply turning the handles before-mentioned; and the electric force, acting simultaneously on the apparatus at the respective stations, produces in them, in obedience to the will of the operator, those movements to which the species of mechanism is adapted, and which, having all preconcerted significations, are readily interpreted by the observer at the station to which the signals are transmitted. These features are common to all electric telegraphs; and the signalling apparatus, though subject to indefinite variations of mechanical detail, is reducible to two modes of action, depending on the two fundamental laws of electro-magnetism. In the needle-telegraph, which is that most commonly employed in this country, the movements depend on the famous discovery of Ørsted (1819), that a magnet placed within the influence of a voltaic current is invested with an artificial polarity, and being freely poised, is deflected tangentially to the direction of the current, as exemplified in the galvanometer,—which see. The essential part of the apparatus, therefore, consists of a movable magnet placed within a coil of the circuit-wire: the axis of the magnet is horizontal, and, projecting through a dial-plate, carries a pointer to indicate the movements of the magnet concealed in the wire-coil behind the dial. So long as the circuit is open, the pointer remains in a vertical position, but the moment the circuit is closed, it is deflected to the right or left, according to the direction of the current, and as the circuit can be opened and closed, and the current reversed many times in a minute, a corresponding number of movements of the magnet, and, consequently, also of the pointer in front of the dial, can be effected, and all that is requisite to render these movements significant is an agreement as to the symbol which each position and combination of positions of the pointer shall indicate. And as the apparatus at each station is precisely a counterpart of that at the other, the movements in both are exactly alike, and the attendants see their respective pointers deflect exactly in the same way, in the same direction, the same number of times, and virtually at the same instant. But there being only two kinds of movements afforded by the single-needle-telegraph, that is, a movement to the right and another to the left, it is usually necessary to combine repetitions of these to denote a single letter of the alphabet, and, therefore, the rate of telegraphing is slow. To obviate this, the double-needle-telegraph is employed. In this there are two coils of wire, two magnets, having each a pointer or index-hand visible in front of the dial-face, and two wires to convey the electric current and its message between the stations. The circuits are closed and opened, and the currents reversed, by two small handles which communicate with the mechanism behind the dial. These handles can be worked simultaneously, alternately, and in any order of succession, and all these movements and combinations of movements being indicated by the pointers and made to represent signals, the rapidity of telegraphing is much increased. The principle of action is, however, in every respect the same as in the single instrument; the passage of the impulse from station to station is equally instantaneous in both, but there being fewer movements of the handles necessary to produce a given number of signals, the rate of telegraphing is correspondingly greater with the double instrument. Both instruments also agree in having a bell, by which the attention of the attendant is called to the instrument when a message is about to be transmitted to him from the distant station. The bell is made to ring by an arrangement in which the second electro-magnetic law is brought into action, viz., that a galvanic current, passing through a wire twisted round a piece of soft iron, renders the iron powerfully magnetic, a property which it instantly loses when the current is stopped. The applications of this principle are exceedingly numerous; in the present case, the arrangement is such that the current causes the movement of a small lever connected with the bell-hammer, which accordingly strikes, and thereby gives the requisite notice to the attendant. A separate wire extends between the two stations, to connect these apparatus, and to allow of their being worked independently of the signalling instruments. The second class of electric telegraphs all depend fundamentally on the principle here brought into action. When the iron is magnetic, it exerts an attractive force on another piece of iron; and this force ceasing with the interruption of the current—which may take place many times in a minute—this second piece of iron receives a movement to and fro, according as the attracting force is created and destroyed. This alternation of movement being generated, there are abundant means of transforming it so as to indicate symbols; and, in some cases, it is successfully applied to record its own indications in a permanent form, at a minimum rate of 100 letters a minute. Even very promising attempts have been made to transmit fac-similes of printed and written documents and drawings by adaptation of this principle. Time is also telegraphed by analogous mechanism; and any number of clocks, at any distances apart, in the same voltaic circuit, may be worked synchronously with a standard clock. Telegraphs on the electro-magnetic principle may be indefinitely extended over a country, and may all be so connected one with another, that intelligence can be transmitted, through the same apparatus, from any number of stations with which it may be put in communication. The expense of their establishment consists chiefly in the connecting wires, which must necessarily be insulated from the ground, and protected against atmospheric influence. Electric telegraphs have of late years been brought into extensive use in this country, in the United States of America, and on the continent of Europe.

TEL′EGRAPH, v. t. To transmit intelligence by means of an electric telegraph; as, to telegraph the queen's speech.

TELEGRAPH′IC, a. Pertaining to the telegraph; made by a telegraph; as, telegraphic movements or signals; telegraphic art.—2. Communicated by a telegraph; as, telegraphic intelligence.

TELEGRAPH′ICALLY, adv. By the telegraph.

TELEG′RAPHY, n. The art or practice of communicating intelligence by a telegraph.

TELEOLOG′ICAL, a. Pertaining to teleology.

TELEOL′OGY, n. [Gr. τελος, end, and λογος, discourse.] The science of the final causes of things.

TELEOSAU′RUS, n. [Gr. τελειος, perfect, complete, and σαυρα, a lizard.] A genus of fossil Saurians, with long and narrow snouts. They are confined to the oolitic division of the secondary rocks.

TELEPHON′IC, a. [Gr. τηλε, at a distance, and φωνη, sound.] Far-sounding; that propels sound to a great distance.

TEL′ESCOPE, n. [Fr. from Gr. τελος, end, or τηλε, at a distance, probably the latter, and σκοπεω, to see; It. and Sp. telescopio.] An optical instrument by which distant objects are brought within the range of distinct vision. The terrestial telescope enables the mariner to survey the ocean to the limits of the horizon, and discovers to the traveller inaccessible objects and distant scenery lying around and beyond his line of route. The celestial telescope unfolds the wonders of the universe, and the science of astronomy has advanced with the gradual improvement of this instrument. The modus operandi, or law of action, by which the telescope assists human vision, is two-fold, and that under all the varieties of its construction. A distant object, viewed by the unaided eye, is placed in the circumference of a large circle, having the eye for its centre; and, consequently, the angle under which it is seen is measured by the minute portion of the circumference which it occupies. Now, when the distance is great, it is found that this angle is too small to convey to the retina any sensible impression—all the light proceeding from the object is too weak to affect the optic nerve. This limit to distinct vision results from the small aperture, or pupil, of the eye. The telescope substitutes its large object lens, or reflector, for the human eye, and consequently receives a quantity of light proportioned to its area or surface; hence, a distant point, inappreciable by the eye alone, is rendered visible by the aid of the telescope. The rays of light, after transmission or reflection, converge to a point, as they at first proceeded from a point; and thus an image of the object is formed, which, when viewed by the eye-piece, or lens, is more or less magnified. The telescope therefore assists the eye in these two ways: it gathers up additional light, and it magnifies the object—that is to say, its image. The refracting telescope is constructed of lenses alone, which, by successive refractions, produce the desired effect. This instrument was formerly very cumbersome and inconvenient, inasmuch as its length had to be increased considerably with every accession of power; and though the substitution of achromatic for ordinary lenses has rendered it more portable, its construction even at the present day does not enable it to compete with the reflecting telescope as an astronomical investigator. The reflecting telescope is composed of specula or concave reflectors, aided by a refracting eye-piece. To this instrument we owe the most wondrous discoveries in astronomical science. The names of Newton, Gregory, and Herschel are connected with its history; and in our own day, Lord Rosse has extended its powers as far, probably, as they can be carried with utility. The following diagrams exhibit the principles of construction and action in both sorts of telescopes.

In fig. 1. A and B are two lenses of different focal lengths. Rays of light from a distant object falling upon the object-glass, A, are converged to a focus at C. The eye-glass, B, placed at its focal distance from the point of convergence, gathers up the diverging rays and carries them parallel to the eye. The magnifying power of the instrument is as AC : CB, or as the focal length of one lens to that of the other. In this construction the object is inverted by the intersection of the rays, and hence it is unsuitable for terrestrial purposes. To render the image erect, a more complicated eye-piece, consisting of two additional lenses, is necessary. Fig. 2. shows the structure of the reflecting telescope as constructed by Dr. Gregory. AB is a large speculum perforated in the centre; upon this fall the rays a,b, and c,d, which are reflected to convergence at e. A smaller speculum, C, takes up the diverging rays, and reflects them, slightly converging, through the aperture o, where they are received by a lens, and, after transmission, they intersect at x, and proceed to the eye-glass, whence they emerge parallel. The magnifying power of this instrument is great for its length, being as $\frac{o\,e}{e\,C} \times \frac{x\,C}{x\,o}$. The Herschelian telescope, invented by Sir William Herschel, is the one now generally used for astronomical purposes, as being the best and most powerful. In this construction there is no second speculum, and no perforation in the centre of the larger one placed at the bottom of the tube. The latter is fixed in an inclined position, so that the image formed by reflection falls near the lower side of the tube at its open end or mouth, where it is viewed directly by an eye-piece without greatly interfering with the light. This arrangement, in the case of large reflectors, is imposed by their great weight and difficult management; were it otherwise the ordinary construction would be preferred. The inclination of the speculum is a disadvantage.

TEL'ESCOPE-SHELL, n. In conchol., a species of Turbo with plane, striated, and numerous spires.

TELESCOP'IC, } a. Pertaining to TELESCOP'ICAL, } a telescope; performed by a telescope; as, a telescopic view.—2. Seen or discoverable only by a telescope; as, telescopic stars.

TELESCOP'ICALLY, adv. By the telescope.

TELESCO'PIUM, n. The telescope, a constellation in the southern hemisphere, situated south of the Centaur and Sagittarius. It contains nine stars, all, except one, of less than the fourth magnitude.— Telescopium Herscheli, Herschel's telescope, a new asterism inserted in honour of Sir William Herschel the astronomer. It is surrounded by Lynx, the Twins, and Auriga; seventeen stars have been assigned to it.

TELE'SIA, n. Sapphire.

TEL'ESM, n [Ar.] A kind of amulet or magical charm.

TELESMAT'IC, } a. Pertaining to TELESMAT'ICAL, } telesms; magical.

TELES'TICH, n. [Gr. τέλος, end, and στίχος, a verse.] A poem in which the final letters of the lines make a name.

TEL'IC, a. [Gr. τέλος, end.] Denoting the final end or purpose.

TELL, v. t. pret. and pp. Told. [Sax. tellan; G. zahlen; D. tellen, to count, number, or tell; Dan. tæler, to count; taler, to talk, speak, reason; Sw. tala, to speak, to talk; tal, talk, discourse, speech, number; Dan. tale; Ice. tala, id. The primary sense is to throw or drive, L. telum, Ar. dalla. So L. appello and peal, L. pello, Gr. βαλλω.]
1. To utter; to express in words; to communicate to others.

> I will not eat till I have told my errand; Gen. xxiv.

2. To relate; to narrate; to rehearse particulars; as, to tell a story; Gen. xxxvii.

> And not a man appears to tell their fate. Pope.

3. To teach; to inform; to make known; to show by words. Tell us the way.

> Why didst thou not tell me that she was thy wife? Gen. xii.

4. To discover; to disclose; to betray.

> They will tell it to the inhabitants of this land; Num. xiv.

5. To count; to number.

> Look now toward heaven, and tell the stars; Gen. xv.

6. To relate in confession; to confess or acknowledge.

> Tell me now what thou hast done; Josh. vii.

7. To publish.

> Tell it not in Gath; 2 Sam. i.

8. To unfold; to interpret; to explain; Ezek. xxiv.—9. To make excuses.

> Tush, never tell me. Shak.

10. To make known.

> Our feelings tell us how long they ought to have submitted. Junius.

11. To discover; to find; to discern. The colours are so blended that I cannot tell where one ends and the other begins.—To tell off, to count; to enumerate; to divide. Tell, though equivalent in some respects to speak and say, has not always the same application. We say, to tell this, that, or what, to tell a story, to tell a word, to tell truth or falsehood, to tell a number, to tell the reasons, to tell something or nothing; but we never say, to tell a speech, discourse, or oration, or to tell an argument or a lesson. It is much used in commands. Tell me the whole story; tell me all you know, or all that was said. Tell has frequently the sense of narrate; which speak and say have not.

TELL, v. i. To give an account; to make report.

> That I may publish with the voice of thanksgiving, and tell of all thy wondrous works; Ps. xxvi.

2. To take effect; as, every shot tells. —3. To produce some effect; as, every expression tells.—To tell of, or, To tell on, to inform. You must not disobey; I will tell of you if you do. This is a common popular use of the word. To tell on, is quite vulgar as well as improper.

TELL'ER, n. One that tells, relates, or communicates the knowledge of something.—2. One who numbers; as, one who numbers, tells, or records votes. The tellers in the house of commons are parties appointed, when a division takes place, to note the votings, and report which side has the majority, and how great that majority is.—3. An officer of the exchequer, in ancient records called tallier. [See TALLY.] The tellers of the exchequer were four in number; their duties were to receive money payable into the exchequer on behalf of the king, to give the clerk of the pells a bill of receipt for the money, to pay all money according to the warrant of the auditor of receipts, and to make weekly and yearly books of receipts and payments for the lord treasurer. The office was abolished by 4 and 5 Will. IV., c. 15, and the duties of the four tellers are now performed by a comptroller-general of the receipt and issue of the exchequer. —4. A functionary in a banking establishment, whose business is to receive and pay money for bills, orders, &c.

TEL'LERSHIP, n. The office or employment of a teller.

TELLI'NA, n. A genus of marine and fresh-water bivalves, characterized by the hinge of the shell having one tooth on the left, and two teeth on the right valve, often bifid. In the right valve there is a plate which does not enter a cavity in the opposite valve. About 100 species are known, upwards of 20 of which inhabit the seas of our coasts. The tellina is remarkable for the quickness and agility with which, when on the surface of the sands, it can spring to considerable distances. Many species are found fossil.

Tellina radiata.

TELL'ING, ppr. Uttering; relating; disclosing; counting.

TEL'LINITE, n. [from tellina, a genus of testaceous animals.] Petrified or fossil shells of the genus Tellina.

TELL'-TALE, a. Telling tales; babbling.

TELL'-TALE, n. [tell and tale.] One who officiously communicates information of the private concerns of individuals; one who tells that which prudence should suppress, and which if told, often does mischief among neighbours. —2. A movable piece of ivory or lead on a chamber organ, that gives notice when the wind is exhausted.—3. In seamanship, a small piece of wood, traversing in a groove across the front of the poop deck, and which, by communicating with a small barrel on the axis of the steering wheel, indicates the situation of the helm.

TEL'LURAL, a. [L. tellus.] Pertaining to the earth.

TEL'LURATE, n. A compound of telluric acid and a base.

TEL'LURETTED, a. Telluretted hydrogen is the name formerly given to Hydrotelluric acid. It is a gaseous compound, obtained by the action of hydrochloric acid on an alloy of tellurium. It is a feeble acid, analogous in composition, smell, and other characters to sulphuretted hydrogen.

TELLU'RIC, a. [L. tellus, the earth.] Pertaining to the earth or proceeding from the earth; as, a disease of telluric origin.

TELLU'RIC AC'ID, n. An oxide of tellurium which is formed when tellurium is deflagrated with nitre. It is a soluble and crystallizable acid, composed of 1 atom of tellurium and 3 of oxygen.

TELLU'RION, n. [from L. tellus.] An instrument for showing in what manner the causes operate which produce the succession of day and night, and the changes of the seasons; a kind of orrery.

TEL'LURITE, n. A compound of tellurous acid and a base.

TELLU'RIUM, n. A metal discovered by Müller, in 1782, combined with gold and silver in the ores, and received from the Bannat of Temeswar. The ores are denominated native, graphic, yellow, and black. The native tellurium is of a colour between tin and silver, and sometimes inclines to a steel gray. The graphic tellurium is steel gray; but sometimes white, yellow, or lead gray. These ores are found massive or crystallized. Tellurium is very brittle, and has a specific gravity of 6·26. It is very fusible, and volatile at a red heat. It sometimes gives forth an odour of decayed horse-radish during combustion, which Berzelius ascribes to the presence of minute portions of selenium.

TEL'LUROUS AC'ID, n. An oxide of tellurium, analogous to selenious acid, and like it formed by the action of nitric acid on the metal. It is a white insoluble powder, forming with alkalies crystallizable salts.

TEM'ACHIS,† n. [Gr. τεμαχη, a piece.] A genus of fossils of the class of gypsums, softer than others, and of a bright glittering hue.

TEMERA'RIOUS, a. [Fr. temeraire; L. temerarius; from the root of time, tempest,—which see. The sense is rushing or advancing forward.] 1. Rash; headstrong; unreasonably adventurous; despising danger; as, temerarious folly.—2. Careless; heedless; done at random; as, the temerarious dash of an unguided pen. [This word is not much used.]

TEMERA'RIOUSLY, adv. Rashly; with excess of boldness.

TEMER'ITY, n. [L. temeritas; properly a rushing forward. See TIME.] 1. Rashness; unreasonable contempt of danger; as, the temerity of a commander in war.—2. Extreme boldness.

The figures are bold even to temerity. Cowley.

TEM'IN, n. A money of account in Algiers, equivalent to 2 carubes, or 29 aspers, about 17*d.* sterling.

TEM'PER, v. t. [L. tempero, to mix or moderate; It. temperare; Sp. templar, to temper, to soften, or moderate, to anneal, as glass, to tune an instrument, to trim sails to the wind; Fr. temperer, to temper, allay, or abate; W. tymperu, to temper, to mollify; tym, space; tymp, enlargement, birth, season. The latter unites this word with time. The sense of this word is probably from making seasonable, or timely; hence, to make suitable.] 1. To mix so that one part qualifies the other; to bring to a moderate state; as, to temper justice with mercy.—2. To compound; to form by mixture; to qualify; as, by an ingredient; or, in general, to mix, unite, or combine two or more things so as to reduce the excess of the qualities of either, and bring the whole to the desired consistence or state.

Thou shalt make it a perfume, a confection after the art of the apothecary, tempered together, pure and holy; Exod. xxx.

3. To unite in due proportion; to render symmetrical; to adjust, as parts to each other.

God hath tempered the body together; 1 Cor. xii.

4. To accommodate; to modify.

Thy sustenance serving to the appetite of the eater, tempered itself to every man's liking. Wisdom.

5. To soften; to mollify; to assuage; to soothe; to calm; to reduce any violence or excess.

Solon...laboured to temper the warlike courages of the Athenians with sweet delights of learning. Spenser.

Woman! nature made thee
To temper man; we had been brutes without you. Otway.

6. To form to a proper degree of hardness; as, to temper iron or steel. [See TEMPERING.]

The temper'd metals clash, and yield a silver sound. Dryden.

7.† To govern; a Latinism.—8. In music, to modify or amend a false or imperfect concord by transferring to it a part of the beauty of a perfect one, that is, by dividing the tones.

TEM'PER, n. Due mixture of different qualities; or the state of any compound substance which results from the mixture of various ingredients; as, the temper of mortar.—2. Constitution of body. [In this sense we more generally use temperament.]—3. Disposition of mind; the constitution of the mind, particularly with regard to the passions and affections; as, a calm temper; a hasty temper; a fretful temper. This is applicable to beasts as well as to man.

Remember with what mild
And gracious temper he both heard and judg'd. Milton.

4. Calmness of mind; moderation.

Restore yourselves to your tempers, fathers. B. Jonson.

To fall with dignity, with temper rise. Pope.

5. Heat of mind or passion; irritation. The boy showed a great deal of temper when I reproved him. So we say, a man of violent temper, when we speak of his irritability. [This use of the word is common, though a deviation from its original and genuine meaning.]—6. The state of a metal, particularly as to its hardness; as, the temper of iron or steel.—7. Middle course; mean or medium.—8. In sugar works, white lime or other substance stirred into a clarifier filled with cane-juice, to neutralize the superabundant acid.

TEM'PERAMENT, n. [Fr. from L. temperamentum.] 1. Constitution; state with respect to the predominance of any quality; as, the temperament of the body. In physiol., temperament has been defined as a peculiar organization of the system common to several individuals, which to a certain extent influences the thoughts and actions. There is besides in each individual a further peculiarity of organization, which serves to distinguish his temperament from that of any other person, to whom, however, he may in other respects bear a great resemblance. This individual temperament is called an idiosyncrasy. The ancient physicians enumerated four temperaments, viz., the sanguine, the choleric, the phlegmatic, and the melancholic. Those terms are still in use among medical writers, and modern physiologists add a fifth, viz., the nervous temperament.—2. Medium; due mixture of different qualities.

The common law...has reduced the kingdom to its just state and temperament. Hale.

3. In music, temperament is the accommodation or adjustment of the imperfect concords in musical instruments, by transferring a part of their defects to the more perfect ones, to remedy in part the false intervals of instruments of fixed sounds, as the organ, harpsichord, piano-forte, &c. To those acquainted with the theory of the musical scale, it is well known that all the concords cannot be made perfect. The interval of a tone is not always the same; for instance, that lying between the fourth and fifth of the scale contains nine small parts called commas; whereas that between the fifth and the sixth of the major scale, contains only eight commas. Again, the diatonic semitone contains five commas, and the chromatic semitone three or four, according to the magnitude of the tone. These inequalities in the intervals of the scale are a source of imperfection in musical instruments whose sounds are fixed, and it is impossible altogether to remedy the imperfection. If, for example, a piano-forte be tuned by a series of perfect octaves from the lowest C to the highest, and if another piano-forte be tuned from the same pitch by a series of perfect 5ths, ending with B♯, it will be found that this last note is not in tune with the upper C of the first piano-forte, being higher by a comma; but on the piano-forte B♯ being played on the same key as C, should be identically the same sound; therefore this discrepance must be removed by a proper adjustment. Again, on the piano-forte three successive major thirds form an octave. Now, should these three successive thirds be tuned perfect to each other, it will be found that they fall short of the perfect octave by a comma, so that one, two, or all of the thirds must be altered and tuned sharper than perfect thirds, to compensate for the deficiency. Four successive minor thirds will, on the other hand, be found to exceed the octave by a comma, which defect must be removed by flattening. These slight alterations, which are made in order that any one of the twelve semitones which compose an octave may be fit to be used as a key note, without any shock to the ear, constitute what is termed the temperament of the scale; and the altered consonances are said to be tempered. There are in use two modes of temperament, the equal and the unequal. Equal temperament is that mode in which the necessary defects of the scale are distributed equally throughout it; and unequal temperament, that in which the defects are unequally distributed, so as to make some keys feel them less than others. The most common practice among tuners of the present day is to aim at equal temperament, but this is very difficult to accomplish; whereas the unequal temperament is easily obtained in tuning, and has the additional advantage of giving to every one of the twelve major and minor scales a particular character.

The harshness of a given concord increases with the temperament. Prof. Fisher.

TEMPERAMENT'AL, a. Constitutional. [Not much used.]

TEM'PERANCE, n. [Fr. from L. temperantia, from tempero.] 1. Moderation; particularly, habitual moderation in regard to the indulgence of the natural appetites and passions; restrained or moderate indulgence; as, temperance in eating and drinking; temperance in the indulgence of joy or mirth. Temperance in eating and drinking is opposed to gluttony and drunkenness, and in other indulgences, to excess.—2. Patience; calmness; sedateness; moderation of passion.

He calm'd his wrath with goodly temperance. [Unusual.] Spenser.

Temperance societies are associations formed for the purpose of repressing drunkenness, and banishing it from society. The basis on which these associations have generally been formed, has been that of an engagement on the part of each member to abstain from the use of ardent spirits, except for medicinal purposes, and to forbear to provide them for the entertainment of friends or the supply of dependents. Many such associations exist in this country, and also in the United States of America, and although considerable difference of opinion exists as to the soundness of the principle on which they are based, it must nevertheless be allowed by all that they have been productive of much good. They are, however, more appropriately designated abstinence or abstinent societies, than temperance societies. [See ABSTINENCE.]

TEM'PERANCE, a. Belonging to temperance, or moderation in the use of strong drinks, almost or quite to the extent of abstinence; as, the temperance movement.

TEM'PERATE, a. [L. temperatus.] 1. Moderate; not excessive; as, temperate heat; a temperate climate; temperate air.—2. Moderate in the indulgence of the appetites and passions; as, temperate in eating and drinking; temperate in pleasures; temperate in speech.

Be sober and temperate, and you will be healthy. Franklin.

3. Cool; calm; not marked with passion; not violent; as, a temperate discourse or address; temperate language.—4. Proceeding from temperance; as, temperate sleep.—5. Free from ardent passion.

She is not hot, but temperate as the morn. Shak.

Temperate zones, the spaces on the earth between the tropics and the polar circles, where the heat is less than in the tropics, and the cold less than in the polar circles. The North temperate zone, is the space included between the tropic of Cancer and the arctic circle; and the South temperate zone, that between the tropic of Capricorn and the antartic circle. [See ZONE.]

TEM'PERATELY, adv. Moderately; without excess or extravagance.—2. Calmly; without violence of passion; as, to reprove one temperately.—3. With moderate force.

Winds that temperately blow. Addison.

TEM'PERATENESS, n. Moderation; freedom from excess; as, the temperateness of the weather or of a climate.—2. Calmness; coolness of mind.

TEM'PERATIVE, a. Having the power or quality of tempering.

TEM'PERATURE, n. [Fr. from L. temperatura.] 1. In physics, the state of a body with regard to heat or cold, as indicated by the thermometer, or generally by its effects on other bodies; or the degree of free caloric which a body possesses, when compared with other bodies. When a body applied to another, expands that body, we say it is of a higher temperature; that is, it possesses more free caloric. When it contracts another body, it is said to be of a lower temperature. Thus we speak of the temperature of air, of water, of a climate, &c.; two countries of the same temperature.—Mean temperature of a place, a mean of all the temperatures observed at that place at regular intervals during a certain space of time. The mean annual temperature of any place is obtained by taking a mean of all the temperatures indicated by the thermometer each day throughout the year. Springs in which the water does not considerably change its heat from one season of the year to another, afford an expeditious and accurate way of ascertaining the mean temperature of a place. Every place on the earth's surface has a mean temperature, which remains always nearly the same, and which decreases from the equator to either pole, according to a certain law. The mean temperature at the equator is estimated at 81°. The temperature of a place depends not only on its latitude, but also on its elevation above the level of the sea, and various other local causes, such as the nature of the soil, the prevailing winds, the quantity of moisture, the electric state of the atmosphere, and the physical character of the adjacent countries and seas. But no cause has such an effect in lowering the temperature of a place as elevation above the level of the sea; and hence near the equator and tropics there are mountains which, owing to their great elevation, are covered with snow all the year round. [See SNOW-LINE.] The temperature of the sea is more uniform and moderate than that of the land. For ascertaining temperatures below 600° the thermometer is used, but for temperatures above 600°, instruments called pyrometers are employed.—2. Constitution; state; degree of any quality.

Memory depends upon the consistence and temperature of the brain. Watts.

3. Moderation; freedom from immoderate passions.

In that proud port, which her so goodly graceth,
Most goodly temperature you may descry.
[Not in use.] Spenser.

TEM'PERED, pp. Duly mixed or modified, as mortar; reduced to a proper state; softened; allayed; hardened, as steel.—2. Adjusted by musical temperament.—3. a. Disposed; as, a well tempered, good tempered, or bad tempered man.

TEM'PERING, ppr. Mixing and qualifying; qualifying by mixture; softening; mollifying; reducing to a state of moderation; hardening.

TEM'PERING, n. The process of giving iron or steel, especially the latter, the different degrees of hardness required for the various purposes to which it is applied. The excellence of all cutting steel instruments depends on the degree of temper given to them. Different degrees of temper are indicated by different colours which the steel assumes. Thus, steel heated to 450°, and suddenly cooled, assumes a pale straw colour, and is employed for making razors and surgical instruments. [See STEEL.]

TEM'PEST, n. [Fr. tempête; L. tempestas; Sp. tempestad; It. tempesta; from L. tempus, time, season. The primary sense of tempus, time, is a falling, or that which falls, comes, or happens, from some verb which signifies to fall or come suddenly, or rather to drive, to rush. Time is properly a coming, a season, that which presents itself, or is present. The sense of tempest is from the sense of rushing or driving. See TEMERITY and TEMERARIOUS.] 1. An extensive current of wind, rushing with great velocity and violence, and commonly attended with rain, hail, or snow; a storm of extreme violence. We usually apply the word to a steady wind of long continuance; but we say also of a tornado, it blew a tempest. The currents of wind are named, according to their respective degrees of force or rapidity, a breeze, a gale, a storm, a tempest; but gale is also used as synonymous with storm, and storm with tempest. Gust is usually applied to a sudden blast of short duration. A tempest may or may not be attended with rain, snow, or hail.

We, caught in a fiery tempest, shall be hurl'd
Each on his rock transfixed. Milton.

2. A violent tumult or commotion; as, a popular or political tempest; the tempest of war.—3. Perturbation; violent agitation; as, a tempest of the passions.

TEM'PEST, v. t. To disturb, as by a tempest. [Little used.]

TEM'PEST,† v. i. [Fr. tempester.] To storm.—2. To pour a tempest on.

TEM'PEST-BEATEN, a. [tempest and beat.] Beaten or shattered with storms.

TEMPEST'IVE,† a. Seasonable.

TEMPEST'IVELY, adv. Seasonably.

TEMPESTIV'ITY,† n. [L. tempestivus.] Seasonableness.

TEM'PEST-TOST, a. [tempest and tost.] Tossed or driven about by tempests.

TEMPEST'UOUS, a. [Sp. tempestuoso; It. tempestoso; Fr. tempêtueux.] 1. Very stormy; turbulent; rough with wind; as, tempestuous weather; a tempestuous night.—2. Blowing with violence; as, a tempestuous wind.

TEMPEST'UOUSLY, adv. With great violence of wind or great commotion; turbulently.

TEMPEST'UOUSNESS, n. Storminess; the state of being tempestuous or disturbed by violent winds; as, the tempestuousness of the winter or of weather.

TEM'PLAR, n. [from the Temple, a house near the Thames, which originally belonged to the knights Templars. The latter took their denomination from an apartment of the palace of Baldwin II. in Jerusalem, near the temple.] 1. Templars, knights of the Temple, a religious military order, first established at Jerusalem in favour of Templars.

1. Jean de Dreux, Church of St. Yved at Braine. | 2. Geoffrey de Magnaville, Temple Church, London.

pilgrims travelling to the Holy Land. The order originated with some persons who, in 1118, devoted themselves to the service of God, promising to live in perpetual chastity, obedience, and poverty, after the manner of canons. In 1228, this order was confirmed in the council of Troyes, and subjected to a rule of discipline. It flourished, became immensely rich, and its members became so insolent and vicious, that the order was suppressed by the council of Vienne, in 1312.—2. A student of the law.

TEM'PLATE, n. In arch., a short piece of timber laid under the end of a beam or girder, resting on a wall, to distribute the weight over a large space.

TEM'PLE, n. [Fr.; L. templum; It. tempio; W. temyl, temple, that is, extended, a seat; temlu, to form a seat, expanse, or temple; Gaelic, teampul.] 1. A public edifice erected in honour of some deity. Among pagans, a building erected to some pretended deity, and in which the people assembled to worship. Originally, temples were open places, as the Stonehenge in England. In Rome, some of the temples were open, and called sacella; others were roofed, and called ædes. The most celebrated of the ancient pagan temples were that of Belus in Babylon, that of Vulcan at Memphis, that of Jupiter at Thebes, that of Diana at Ephesus, that of Apollo in Miletus, that of Jupiter Olympius in Athens, and that of Apollo at Delphi. The most celebrated and magnificent temple erected to the true God, was that built by Solomon in Jerusalem. The form most generally given to the ancient temples was that of a rectangle, but sometimes the construction was circular. Vitruvius divides temples into eight kinds, according to the arrangement of their columns, viz., temples in antis [see ANTÆ], prostyle, amphiprostyle, peripteral, dipteral, pseudo-dipteral, hypæthral, and monopteral. [See these terms.] In regard to intercolumniation, they were farther distinguished into pycnostyle, systyle, eustyle, diastyle, and aræostyle. [See these terms.] Of circular temples there are two species, the monopteral, without a cell, and the peripteral, with a cell.—In Scripture, the tabernacle is sometimes called by this name; 1 Sam. i.—iii.—2. A church; an edifice erected among Christians as a place of public worship.

> Can he whose life is a perpetual insult to the authority of God, enter with any pleasure a temple consecrated to devotion and sanctified by prayer? Buckminster.

3. A place in which the divine presence specially resides; the church as a collective body; Eph. ii.—4. The name of two semi-monastic establishments of the middle ages, one in London, the other in Paris, inhabited by the knights Templars. The Temple Church, London, is the only portion of either establishment now existing. On the site of both, modern edifices have been erected, those in London forming the two Inns of Court, called the Middle Temple and Inner Temple.

TEM'PLE, n. [L. tempus, tempora. The primary sense of the root of this word is to fall. See TIME.] 1. Literally, the fall of the head; the part where the head slopes from the top.—2. In anat., the temples are anterior and lateral parts of the head, where the skull is covered by the temporal muscles.

TEM'PLE, v. t. To build a temple for; to appropriate a temple to. [Lit. us.]

TEM'PLET, n. A mould used in masonry and brickwork, for cutting or setting out the work; and, generally among artizans, a mould or pattern for shaping any thing.

TEM'PO, n. [It.] In music, a word used to express time, or the degree of quickness with which a piece of music is to be executed. The degrees of time, generally speaking, are five, and are designated by the terms largo, adagio, andante, allegro, and presto; and the intermediate degrees are expressed by additions to these terms. A tempo, denotes that the former time is to be resumed, or a more distinct time observed.

O TEM'PORA, O MO'RES. [L.] Oh the times, oh the manners.

TEM'PORAL, a. [Fr. temporel; from L. temporalis, from tempus, time.] 1. Pertaining to this life or this world, or the body only; secular; as, temporal concerns; temporal affairs. In this sense, it is opposed to spiritual. Let not temporal affairs or employments divert the mind from spiritual concerns, which are far more important. In this sense also it is opposed to ecclesiastical; as, temporal power, that is, secular, civil, or political power; temporal courts, those which take cognizance of civil suits. Temporal jurisdiction is that which regards civil and political affairs.—2. Measured or limited by time, or by this life or this state of things; having limited existence; opposed to eternal.

> The things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal; 2 Cor. iv.

3. In gram., relating to a tense.—Temporal augment, the short initial vowel of a verb, lengthened, in certain tenses, into the corresponding long one.—4. [Fr. temporal.] Pertaining to the temple or temples of the head; as, the temporal bone; a temporal artery or vein; temporal muscle. The temporal bones are two bones situated one on each side of the head, of a very irregular figure. They are connected with the occipital, parietal, sphenoid, and cheek bones, and are articulated with the lower jaw. The temporal artery is a branch of the external carotid, which runs on the temple, and gives off the frontal artery. The temporal muscle of the lower jaw, situated in the temple, serves to draw the lower jaw upwards, as in the action of biting.

TEMPORAL'ITIES, TEM'PORALS, n. Secular possessions; revenues of an ecclesiastic proceeding from lands, tenements, or lay-fees, tithes, and the like. It is opposed to spiritualities. The temporalities, or temporals, of bishops, are the revenues, lands, tenements, and lay-fees, belonging to bishops, as they are barons and lords of parliament. The temporality of benefices, in Scots law, consists in such lands or other property (except tithes, manses, and glebes) as may have accrued to the church, by gifts to, or purchases by, its members as such. This temporality has been annexed to the crown.

TEMPORAL'ITY, n. A secular possession.

TEM'PORALLY, adv. With respect to time or this life only.

TEM'PORALNESS,† n. Worldliness.

TEM'PORALTY, n. The laity; secular people. [Little used.]—2. Secular possessions. [See TEMPORALITIES.]

TEMPORA'NEOUS, a. Temporary. [Little used.]

TEM'PORARILY, adv. For a time only; not perpetually.

TEM'PORARINESS, n. [from temporary.] The state of being temporary; opposed to perpetuity.

TEM'PORARY, a. [L. temporarius.] Lasting for a time only; existing or continuing for a limited time; as, the patient has obtained temporary relief. There is a temporary cessation of hostilities. There is a temporary supply of provisions. In times of great danger, Rome appointed a temporary dictator.

TEMPORIZA'TION, n. The act of temporizing.

TEM'PORIZE, v. i. [Fr. temporiser; from L. tempus, time.] 1. To comply with the time or occasion; to humour or yield to the current of opinion or to circumstances; a conduct that often indicates obsequiousness.

> They might their grievance inwardly complain,
> But outwardly they needs must temporize. Daniel.

2. To delay; to procrastinate.

> Well, you will temporize with the hours. [Little used.] Shak.

3.† To comply.

TEM'PORIZER, n. One who yields to the time, or complies with the prevailing opinions, fashions, or occasions; a trimmer.

TEM'PORIZING, ppr. Complying with the time, or with the prevailing humours and opinions of men; time-serving.

TEM'PORIZING, n. A yielding to the time; a complying with the prevailing opinions, fashions, or occasions.

TEM'PORIZINGLY, adv. In a temporizing manner.

TEMPT, v. t. [Arm. tempti; L. tento; Fr. tenter. It is from the root of L. teneo, Gr. τείνω, and the primary sense is to strain, urge, press.] 1. To incite or solicit to an evil act; to entice to something wrong by presenting arguments that are plausible or convincing, or by the offer of some pleasure or apparent advantage as the inducement.

> My lady Gray tempts him to this harsh extremity. Shak.

> Every man is tempted, when he is drawn away by his own lust and enticed; James i.

2. To provoke; to incite.

> Tempt not the brave and needy to despair. Dryden.

3. To solicit; to draw; without the notion of evil.

> Still his strength conceal'd,
> Which tempted our attempt, and wrought our fall. Milton.

4. To try; to venture on; to attempt.

> E'er leave be giv'n to tempt the nether sky. Dryden.

5. In Scripture, to try; to prove; to put to trial for proof.

> God did tempt Abraham; Gen. xxii.
> Ye shall not tempt the Lord your God; Deut. vi.

TEMPT'ABLE, a. Liable to be tempted.

TEMPTABIL'ITY, n. Quality of being temptable.

TEMPTA'TION, n. The act of tempting; enticement to evil by arguments, by flattery, or by the offer of some real or apparent good.

> When the devil had ended all the temptation, he departed from him for a season; Luke iv.

2. Solicitation of the passions; enticements to evil proceeding from the prospect of pleasure or advantage.—3. The state of being tempted or enticed to evil. When by human weakness you are led into temptation, resort to prayer for relief.—4. Trial.

> Lead us not into temptation. Lord's Prayer.

5. That which is presented to the mind as an inducement to evil.

> Dare to be great without a guilty crown,
> View it, and lay the bright temptation down. Dryden.

6. In colloq. lan., an allurement to any thing indifferent, or even good.

TEMPTA'TIONLESS, a. Having no temptation or motive. [Little used.]

TEMPT'ED, pp. Enticed to evil; provoked; tried.

TEMPT'ER, n. One that solicits or entices to evil.

Those who are bent to do wickedly, will never want tempters to urge them on. Tillotson.

2. The great adversary of man; the devil; Matth. iv.

TEMPT'ING, ppr. Enticing to evil; trying.—2. a. Adapted to entice or allure; attractive; as, tempting pleasures.

TEMPT'INGLY, adv. In a manner to entice to evil; so as to allure.

TEMPT'INGNESS, n. The state of being tempting.

TEMPT'RESS, n. A female who entices.

TEMSE'-BREAD, TEM'SED-BREAD, n. [Fr. tamiser; It. tamisare, tamigiare, to sift; Fr. tamis; It. tamiso, tamigio, a sieve.] Bread made of flour better sifted than common flour. Temse, or temsed, signifies searced, strained, sifted. As a noun, temse signifies a sieve.

TEM'ULENCE, TEM'ULENCY, † n. [L. temulentia.] Intoxication; inebriation; drunkenness.

TEM'ULENT,† a. [L. temulentus.] Intoxicated.

TEM'ULENTIVE,† a. Drunken; in a state of inebriation.

TEN, a. [Sax. tyn; D. tien; G. zehn. We suppose this word to be contracted from the Gothic tiguns, ten, from tig, ten. If so, this is the Greek δεκα: L. decem; W. deg; Gaelic, deich; Fr. dix; It. dieci; Sp. diez.] 1. Twice five; nine and one.

With twice ten sail I cross'd the Phrygian sea. Dryden.

2. It is a kind of proverbial number.

There's a proud modesty in merit,
Averse to begging, and resolv'd to pay
Ten times the gift it asks. Dryden.

The meaning in this use is, a great deal more, indefinitely.

TEN'ABLE, a. [Fr., from L. teneo, to hold. See TENANT.] That may be held, maintained, or defended against an assailant, or against attempts to take it; as, a tenable fortress. The works were not deemed tenable. The ground taken in the argument is not tenable.

TEN'ABLENESS, TENABIL'ITY, n. The state of being tenable.

TENA'CETUM. See TANACETUM.

TENA'CIOUS, a. [L. tenax, from teneo, to hold; Fr. tenace.] 1. Holding fast, or inclined to hold fast; inclined to retain what is in possession; as, men tenacious of their just rights. Men are usually tenacious of their opinions, as well as of their property.—2. Retentive; apt to retain long what is committed to it; as, a tenacious memory.—3. Adhesive; apt to adhere to another substance; as oily, glutinous, or viscous matter. Few substances are so tenacious as tar.—4. Niggardly; close fisted.—5. In physics, tough; having great cohesive force among the particles, so that they resist any effort to pull or force them asunder. Iron and steel are the most tenacious of all known substances.

TENA'CIOUSLY, adv. With a disposition to hold fast what is possessed.—2. Adhesively; with cohesive force.—3. Obstinately; with firm adherence.

TENA'CIOUSNESS, n. The quality of holding fast; unwillingness to quit, resign, or let go; as, a man's tenaciousness of his rights or opinions.—2. Adhesiveness; stickiness; as, the tenaciousness of clay or glue.—3. Retentiveness; as, the tenaciousness of memory.—4. In physics, the same as tenacity, but less used. [See TENACITY.]

TENAC'ITY, n. [Fr. tenacité; L. tenacitas, from teneo, to hold.] 1. Adhesiveness; that quality of bodies which makes them stick or adhere to others; glutinousness; stickiness; as, the tenacity of oils, of glue, of tar, of starch, and the like.—2. In physics, that property of material bodies by which their parts resist an effort to force or pull them asunder; cohesive force; in common language, toughness. It is opposed to brittleness, or fragility. Tenacity results from the attraction of cohesion which exists between the particles of bodies, and the stronger this attraction is in any body, the greater is the tenacity of the body. Tenacity is consequently different in different materials, and in the same material it varies with the state of the body in regard to temperature and other circumstances. The tenacity of different kinds of wood and metal is ascertained by taking rods of them, fixing these immovably at one end, and finding what weight suspended at the other is sufficient to overcome the cohesive force, and break or pull asunder the rods; the weights being considered as the measures of tenacity in the different kinds of materials. Of the different kinds of wood the most tenacious is fir; but of all substances, iron and steel are the most tenacious, and steel much more so than iron. The tenacity of iron is a subject of the greatest importance, as the stability and strength of suspension bridges depend upon it.

TENAC'ULUM, n. [from L. teneo, to hold; to seize.] A surgical instrument for seizing and drawing out the mouths of bleeding arteries in operations, so that they may be secured by ligaments. For this purpose it has a hooked extremity with a fine sharp point.

TEN'ACY,† n. Tenaciousness.

TENAIL, TENAILLE', n. [Fr. tenaille, from tenir; L. teneo, to hold.] In fort., an outwork or rampart raised in the main ditch, immediately in front of the curtain, between two bastions. In its simplest form, it consists of two faces forming with each other a re-entering angle; but generally it consists of three faces forming two re-entering angles, in which case it is called a double tenaille. Any work belonging either to permanent or field fortification, which, on the plan, consists of a succession of lines forming salient and re-entering angles alternately, is said to be à tenaille. [See RAVELIN.]

TENAIL'LON, n. In fort., tenaillons are works constructed on each side of the ravelins, like the lunettes, but differing in this, that one of the faces of the tenaillon is in the direction of the ravelin, whereas that of the lunette is perpendicular to it. Works of this kind, however, are seldom adopted.

TEN'ANCY, n. [Sp. tenencia; Fr. tenant; L. tenens.] In law, a holding or possession of lands or tenements from year to year, for a term of years, for a life or lives, or at will; tenure; as, tenancy in fee simple; tenancy in tail; tenancy by the courtesy; tenancy at will. Tenancy in common happens where there is a unity of possession merely.

TEN'ANT, n. [Fr. tenant, from tenir, to hold; L. teneo; Gr. τεινω, to strain, stretch, extend; W. tannu, to stretch; tynu, to pull; tyn, a stretch; ten, drawn; It. tenere; Sp. tener, to hold.] 1. A person who holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of title, either in fee, for life, for years, or at will. The word in English law is used with several additions. Thus, tenant in dower, is she that possesses land by virtue of her dower; tenant by the courtesy, he that holds for his life, by reason of a child begotten of him by his wife, being an heiress; tenant in mortgage, he that holds by means of a mortgage; tenant by the verge in ancient demesne, one who is admitted by the rod in the court of ancient demesne. [See VERGE.]—Tenant by copy of court roll, one who is admitted tenant of any lands, &c., within a manor; tenant in fee simple, one who has lands or tenements to hold to him and his heirs for ever; tenant in fee-tail. [See TAIL.] Tenant at will, is where lands or tenements are let by one man to another, to have, and to hold to him at the will of the lessor, by force of which letting the lessee is in possession, but the lessor may put him out at whatever time he pleases; tenant from year to year, is where one lets lands or tenements to another without limiting any certain or determinate estate; tenant by lease. [See LEASE.] Tenant upon sufferance, he who enters by lawful letting or title, and afterwards wrongfully continues in possession; joint-tenants are such as have equal rights in lands and tenements by virtue of one title; tenants in common, those who have equal rights, but hold by divers titles. The word tenant, in the most ordinary acceptation, signifies one who holds lands or houses under another, to whom he is bound to pay rent, and who is called his landlord. In Scotland, the term tenant is used only for the lessee or party to whom a lease is granted.—2. One who has possession of any place; a dweller.

The happy tenant of your shade. Cowley.

Tenant in capite, or tenant in chief, by the laws of England, is one who holds immediately of the king. According to the feudal system, all lands in England are considered as held immediately or mediately of the king, who is styled lord paramount. Such tenants, however, are considered as having the fee of the lands and permanent possession.

TEN'ANT, v. t. To hold or possess as a tenant.

Sir Roger's estate is tenanted by persons who have served him or his ancestors. Addison.

TEN'ANT, ppr. [Fr.] In her., a French term for holding, but met with in English blazon.

TEN'ANTABLE, a. Fit to be rented; in a state of repair suitable for a tenant.

TEN'ANTABLENESS, n. State of being tenantable.

Cross Tenanted.

TEN'ANTED, a. In her., tallied or let into another thing; as a cross tenanted, having rings let into its extremities.

TEN'ANTED, pp. Held by a tenant.

TEN'ANTING, ppr. Holding as a tenant.

TEN'ANTLESS, a. Having no tenant; unoccupied; as, a tenantless mansion.

TEN'ANTRY, n. The body of tenants; as, the tenantry of a manor or a kingdom.—2.† Tenancy.

TENCH, n. [Fr. tenche; Sp. tenca; L. tinca.] A fish of the carp family, (Cyprinidæ), the Cyprinus tinca, Linn., and Tinca vulgaris, Cuvier. It inhabits most of the lakes of the European continent, and in this country it is frequent in ornamental waters and ponds. The Tench (Tinca vulgaris).

tench is remarkable for its tenacity of life; it is readily distinguished from the carp by the small size of its scales, and also the small extent of the dorsal fin. Tenches are in great repute as delicious and wholesome food.

TEND, v. t. [contracted from attend, L. attendo; ad and tendo, to stretch; W. tannu. Attention denotes a straining of the mind.] 1. To watch; to guard; to accompany as an assistant or protector.

And flaming ministers to watch and tend
Their earthly charge. Milton.

There is a pleasure in that simplicity, in beholding princes tending their flocks. Pope.

2. To hold and take care of; as, to tend a child.—3. To be attentive to.

Unsuck'd of lamb or kid that tend their play. Milton.

4. To tend a vessel, is to cause her to swing at single anchor, so as not to foul the cable round the stock or flukes of the anchor.

TEND, v. i. [L. tendo; Fr. tendre; It. tendere; formed on L. teneo; Gr. τεινω: Sans. tan.] 1. To move in a certain direction.

Having overheard two gentlemen tending toward that sight. Wotton.

Here Dardanus was born, and hither tends. Dryden.

2. To be directed to any end or purpose; to aim at; to have or give a leaning.

The laws of our religion tend to the universal happiness of mankind. Tillotson.

3. To contribute. Our petitions, if granted, might tend to our destruction. 4. [for attend.] To attend; to wait as attendants or servants.

He tends upon my father. [Colloquial.] Shak.

5.† To attend as something inseparable. —6.† To wait; to expect.—7. To swing round an anchor, as a ship.

TEND'ANCE, n. Attendance; state of expectation.—2. Persons attending.—3. Act of waiting; attendance.—4. Care; act of tending. [This word is entirely obsolete in all its senses. We now use Attendance.]

TEND'ED, pp. Attended; taken care of; nursed; as an infant, or a sick person.

TEND'ENCY, n. [from tend; L. tendens, tending.] Drift; direction or course toward any place, object, effect, or result. Read such books only as have a good moral tendency. Mild language has a tendency to allay irritation.

Writings of this kind, if conducted with candour, have a more particular tendency to the good of their country. Addison.

TEND'ER, n. [from tend.] One that attends or takes care of; a nurse—2. In mar., a small vessel employed to attend a larger one for supplying her with provisions and other stores, or to convey intelligence and the like.—3. In railways, a carriage attached to the locomotive, for carrying the coke, water, &c. —4. [Fr. tendre, to reach.] In law, an offer, either of money to pay a debt, or of service to be performed, in order to save a penalty or forfeiture, which would be incurred by non-payment or non-performance; as, the tender of rent due, or of the amount of a note or bond with interest. In practice it generally consists in an offer to pay money on behalf of a party indebted, or who has done some injury to the creditor or to the party injured. To constitute a legal tender, such money must be offered as the law prescribes. A tender to the amount of 40*s.* may be made in silver; but beyond that amount it must be made in gold. If a tender be made of a larger amount in silver or in bank notes, and no objection be taken at the time to the medium in which it is made, the tender will be held good to the full amount to which it is made. There is also a tender of issue in pleadings, a tender of an oath, &c. In an action of damages in Scots law, a tender is a judicial offer made by the defender, of a specific sum in name of damages, and of expenses down to the date of the tender.—5. Any offer for acceptance. The gentleman made me a tender of his services.—6. An offer in writing made by one party to another, to execute some specified work, or to supply certain specified articles, at a certain sum or rate.—7. The thing offered. This money is not a legal tender.—8.† Regard; kind concern.

TEND'ER, v. t. [Fr. tendre, to reach or stretch out; L. tendo.] 1. To offer in words; or to exhibit or present for acceptance.

All conditions, all minds tender down
Their service to lord Timon. Shak.

2. To hold; to esteem.

Tender yourself more dearly.† Shak.

3. To offer in payment or satisfaction of a demand, for saving a penalty or forfeiture; as, to tender the amount of rent or debt.

TEN'DER, a. [Fr. tendre; It. tenero; Ir. and Gaelic, tin; W. tyner; L. tener; allied probably to thin; L. tenuis; W. tenau; Ar. wadana, to be soft or thin.] 1. Soft; easily impressed, broken, bruised, or injured; not firm or hard; as, tender plants; tender flesh; tender grapes; Deut. xxxii; Cant. ii.—2. Very sensible to impression and pain; easily pained.

Our bodies are not naturally more tender than our faces. L'Estrange.

3. Delicate; effeminate; not hardy or able to endure hardship.

The tender and delicate woman among you; Deut. xxviii.

4. Weak; feeble; as, tender age; Gen. xxxiii.—5. Young and carefully educated; Prov. iv.—6. Susceptible of the softer passions, as love, compassion; kindness; compassionate; pitiful; easily affected by the distresses of another, or anxious for another's good; as, the tender kindness of the church; a tender heart.—7. Compassionate; easily excited to pity, forgiveness, or favour.

The Lord is pitiful, and of tender mercy; James v; Luke i.

8. Exciting kind concern.

I love Valentine;
His life's as tender to me as his soul. Shak.

9. Expressive of the softer passions; as, a tender strain.—10. Careful to save inviolate, or not to injure; with of. Be tender of your neighbour's reputation.

The civil authority should be tender of the honour of God and religion. Tillotson.

11. Gentle; mild; unwilling to pain.

You that are so tender o'er his follies,
Will never do him good. Shak.

12. Apt to give pain; as, that is a tender subject; things that are tender and unpleasing.—13. Adapted to excite feeling or sympathy; pathetic; as, tender expressions; tender expostulations.

TEND'ERED, pp. Offered for acceptance.

TEN'DER-HEARTED, a. [tender and heart.] Having great sensibility; susceptible of impressions or influence.

When Rehoboam was young and tender-hearted, and could not withstand them; 2 Chron. xiii.

2. Very susceptible of the softer passions of love, pity, or kindness.

Be ye kind one to another, and tender-hearted; Eph. iv.

TEN'DER-HEARTEDLY, adv. With tender affection.

TEN'DER-HEARTEDNESS, n. Susceptibility of the softer passions.

TEN'DER-HEFTED, † a. Having great tenderness.

TEND'ERING, ppr. Offering for acceptance.

TEN'DERLING, n. A fondling; one made tender by too much kindness.—2. The first horns of a deer.

TEN'DERLOIN, n. A tender part of flesh in the hind quarter of beef, the psoas muscle.

TEN'DERLY, adv. With tenderness; mildly; gently; softly; in a manner not to injure or give pain.

Brutus tenderly reproves. Pope.

2. Kindly; with pity or affection.

TEN'DER-MINDED,† n. Compassionate.

TEN'DER-MOUTHED, a. Having a tender mouth.

TEN'DERNESS, n. The state of being tender or easily broken, bruised, or injured; softness; brittleness; as, the tenderness of a thread; the tenderness of flesh.—2. The state of being easily hurt; soreness; as, the tenderness of flesh when bruised or inflamed.—3. Susceptibility of the softer passions; sensibility.

Well we know your tenderness of heart. Shak.

4. Kind attention; anxiety for the good of another, or to save him from pain.—5. Scrupulousness; caution; extreme care or concern not to give or to commit offence; as, tenderness of conscience. —6. Cautious care to preserve or not to injure; as, a tenderness of reputation.—7. Softness of expression; pathos.

TEN'DERS, n. plur. Proposals for performing a service.

TEND'ING, ppr. Having a certain direction; taking care of.

TEND'ING, n. The act of attending.

TEND'ING, n. In seamen's language, a swinging round or movement of a ship upon her anchor.

TEN'DINOUS, a. [Fr. tendineux; It. tendinoso; from L. tendines, tendons, from tendo, to stretch.] 1. Pertaining to a tendon; partaking of the nature of tendons.—2. Full of tendons; sinewy; as, nervous and tendinous parts.

TEND'MENT,† n. Attendance; care.

TEN'DO, n. [L.] A tendon. Tendo Achilles, the large tendon, which connects the calf of the leg with the heel. It was so named, because, as fable reports, Thetis the mother of Achilles held him by that part, when she dipped him in the river Styx, to render him invulnerable, and so the only part about him which was vulnerable was his heel.

TEN'DON, n. [L. tendo; Gr. τενων: from τεινω: L. teneo, tendo.] In anat., a hard, insensible cord or bundle of fibres, by which a muscle is attached to a bone or other part which it serves to move. The name tendons, however, is generally applied only to those which are thick and rounded, and which serve for the attachment of the long round muscles; those which are broad and flat being commonly called aponeuroses. Tendons are white and shining tissues, composed of bundles of delicate fibres, united by cellular tissue.

TEN'DRAC, } n. The popular name
TEN'REC, } of three insectivorous
TAN'REC, } mammals, of the genus
Centetes Illiger, viz., C. ecaudatus, C.

Tenrec (Centetes ecaudatus).

setosus, and C. semispinosus. The tenrecs are considered as hedgehogs, without the power of rolling themselves up into a ball; the body is spiny, the muzzle elongated, there are five toes on each foot, separated and armed with crooked claws. The three species are found in Madagascar, and the first, which is the Tenrec, properly so called, and the largest, is naturalized in the Isle of France.

TEN'DRIL, n [Fr. tendron, from tenir, to hold.] A filiform spiral shoot of a plant that winds round another body for the purpose of support. Tendrils or cirri, are only found on those plants which are too weak in the stem to enable them to grow erect; they twist themselves in a spiral form around other plants or neighbouring bodies, and thus the plants on which they grow are enabled to elevate themselves. In most cases, tendrils are prolongations of the petioles; but in some cases they are altered stipules, as in the cucumber, and in other cases they are transformed branches or flower-stalks; as in the vine.

TEN'DRIL, a. Clasping; climbing; as a tendril.

TEN'DRY, n. Proposal to acceptance; a tender. [Rarely used.]

TEND'SOME, a. Requiring much attendance; as, a tendsome child. [Obs. or fam.]

TENEBRI'FIC, a. [L. tenebræ, darkness, fero, to bring or produce.] Producing darkness; as, a whimsical philosopher once asserted that night succeeded to day through the influence of tenebrific stars.

TENEBRIO'NIDÆ, n. A family of coleopterous insects, belonging to the section Heteromera, distinguished by having the body furnished with wings. The species of the typical genus Tenebrio are very numerous; they frequent dark and obscure situations, as the lower rooms of houses, cellars, &c. Hence the name from L. tenebræ, darkness. The larvæ of T. molitor, or meal worms, form the favourite food of the nightingale in its captive state. They are very destructive to biscuits and other cereal food kept in store.

TEN'EBROUS, } a. [L. tenebrosus,
TENE'BRIOUS, } from tenebræ, darkness.] Dark; gloomy.

TENE'BROUSNESS, } n. Darkness;
TENEBROS'ITY, } gloom.

TEN'EMENT, n. [Fr.; Low L. tenementum, from teneo, to hold.] 1. In common acceptation, a house; a building for a habitation; or an apartment in a building, used by one family.—2. A house or lands depending on a manor; or a fee farm depending on a superior. —3. In law, any species of permanent property that may be held, as land, houses, rents, commons, an office, an advowson, a franchise, a right of common, a peerage, &c. These are called free or frank tenements.

The thing held is a tenement, and the possessor of it a tenant, and the manner of possession is called tenure. Blackstone.

TENEMENT'AL, a. Pertaining to tenanted lands; that is or may be held by tenants.

Tenemental lands they distributed among their tenants. Blackstone.

TENEMENT'ARY, a. That is or may be leased; held by tenants.

TENEN'DAS, n. [L. from teneo, to hold.] In Scots law, that clause of a charter by which the particular tenure is expressed.

TENER'ITY,† n. Tenderness.

TENES'MUS, n. [L.; literally, a straining or stretching.] A continual inclination to void the contents of the bowels, accompanied by straining, but without any discharge. It is caused by an irritation of the muscles of the sphincter ani, produced generally by acrimonious substances.

TEN'ET, n. [L. tenet, he holds.] Any opinion, principle, dogma, or doctrine which a person believes or maintains as true; as, the tenets of Plato or of Cicero. The tenets of Christians are adopted from the Scriptures; but different interpretations give rise to a great diversity of tenets.

TEN'FOLD, a. [ten and fold.] Ten times more.

Fire kindled into tenfold rage. Milton.

TENIOIDS. See TÆNIOIDS.

TEN'NANTITE, n. [from Tennant.] A subspecies of gray copper ore, a mineral of a lead colour, or iron black, massive or crystallized, found in Cornwall, England. It is an arsenical sulphuret of copper and iron, and so named in honour of Smithson Tennant, a celebrated chemist.

TENNE', n. [Sp. tanetto.] A colour in heraldry, the same as tawney, and by some heralds called brush. It is composed of red, yellow, and brown, which, mixed together, make a kind of chestnut colour. It is seldom used in coat armour, and never as a field. In engraving, it is expressed by diagonal lines, drawn from the sinister chief point, and traversed by horizontal ones.

TEN'NIS, n. [If this word is from L. teneo, Fr. tenir, it must be from the sense of holding on continuing to keep in motion.] A play in which a ball is driven continually or kept in motion to and fro, by several persons striking it alternately with a small bat, called a racket, the object being to keep the ball in motion as long as possible without allowing it to fall to the ground. This game was introduced into England in the thirteenth century; it was very popular with the nobility in the sixteenth century, and continued to be so down to the reign of Charles II.

TEN'NIS, v. t. To drive a ball.

TEN'NIS BALL, n. The ball used in the game of tennis.

TEN'NIS COURT, n. An oblong edifice in which the game of tennis was played.

TEN'NISED, pp. Driven as a ball.

TEN'NISING, ppr. Driving as a ball.

TEN'ON, n. [Fr. from tenir, L. teneo, to hold.] In arch., the end of a piece of wood cut into the form of a rectangular prism, which is received into a cavity in another piece, having the same shape and size, called a mortise. This is a mode of joining or fastening two pieces of timber together. [See MORTISE.]

TEN'ON-SAW, n. A small saw, with a brass or steel back, used for cutting tenons. It is often corrupted into tenor-saw.

TEN'OR, n. [L. tenor, from teneo, to hold; that is, a holding on in a continued course; Fr. teneur; It. tenore; Sp. tenor.] 1. Continued run or currency; whole course or strain. We understand a speaker's intention or views from the tenor of his conversation; that is, from the general course of his ideas, or general purport of his speech.

Does not the whole tenor of the divine law positively require humility and meekness to all men? Sprat.

2. Stamp; character. The conversation was of the same tenor as that of the preceding day.

This success would look like chance, if it were not perpetual and always of the same tenor. Dryden.

3. Sense contained; purport; substance; general course or drift; as, close attention to the tenor of the discourse. Warrants are to be executed according to their form and tenor.

Bid me tear the bond,
When it is paid according to the tenor. Shak.

4. [Fr. tenor.] In music, the natural pitch of a man's voice in singing, or that which is between the extremes of highest and lowest, or contra-tenor and base; hence, the part of a tune adapted to a man's voice, the second of the four parts, reckoning from the base; and originally the air, to which the other parts were auxiliary. The compass of the tenor is from C, the second space in the bass, to G, the second line in the treble. Hence, the tenor and treble are reciprocally at the distance of an octave.—5. The persons who sing the tenor, or the instrument that plays it, which latter is a larger sort of violin. Tenor-clef, the C clef, placed on the fourth line, for the use of the tenor-voice: Thus,

TENOT'OMY, n. [Gr. τενων a tendon; and τομη, a cutting.] In surg., the division, or act of dividing a tendon.

TENREC. See TENDRAC.

TENSE, a. (tens.) [L. tensus, from tendo, to stretch.] Stretched; strained to stiffness; rigid; not lax; as, a tense fibre.

For the free passage of the sound into the ear, it is requisite that the tympanum be tense. Holder.

TENSE, n. (tens.) [corrupted from Fr. temps, L. tempus.] In gram., time, or a particular form of a verb, or a combination of words, used to express the time of action, or of that which is affirmed; or tense is an inflection of verbs, by which they are made to signify or distinguish the time of actions or events. The primary simple tenses are three; those which express time past, present, and future; but these admit of modifications, which differ in different languages. In the English language, six tenses are recognized; viz., the present, the past or imperfect, the perfect, the pluperfect, the future, and the future perfect.

TENSE′LY, adv. With tension.

TENSENESS, n. (tens′ness.) The state of being tense or stretched to stiffness; stiffness; opposed to laxness; as, the tenseness of a string or fibre; tenseness of the skin.

TENSIBIL′ITY, n. The state that admits tension.

TENS′IBLE, a. Capable of being extended.

TENS′ILE, a. Capable of extension.

TENSIL′ITY, n. The quality of being tensile.

TEN′SION, n. [Fr. from L. tensio, tendo.] 1. The act of stretching or straining; as, the tension of the muscles. —2. The state of being stretched or strained to stiffness; as a chord, string, bar, rod, &c.; or the state of being bent or strained; as, different degrees of tension in chords give different sounds; the greater the tension, the more acute the sound.—3. In mech., strain, or the force by which a bar, rod, or string is pulled, when forming part of any system in equilibrium or in motion. Thus, when a cord supports a weight, the tension of the string is the weight suspended to it.—4. Distension.

TENS′IVE, a. Giving the sensation of tension, stiffness, or contraction; as, a tensive pain.

TEN′SOME. See TENDSOME.

TENS′OR, n. In anat., a muscle that extends or stretches the part to which it is fixed; as, the tensor palati, the tensor tympani, &c.

TEN′SURE, the same as Tension, and not used.

TENT, n. [W. tent, from ten, tyn, stretched; Fr. tente; Sp. tienda; L. tentorium, from tendo, to stretch.] 1. A pavilion or portable lodge consisting of canvas or other coarse cloth, stretched and sustained by poles; used for sheltering persons from the weather, particularly soldiers in camp. The wandering Arabs and Tartars lodge in tents. The Israelites lodged in tents forty years, while they were in the desert. The military tent is made of canvas, which is supported by one pole or more, and distended by means of cords, which are made fast to pickets driven into the ground. Tents are set up when an army is encamped in the field, either for actual service, or for the purpose of performing military exercises.—2. In sur., a roll of lint or linen, used to dilate an opening in the flesh, or to prevent the healing of an opening from which matter or other fluid is discharged. A piece of sponge, dipped in hot melted wax, so as to be thoroughly imbued with it, is called a sponge-tent.—3. A term among lapidaries for what they put under table-diamonds when they set them.

TENT, n. [Sp. tinto, deep coloured, from L. tinctus.] A kind of wine of a deep red colour, chiefly from Gallicia or Malaga in Spain.

TENT, v. i. To lodge as in a tent; to tabernacle.

TENT, v. t. To probe; to search as with a tent; as, to tent a wound.

I'll tent him to the quick. Shak.

2. To keep open with a tent.

TENT, n. [from L. attendere.] Care; notice; attention.—2. A kind of pulpit of wood, erected in the open fields, in which clergymen used to preach to multitudes who had assembled from different places to attend the dispensation of the Lord's supper, and who could not be accommodated within doors. This practice is still retained in some parts of Scotland. [Scotch.]

TENT, v. i. To attend; to observe attentively; generally followed by to. [Scotch.]

TENT, v. t. To observe; to remark; to regard. [Scotch.]

TEN′TACLE, TENTAC′ULUM, n. plur. Tentacula. [Tech. L. tentaculum.] A feeler; a filiform process or organ, simple or branched, on the bodies of various animals of the Linnæan class Vermes, and of Cuvier's Mollusca, Annelides, Echinodermata, Actinia, Medusæ, Polypi, &c., either an organ of feeling, exploration, prehension, or motion, sometimes round the mouth, sometimes on other parts of the body.

TENTAC′ULAR, a. Pertaining to tentacles.

TENTAC′ULATED, a. Having tentacles.

TENTACULIF′EROUS, a. [L. tentaculum and fero, to bear.] Producing tentacula or tentacles.

TENTAC′ULITES, n. A beautiful group of small annulated, pointed shells, fossil in the silurian strata. They have been referred to the Annulosa.

TENT′AGE, n. An encampment. [Unusual.]

TENTA′TION, n. [Fr. from L. tentatio; tento, to try.] Trial; temptation. [Little used.]

TENT′ATIVE, a. [Fr.] Trying; essaying.

TENT′ATIVE, n. An essay; trial.

TENT′-BED, n. A high post bedstead, having curtains in a tent form above.

TENT′ED, a. Covered or furnished with tents; as soldiers.—2. Covered with tents; as, a tented field.

TENT′ER, n. [L. tendo, tentus, to stretch.] A machine or frame used in the cloth manufacture, to stretch out the pieces of cloth, stuff, &c., and make them even and square. It consists of several long pieces of wood, placed like those which form the barriers of a menage, but the lower piece admits of being raised or lowered, and fixed at any height required. Along the cross-pieces, both the upper and lower one, are numerous sharp-hooked nails, called tenter-hooks, on which the salvages of the cloth are hooked.—2. The individual who attends the machine of the same name.—3. A tenter-hook.—To be on the tenters, to be on the stretch; to be in distress, uneasiness, or suspense.

TENT′ER, v. t. To hang or stretch on tenters.

TENT′ER, v. i. To admit extension.

Woollen cloths will tenter. Bacon.

TENT′ERED, pp. Stretched or hung on tenters.

TENT′ER-GROUND, n. Ground on which tenters are erected.

TENT′ER-HOOK, n. A hook for stretching cloth on a frame. [See TENTER.]

TENT′ERING, ppr. Stretching or hanging on tenters.

TENTH, a. [from ten.] The ordinal of ten; the first after the ninth.

TENTH, n. The tenth part.—2. Tithe; the tenth part of annual produce or increase. [See TITHE.] Tenths are the yearly value of all ecclesiastical livings in England, which were anciently paid to the pope. At the Reformation, the revenue arising from tenths was transferred to the crown; but afterwards various benefices were exempted from the payment of tenths. —3. In music, the octave of the third; an interval comprehending nine conjoint degrees, or ten sounds, diatonically divided.

TENTH′LY, adv. In the tenth place.

TENTHRE′DO, n. A genus of hymenopterous insects, popularly known by the name of saw-fly, because the female uses her ovipositor, which is serrated like a saw, to cut out spaces in the bark of trees, for the purpose of depositing her eggs, as the T. rosæ, Tenthredo, Saw-fly.

upon the leaves of the rose bush. The Tenthredo, Linn., is regarded in modern systems as constituting a family named Securifera by Latreille, and Tenthredinidæ by Leach. Several species are found in this country. In the larva state they feed upon the leaves of plants and trees. In the accompanying figure, a is the saw-fly of the turnip, Athalia spinarum; b, ovipositor of saw-fly magnified; c, the same still more magnified to show the saw; d, the caterpillar of the saw-fly of the rose, Tenthredo rosæ; e, e, caterpillars of the saw-fly of the willow, Nematus capræa.

TENT′IE, a. Attentive; cautious; careful. [Scotch.]

TENTIG′INOUS,† a. [L. tentigo, a stretching.] Stiff; stretched.

TENT′ING, ppr. Probing; keeping open with a tent.

TENT′LESS, a. Inattentive; heedless. [Scotch.]

TENTO′RIUM, n. [L.] In anat., a process of the dura mater, which separates the cerebrum from the cerebellum.

TENT′ORY, n. [L. tentorium.] The awning of a tent.

TENT′WORT, n. [tent and wort.] A plant of the genus Asplenium, the A. ruta-muraria. It is also called wall-rue.

TEN'UATE, v. t. [L. tenuo.] To make thin.

TEN'UATED, pp. Made thin.

TEN'UATING, ppr. Making thin.

TENUIFO'LIOUS, a. [L. tenuis and folium.] Having thin or narrow leaves.

TENU'IOUS, a. Rare or subtle; opposed to dense.

TENUIROS'TRAL, a. Slender-beaked; pertaining to the family of birds called Tenuirostres.

TENUIROS'TRES, n. [L. tenuis, slender, and rostrum, a beak.] The fourth family of passerine birds in the arrangement of Cuvier. It comprehends those birds which have the beak slender, Heads of Tenuirostres.

a, Sun bird (Nectarinea afra); b, Humming bird (Trochilus recurvirostris), c, Fork-tailed blue vented Bee-Eater (Merops cæruleo-cephalus), d, European Nuthatch (Sitta Europea), e, Rufous-vented Kingfisher (Alcedo rufiventor).

elongated, sometimes straight, and sometimes more or less arcuated, and without any emargination; as the nuthatchers, creepers, humming-birds, bee eaters, king-fishers, hornbills, &c.

TENU'ITY, n. [Fr. tenuité; L. tenuitas, from tenuis, thin. See THIN.] 1. Thinness; smallness in diameter; exility; thinness, applied to a broad substance, and slenderness, applied to one that is long; as, the tenuity of paper or of a leaf; the tenuity of a hair or filament. —2. Rarity; rareness; thinness; as of a fluid; as, the tenuity of the air in the higher regions of the atmosphere; the tenuity of the blood.—3 † Poverty.

TEN'UOUS, a. [L. tenuis.] 1. Thin; small; minute.—2. Rare.

TEN'URE, n. [Fr. from tenir, L. teneo, to hold.] 1. A holding. In English law, the manner of holding lands and tenements of a superior, or the feudal relation which subsists between lord and vassal in respect of lands and tenements. All land is held of the king, either mediately or immediately; and ultimately all land is held of the king. The ownership of land is therefore never unlimited as to extent, for he who is the owner of land in fee, which is the largest estate that a man can have in land, is not absolute owner: he owes services in respect of his fee (or fief), and the seignory of the lord always subsists. All land in the hands of any layman is held of some lord, to whom the holder or tenant owes some service; but in the case of church lands, although they are held by tenure, no temporal services are due, but the lord of whom these lands are held must be considered the owner, although the beneficial ownership can never revert to the lord. All the species of ancient tenures may be reduced to four, three of which subsist to this day. 1. Tenure by knight service, which was the most honourable. This is now abolished. 2. Tenure in free socage, or by a certain and determinate service, which is either free and honourable, or villein and base. 3. Tenure by copy of court roll, or copyhold tenure. 4. Tenure in ancient demain. There was also tenure in frankalmoigne, or free arms. The tenure in free and common socage has absorbed most of the others. [See TENANT, COPYHOLD, SOCAGE, VILLENAGE.]—In Scots law. [See HOLDING.] —2. The consideration, condition, or service which the occupier of land gives to his lord or superior for the use of his land.—3. Manner of holding in general. In absolute governments, men hold their rights by a precarious tenure.

TEOCAL'LE, n. [Literally, God's house.] A pyramid for the worship of the gods, among the Mexicans and other aborigines of America.

TEPEFAC'TION, } n. [L. tepefacio;
TEPIFAC'TION, } tepidus, warm, and facio, to make.] The act or operation of warming, making tepid, or moderately warm.

TEP'EFIED, } pp. Made moderately
TEP'IFIED, } warm.

TEP'EFY, } v. t. [L. tepefacio.] To TEP'IFY, } make moderately warm.

TEP'EFY, } v. i. To become moderately
TEP'IFY, } warm.

TEPH'RAMANCY, n. [Gr. τεφρα, ashes, and μαντεια, divination.] Augury depending on the inspection of the ashes of a holocaust.

TEPHRODOR'NIS, n. Swainson's name for a genus of Drongo-shrikes, inhabiting the warm latitudes of the Old World.

TEPHRO'SIA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Leguminosæ, papilionaceous division. It consists of shrubs, undershrubs, or herbs scattered over every quarter of the globe. T. toxicaria is a native of the West Indies, and of Cayenne. The whole plant affords a narcotic poison, and the leaves are used for intoxicating fish. T. virginiana is considered in America a powerful vermifuge. T. emarginata is a native of South America. Its root is used for poisoning fish. T. tinctoria, the Ceylon indigo, yields a blue colouring matter, which is used in Ceylon for the same purposes as indigo. T. piscatoria, the fisher's Tephrosia, is found in the East Indies. It contains the narcotic principle of the genus, and is used for poisoning fish. T. senna, Buga senna, grows on the banks of the river Cauca, near Buga, in Popayan. Its leaves are used by the natives for the same purposes as senna.

TEP'ID, a. [L. tepidus, from tepeo, to be warm; Russ. toplyu.] Moderately warm; lukewarm; as, a tepid bath; tepid rays; tepid vapours.—Tepid mineral waters are such as have less sensible cold than common water.

TEPIDA'RIUM, n. [L.] In the ancient Roman baths, the name given to the apartment in which the tepid bath was placed. Also, the boiler in which the water was warmed for the tepid bath.

TEP'IDNESS, } n. Moderate warmth;
TEPID'ITY, } lukewarmness.

TE'POR, n. [L.] Gentle heat; moderate warmth.

TER'APH, n. [Heb.] A household deity or image. [See TERAPHIM.]

TER'APHIM, n. [Heb., supposed to be derived from Terah, the father of Abraham.] Household deities or images. The teraphim seem to have been either wholly or in part of human form and of small size. They appear to have been superstitiously reverenced as penates, or household gods, and in some shape or other to have been used as domestic oracles. They are mentioned several times in the Old Testament Scriptures.

TERATOL'OGY, † n. [Gr. τερας, a prodigy, and λογος, discourse.] Bombast in language; affectation of sublimity. —2. A branch of physiology, which treats of the various malformations and monstrosities in the animal kingdom.

TERCE, n. (ters.) [Sp. tercia; Fr. tiers tierce, a third.] A cask whose contents are 42 gallons, the third of a pipe or butt. [See TIERCE.]

TERCE, n. In Scots law, a real right whereby a widow, who has not accepted any special provision, is entitled to a life-rent of one-third of the heritage in which her husband died infeft, provided the marriage has endured for a year and a day, and has produced a living child. No widow is entitled to her terce until she is regularly kenned to it. [See under KEN.]

TER'CEL, n. [Fr. tiers, third; so named from his smallness.] The male of the common falcon, Falco peregrinus. [See TIERCEL.]

The name tercel is given, also, to the male of every species of falcon or hawk, when he has no other individual designation. Booth.

TERCE'-MAJOR, n. A sequence of the three best cards.

TERCEN'TENARY, a. Comprising three hundred years.

TER'CET, n. In music, a third.

TER'CINE, n. [L. tertius.] In bot., the innermost coat of the ovule of a plant.

TEREBEL'LUM, n. [L. terebro, to bore.] A genus of testaceous molluscs, placed by Cuvier among his Pectinibranchiate gastropods. All the species are fossil but one, the T. subulatum.

TER'EBINTH, n. [Fr. terebinthe; Gr. τερεβινθος.] The turpentine tree, Pistacia terebinthus. [See PISTACIA.]—2. The common name for various resinous exudations, both of a fluid and solid nature, such as common turpentine, produced from Pinus sylvestris; frankincense and Burgundy pitch from Pinus abies; Canada balsam from Abies balsamica. The volatile oil of various of these resins is called oil of terebinth, or oil of turpentine.

TEREBIN'THINATE, a. Terebinthine; impregnated with the qualities of turpentine.

TEREBIN'THINE, a. [L. terebinthinus, from terebinthina, turpentine.] Pertaining to turpentine; consisting of turpentine, or partaking of its qualities.

TER'EBRA, n. [L. terebro, to bore.] A genus of turreted, subulated marine univalves. Several species are fossil.

TEREBRA'LIA, n. Swainson's name for a genus of testaceous gastropods, arranged by him under the Certhinæ.

TEREBRAN'TIA, n. [L. terebro, to bore.] A section of hymenopterous insects, provided with an anal instrument for making perforations in the bodies of animals, or in plants.

TER'EBRATE, v. t. [L. terebro, tero.] To bore; to perforate with a gimlet. [Little used.]

TER'EBRATING, a. Boring; perforating; applied to those testaceous animals which form holes in rocks, wood, &c., and reside therein.

TEREBRA'TION, n. The act of boring. [Little used.]

TEREBRAT'ULA, n. A genus of acephalous bivalve molluscs, found moored to rocks, shells, &c. One of the valves is perforated to permit the passage of a fleshy peduncle, by means of which the animal attaches itself to rocks, shells, &c. There are few recent species, but the fossil ones are numerous, and are found most abundantly in the secondary and tertiary formations.

TEREBRAT'ULITE, n. Fossil terebratula, a kind of shell.

TEREDI'NA, n. A genus of testaceous molluscs, belonging to the family Tubicolæ of Lamarck. The genus is fossil only.

TER'EDINE, n. A borer; the teredo.

TERE'DO, n. [L. from Gr. τείρω, to pierce, to bore.] A genus of acephalous testaceous molluscs, belonging to the family Tubicolæ of Lamarck. The T. navalis, or ship-worm, is celebrated a, Teredo navalis; b, Valves; c, Wood perforated by the Teredo.

on account of the destruction which it occasions to ships and submerged wood, by perforating them in all directions in order to establish a habitation. It is said to have been originally imported from tropical climates, but it has now become an inhabitant of most of the harbours of this country.

TER'ENITE, n. A kind of solid argillaceous schist, parting into thick exfoliations.

TE'RES, a. [L.] Round; cylindrical. Applied in anatomy to some muscles and ligaments on account of their shape; as, teres major; ligamentum teres, &c.

TERÊTE, a. [L. teres.] Cylindrical and tapering; columnar; as some stems of plants.

TER'GANT, TER'GIANT, ppr. [from L. tergum, the back.] In her., showing the back part; as, an eagle tergiant, displayed, an eagle displayed, showing the back; called also recursant.

TERGEM'INAL, TERGEM'INATE, a. [L. tergeminus.] Thrice double. Applied to a leaf having a forked petiole which is subdivided.

TERGEM'INOUS, a. [supra.] Threefold.

TERGIF'EROUS, a. [L. tergum, the back, and fero, to bear.] Tergiferous plants are such as bear their seeds on the back of their leaves, as ferns.

TER'GIVERSATE, v. i. [L. tergum, the back, and verto, to turn.] To shift; to practise evasion. [Little used.]

TERGIVERSA'TION, n. A shifting; shift; subterfuge; evasion.

Writing is to be preferred before verbal conferences, as being more free from passion and tergiversation. Bramhall.

2. Change; fickleness of conduct.

The colonel, after all his tergiversation, lost his life in the king's service. Clarendon.

TER'GIVERSATOR, n. One who practises tergiversation.

TER'GUM, n. [L., the back.] In entom., the upper surface of the abdomen.

TERM, n. [Gr. τέρμα: Fr. terme; It. termine; Sp. termino; L. terminus, a limit or boundary; W. terv, tervyn, from terv, extreme.] 1. A limit; a bound or boundary; the extremity of any thing; that which limits its extent.

Corruption is a reciprocal to generation, and they two are as nature's two terms or boundaries. Bacon.

2. The time for which any thing lasts; any limited time; as, the term of five years; the term of life.—3. In geom., a point, line, or superficies that limits. A line is the term of a superficies, and a superficies is the term of a solid.—4. In law, the limitation of an estate; or rather the whole time or duration of an estate; as, a lease for the term of life, for the term of three lives, &c. A term of years signifies the estate and interest which pass to the person to whom an estate for years is granted by the owner of the fee.—5. The law terms are those portions of the year during which the superior courts of common law and equity sit for the despatch of business. They are four in number, viz., Hilary term, which begins on the 11th, and ends on the 31st January; Easter term, which begins on the 15th April, and ends on the 8th May; Trinity term, which begins on the 22d May, and ends on the 12th June; Michaelmas term, which begins on the 2d, and ends on the 25th November. The other portions of the year are termed vacation. In all cases the Monday is substituted for the Sunday, when the first day of term falls on the latter day. The courts of common law are empowered, upon giving notice, to hold sittings out of term. In England, there are also four days in the year which are called terms, and which are appointed for the settling of rents, viz., Lady Day, March 25; Midsummer, June 24; Michaelmas Day, September 29; Christmas, December 25. The terms in Scotland corresponding to these are Candlemas, February 2; Whitsunday, May 15; Lammas, August 1; Martinmas, November 11. The legal terms in Scotland for the payment of rent, or interest, are Whitsunday, 15th May, and Martinmas, November 11th.—Conventional terms are any terms agreed upon between the contracting parties. In judicial procedure, in Scots law, the word term signifies a certain time fixed by authority of a court, within which a party is allowed to establish by evidence his averment.—6. In universities and colleges, the time during which instruction is regularly given to students, who are obliged by the statutes and laws of the institution to attend to the recitations, lectures, and other exercises.—7. In gram., a word or expression; that which fixes or determines ideas.

In painting, the greatest beauties cannot be always expressed for want of terms. Dryden.

8. In the arts, a word or expression that denotes something peculiar to an art; as, a technical term.—9. In logic, the expression in language of the notion obtained in an act of apprehension. A term may consist of one word, or of several, but every word is not capable of being employed by itself as a term. Terms are divided into simple, singular, universal, common, univocal, equivocal, analogous, abstract, concrete, &c. A syllogism consists of three terms, the major, the minor, and the middle. The predicate of the conclusion is called the major term, because it is the most general, and the subject of the conclusion is called the minor term, because it is less general. These are called the extremes; and the third term, introduced as a common measure between them, is called the mean or middle term. Thus, in the following syllogism: Every vegetable is combustible; every tree is a vegetable; therefore every tree is combustible. Combustible is the predicate of the conclusion, or the major term; every tree is the minor term; vegetable is the middle term.—10. In arch., a kind of statues or columns adorned on the top with the figure of a head, either of a man, woman, or satyr. Terms are sometimes used as consoles, and sustain entablatures; and sometimes as statues to adorn gardens. [See TERMINUS.]—11. Among the ancients, terms, termini miliares, were the heads of certain divinities placed on square land-marks of stone, to mark the several stadia on roads. These were dedicated to Mercury, who was supposed to preside over highways.—12. In alge., a member of a compound quantity; as, a, in a + b; or ab, in ab + cd. Hence, the terms of any compound quantity are the several members of which it is composed, separated from one another by the signs +, plus, or −, minus. Thus, $a^2 b^3 x^2 - 2 a b x^3 + \sqrt{ab} . x^4$, is a compound quantity, consisting of three terms. Terms of an equation, the several parts of which it is composed, connected by the signs of addition and subtraction. Thus, $x^3 - 6 x^2 + 11 x - 6 = 0$, is an equation consisting of four terms.—13. Among physicians, the monthly uterine secretion of females is called terms.—14. In contracts, terms, in the plural, are conditions; propositions stated or promises made, which, when assented to or accepted by another, settle the contract and bind the parties. A. engages to build a house for B. for a specific sum of money, in a given time; these are his terms. When B. promises to give to A. that sum for building the house, he has agreed to the terms; the contract is completed and binding upon both parties.—15. In ship-building, a piece of carved work, placed under each end of the taffrail.—Terms of proportion, in math., are such numbers, letters, or quantities as are compared one with another.—To make terms, to come to an agreement.—To come to terms, to agree; to come to an agreement.—To bring to terms, to reduce to submission or to conditions.

TERM, v. t. To name; to call; to denominate.

Men term what is beyond the limits of the universe, imaginary space. Locke.

TER'MAGANCY, n. [from termagant.] Turbulence; tumultuousness; as, a violent termagancy of temper.

TER'MAGANT, a. [In Sax. tir or tyr is a deity, Mars or Mercury, and a prince or lord. As a prefix, it augments the sense of words, and is equivalent to chief or very great. The Sax. magan, Eng. may, is a verb denoting to be able, to prevail; from the sense of straining, striving, or driving. Qu. the root of stir.] Tumultuous; turbulent; boisterous or furious; quarrelsome; scolding.

The eldest was a termagant, imperious, prodigal, profligate wench. Arbuthnot.

TER'MAGANT, n. A boisterous, brawling, turbulent woman; a shrew; a virago. It seems in Shakespeare to have been used of men. In ancient farces and puppet-shows, termagant was a vociferous, tumultuous deity.

She threw his periwig into the fire. Well, said he, thou art a brave termagant. Tatler.

The sprites of fiery termagants in flame. Pope.

TERM'ED, pp. Called; denominated.

TERM'ER, n. One who travels to attend a court term.

TERM'ER, TERM'OR, n. One who has an estate for a term of years or life.

TER'MES. See TERMITES.

TERM'-FEE, n. Among lawyers, a fee or certain sum charged to a suitor for each term his cause is in court.

TERM'INABLE, a. [from term.] That may be bounded; limitable.

TERM'INABLENESS, n. The state of being terminable.

TERM'INAL, a. [from L. terminus.] In bot., growing at the end of a branch or stem; terminating; as, a terminal peduncle, flower, or spike.—Terminal stigma, a stigma placed at the end of the style.—2. Forming the extremity; as, a terminal edge.—3. In arch. and sculp., of or belonging to a terminus,—which see.—Terminal velocity, in the theory of projectiles, the greatest velocity which a ball can acquire by descending vertically in air, and with which, when attained, it would continue to descend uniformly, if no obstacle delayed the motion.—Terminal value, and terminal form, in math., the last and most complete value or form given to an expression.

TERMINA'LIA, n. plur. Among the Romans, festivals celebrated annually in honour of Terminus, the god of boundaries. They took place on the 23d of February.—2. A genus of plants, nat. order Combretaceæ. The species consist of trees and shrubs, with alternate leaves, inhabiting the tropical parts of Asia and America. T. angustifolia, a native of the East Indies, yields a gum-resin similar to benzoin. T. vernix, a native of the Moluccas, abounds in a resinous juice used as a varnish. The bark and leaves of T. catappa, a West Indian species, yield a black pigment. Indian ink is manufactured from the juice of this tree. The fruit of T. bellerica, an East Indian species, is reputed to possess tonic, astringent, and attenuant properties. The fruit of T. chebula, also an East Indian species, is used for the purposes of dyeing. Both this and the last species produce gall nuts, which are also used in dyeing. Some of the species of this genus are called myrobalans.

TERM'INATE, v. t. [Fr. terminer; L. termino; Sp. terminar; It. terminare; from L. terminus, W. tervyn.] 1. To bound; to limit; to set the extreme point or side of a thing; as, to terminate a surface by a line.—2. To end: to put an end to; as, to terminate a controversy.

TERM'INATE, v. i. To be limited; to end; to come to the furthest point in space; as, a line terminates at the equator; the torrid zone terminates at the tropics.—2. To end; to close; to come to a limit in time. The session of the American congress, every second year, must terminate on the third of March.

The wisdom of this world, its designs and efficacy, terminate on this side heaven. South.

TERM'INATED, pp. Limited; bounded; ended.

TERM'INATING, ppr. Limiting; ending; concluding.

TERMINA'TION, n. The act of limiting or setting bounds; the act of ending or concluding.—2. Bound; limit in space or extent; as, the termination of a line.—3. End in time or existence; as, the termination of the year or of life; the termination of happiness.—4. In gram., the end or ending of a word; the syllable or letter that ends a word. Words have different terminations to express number, time, and sex.—5. End; conclusion; result.—6. Last purpose.—7.† Word; term.

TERMINA'TIONAL, a. Forming the end or concluding syllable.

TERM'INATIVE, a. Directing termination.

TERM'INATIVELY, adv. Absolutely; so as not to respect any thing else.

TERM'INATOR, n. In astron., a name sometimes given to the circle of illumination, from its property of terminating the boundaries of light and darkness.

TERM'INER, n. A determining; as, in oyer and terminer. [See OYER.]

TERM'ING, ppr. Calling; denominating.

TERM'INISM, n. In German philosophy, the doctrine that all things happen through a necessary connection of causes and effects, extending through all nature.—2. In theol., the doctrine that God has assigned to every one a term of repentance, during which his salvation must be wrought out.

TERM'INIST, n. In eccles. hist., a sect of Christians who maintain that God has fixed a certain term for the probation of particular persons, during which time they have the offer of grace, but after which God no longer wills their salvation.

TERMINOL'OGY, TERMONOL'OGY, n. [Gr. τέρμων and λόγος.] 1. The doctrine of terms; that branch of a science or art which defines and explains the words, phrases, and technical terms peculiar to that science or art. It is also called orismology and glossology.

TERMIN'THUS, n. [Gr. τέρμινθος, a pine nut.] In med., a sort of carbuncle, spreading in the shape, and assuming the figure and blackish green colour of the fruit of the pine, called pine-nut.

TERM'INUS, n. plur. Termini. [L.] A boundary; a limit; a stone raised for marking the boundary of a property. Among the Romans, the deity that presided over boundaries or land-marks. He was represented with a human head, without feet or arms, to intimate that he never moved, wherever he was placed.—2. In arch. and sculp., a terminus, or term, is a pillar statue; that is, either a half statue, or bust, not placed upon, but incorporated with, and, as it were, immediately springing out of, the square pillar, which serves as its pedestal. The pillar part is generally made to taper downwards, or made narrower at its base than above. Termini are employed not as insulated pillars, but as pilasters, forming a small order or attic, or a decoration to gateways, doors, &c.—3. The extreme point at either end of a railway, the intervals along its course being called stations. Also, the buildings for offices, &c., at the extremity of a railway.

TERM'ITES, } n. A family of neuTERMI'TIDÆ, } ropterous insects, known by the name of white ants. It includes the genus Termes, Linn. These insects have little affinity with the true ants, although they resemble them in their mode of life. They are chiefly confined to the tropics; and are found very plentifully in western Africa; they unite in societies, each composed of an immense number of individuals, living in the ground and in trees, devouring all vegetable and animal substances within their reach, and often attacking the wood-work of houses. The white ants build their dwellings in the ground, in the form of pyramids or cones, ten or twelve feet high, resembling native villages in extent, and for which indeed they may readily be mistaken. These dwellings, which are so firmly cemented as to be capable of bearing the weight of three or four men, are divided off into several apartments as magazines, chambers, galleries, &c. When assaulted, the ants make their attack and defence with system and desperate courage. After impregnation, the abdomen of the female extends to an enormous size, exceeding the rest of her body nearly 2000 times; in which state it is filled with an immense number of eggs, protruded to the amount of about 8000 in 24 hours.

Termes bellicosus.

a, Larva or worker; } Natural size.
b, Pupa or soldier; }
c, Perfect winged insect reduced in size.

On emerging from the egg, the insects, in their larva state, are furnished with a great hard head and strong toothed jaws, but destitute of eyes. These are the labourers, a, who, although not more than a quarter of an inch long, build their edifices, procure provisions for the community, and take care of the eggs. On changing to the pupa state, b, they become larger and more powerful; the head is nearly as big as the body, while the jaws project beyond the head, and are very sharp, but without teeth. They now become soldiers and never work themselves, but superintend the labourers, and act as guards to defend the common habitation from violence and intrusion. The next change brings the pupæ or soldiers to their perfect state, as male or female winged insects, c. These emerge into the air during the night, or on a damp and cloudy day; in a few hours, however, the solar heat causes their wings to wither and become dry; the insects then fall to the ground, and are eagerly sought after by hosts of birds, lizards, and even negroes themselves, who roast and eat them.

TERMITI'NÆ, n. Latreille's name for a section of neuropterous insects, comprehending the genera Mantispa, Raphidia, Termes, and Psocus.

TERM'LESS, a. Unlimited; boundless; as, termless joys.

TERM'LY, a. Occurring every term; as a termly fee.

TERM'LY, adv. Term by term; every term; as, a fee termly given.

TER'MON, n. Formerly, in Ireland, an ecclesiastical district exempt from regal imposts.

TERM'OR, n. One who has an estate for a term of years, or for life. [See TERMER.]

TERN, n. [L. sterna.] A common name of certain aquatic fowls of the genus sterna; as the great tern or sea-swallow, (S. hirundo,) the black tern, the lesser tern, or hooded tern, and the foolish tern, or noddy, (S. stolida.) The brown tern, or brown gull, (S. obscura,) is considered as the young of the pewit gull or sea-crow, before moulting.

TERN, a. [L. ternus.] Threefold; consisting of three.—Tern leaves, (folia terna,) leaves in threes, or three by three; expressing the number of leaves in each whorl or set.—Tern peduncles, three growing together from the same axil.—Tern flowers, growing three and three together.

TERN'ARY, a. [L. ternarius, of three.] Proceeding by threes; consisting of three. Applied to things arranged in order by threes; thus a flower is said to have a ternary division of its parts, when it has three sepals, three petals, three stamens, or twice or thrice as many. The ternary number, in antiquity, was esteemed a symbol of perfection and held in great veneration.

TERN'ARY, } n. [L. ternarius, ternio.]
TERN'ION, } The number three.

TERN'ATE, a. [L. ternus, terni.] In bot., a ternate leaf is one that has three leaflets on a petiole, as in trefoil, strawberry, bramble, &c. There are leaves also biternate and triternate, having three ternate or three biternate leaflets. These leaves must not be confounded with folia terna, which are leaves that grow three together in a whorl, on a stem or branch. These are, however, more correctly called verticillate-ternate.—Ternate bat, a species of bat of a large kind, found in the isle Ternate, and other East India isles. [See VAMPIRE.]

TER'NION. See TERNARY.

TERNSTRÖMIA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of polypetalous dicotyledonous plants, consisting of trees or shrubs, with alternate coriaceous leaves, without stipules. The flowers are generally white, and are arranged in axillary or terminal peduncles, articulated at the base. This order is one of great economical importance, as it includes the genus thea, from which the teas of commerce are obtained. The plants belonging to the order are principally inhabitants of Asia and America.

TERPO'DION, n. The name of a modern musical keyed instrument, invented by John David Buschmann of Friedrichsrode, near Gotha. The interior mechanism consists of wooden staves, which are made to vibrate by the friction of a wooden cylinder, set in motion by a wheel. It is said to produce very sweet notes, and to be particularly fine as an accompaniment to vocal music.

TERPSI'CHORE, n. [Gr. τερπω: to delight, and χορος, a dance.] In Grecian myth., one of the muses, who presided over dancing and lyrical poetry. She is generally represented with a lyre, Terpsichore, from an antique statue.

having seven strings, or a plectrum in the hand, in the act of dancing, and crowned with flowers.

TERPSICHORE'AN, a. Relating to Terpsichore, the muse who presided over dancing and lyrical poetry.

TER'RA, n. The Latin word for earth or the earth. In min., it is used to signify an earth, or earthy substance. Terra cotta, baked clay, or burned earth, frequently used at an early period for the architectural decoration of a building. Many statues of the deities, bassi-rilievi, lamps, vessels, &c., were also formed of this material. In modern times, it has also been much used for architectural decorations. It consists of potter's clay, and fine white sand, as that from Ryegate, with pulverized potsherds.—Terra firma, solid land, main land, a continent, in opposition to insular territories.—Terra cultural, denoting culture or tillage of the earth.—Terra culture, cultivation of the earth.—Terra incognita, an unknown or unexplored region.—Terra japonica, catechu, so called.—Terra ponderosa, barytes, or heavy spar,—which see.—Terra sienna, an ochreous earth, so named from its being brought from Sienna. It is a sort of brown bole, and is used as a pigment.—Terra sigillata, or Terra lemnia, Lemnian earth,—which see.—Terra a terra, in the menage, a series of low leaps which a horse makes forwards, bearing sideways, and working upon two treads.

TER'RACE, n. [Fr. terrasse; It. terrazzo; Sp. terrado; from L. terra, the earth.] 1. In gardening, a raised level space or platform of earth, supported on one or more sides, by a wall or bank of turf, &c., used either for cultivation or for a promenade.—2. A balcony or open gallery.—3. The flat roof of a house. All the buildings of the Oriental nations are covered with terraces, where people walk or sleep.—4. In arch., an area raised before a building, above the level of the ground, to serve as a promenade. The same name is given to a street in a town, having a row of buildings on one side, and sloping ground on the other.

TER'RACE, v. t. To form into a terrace.—2. To open to the air and light.

TER'RACED, pp. Formed into a terrace; having a terrace.

TER'RACING, ppr. Forming into a terrace; opening to the air.

TER'RÆ-FIL'IUS, n [L.] In classical Latinity, a humorous designation of persons of obscure birth, or of low origin: terræ filii, sons of the earth.—2. In former times, a scholar at the university of Oxford, appointed to make jesting satirical speeches, and who often indulged in considerable licence in his treatment of the authorities of the university.

TER'RAPIN, n. sing. and plur. A kind of tide-water tortoise, common in some of the states of North America, and esteemed as food.

TERRA'QUEOUS, a. [L. terra, earth, and aqua, water; W. tir, Sans. dara, earth.] Consisting of land and water, as the globe or earth. This epithet is given to the earth in regard to the surface, of which more than three fifths consist of water, and the remainder of earth or solid materials.

TER'RAR,† n. A register of lands.

TERRAS', n. [Fr. terasse.] In her., the representation of a piece of ground at the bottom of the base, and generally vert.

TERRE,† v. t. To provoke. [See TARRE.]

TERRE-BLUE, n. [Fr. terre, earth, and blue.] A kind of earth.

TERRE-MOTE,† n. [L. terra, earth, and motus, motion.] An earthquake.

TERRE-PLEIN, n. [Fr. terre, earth, and plein, full.] In fort., the top, platform, or horizontal surface of a rampart, on which the cannon are placed.

TERRE-TEN'ANT, } n. [Fr. terre-ten-
TER-TEN'ANT, } ant] One who has the actual possession of land; the occupant.

TERRE-VERTE, n. [Fr. terre, earth, and verd, verte, green.] A species of olive-green earth, used by painters. It is an indurated clay, found in the earth in large flat masses, imbedded in strata of other species of earth. It is of a fine regular structure, and of a smooth glossy surface. According to Klaproth, it is a hydrated silicate of oxide of iron, and potash, with a little magnesia, and alumina. It is found in Germany, France, Italy, and North America.

TERREEN, n. [Fr. terrine, from Lat. terra, earth.] An earthen or porcelain vessel for table furniture, used often for containing soup. [See TUREEN, the word used.]

TER'REL, } n. [from terra.] Little
TEREL'LA, } earth, a magnet of a just spherical figure, and so placed that its poles, equator, &c., correspond exactly to those of the world.

TERRENE, a. [L. terrenus, from terra, W. tir, earth.] 1. Pertaining to the earth; earthy; as, terrene substance.—2. Earthly; terrestrial.

> God set before him a mortal and immortal life, a nature celestial and terrene. Raleigh.

TER'REOUS, a. [L. terreus, from terra, earth.] Earthy; consisting of earth; as, terreous substances; terreous particles.

TERRES'TRIAL, a. [L. terrestris, from terra, the earth.] 1. Pertaining to the earth; existing on the earth; as, terrestrial animals; bodies terrestrial; 1 Cor. xv.—2. Consisting of earth; as, the terrestrial globe.—3. Pertaining to the world, or to the present state; sublunary. Death puts an end to all terrestrial scenes.

TERRES'TRIALLY, adv. After an earthly manner.

TERRES'TRIFY,† v. t. To reduce to earth.

TERRES'TRIOUS, a. Earthy. [Little used.]—2. Pertaining to the earth; being or living on the earth; terrestrial.

TER'RIBLE, a. [Fr. from L. terribilis, from terreo, to frighten.] 1. Frightful; adapted to excite terror; dreadful; formidable.

> Prudent in peace, and terrible in war. Prior.
> The form of the image was terrible; Dan. ii.

2. Adapted to impress dread, terror, or solemn awe and reverence.

> The Lord thy God is among you, a mighty God and terrible; Deut. vii.
> Let them praise thy great and terrible name, for it is holy; Ps. xcix.
> He hath done for thee these great and terrible things, which thine eyes have seen; Deut. x.

3. adv. Severely; very; so as to give pain; as, terrible cold; a colloquial phrase.

TER'RIBLENESS, n. Dreadfulness; formidableness; the quality or state of being terrible; as, the terribleness of a sight.

TER'RIBLY, adv. Dreadfully; in a manner to excite terror or fright.

> When he ariseth to shake terribly the earth; Is. ii.

2. Violently; very greatly.

> The poor man squalled terribly. Swift.

TER'RIER, n. [Fr. from terra, earth.] 1. A dog or little hound that follows his game into holes; the canis familiaris terrarius, remarkable for the eagerness and courage with which it goes to earth, and attacks all those quadrupeds which gamekeepers call vermin, as foxes, badgers, cats, rats, &c. There are two kinds of terriers, the one rough and wire-haired, the other smooth haired and generally more delicate in appearance. The pepper and mustard breeds, rendered famous by Sir Walter Scott, are highly valued.—2. A lodge or hole where certain animals, as foxes, rabbits, badgers and the like secure themselves.—3. Originally, a collection of acknowledgments of the vassals or tenants of a lordship, containing the rents and services they owed to the lord, &c.; at present, a book or roll in which the lands of private persons or corporations are described by their site, boundaries, number of acres, &c.—4. A wimble, auger, or borer. [L. tero.]

TERRIF'IC, a. [L. terrificus, from terreo, terror, and facio.] Dreadful; causing terror; adapted to excite great fear or dread; as, a terrific form; terrific sight.

TER'RIFIED, pp. Frightened; affrighted.

TER'RIFY, v. t. [L. terror and facio, to make.] To frighten; to alarm or shock with fear.

> They were terrified and affrighted, Luke xxiv.
> When ye shall hear of wars and commotions, be not terrified; Luke xxi; Job vii.

TER'RIFYING, ppr. Frightening; affrighting.

TERRIG'ENOUS, a. [L. terrigena, one born of the earth; terra and gigno.] Earthborn; produced by the earth.

TERRITO'RIAL, a. [from territory.] Pertaining to territory or land; as, territorial limits; territorial jurisdiction.—2. Limited to a certain district. Rights may be personal or territorial.—Territorial economy, whatever relates to the valuation, purchase, sale, exchange, arrangement, improvement by roads, canals, drainage, &c., of territorial surface, including interposing waters, as rivers, lakes, and also mines and minerals.

TERRITO'RIALIZE, v. t. To enlarge or extend by addition of territory.

TERRITO'RIALLY, adv. In regard to territory; by means of territory.

TER'RITORIED, a. Possessed of territory.

TER'RITORY, n. [Fr. territoire; It. and Sp. territorio; L. territorium, from terra, earth.] 1. The extent or compass of land within the bounds or belonging to the jurisdiction of any state, city, or other body.

> Linger not in my territories. Shak.
> They erected a house within their own territory. Hayward.
> Arts and sciences took their rise and flourished only in those small territories where the people were free. Swift.

2. A tract of land belonging to and under the dominion of a prince or state, lying at a distance from the parent country or from the seat of government; as, the territories of British India.—Territory of a judge in Scots law, the district over which his jurisdiction extends, in causes, and in judicial acts proper to him, and beyond which he has no judicial authority.

TER'ROR, n [L. terror, from terreo, to frighten; Fr. terreur; It. terrore.] 1. Extreme fear; violent dread; fright; fear that agitates the body and mind.

> The sword without and terror within; Deut. xxxii.
> The terrors of God do set themselves in array against me; Job vi.
> Amaze and terror seiz'd the rebel host. Milton.

2. That which may excite dread; the cause of extreme fear.

> Rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil; Rom. xiii.
> Those enormous terrors of the Nile. Prior.

3. In scrip., the sudden judgments of God are called terrors; Ps. lxxiii.—4. The threatenings of wicked men, or evil apprehended from them; 1 Pet. iii.—5. Awful majesty, calculated to impress fear; 2 Cor. v.—6. Death is emphatically styled the king of terrors.—Reign of terror, in the history of the first French Revolution, a term generally applied to that period during which the country was under the sway of those ferocious and blood-thirsty governors, who made the slaughter of persons of all ages, sexes, and conditions, who were considered obnoxious to their measures, the avowed principle of their authority. The reign of terror, properly so called, seems to have commenced in October 1793, when the revolutionary tribunal was put in permanent action, and to have ended in July 1794, on the overthrow of Robespierre and his accomplices.

TER'RORISM, n. A state of being terrified, or a state impressing terror.

TER'RORIST, n. One who prematurely or needlessly proclaims danger.—2. The name given to an agent and partizan of the French Revolution during the reign of terror.

TER'RORLESS, a. Free from terror.

TER'ROR-SMITTEN, a. Smitten with terror.

TER'ROR-STRUCK, a. Stricken with terror.

TERSE, a. (ters.) [L. tersus, from tergo, to wipe.] Cleanly written; neat; elegant without pompousness; as, terse language; a terse style.

> Diffus'd yet terse, poetical, though plain. Harte.

TERSELY, adv. (ters'ly.) Neatly.

TERSENESS, n. (ters'ness.) Neatness of style; smoothness of language.

TERSUL'PHURET, n. A sulphuret containing three equivalents of sulphur.

TER-TEN'ANT, n. [Fr. terre, and tenant.] The occupant of land.

TER'TIAL, a. A term applied to the quills growing on the last or innermost joint of a bird's wing.

TER'TIALS, n. In ornithology, the large feathers near the junction of the wing with the body.

TER'TIAN, a. [L. tertianus, from tertius, third.] Occurring every other day; as, a tertian fever.

TER'TIAN, n. A disease or fever whose paroxysms return every other day; an intermittent whose paroxysms occur after intervals of a little less than forty-eight hours.—2.† A measure of 84 gallons, the third part of a tun.

TER'TIARY, a. Third; of the third formation. Tertiary mountains are such as result from the ruins of other mountains promiscuously heaped together.—Tertiary formation, or tertiary strata, in geol., the uppermost great group of strata, a series of horizontal strata, more recent than chalk beds, consisting chiefly of sand and clay, and frequently embracing vast quantities of organic remains of the larger animals. It comprehends the alluvial formation, which embraces those deposits only which have resulted from causes still in operation; and the diluvial formation, which is constituted of such deposits as are supposed to have been produced by the deluge. In almost every part of the globe, strata of the tertiary series prevail, and yield astonishing numbers of shells, corals, crustacea, and other remains of marine, freshwater, and terrestrial invertebrata, and more locally, abundant layers of fishes, and rich deposits of bones of mammalia, &c. The tertiary strata have been subdivided into four principal groups, to which Mr. Lyell has assigned the terms eocene, miocene, older pliocene, and newer pliocene, each group being characterized by the relative proportion of recent and extinct species of shells therein contained. [See these terms.]

TER'TIATE, v. t. [L. tertius, third; tertio, to do every third day.] 1. To do any thing the third time.—2. To examine the thickness of the metal at the muzzle of a gun; or in general, to examine the thickness to ascertain the strength of ordnance.

TER'TIATED, pp. Done the third time.

TERTIUM QUID. [L.] A third something.

TER'TIUM SAL, n. A name given by the old chemists to a neutral salt, as being the product of an acid and an alkali, making a third substance different from either.

TERUN'CIUS, n. [L. ter, three times, and uncia, an ounce.] An ancient Roman coin, being the fourth part of the as, and containing three ounces.

TER'ZA RI'MA, n. [It. third or triple rhyme.] A complicated system of versification, borrowed by the early Italian poets from the Troubadours. Byron adopted it in his Prophecy of Dante.

TERZET'TO, n. [It.] In music, a piece for three voices; a composition in three parts.

TES'SELAR, a. Formed in squares.

TES'SELATE, v. t. [L. tessela, a little square stone.] To form into squares or checkers; to lay with checkered work.

TES'SELATED, pp. Checkered; formed in little squares or mosaic work. Tesselated pavement, in ancient arch., a pavement of mosaic work, composed of small square marbles, bricks, tiles, or pebbles of different colours.—2. In bot., spotted like a chess board; as, a tesselated leaf.

TES'SELATING, ppr. Forming in little squares.

TESSELA'TION, n. Mosaic work, or the operation of making it.

TES'SERA, TES'SELA, n. [L.] A small cube or square resembling our dice, and consisting of different materials, as marble, precious stones, ivory, glass, wood, or mother of pearl. These tesseræ or tesselæ, were used by the ancients to form the mosaic floors or pavements in houses, and for several other purposes.

TESSERA'IC, a. [L. tessera, a square thing.] Diversified by squares; tesselated.

TES'SERAL, a. Pertaining to or containing tesseræ.—2. In crystallography, a term applied to crystals having equal axes, like the cube.

TES'SULAR, a. [L. tessela, a little square stone; a die.] A term applied to a system of crystals. The cube, tetraëdron, and several other forms belong to the tessular system.

TEST, n. [L. testa, an earthen pot; It. testa or testo; Fr. têt.] In metallurgy, a large cupel, or a vessel in the nature of a cupel, formed of wood ashes and finely powdered brick dust, in which metals are melted for trial and refinement. [See CUPEL.]—2. Trial; examination by the cupel; hence, any critical trial and examination.

> Thy virtue, prince, has stood the test of fortune
> Like purest gold. Addison.

3. Means of trial.

> Each test and every light her muse will bear. Dryden.

4. That with which any thing is compared for proof of its genuineness; a standard.

> Life, force, and beauty must to all impart,
> At once the source, the end and test of art. Pope.

5. Discriminative characteristic; standard.

> Our test excludes your tribe from benefit. Dryden.

6. Judgment; distinction.

> Who would excel, when few can make a test
> Betwixt indifferent writing and the best? Dryden

7. In chem., a re-agent; a substance which is employed to detect the presence of any ingredient in a compound, by causing it to exhibit some known property; or it is a substance which, being added to another, indicates the chemical nature of that other substance, by producing certain changes in appearance and properties: Thus, infusion of galls is a test of the presence of iron, which it renders evident by the production of a black colour in water and other liquids, containing that metal; litmus is a test for determining the presence of acids when uncombined or in excess, as its blue colour is turned red by acids. Test-liquid, a solution of a substance employed as a test. In qualitative analysis, the presence of any particular ingredient in the substance under examination, is generally ascertained by mixing a test-liquid with the solution of the substance operated upon, and observing by the occurrence, or non-occurrence of a precipitate, whether the suspected substance is present or not.—Test-tube, a kind of tube for holding the mixtures of the solution of a substance to be analyzed with the test-liquid.

TEST, n. [L. testis, a witness, properly one that affirms.] An oath and declaration against transubstantiation, which all officers, civil and military, were obliged to take within six months after their admission. They were formerly obliged also to receive the sacrament, according to the usage of the Church of England. These requisitions were made by Stat. 25 Charles II. which is called the test-act. This act is usually conjoined with another called the corporation-act. The Test and Corporation acts were repealed in 1828, and a declaration set forth in the act substituted. [See CORPORATION.]

TEST, v. t. To compare with a standard; to try; to prove the truth or genuineness of any thing by experiment or by some fixed principle or standard; as, to test the soundness of a principle; to test the validity of an argument.

> The true way of testing its character, is to suppose it [the system] will be persevered in. Edin. Review.
> Experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution. Washington's Address.
> To test this position. Hamilton, Rep.
> In order to test the correctness of this system. Adams' Lect.
> This expedient has been already tested. Walsh, Rev.

2. To attest and date; as, a writing tested on such a day.—3. In metallurgy, to refine gold or silver by means of lead, in a test, by the destruction, vitrification, or scorification of all extraneous matter.

TES'TA, n. [L.] A shell; commonly applied to the shelly covering of testaceous animals.—2. In bot., the outer coat or integument of a seed.

TEST'ABLE, a. [L. testor. See TESTAMENT.] That may be devised or given by will; capable of witnessing.

TESTA'CEA, TESTA'CEANS, n. plur. Shelled animals. The third order of Vermes, in the Linnæan system. This order is composed of conchiferous molluscs and ascidiæ, arranged by Linn., under thirty-six genera. The testacea differ from the crustacea in their composition, the calcareous part of the shells of testacea being carbonate of lime, whereas in the shells of crustacea it is phosphate of lime. The testacea also retain their shells as long as they live; the crustacea cast them annually, or at least periodically. The term testacea is applied by Cuvier to an order of his class Acephala. [See VERMES.]

TESTA'CEAN, n. One of the testacea.

TESTA'CEAN, a. Relating to the testacea.

TESTACEL'LUS, n. A genus of testaceous pulmoniferous molluscs, which are furnished with a diminutive shell, forming a shield or protection to the heart. Two or three species have been enumerated; they infest gardens and nurseries.

TESTACEOG'RAPHY. See TESTACEOLOGY.

TESTACEOL'OGY, n. [L. testacea or testa, and Gr. λογος.] The science of testaceous molluscs, or of those soft and simple animals which have a testaceous covering. The term is synonymous with conchology.

TESTA'CEOUS, a. [L. testaceus, from testa, a shell. The primary sense of testa, testis, testor, &c., is to thrust or drive; hence the sense of hardness, compactness, in testa and testis; and hence the sense of attest, contest, detest, testator, testament, all implying a sending, driving, &c.] Pertaining to shells; consisting of a hard shell, or having a hard continuous shell. Testaceous animals are such as have a strong thick entire shell, as oysters and clams; and are thus distinguished from crustaceous animals, whose shells are more thin and soft, and consist of several pieces jointed, as lobsters.—Testaceous medicines, are all preparations of shells and like substances, as the powders of crabs' claws, pearl, &c.

TEST'AMENT, n. [Fr. from L. testamentum, from testor, to make a will.] 1. A solemn authentic instrument in writing, by which a person declares his will as to the disposal of his estate and effects after his death. This is otherwise called a will, but in strictness of language, the term will is limited to land, and testament to personal estate. A testament, to be valid, must be made when the testator is of sound mind, and it must be written, subscribed, &c., in such manner as the law prescribes. In Scots law, the word testament, in the strictly legal acceptation, signifies a deed in writing, by which the granter appoints an executor, that is, a person to administer his movable estate after his death, for the behoof of all who may be interested in it. A testament may thus consist merely of the nomination of an executor, or it may contain, along with such a nomination, clauses bequeathing, in the form of legacies, either the whole or part of the movable estate. In its more common meaning, however, a testament is a declaration of what a person wills to be done with his movable estate, after his death. Any person has power to execute an effectual testament who is of sound mind at the time, although he be labouring under bodily sickness, or even be on deathbed. A testament is effectual only with regard to the movable estate of the testator, and even in regard to things strictly movable, a person cannot dispose by testament of more than that share of them which is termed the dead's part; he must not encroach upon the jus relictæ, or legitim. [See these terms.] A testament may be revoked at any time during the life of the testator. All testaments containing the nomination of an executor, or the bequest of a legacy of greater value than £100 Scots, must be in writing, and properly tested and signed before witnesses, but if it be in the testator's own handwriting, witnesses are not required. [For more information respecting testaments and wills in English and Scots law, see WILL. See also NUNCUPATIVE.]—2. The name of each general division of the canonical books of the sacred Scriptures; as, the Old Testament; the New Testament. The name is equivalent to covenant, and in our use of it, we apply it to the books which contain the old and new dispensations; that of Moses, and that of Jesus Christ.

TESTAMENT'ARY, a. Pertaining to a will or to wills; as, testamentary causes in law.—2. Bequeathed by will; given by testament; as, testamentary charities.—3. Done by testament or will.—Testamentary guardian, of a minor, is one appointed by the deed or will of a father, until the child becomes of age.

TESTAMENTA'TION, n. The act or power of giving by will. [Little used.]

TESTA'TRIX, n. A woman who makes and leaves a will at death.

TES'TE, n. [L. testor, to witness.] In law, that part of a writ wherein the date is contained, beginning with the words teste meipso, if it be an original writ; or teste, the lord chief, if it be judicial. [See WRIT.]

TEST'ED, pp. Tried or approved by a test; witnessed.

TEST'ER, n. [Fr. tête, head.] The top covering of a bed, consisting of some species of cloth, supported by the bedstead.

TEST'ER, TEST'ON, n. An old coin, originally French, and named from the head upon it. As an English coin, its value from the time of Edward VI. was about sixpence.

TES'TERN, n. A sixpence.

TES'TERN, v. t. To present with a sixpence.

TEST'ES, n. plur. [L. testis.] In anat., the testicles.

TEST'ICLE, n. [L. testiculus; literally a hard mass, like testa, a shell.] The testicles are the glands which secrete the seminal fluid in males.

TESTIC'ULATE, a. In bot., shaped like a testicle. A testiculate root is one which has one or two rounded egg-shaped tubercles; as in Jerusalem artichoke.

Testiculate root (Orchis morio).

TESTIFICA'TION, n. [L. testificatio. See TESTIFY.] The act of testifying or giving testimony or evidence; as, a direct testification of our homage to God.

TEST'IFICATOR, n. One who gives witness or evidence.

TEST'IFIED, pp. [from testify.] Given in evidence; witnessed; published; made known.

TEST'IFIER, n. [from testify.] One who testifies; one who gives testimony or bears witness to prove anything.

TEST'IFY, v. i. [L. testificor; testis and facio; It. testificare; Sp. testificar.] 1. To make a solemn declaration, verbal or written, to establish some fact; to give testimony for the purpose of communicating to others a knowledge of something not known to them.

Jesus needed not that any should testify of man, for he knew what was in man; John ii.

2. In judicial proceedings, to make a solemn declaration under oath, for the purpose of establishing or making proof of some fact to a court; to give testimony in a cause depending before a tribunal.

One witness shall not testify against any person to cause him to die; Numb. xxxv.

3. To declare a charge against one.

O Israel, I will testify against thee; Ps. l.

4. To protest; to declare against.

I testified against them in the day wherein they sold provisions; Neh. xiii.

TEST'IFY, v. t. To affirm or declare solemnly for the purpose of establishing a fact.

We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; John iii.

2. In law, to affirm or declare under oath before a tribunal, for the purpose of proving some fact.—3. To bear witness to; to support the truth of by testimony.

To testify the gospel of the grace of God; Acts xx.

4. To publish and declare freely.

Testifying both to the Jews, and also to the Greeks, repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ; Acts xx.

TEST'IFYING, ppr. Affirming solemnly or under oath, for the purpose of establishing a fact; giving testimony; bearing witness; declaring.

TEST'ILY, adv. [from testy.] Fretfully; peevishly: with petulance.

TESTIMO'NIAL, n. [Fr. from L. testimonium.] A writing or certificate in favour of one's character or good conduct. Testimonials are required on many occasions. A person must have testimonials of his learning and good conduct, before he can obtain license to preach. Testimonials are to be signed by persons of known respectability of character.

TESTIMO'NIAL, a. Relating to, or containing testimony.

TEST'IMONY, n. [L. testimonium.] 1. A solemn declaration or affirmation made for the purpose of establishing or proving some fact. Such affirmation, in judicial proceedings, may be verbal or written, but must be under oath. Testimony differs from evidence; testimony is the declaration of a witness, and evidence is the effect of that declaration on the mind, or the degree of light which it affords. [See EVIDENCE.]—2. Affirmation; declaration. These doctrines are supported by the uniform testimony of the fathers. The belief of past facts must depend on the evidence of human testimony, or the testimony of historians.—3. Open attestation; profession.

Thou for the testimony of truth hast borne Universal reproach. Milton.

4. Witness; evidence; proof of some fact.

Shake off the dust under your feet, for a testimony against them; Mark vi.

Sacrifices were appointed by God for a testimony of his hatred of sin. Clarke.

12. Evidence suggested to the mind; as, the testimony of conscience; 2 Cor. i.—13. Attestation; confirmation.—Perpetuation of testimony. [See PERPETUATION.]

TEST'IMONY,† v. t. To witness.

TEST'INESS, n. [from testy.] Fretfulness; peevishness; petulance.

Testiness is a disposition or aptness to be angry. Locke.

TEST'ING, ppr. [from test.] Trying for proof; proving by a standard or by experiment.

A plan for testing alkalies. Ure.

Testing clause. In Scots law, the testing clause is the technical name given to the clause in a formal written deed or instrument, by which it is authenticated according to the forms of the law. It consists essentially of the name and designation, or addition of the writer, the mention of the number of pages of which the deed consists, and the names and designations of the witnesses.

TEST'ING, n. The act of trying for proof.—2. In metallurgy, the operation of refining large quantities of gold or silver by means of lead, in the vessel called a test. In this process the extraneous matter is vitrified, scorified, or destroyed, and the metal left pure. This operation is performed in the manner of cupellation.

TEST'ON, TEST'ER, n. Old names for a sixpence, in England. [Dean Swift is among the last writers who have used either term.]

TESTOON', or TESTO'NE, n. A silver coin in Italy and Portugal. In Florence, the testoon is worth two lire or three paoli, about seventeen pence sterling. At Lisbon, the testoon, as a money of account, is valued at 100 rees, about seven pence sterling.

TEST'-PAPER, n. A paper impregnated with a chemical re-agent, as litmus, &c.

TESTU'DINAL, a. Pertaining to the tortoise, or resembling it.

TESTUDINA'TA, n. An order of Chelonian reptiles comprehending the tortoises. [See TORTOISE.]

TESTU'DINATED, TESTU'DINATE, a. [L. testudo, a tortoise.] Roofed; arched; vaulted; resembling the back of a tortoise.

TESTUDIN'EOUS, a. Resembling the shell of a tortoise.

TESTU'DO, n. [L.] A tortoise. Among the Romans, a cover or screen which a body of troops formed with their shields or targets, by holding them over their heads when standing close to each other. This cover resembled Roman Testudo from Trajan's Pillar.

the back of a tortoise, and served to shelter the men from darts, stones, and other missiles. A similar defence was sometimes formed of boards and moved on wheels.—2. In med., a broad soft tumour between the skull and the skin, called also talpa or mole, as resembling the subterraneous windings of the tortoise or mole.—3. In zool. [See TORTOISE.]

TEST'Y, a. [from Fr. teste, tête, the head, or from the same root.] Fretful; peevish; petulant; easily irritated. Pyrrhus cured his testy courtiers with a kick.

Must I stand and crouch under your testy humour? Shak.

TETA'NIC, a. Pertaining to, or denoting tetanus; as, tetanic spasm.

TET'ANUS, n. [Gr. τετανος, stretched.] Spasm with rigidity; a disease characterized by a more or less violent and rigid spasm of many, or all, of the muscles of voluntary motion. The varieties of this disease are: 1. Trismus, the locked jaw; 2. Opisthotonos, where the body is thrown back by spasmodic contractions of the muscles; 3. Emprosthotonos, where the body is bent forwards; 4. Pleurosthotonos, where the body is bent to one side. These affections arise more frequently in warm climates than in cold. They are occasioned either by exposure to cold, or by some irritation of the nerves, in consequence of local injury by puncture, incision, or laceration; hence, the distinction of tetanus into idiopathic and traumatic. Lacerated wounds of tendinous parts prove, in warm climates, a never-failing source of these complaints. In cold climates as well as in warm, the locked jaw (in which the spasms are confined to the muscles of the jaw or throat,) frequently arises in consequence of the amputation of a limb, or from lacerated wounds. Tetanic affections, which arise in consequence of a wound or local injury, usually prove fatal.

TETÄRTO-PRISMAT'IC, a. [Gr. τεταρτος, fourth.] One fourth prismatic; applied to oblique rhombic prisms.

TETAUG', n. The name of a fish on the coast of New England; called also black fish, or rock fish.

TETCH'INESS, or TETCH'Y. See TECHINESS, TECHY. [Corrupted from touchy, touchiness.]

TETE, n. [Fr. head.] False hair; a kind of wig or cap of false hair.

TETE'-A-TETE', adv. [Fr.] Head to head; cheek by jowl; in private; in close confabulation.

TETE'-A-TETE', n. An interview; a friendly or close conversation.

TETE'-DU-PONT', n. [Fr.] In fort., a work that defends the head or entrance of a bridge.

TETH'ER, n. [See TEDDER.] A rope or chain by which a beast is confined for feeding within certain limits.

TETH'ER, v. t. To confine, as a beast, with a rope or chain for feeding within certain limits.

TETH'ERED, pp. Confined with a rope.

TETHY'DANS, n. [See TETHYS.] A tribe of tunicated acephalous molluscs, having for its type the ancient genus Tethys.

TETH'YS, n. [Gr. τηθυς, an ascidian.] The name given by Linnæus to a genus of Vermes testacea, characterized by having two rows of branchiæ, resembling branching tufts along the back, and a very large membranous and fringed veil on the head, which shortens as it curves under the mouth; on the base of the veil are two compressed tentacula, from whose margin projects a small conical point. In the system of Cuvier, these animals form a genus of nudibranchiate Gastropods. They inhabit the Mediterranean.

TETRABRANCHIA'TA, n. [Gr. τετρα, four, and βραγχια, gills.] The name given by Owen to his second order of the class Cephalopoda. Of this order the pearly nautilus may be regarded as the type.

TETRACAUL'ODON, n. A fossil extinct animal of the miocene period, allied to the mastodon.

TET'RACHORD, n. [Gr. τετρα, four, and χορδη, a chord.] In ancient music, a diatessaron; a series of four sounds, of which the extremes, or first and last, constituted a fourth. These extremes were immutable; the two middle sounds were changeable.

TETRACHO'TOMOUS, a. [Gr. τετραχως, in a fourfold manner, and τεμνω, to cut or divide.] In bot., an epithet for a stem that ramifies in fours.

TETRACO'LON, n. In prosody, a stanza, or division of lyric poetry, consisting of four verses.

TET'RAD, n. [Gr. τετρας, the number four.] The number four; a collection of four things.

TETRADAC'TYL, n. [Gr.] An animal having four toes.

TETRADAC'TYLOUS, a. [Gr. τετρα and δακτυλος.] Having four toes.

TETRADIAPA'SON, n. [Gr. τετρα, four, and diapason.] Quadruple diapason or octave; a musical chord, otherwise called a quadruple eighth or twenty-ninth.

TETRADRACH'MA, n. [Gr. τετρα and δραχμη.] In ancient coinage, a silver coin worth four drachmas, 2*s.* 7*d.* sterling; the drachma being estimated at 7¾*d.* sterling.

TETRADYNAM'IAN, n. [Gr. τετρα, δυναμις, power, strength.] In bot., a plant having six stamens, four of which are longer than the others.—Tetradynamia is the name of the 15th class of plants in the Linnæan system, comprehending those plants which bear hermaphrodite flowers, with six stamens, four of them longer than the other two. It contains two orders, siliculosa, of which colewort is an example; and siliquosa, of which the mustard and cabbage are examples. All the plants of this class belong to the nat. order Cruciferæ.

Tetradynamian (Wal flower).

TETRADYNAM'IAN, } a. Having six
TETRADYN'AMOUS, } stamens, four of which are uniformly longer than the others.

TETRAE'DRON. See TETRAHEDRON.

TET'RAGON, n. [Gr. τετραγωνος: τετρα, for τεσσαρες, four, and γωνια, an angle.] 1. In geom., a figure having four angles; a quadrangle; as a square, a rhombus, &c. But the term is usually applied to the square only, when used, which it seldom is.—2. In astrol., an aspect of two planets with regard to the earth, when they are distant from each other ninety degrees, or the fourth of a circle.

TETRAG'ONAL, a. Pertaining to a tetragon; having four angles or sides. Thus a square, a parallelogram, a rhombus, and a trapezium, are tetragonal figures.—2. In bot., having prominent longitudinal angles.—Tetragonal leaf, a leaf having four edges, as in Iris tuberosa.—Tetragonal ovary, one that is four sided.—Tetragonal stem, one that has four sides; as, in Lamium purpureum.

TETRAGONIA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of plants, placed by Lindley in his curvembryose group of incomplete Dicotyledons, and having the genus Tetragonia, Linn. as its type. The plants of this order have thick succulent leaves.—Tetragonia expansa is a native of New Zealand and Japan, and is used by the natives of those countries as a remedy for scorbutic complaints. The genera Aizoon, Sesuvium, and Miltus, are also included in this order.

TET'RAGONISM,† n. The quadrature of the circle.

TETRAGONOL'OBUS, n. A genus of plants nat. order Leguminosæ, papilionaceous division. The species are natives of Europe, and consist of herbs with broad leafy stipules, trifoliate leaves, and flowers seated on axillary peduncles, furnished with a bract. They have a close resemblance to bird's foot trefoil, and in gardens are well adapted for ornamenting rock work.—T. purpureus, or purple winged pea, is a native of the south of Europe. There is a variety of this species (T. p. minor,) the legumes of which are cooked and eaten in southern regions, in the same manner as French beans.

TETRAGRAM'MATON, n. [Gr. τετρα, four, and γραμμα, a letter.] The Hebrew name יהוה, Jehovah, so called because it consists of four letters. Among several ancient nations besides the Jews, the name of the supreme deity was expressed by four letters; as, the Assyrian Adad, the Egyptian Amon, the Persian Syre, the Greek Θεος, the Roman Deus. Hence, four became a mystic number, and was often symbolized to represent the supreme deity.

TET'RAGYN, n. [Gr. τετρα, four, and γυνη, a female.] In bot., a monoclinous or hermaphrodite plant having four pistils.—Tetragynia is the name of an order of plants in several of the classes in the Linnæan system. It comprehends those plants which have four pistils. The Ilex, grass of Parnassus, Parnassia palustris, &c., furnish examples.

TETRAGYN'IAN, } a. Relating to a
TETRAGYN'OUS, } monoclinous or hermaphrodite plant which has four pistils.

TETRAHE'DRAL, } a. [See TETRA-
TETRAE'DRAL, } HEDRON.] Having four equal triangles.—2. In bot., having four sides.

TETRAHE'DRON, } n. [Gr. τετρα,
TETRAE'DRON, } four, and εδρα, side.] In geom., a figure comprehended under four equilateral and equal triangles; or it is a triangular pyramid, having four equal and equilateral faces. It is one of the five regular Platonic bodies of that figure.

TETRAHEXAHE'DRAL, a. [Gr. τετρα, four, and hexahedral.] In crystallography, exhibiting four ranges of faces, one above another, each range containing six faces.

TETRAHEXAHE'DRON, n. [Gr. τετρα, four, and hexahedron.] A solid bounded by twenty-four equal faces, four corresponding to each face of the cube.

TETRAME'RA, n. [Gr. τετρα, and μηρος, a thigh.] Latreille's name for a section of coleopterous insects, distinguished by having all the tarsi four-jointed; as in the Rhynchophora.

TETRAM'EROUS, a. In bot., consisting of four parts. A flower is said to be tetramerous when the different whorls, as calyx, corolla, and stamens, have each four parts.

TETRAM'ETER, n. [Gr. τετρα, four, and μετρον, measure.] In ancient poetry, a verse consisting of four measures, or eight feet, which may be iambic, trochaic, or anapæstic.

TETRAN'DER, n. [Gr. τετρα, four, and ανηρ, a male.] In bot., a monoclinous or hermaphrodite plant, having four stamens.—Tetrandria is the name of the fourth class of plants in the Linnæan system, comprehending such as have four stamens. The orders belonging to this class are Monogynia, Digynia, and Tetragynia. The teasel, dodder, and pond-weed, furnish examples.

Tetrander (Ludwigia Jussiæoides).

TETRAN'DRIAN, } a. Being mono-
TETRAN'DROUS, } clinous or hermaphrodite, and having four stamens.

TET'RAO, n. [L. a bustard.] The name given by Linnæus to an extensive genus of gallinaceous birds, characterized by a naked and most generally red band, which occupies the place of the eye-brow. It includes all the various species of grouse, the francolins, partridges, and quails. Latham, however, has restricted the genus Tetrao to those species of which the feet are covered with feathers, and are without spurs, with naked toes, and a round or forked tail. These are the true grouse, but the term grouse is also extended to the ptarmigans.

TETRAO'NIDÆ, n. The grouse family, the third family of the Rasores in the arrangement of Swainson. It is composed of the partridges, grouse, and quails, all of which agree in the extreme shortness of their tails, and of their hind-toe. Nearly all the grouse have the toes and legs more or less covered with soft feathers, but this character disappears in the partridges. In the quails we have a miniature resemblance of partridges, but the tail is so short as to be scarcely perceptible. Grouse inhabit Europe, Asia, Africa, and America, and abound chiefly in heathy mountains and plains, and piny forests, at a distance from mankind. The black cock (Tetrao tetrix); the red grouse (Lagopus scoticus,) and the common ptarmigan (Lagopus mutus,) are British species. The capercailzie, the largest and most noble grouse of Europe, although once plentiful in Scotland, has altogether disappeared from that country; but the marquis of Breadalbane and other noblemen have recently attempted to reintroduce it, with every prospect of success.

TETRAPET'ALOUS, a. [Gr. τετρα, four, and πεταλον, leaf.] In bot., containing four distinct petals or flower leaves; as, a tetrapetalous corolla.

TETRAPHAR'MACON, n. [Gr.] A combination of wax, resin, lard, and pitch, composing an ointment.

TETRAPH'YLLOUS, a. [Gr. τετρα, four, and φυλλον, leaf.] In bot., having four leaves; consisting of four distinct leaves or leaflets.

TET'RAPLA, n. [Gr. τετρα, four, and απλοω, to unfold or explain.] The name given to an edition of the Bible, arranged by Origen in four columns, containing four Greek versions; viz., the Septuagint, that of Aquila, that of Symmachus, and that of Theodosian.

TETRAP'ODY, n. A series of four feet.

TETRAP'TERANS, n. Insects which have four wings.

TETRAP'TEROUS, a. Having four wings.

TET'RAPTOTE, n. [Gr. τετρα, four, and πτωσις, case.] In gram., a noun that has four cases only; as, L. astus, &c.

TE'TRARCH, n. [Gr. τετραρχης: τετρα, four, and αρχη, rule.] A Roman governor of the fourth part of a province; a subordinate prince. In time, this word came to denote any petty king or sovereign.

TETRAR'CHATE, n. The fourth part of a province under a Roman tetrarch; or the office or jurisdiction of a tetrarch.

TETRÄRCHICAL, a. Pertaining to a tetrarchy.

TET'RARCHY, n. The same as Tetrarchate.

TETRASE'PALOUS, a. [Gr. τετρα, four, and sepal, the leaf of a calyx.] In bot., a term applied to a calyx which is composed of four sepals.

TETRASPAS'TON, n. [Gr. τετρα, four, and σπαω, to pull.] A machine in which four pulleys all act together.

TETRASPERM'OUS, a. [Gr. τετρα, four, and σπερμα, seed.] In bot., having four seeds. A tetraspermous plant is one which produces four seeds in each flower, as the rough-leaved or verticillate plants.

TETRAS'TIC, n. [τετραστιχος: τετρα, four, and στιχος, verse.] A stanza, epigram, or poem consisting of four verses.

TET'RASTYLE, n. [Gr. τετρα, four, and στυλος, column.] In ancient arch., a colonnade or portico, consisting of four columns.

TETRASYLLAB'IC, } a. Consisting of four TETRASYLLAB'ICAL, } syllables.

TETRASYL'LABLE, n. [Gr. τετρα, four, and συλλαβη, syllable.] A word consisting of four syllables.

TET'RIC, } † a. [L. tetricus.]
TET'RICAL, } Froward; perverse;
TET'RICOUS, } harsh; sour; rugged.

TET'RICALNESS,† n. Frowardness; perverseness.

TETRIC'ITY,† n. Crabbedness; perverseness.

TET'RODON, n. [Gr. τετρα, four, and οδους, a tooth.] A genus of fishes of the order Plectognathi, distinguished by the possession of four large teeth, the jaws being each divided by a central suture. They have the power of inflating the body with wind, which causes them to float on the surface of the water, and gives them an almost spherical form. These fishes are confined to the seas of warm climates. Some of them are called Globe-fish. [See GLOBE-FISH.]

TET'TER, n. [Sax. teter, tetr; allied perhaps to L. titillo.] 1. In med., a vague name of several cutaneous diseases.—2. In farriery, a cutaneous disease of animals, which spreads on the body in different directions, and occasions a troublesome itching.

TET'TER, v. t. To affect with the disease called tetters.

TET'TER-TOT'TER,† n. A balancing play of children, similar to see-saw. Called, also, titter-cum-totter.

TET'TISH,† a. [Qu. Fr. tête, head.] Captious; testy.

TEU'CRIUM, n. A genus of plants. [See GERMANDER.]

TEU'THIDÆ, or TEU'THIDANS, n. Owen's name for his fourth family of decapodous Cephalopods. The common calamary or pen-fish (Loligo vulgaris,) abundant on our coasts, is an example.

TEUTON'IC, a. Pertaining to the Teutones or Teutons, a people of Germany, or to their language; as a noun, the language of the Teutons, the parent of the German, Dutch, and Anglo-Saxon or native English. — Teutonic order, a military religious order of knights, established toward the close of the twelfth century, in imitation of the Templars and Hospitallers. It was composed chiefly of Teutons or Germans, who marched to the Holy Land in the crusades, and was established in that country for charitable purposes. It increased in numbers and strength till it became master of all Prussia, Livonia, and Pomerania. It was abolished by Napoleon in 1809.—Teutonic nations, the different nations of the Teutonic race. These are divided into three branches: 1. The High Germans, including the Teutonic inhabitants of Upper and Middle Germany; those of Switzerland, and the greater part of the Germans of Hungary. 2. The Saxon branch, including the Frisians, the Old Saxons or Low Germans, the Dutch, the Flemings, the Saxons of Transylvania, the English, the Scotch, and the greater part of the inhabitants of North America. 3. The Scandinavian branch, including the Icelanders, the Norwegians, the Danes, and the Swedes. Upwards of eighty-two millions of inhabitants belong to the Teutonic race.

TEW,† v. t. To work; to soften; to beat in order to soften, as hemp; to press, push, drag, or tumble about. [See TAW.]—2. To work; to pull or teaze; among seamen.

TEW, v. i. To labour.

TEW,† n. [probably tow.] Materials for any thing.—2.† An iron chain.

TEW'EL, n. [Fr. tuyau.] A pipe; a funnel, as for smoke; an iron pipe in a forge to receive the pipe of a bellows.

TEW'TAW,† v. t. To beat; to break. [See TEW.]

TEXT, n. [Fr. texte; L. textus, woven; It. testo. See TEXTURE.] 1. A discourse or composition on which a note or commentary is written. Thus we speak of the text or original of the scripture, in relation to the comments upon it. Infinite pains have been taken to ascertain and establish the genuine original text. — 2. A verse or passage of scripture which a preacher selects as the subject of a discourse.

> How oft, when Paul has served us with a text,
> Has Epictetus, Plato, Tully preach'd.
> Cowper.

3. Any particular passage of scripture, used as authority in argument for proof of a doctrine. In modern sermons, texts of scripture are not as frequently cited as they were formerly.—4. In ancient law authors, the four Gospels, by way of eminence.—5. A particular kind of handwriting; as, large text; small text; middle text.

TEXT, v. t. To write, as a text. [Not much used.]

TEXT'-BOOK, n. In universities and colleges, a classic author written with wide spaces between the lines, to give room for the observations or interpretation dictated by the master or regent. —2. A book containing the leading principles or most important points of a science or branch of learning, arranged in order for the use of students.

TEXT'-HAND, n. A large hand in writing; so called because it was the practice to write the text of a book in a large hand, and the notes in a smaller hand.

TEX'TILE, a. [L. textilis.] Woven, or capable of being woven; as, textile fabrics; textile materials, such as wool, flax, silk, cotton.

TEX'TILE, n. That which is or may be woven.

TEXT'-MAN, n. A man ready in the quotation of texts.

TEXT'UALIST, } n. [Fr. textuaire,
TEXT'UARIST, } from texte.] 1. One
TEXT'UARY, } who is well versed in the scriptures, and can readily quote texts.—2. One who adheres to the text. Among the Jews, the Karaites have been called Textuaries, from their adherence to the text of the Jewish scriptures.

TEXT'UALLY, adv. Placed in the text or body of a work.

TEXT'UARY, a. Textual; contained in the text.—2. Serving as a text; authoritative.

TEXT'UIST, n. One ready in the quotation of texts.

TEXT'URE, n. [L. textura, textus, from texo, to weave.] 1. The act of weaving.—2. A web; that which is woven.

> Others, far on the grassy dale,
> Their humble texture weave. Thomson.

3. The disposition or connection of threads, filaments, or other slender bodies interwoven; as, the texture of cloth or of a spider's web.—4. The disposition of the several parts of any body in connection with each other; or the manner in which the constituent parts are united; as, the texture of earthy substances or fossils; the texture of a plant; the texture of paper, of a hat, or skin; a loose texture; or a close compact texture.—5. In anat. [See TISSUE.]

THACK, for Thatch, is Scotch, but is used as a local term in several parts of England.—Thack-tiles, an old term for tiles or slates used for covering a roof. [See THATCH.]

THALAMIF'LORÆ, n. A subclass of exogenous or dicotyledonous plants in which the sepals and petals are distinct, and the stamens are inserted on the thalamus or receptacle, being thus hypogynous.

THAL'AMUS, n. [Gr. θαλαμος, a bed.] In anat., a part of the brain from which the optic nerve derives one of its origins.—2. In bot., the part on which the ovary is situated, as the core in the fruit of a raspberry. Some botanists call it the receptacle of the fruit.

THALAS'SEMA, n. [Gr. θαλασσα, the sea.] The name given by Cuvier to a genus of footless Echinoderms, having the body oval or oblong, with the proboscis in form of a reflected lamina or spoon, but not forked.

THALASSI'DROMA, n. [Gr. θαλασσα, the sea, and δρομος, the act of running.] The generic name of the Petrels. [See PETREL.]

THALASSIN'IANS, n. A family of burrowing macrurous Decapods, remarkable for the extreme elongation of their abdomen, and the small degree of consistence of their integuments.

THA'LER, n. [L. thalerus.] A German coin, value about three shillings sterling. It is the dollar of Germany.

THALI'A, n. [Gr. θαλια, from θαλλω, to flourish, to bloom.] In antiquity, one of the nine muses, who presided over husbandry and planting, and was also regarded as the patroness of pastoral and comic poetry. She is represented leaning on a column, with a comic mask in her right hand, and a shepherd's crook in her left.

Thalia, after an antique statue.

THALIC'TRUM, n. Meadow-rue, a genus of plants. [See MEADOW-RUE.]

THAL'IDANS, n. [Gr. θαλια, bloom.] That group of segregate naked acephalous molluscans, of which Thalia is the type. They have a small crest or vertical fin near the posterior extremity of the back.

THAL'LITE, n. [Gr. θαλλος, a green twig.] In min., a substance variously denominated by different authors. It is the epidote of Haüy, the delphinite of Saussure, and the pistacite of Werner. It occurs both crystallized and in masses.

THAL'LOGEN, } n. A name given
THAL'LOPHYTE, } to cellular plants which have a thallus, as lichens.

THAL'LUS. n. [Gr. θαλλος, an olive bud, or green bough.] In bot., a term generally applied to that part of a cryptogamic plant which bears the reproductive organs, and constitutes the principal part of its vegetation. In lichens, the thallus or frond constitutes the great bulk of the plant. In mosses it is a leafy branched tuft, with the cellular tissue particularly large. In the algæ, the term thallus is applied to the whole plant, whilst in the fungi it is used synonymously with Thalamus.

THAM'MUZ, n. The tenth month of the Jewish civil year, containing 29 days, and answering to a part of June and a part of July.—2. The name of a deity among the Phenicians.

THAN, adv. or conj. [Sax. thanne; Goth. than; D. dan. This word signifies also then, both in English and Dutch. The Germans express the sense by als, as.] This word is placed after some comparative adjective or adverb, to express comparison between what precedes and what follows. Thus Elijah said, I am not better than my fathers. Wisdom is better than strength. Israel loved Joseph more than all his children. All nations are counted less than nothing. I who am less than the least of all saints. The last error shall be worse than the first. He that denies the faith is worse than an infidel. It also often follows other, and even else. After more, or an equivalent termination, the following word implies less, or worse; after less, or an equivalent termination, it implies more or better.

THĀNAGE, n. The land granted to a thane; the district in which the thane anciently presided.

THANE, n. [Sax. thegn, thægn, a minister or servant; thegnian, thenian, to serve; D. and G. dienen, to serve; Sw. tiena, to serve; tienare, a servant; Dan. tiener, to serve; tiener, a servant.] In early Eng. hist., a title of honour belonging to the Anglo-Saxon nobility. In its original meaning, it signified a minister or honourable retainer, and was applied to the followers of kings and chieftains. The thanes in England were formerly persons of some dignity; of these there were two orders, the king's thanes, who attended the Saxon and Danish kings in their courts, and held lands immediately of them; and the ordinary thanes, who were lords of manors, and who had a particular jurisdiction within their limits. In a later age of the Anglo-Saxon power, the term thane seems to have been applied to all landed proprietors who were below the rank of earl, and above that of alderman, and had the privilege of assisting in framing the laws. The rank of thane implied the possession of a certain amount of landed property, and five hides of land is supposed to have been the amount required for a thane of the highest order. After the Conquest, this title was disused, and baron took its place. In Scotland, thane was a recognised title down to the end of the 15th century, and it appears to have implied from the first a higher dignity than in England, and to have been, for the most part, synonymous with earl, which title was generally annexed to the territory of a whole county.

THĀNEDOM, n. The property or jurisdiction of a thane.

THĀNE-LANDS, n. Lands granted to thanes.

THĀNESHIP, n. The state or dignity of a thane; or his seignory.

THANK, v.t. [Sax. thancian; G. and D. danken; Ice. thacka; Sw. tacka; Dan. takker. We see by the Gothic dialects that n is not radical. To ascertain the primary sense, let us attend to its compounds; G. abdanken, [which in English would be off-thank,] to dismiss, discharge, discard, send away, put off, to disband or break, as an officer; verdanken, to owe or be indebted; D. afdanken, to cashier or discharge. These senses imply a sending. Hence, thank is probably from the sense of giving, that is, a render or return.] 1. To express gratitude for a favour; to make acknowledgments to one for kindness bestowed.

We are bound to thank God always for you; 2 Thess. i.

Joab bowed himself and thanked the king; 2 Sam. xiv.

2. It is used ironically.

Weigh the danger with the doubtful bliss,
And thank yourself, if aught should fall amiss. Dryden.

THANK, } n. generally in the plural.
THANKS, } [Sax. thanc; Gael. tainc.] Expression of gratitude; an acknowledgment made to express a sense of favour or kindness received. Gratitude is the feeling or sentiment excited by kindness; thanks are the expression of that sentiment; Luke vi.

Thanks be to God who giveth us the victory; 1 Cor. xv.

Thanks be to God for his unspeakable gift; 2 Cor. ix.

He took bread and gave thanks to God; Acts xxvii.

THANK'ED, pp. Having received expressions of gratitude.

THANK'FUL, a. [Sax. thancfull; Gael. taincal.] Grateful; impressed with a sense of kindness received, and ready to acknowledge it. The Lord's supper is to be celebrated with a thankful remembrance of his sufferings and death.

Be thankful to him and bless his name; Ps. c.

THANK'FULLY, adv. With a grateful sense of favour or kindness received.

If you have liv'd, take thankfully the past. Dryden.

THANK'FULNESS, n. Expression of gratitude; acknowledgment of a favour.—2. Gratitude; a lively sense of good received.

The celebration of these holy mysteries being ended, retire with all thankfulness of heart for having been admitted to that heavenly feast. Taylor.

THANK'ING, ppr. Expressing gratitude for good received.

THANK'LESS, a. Unthankful; ungrateful; not acknowledging favours.

That she may feel
How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is
To have a thankless child. Shak.

2. Not deserving thanks, or not likely to gain thanks; as, a thankless office.

THANK'LESSNESS, n. Ingratitude; failure to acknowledge a kindness.

THANK'-OFFERING, n. [thank and offering.] An offering made in acknowledgment of mercy.

THANKSGIVE,† v. t. (thanks'giv.) [thanks and give.] To celebrate or distinguish by solemn rites.

THANKS'GIVER, n. One who gives thanks or acknowledges a kindness.

THANKS'GIVING, ppr. Rendering thanks for good received.

THANKS'GIVING, n. The act of rendering thanks or expressing gratitude for favours or mercies.

Every creature of God is good, and nothing to be refused, if received with thanksgiving; 1 Tim. iv.

2. A public celebration of divine goodness; also, a day set apart for religious services, specially to acknowledge the goodness of God, either in any remarkable deliverance from calamities or danger, or in the ordinary dispensation of his bounties.

THANK-WORTH'INESS, n. The state of being thank-worthy.

THANK'-WORTHY, a. [thank and worthy.] Deserving thanks; meritorious; 1 Pet. ii.

THA'NUS, n. [Law Latin.] A thane.

THAP'SIA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Umbelliferæ. The species are known under the name deadly carrot, and are mostly inhabitants of the countries of the Mediterranean. They are perennial herbs, with doubly or trebly pinnate leaves, large compound umbels, and yellow flowers. The roots possess acrid and corrosive properties. The root of T. villosa, when applied to the skin, causes inflammation and vesication.—T. silphium, a native of the north of Africa, is supposed to be the plant which produced the juice called Silphium, which was much prized by the ancients.

THAR, n. A species of antelope.

THĀRM, n. [Sax. thearm; G. and D. darm.] Intestines twisted into a cord. [Local.]

THAT, an adjective, pronoun, or substitute. [Sax. thæt, that; Goth. thata; D. dat; G. das. Qu. Gr. ταυτα. This word is called, in Saxon and German, an article, for it sometimes signifies the. It is called also, in Saxon, a pronoun, equivalent to id, istud, in Latin. In Swedish and Danish it is called a pronoun of the neuter gender. But these distinctions are groundless and of no use. It is probably from the sense of setting.] 1. That is a word used as a definitive adjective, pointing to a certain person or thing before mentioned, or supposed to be understood. "Here is that book we have been seeking this hour." "Here goes that man we were talking of."

It shall be more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city; Matt. x.

2. That is used definitively, to designate a specific thing or person emphatically.

The woman was made whole from that hour; Matt. ix.

In these cases, that is an adjective. In the two first examples, the may be substituted for it. "Here is the book we have been seeking." "Here goes the man we were talking of." But in other cases, the cannot supply its place, and that may be considered as more emphatically definitive than the.—3. That is used as the representative of a noun, either a person or a thing. In this use it is often a pronoun and a relative. When it refers to persons, it is equivalent to who, and when it refers to a thing, it is equivalent to which. In this use, it represents either the singular number or the plural.

He that reproveth a scorner, getteth to himself shame; Prov. ix.

They that hate me without a cause, are more than the hairs of my head; Ps. lxiii.

A judgment that is equal and impartial, must incline to the greater probabilities. Wilkins.

They shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend; Matt. xiii.

4. That is also the representative of a sentence or part of a sentence, and often of a series of sentences. In this case, that is not strictly a pronoun, a word standing for a noun; but is, so to speak, a pro-sentence, the substitute for a sentence, to save the repetition of it.

And when Moses heard that, he was content; Lev. x.

That here stands for the whole of what Aaron had said, or the whole of the preceding verse.

I will know your business, that I will. Shak.

Ye defraud, and that your brethren; 1 Cor. vi.

That sometimes in this use, precedes the sentence or clause to which it refers.

That be far from thee, to do after this manner, to slay the righteous with the wicked; Gen. xviii.

That here represents the clause in italics.—5. That sometimes is the substitute for an adjective. You allege that the man is innocent; that he is not.—6. That, in the following use, has been called a conjunction. "I heard that the Greeks had defeated the Turks." But in this case, that has the same character as in No. 4. It is the representative of the part of the sentence which follows, as may be seen by inverting the order of the clauses. "The Greeks had defeated the Turks; I heard that." "It is not that I love you less." That here refers to the latter clause of the sentence, as a kind of demonstrative.—7. That was formerly used for that which, like what.

We speak that we do know, and testify that we have seen; John iii.

[This use is no longer held legitimate.]—8. That is used in opposition to this, or by way of distinction.

If the Lord will, we shall live, and do this or that; James iv.

9. When this and that refer to foregoing words, this, like the Latin hic and French ceci, refers to the latter, and that to the former. It is the same with these and those.

Self-love and reason to one end aspire,
Pain their aversion, pleasure their desire;
But greedy that, its object would devour,
This taste the honey, and not wound the flow'r. Pope.

10. That sometimes introduces an explanation of something going before. "Religion consists in living up to those principles; that is, in acting in conformity to them." Here that refers to the whole first clause of the sentence.—11. "Things are preached, not in that they are taught, but in that they are published." Here that refers to the words which follow it. So when that begins a sentence. "That we may fully understand the subject, let us consider the following propositions." That denotes purpose, or rather introduces the clause expressing purpose, as will appear by restoring the sentence to its natural order. "Let us consider the following propositions, that, [for the purpose expressed in the following clause,] we may fully understand the subject." "Attend that you may receive instruction." Here also that expresses purpose elliptically; "Attend for the purpose that you may receive instruction;" that referring to the last number. This elliptical use of that is very frequent; the preposition for being understood. "A man travels that he may regain his health." He travels for that purpose, he may regain his health. The French often retains the preposition in such cases, pour que. "Do all things without murmurings and disputings, that ye may be blameless and harmless;" Phil. ii. 14. Do all things without murmurings, for that purpose; to that effect, ye may be blameless.—In that, a phrase denoting consequence, cause, or reason; that referring to the following sentence.

THATCH, n. [Sax. thac, connected with theccan, thecan, to cover; L. tego, Eng. deck; G. dach, a roof; D. dak; Sw. tak; Dan. tag, tække; Gaelic, tughe, tuighe. The primary sense is to put on, to spread over or make close.] Straw, rushes, reeds, heath, &c., used to cover the roofs of buildings, or stacks of hay or grain, for securing them from rain, &c.

THATCH, v. t. To cover with straw, reeds, or some similar substance; as, to thatch a house or a stable, or a stack of grain.

THATCH'ED, pp. Covered with straw or thatch.

THATCH'ER, n. One whose occupation is to thatch houses.

THATCH'ING, ppr. Covering with straw or thatch.

THATCH'ING, n. The act or art of covering houses, barns, cattle-sheds, &c., and also stacks or ricks of hay and corn, with straw, reeds, &c., in such a manner as to exclude rain. The materials used for thatching are the straw of wheat, rye, and oats, reeds (those of the Arundo donax, Linn.), common heath or ling, rushes, the spray of birch, &c.

THATCH'ING KNIFE, n. An implement used in thatching houses for trimming the eaves.

THAUGHTS, n. [A corruption of Thwarts.] The benches of a boat on which the rowers sit. [See THWART.]

THAU'MATROPE, n. [Gr. θαυμα, a wonder, and τρεπω, to turn.] An optical toy contrived by Dr. Paris, the principle of which depends on the persistence of vision, or on the well-known fact, that when a person whirls a burning stick rapidly round, a complete circle of light is seen marking out the path described by the burning end. It consists of a circular card, having two silk strings fixed to it at the extremities of a diameter. By twisting the silk strings with the finger and thumb of each hand, it may be twirled round with considerable rapidity. On one side of the card there is drawn any object, such as a chariot, and on the other, the charioteer in the attitude of driving, so that when the card is twirled round, the charioteer is seen driving the chariot.

THAUMATUR'GIC, or THAUMATUR'GICAL, a. [See THAUMATURGY.] Exciting wonder.

THAUMATUR'GIST, } n. One who
THAUMATUR'GUS, } deals in wonders, or believes in them. It is sometimes used by Roman Catholics to signify a miracle-worker; as Gregory Thaumaturgus.

THAU'MATURGY, n [Gr. θαυμα, a wonder, and εργον, work.] The act of performing something wonderful.

THAW, v. i. [Sax. thawan; G. thauen; Dan. töer; Sw. töa; Gr. τηκω.] 1. To melt, dissolve, or become fluid, as ice or snow. [It is remarkable that this word is used only of things that congeal by frost. We never say, to thaw metal of any kind.]—2. To become so warm as to melt ice and snow; used of weather.

THAW, v. t. To melt; to dissolve; as ice, snow, hail, or frozen earth.

THAW, n. The melting of ice or snow; the resolution of ice into the state of a fluid; liquefaction by heat, of any thing congealed by frost.

THAW'ED, pp. Melted, as ice or snow.

THAW'ING, ppr. Dissolving; resolving into a fluid; liquefying; as, any thing frozen.

THE, an adjective, or definitive adjective. [Sax. the; D. de. Qu. Ch. דא, da.] 1. This adjective is used as a definitive, that is, before nouns which are specific or understood; or it is used to limit their signification to a specific thing or things, or to describe them; as, the laws of the twelve tables. The independent tribunals of justice in our country, are the security of private rights, and the best bulwark against arbitrary power. The sun is the source of light and heat.

This he calls the preaching of the cross. Simeon.

2. The is also used rhetorically before a noun in the singular number, to denote a species by way of distinction; a single thing representing the whole. The fig-tree putteth forth her green figs; the almond-tree shall flourish;

the grasshopper shall be a burden.—3. In poetry, the sometimes loses the final vowel before another vowel.

> Th' adoruing thee with so much art,
> Is but a barb'rous skill. Cowley.

4. The is used before adjectives in the comparative and superlative degree. The longer we continue in sin, the more difficult it is to reform. The most strenuous exertions will be used to emancipate Greece. The most we can do is to submit; the best we can do; the worst that can happen. The is generally pronounced with the e short; but when used emphatically, it is pronounced as thee.

THE'A, n. [See TEA.] A genus of plants, nat. order Ternstromiaceæ, which includes the plants yielding the tea of commerce. The species are few, at most three, T. viridis, T. bohea, and T. assamica, and some botanists assert that even these are varieties of a single species. T. viridis is a large, hardy, evergreen plant, with spreading branches, its leaves three to five inches long, thin, very broadly lanceolate, light green and wavy, with large and irregular serratures, the flowers large, usually solitary, and of a white colour. It is found both in China and Japan. T. bohea is a smaller plant than T. viridis, and differs from it in several particulars. From either species, however, by means of a different process of manipulation in the manufacture, both black and green tea are produced. Tea is cultivated in China over a great extent of territory; it is also extensively cultivated in Japan, Tonquin, Cochin-China, and Assam. In China, the climate most congenial to it seems to be that between the 27th and 31st degree of north latitude. In the husbandry of China, the tea-plant may be said to take the same place which the vine occupies in the southern countries of Europe. Its growth is chiefly confined to hilly tracts, not suited to the growth of corn, and the rearing of it requires great skill and attention, as well as the preparation of the leaves. [See TEA.]

Thea viridis.

THEAN'DRIC, a. [Gr. Θεος, God, and ανηρ, a man.] Designating the union of divine and human operation in Christ, or the joint agency of the divine and human nature.

THEAN'THROPISM, n. [Gr. Θεος and ανθρωπος.] A state of being God and man.

THE'ARCHY, n. [Gr. Θεος, God, and αρχη, rule.] Government by God; more commonly called Theocracy.

THE'ATINS, TE'ATINS, n. An order of monks founded at Rome in 1524, principally by Gianpietro Caraffa, archbishop of Chieti in Naples, the Latin name of which is Teate, hence the name given to the order. Besides taking the usual monastic vows, they bound themselves to preach against heretics, to take upon them the cure of souls, to attend the sick and criminals, to abstain from possessing property, and not even to ask for alms, but to trust to Providence for support, expecting, however, that this support would be derived from the voluntary alms of the charitable. There were also Theatin nuns (called in French Theatines) who spent their whole time in solitude and prayer. The Theatins were principally established in Italy and France, in which latter country they subsisted till the revolution in 1789. In Italy the order is still numerous and influential.

THE'ATRAL,† a. Belonging to a theatre.

THE'ATRE, n. [Fr. theatre; L. theatrum; Gr. θεατρον, from θεαομαι, to see.] 1. Among the ancients, an edifice in which spectacles or shows and dramatic representations were exhibited for the amusement of spectators. Among the Greeks and Romans, theatres were the chief public edifices next to the temples, and in point of magnitude they surpassed the most spacious of the temples. The Greek and Roman theatres very closely resemble each other in their general form and principal parts. The building was of an oblong, semicircular form, resembling the half of an amphitheatre. The space appropriated to the seats of the spectators was termed cavea by the Romans, and κοιλον by the Greeks. The seats were all concentric with the orchestra, and were intersected in one direction by ascents or flights of steps, dividing the seats into so many compartments. The place for the players, in front of the seats, was called scena (Σκηνη). The semicircular space between the scena and the seats of the spectators was called orchestra (ορχηστρα), appropriated by the Greeks to the chorus and musicians, and by the Romans to the senators. Besides these essential parts there were the pulpitum or stage, the proscenium, and postscenium, with regard to which parts the Greek and Roman theatres differed considerably.—2. In modern times, a house for the exhibition of dramatic performances, as tragedies, comedies, and farces; a playhouse; comprehending the stage, the pit, the boxes, galleries, and orchestra.—3. Among the Italians, an assemblage of buildings, which by a happy disposition and elevation, represents an agreeable scene to the eye.—4. A place rising by steps or gradations like the seats of a theatre.

> Shade above shade, a woody theatre
> Of stateliest view. Milton.

5. A place of action or exhibition; as, the theatre of the world.—6. A building for the exhibition of scholastic exercises, as at Oxford, or for other exhibitions.—Anatomical theatre, a hall with several rows of seats, disposed in the manner of an amphitheatre, and a table turning on a pivot in the middle, for anatomical demonstrations.

THEAT'RIC, THEAT'RICAL, a. Pertaining to a theatre or to scenic representations; resembling the manner of dramatic performers; as, theatrical dress; theatrical performances; theatrical gestures.—2. Calculated for display; pompous; as, theatrical airs; a theatrical manner.

THEAT'RICALLY, adv. In the manner of actors on the stage; in a manner suiting the stage.

THEAT'RICALS, n. Dramatic performances.

THEAVE, THAVE, n. An ewe of the first year. [Local.]

THEBA'IA, THE'BAINE, n. An alkaline base found in opium. [See PARAMORPHIA.]

THE'BAN, n. A native of Thebes.—2. a. Relating to Thebes.

THE'BAN YEAR. In chronology, the same as the Egyptian year, which consisted of 365 days, 6 hours.

THE'CA, n. [L. from Gr. θηκη.] A sheath or hollow case. In bot., the term thecæ is used to indicate the reproductive organs of ferns, or those minute capsules, which are aggregated into little masses called sori. In the Equisetaceæ it expresses the assemblage of cases which are attached to scales arranged in a conical manner; in Lycopodiaceæ, it is used to indicate the kidney-shaped two-valved cases that contain the reproductive matter; and in mosses, it expresses the organs that enclose the sporules.—2. In anat., thecæ is applied to the strong fibrous sheaths in which certain soft parts of the body are enclosed; as the canal of the vertebral column, and the canals in which many of the long tendons of the muscles of the hand and foot run.

THE'CAPHORE, n. [Gr. θηκη, a case or cover, and φερω, to bear or carry.] In bot., the roundish stalk upon which the ovary of some plants is elevated; as in the caper bush. It is also called podogynium and gynophore.

THECODAC'TYLS, n. [Gr. θηκη, and δακτυλος, a digit.] The name given by Cuvier to those geckos which have the toes widened throughout, and furnished beneath with transverse scales, divided by a deep longitudinal furrow, in which the claw may be entirely concealed.

THE'CODONTS, n. [Gr. θηκη, and οδους, a tooth.] A tribe of extinct Saurian reptiles, distinguished by having the teeth implanted in sockets, either loosely, or confluent with the bony walls of the cavity. The thecodonts are the most ancient of all the squamate or scaly Saurians. The name Thecodontosaurus has been given to one of the genera belonging to this tribe; its remains were found in the dolomitic conglomerate of Redland, near Bristol.

THECOS'TOMES, n. [Gr. θηκη, and στομα, a mouth.] Latreille's name for those insects which have a suctorial mouth enveloped in a sheath.

THEE, pron. obj. case of Thou. [contracted from Sax. thec; Cimb. thig; Francic, thec; Goth. thuk. See THOU.]

THEE,† v. i. [Goth. thihan; Sax. thean.] To thrive; to prosper.

THEFT, n. [Sax. thyfthe. See THIEF.] 1. The act of stealing. In jurisprudence, the general name for the most ordinary class of offences against property, for which English law uses the term larceny. Simple larceny, or theft, is committed by wrongfully taking, against the will of the owner, and carrying away the goods of another, with the fraudulent and felonious intent wholly to deprive him of his property therein. Hence it requires an actual taking, and an actual carrying away for some distance, to constitute the offence. Compound larceny, or theft, is when the theft is accompanied by aggravating circumstances; as, when it is committed upon the person, or consists in stealing from a dwelling house. Taking from the person in a violent manner is robbery, and stealing in a dwelling house after having broken therein is burglary. [See LARCENY.] In Scots law, theft is defined, "the intentional and clandestine taking away of the property of another, from its legitimate place of deposit, or other locus tenendi, with the knowledge that it is another's, and the belief that he would not consent to its abstraction; and with the intention of never restoring it to the owner." This distinction between the infang thief, or one taken while yet in sight, and the outfang thief, is now done away. But a distinction is still made between trifling theft or pickery, which is punishable with corporal punishment, imprisonment in bridewell, or fine, and theft properly so called. Simple theft is not punishable capitally unless of an aggravated character; as, theft under trust, when of a black description; the stealing of the larger animals, sheep included; theft to a great extent; theft by one habit and repute a thief; theft by breaking lockfast places, or by housebreaking.—2. The thing stolen; Exod. xxii.

THEFT'-BOTE, n. [theft and Sax. bote, compensation.] In law, the receiving of a man's goods again from a thief; or a compensation for them, by way of composition, and to prevent the prosecution of the thief. This subjects a person to fine and imprisonment, as by this means the punishment of the criminal is prevented.

THE'IFORM, a. Having the form of tea.

THE'INE, n. [from thea, the generic name of the tea-plant.] A bitter crystallizable principle found in tea, and also in coffee, and some other plants. It forms fine white prisms of a silky lustre, which are soluble in water, alcohol, and ether, bitter, fusible, and volatile. It is considered to be the principle which gives to tea its refreshing and gently stimulating qualities, and is composed of 8 atoms carbon, 2 nitrogen, 5 hydrogen, and 2 oxygen. [See CAFFEINE.]

THEIR, a. pronom. [Sax. hiora; Ice. theirra.] 1. Their has the sense of a pronominal adjective, denoting of them, or the possession of two or more; as, their voices; their garments; their houses; their land; their country.—2. Theirs is used as a substitute for the adjective and the noun to which it refers, and in this case it may be the nominative to a verb. "Our land is the most extensive, but theirs is the best cultivated." Here theirs stands as the representative of their land, and is the nominative to is.

> Nothing but the name of zeal appears,
> 'Twixt our best actions and the worst of theirs. Denham.

In this use, theirs is not in the possessive case, for then there would be a double possessive.

THE'ISM, n. [from Gr. Θεος, God.] The belief or acknowledgment of the existence of a God, as opposed to atheism. Theism differs from deism, for although deism implies a belief in the existence of a God, yet it signifies in modern usage a denial of revelation, which theism does not.

THE'IST, n. One who believes in the existence of a God.

THEIST'IC, THEIST'ICAL, } a. Pertaining to theism, or to a theist; according to the doctrine of theists.

THELPHU'SIANS, n. The name given by Milne Edwards to a tribe of brachyurous crustaceans, forming the passage between the cancerians and the land crabs. All the known species live in the earth near the banks of rivers, or in humid forests, bearing a strong analogy to the land crabs.

THEM, pron. the objective case of They, and of both genders. [In our mother tongue, them is an adjective, answering to the, in the dative and ablative cases of both numbers. The common people continue to use it in the plural number as an adjective, for they say, bring them horses, or them horses are to be led to water.]

> Go ye to them that sell, and buy for yourselves; Matth. xxv.
> Then shall the king say to them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father; Matth. xxv.

THEME, n. [L. thema; Gr. θεμα, from τιθημι, to set or place.] 1. A subject or topic on which a person writes or speaks; any thing proposed as a subject of discourse or discussion; a position or proposition The preacher takes a text for the theme of his discourse.

> When a soldier was the theme, my name
> Was not far off. Shak.

2. A short dissertation composed by a student on a given subject.—3. In gram., a radical verb, or the verb in its primary absolute sense, not modified by inflections; as, the infinitive mode in English. But a large portion of the words called themes in Greek, are not the radical words, but are themselves derivative forms of the verb. The fact is the same in other languages.—4. In music, a series of notes selected as the text or subject of a new composition.

THE'MIS, n. [Gr.] In Grecian myth., the goddess of law and order.

THEM'SELVES, a compound of them and selves, and added to they by way of emphasis or pointed distinction. Thus we say, they themselves have done the mischief; they cannot blame others. In this case, themselves is in the nominative case, and may be considered as an emphatical pronoun. In some cases, themselves is used without they, and stands as the only nominative to the following verb. Themselves have done the mischief. This word is used also in the objective case after a verb or preposition. Things in themselves innocent, may under certain circumstances cease to be so.

> They open to themselves at length the way. Milton.

THEN, adv. [Goth. thanne; Sax. thanne; G. dann; D. dan. See THENCE.] 1. At that time, referring to a time specified, either past or future.

> And the Canaanite was then in the land; Gen. xii.

That is, when Abram migrated and came into Canaan.

> Now I know in part, but then shall I know even as I am known; 1 Cor. xii.

2. Afterward; soon afterward or immediately.

> First be reconciled to thy brother, and then come and offer thy gift; Matth. v.

3. In that case; in consequence; Gal. iii.; Job iii.

> If all this be so, then man has a natural freedom. Locke.

4 Therefore; for this reason.

> Now then be all thy weighty cares away. Dryden.

5. At another time; as, now and then, at one time and another.—6. That time.

> Till then who knew
> The force of those dire arms? Milton.

Then is often used elliptically for the then existing; as, the then administration.

THEN'ARDITE, n. Anhydrous sulphate of soda. It occurs in crystalline coatings at the bottom of some lakes about five leagues from Madrid. It is used in the preparation of carbonate of soda.

THEN'ARD'S BLUE, n Cobalt blue; a blue pigment prepared by digesting oxide of cobalt with nitric acid, and adding phosphate of soda, by which phosphate of cobalt is formed. This is mixed with gelatinous alumina, and the paste so formed is dried, and subjected to a cherry red heat, by which means the pigment is produced. [See COBALT.]

THENCE, adv. (thens.) [Sax. thanan, thanon; G. dannen; from than, dann, then, supra Then signifies properly place, or set time, from setting, and thence is derived from it. So the Germans say, von dannen, from thence.] 1. From that place.

> When you depart thence, shake off the dust of your feet; Mark vi.

It is more usual, though not necessary, to use from before thence

> Then will I send and fetch thee from thence; Gen. xxvii.

2. From that time.

> There shall be no more thence an infant of days, Is. lxv.

3. For that reason.

> Not to sit idle with so great a gift
> Useless, and thence ridiculous about him. Milton.

THENCEFORTH, adv. (thens'forth.) [thence and forth.] From that time.

> If the salt hath lost its savour, it is thenceforth good for nothing; Matth. v.

This is also preceded by from, though not from any necessity.

> And from thenceforth Pilate sought to release him; John xix.

THENCEFOR'WARD, adv. [thence and forward.] From that time onward.

THENCEFROM',† adv. [thence and from.] From that place.

THEOBRO'MA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Sterculiaceæ, the species of which yield the cacao, or cocoa, of commerce. They are trees with large simple leaves, and with the flowers in clusters, and are all of them natives of South America. The most important species is the T. cacao, the common cacao, or chocolate nut tree, which is indigenous in South America, but is extensively cultivated in the West Indies, and in the tropical parts of Asia and Africa. The capsules of the fruit are large, and contain each about 25 seeds; the pulp in which these are enveloped, has a sweet and not unpleasant taste, and is eaten by the natives. The cotyledons of the seeds contain a large quantity of oily albumen, which has an agreeable flavour, and on this account they are not only used as a principal article of diet by the natives of the countries in which they grow, but are now used for the same purpose throughout the civilized world. The oil contained in the seeds is sometimes obtained separately, and called cacao butter. The seeds, reduced to a paste, and flavoured with honey, sugar, and certain other ingredients, constitute chocolate. [See CACAO.]

THEOBRO'MINE, n. A crystalline compound found in the seeds of Theobroma cacao. In composition it is analogous to theine or caffeine.

THEOC'RACY, n. [Fr. theocracie; It. teocrazia; Sp. teocracia; Gr. θεος, God, and κρατος, power; κρατεω, to hold.] Government of a state by the immediate direction of God; or the state thus governed. Of this species the Israelites furnish an illustrious example. The theocracy lasted till the time of Saul.

THEOC'RASY, n. [Gr. θεος, God, and κρασις, mixture.] In ancient philosophy, the intimate union of the soul with God in contemplation, which was considered attainable by the newer Platonists.

THEOCRAT'IC, } THEOCRAT'ICAL, } a. Pertaining to a theocracy; administered by the immediate direction of God; as, the theocratical state of the Israelites. The government of the Israelites was theocratic.

THEODICÆ'A, } THEOD'ICY, } n. [Gr. θεος, and δικαιος, just.] A vindication of the dealings of Divine Providence with man: the title of a work published by Leibnitz in 1710, in which the doctrine of Optimism is maintained.

THEOD'OLITE, n. [Qu. Gr. θεαομαι, to view, and δολος, stratagem.] A most important surveying instrument for measuring horizontal angles, or the angular distances between objects projected on the plane of the horizon. This instrument is variously constructed, and provided with subordinate apparatus, according to the price, or the particular purposes to which it is to be applied. One of the most generally useful, consists of two concentric horizontal circular plates A and B, which turn freely on each other.

Theodolite.

The lower or graduated plate B, contains the divisions of the circle, and the upper or vernier plate has two vernier divisions a, diametrically opposite, only one of which is shown in the cut. The vertical axis C, consists of two conical parts, the one working within the other. The external part is attached to the graduated plate B, and the internal to the vernier plate A. The plane of the circle is adjusted to the horizon by the screws b, b, b, acting against a plate of metal resting on the staff-head supporting the instrument. The vernier plate carries two spirit levels c, c, at right angles to each other, with their proper adjusting screws, by which the circle is brought accurately into the horizontal plane indicated by the levels. The horizontal axis of the vertical limb of the instrument is supported by a frame attached to the vernier plate, and turning along with it about the vertical axis. To the horizontal axis D, a telescope, with cross wires in its focus, is attached, which moves in the vertical plane, by the graduated circle E, and is used for observing the objects whose angular distance is to be measured, and also for taking altitudes, or measuring vertical angles, a spirit level is fixed beneath the telescope for its adjustment. F is a microscope for reading off the vernier divisions. The screws g, h, are for regulating and fixing the external part of the vertical axis C. To measure the angular distance between any two objects, the telescope is turned round along with the vernier circle, (the graduated circle remaining fixed,) until it is brought to bear exactly upon one of the objects; it is then turned round until it is brought to bear on the other object, and the arc which the vernier has described on the graduated circle, measures the angle required. The observation may be repeated any number of times in order to insure accuracy, by means of a repeating stand which turns round concentrically with the vertical axis of the theodolite. The theodolite is not only a most essential instrument in trigonometrical surveying for determining stations, and running base-lines, but also in geodetical operations, for assisting in determining the length of an arc of the meridian. For this latter purpose it requires to be constructed on a large scale.

THEODO'SIAN, a. Belonging to the emperor Theodosius; relating to his code of laws.

THEOG'ONISM,† n. Theogony,—which see.

THEOG'ONIST, n. A writer on theogony.

THEOG'ONY, n. [Fr. theogonie; Gr. θεογονια: θεος, God, and γονη, or γινομαι, to be born.] In myth., the generation of the gods; or that branch of heathen theology which taught the genealogy of their deities. Hesiod composed a poem concerning that theogony, or the creation of the world and the descent of the gods.

THEOL'OGASTER, n. A kind of quack in divinity; as, a quack in medicine is called medicaster.

THEOL'OGER,† n A theologist.

THEOLO'GIAN, n. [See THEOLOGY.] A divine; a person well versed in theology, or a professor of divinity.

THEOLOG'IC, } THEOLOG'ICAL, } a. [See THEOLOGY.] Pertaining to divinity, or the science of God and of divine things; as, a theological treatise; theological criticism.

THEOLOG'ICALLY, adv. According to the principles of theology.

THEOL'OGIES, n. plur. Theology,—which see. [A cant term.]

THEOL'OGIST, n. A divine; one studious in the science of divinity, or one well versed in that science.

THEOL'OGIZE, v. t. To render theological.—2. v. i. To frame a system of theology. [Little used.]

THEOL'OGIZED, pp. Rendered theological.

THEOL'OGIZER, n. A divine, or a professor of theology. [Unusual.]

THEOL'OGIZING, ppr. Rendering theological.

THE'OLOGUE, for Theologist, is not in use.

THEOL'OGY, n. [Fr. theologie; It. and Sp. teologia; Gr. θεολογια: θεος, God, and λογος, discourse.] Divinity; the science of God and divine things; or the science which teaches the existence, character, and attributes of God, his laws and government, the doctrines we are to believe, and the duties we are to practise. Theology consists of two branches, natural and revealed. Natural theology is the knowledge we have of God from his works, by the light of nature and reason. Such as his existence and unity; that he is possessed of certain perfections, the signatures of which are perceptible upon his works; that he governs the world; that it is our duty to honour and please him, by the practice of piety, justice, and benevolence; that the soul of man is immortal; and that there is a future state, in which the righteous will be rewarded, and the wicked punished. The doctrines and truths, however, which natural theology professes to teach, are, when taken by themselves, unsuitable to the present circumstances of mankind, and altogether inadequate for those purposes for which such knowledge is needed by man. Natural theology holds forth no certain hope of pardon to the guilty, and in the present enfeebled and corrupt state of our moral powers, the duties which it prescribes are absolutely impracticable. Hence, the grand foundation of theology is revelation, to which natural religion is a valuable, but not necessary, auxiliary. Revealed theology, or supernatural theology, as it is sometimes called, is that which is to be learned only from revelation, or that which is founded entirely upon the canonical books of the Old and New Testament. It is also sometimes called positive theology, as being founded upon the expressed will of God. Theology is variously divided, according to the method of treating the subject, and the part of the subject which is treated.—Popular or Biblical theology, that which is derived from the obvious meaning of the letter of Scripture, without any external aid, having for its fundamental principle that the Scriptures are to be interpreted by each individual reader, according to the ordinary laws by which the meaning of any other book is ascertained. This is the Protestant system, and stands opposed to the Roman Catholic system, or the positive system as it is called.—Systematic theology, that which reduces the scattered truths of revelation to the scientific form of a connected system; it also comprehends the investigation and discussion of those truths.—Exegetical theology, that which consists in the knowledge of the documents which contain the revelation, the proof of their authority, and the explanation of their meaning.—Historical theology, that which exhibits a history of the workings and changes of religion among those who have professed it.—Practical theology, that which has for its subject the duties of practical religion, and the various modes of enforcing them. It comprehends Homiletics, Catechetics, Liturgics, and Pastoral theology.—Dogmatic theology, the science of exhibiting clearly, and of tracing to their results, the doctrines taught by revelation. It aims at forming a system which shall be accepted as binding by a large body of religionists, and then views all religious truth in the light of that system. The term is chiefly employed by German writers.—Moral theology teaches us the divine laws relating to our manners and actions, that is, our moral duties.—Speculative theology teaches or explains the doctrines of religion, as objects of faith. — Scholastic theology is that which proceeds by reasoning, or which derives the knowledge of several divine things from certain established principles of faith.

THEOM'ACHIST, n. [Gr. θεός, God, and μάχη, combat.] One who fights against the gods.

THEOM'ACHY, n. [supra.] A fighting against the gods, as the battle of the giants with the gods.—2. Opposition to the divine will.

THE'OMANCY, n. [Gr. θεός, and μαντεία, prophecy.] A species of prophecy in which a god himself was believed to reveal future events, as when any one consulted an oracle, among the heathen nations, the god himself was supposed to answer the inquirer.

THEOPAS'CHITES, n. [Gr. θεός, and πάσχω, to suffer.] The name given to certain heretics of the fifth century, who maintained that Christ had but one nature, which was the divine, and consequently that divine nature suffered.

THEOPATHET'IC, a. Pertaining to theopathy.

THEOPATH'IC, a. Relating to theopathy.

THEOP'ATHY, n. [Gr. θεός, God, and πάθος, passion.] Religious suffering; suffering for the purpose of subduing sinful propensities.

THEOPH'ANY, n. [Gr. θεός, and φαίνομαι, to appear.] A term applied to signify the manifestations of God to man by actual appearance.

THEOPHILANTHROP'IC, a. [Gr.] Uniting love to God with that to man.

THEOPHILAN'THROPISM, n. The love of God and man.

THEOPHILAN'THROPIST, n. [Gr. θεός, God, and φιλάνθρωπος, a lover of men.] One who practises or professes theophilanthropism.—2. In modern history, the title theophilanthropists was assumed by a society formed at Paris during the first French revolution. It had for its object to establish a new religion in place of Christianity, which had been abolished by the convention. The system of belief thus attempted to be established was pure deism, and, as was to be expected, proved a failure.

THE'OPNEUSTY, n. [Gr. θεός, God, and πνεῦσις, breathing.] Divine inspiration.

THEOR'BO n. [It. tiorba; Fr. tuorbe or teorbe.] A musical instrument made like a large lute, except that it has two necks or juga, the second and longer of which sustains the four last rows of chords which are to give the deepest sounds. The theorbo has eight base or thick strings, twice as long as those of the lute, which excess of length renders the sound exceedingly soft, and continues it a great length of time. It was also called the archlute, and was used chiefly, if not only, as an accompaniment to the voice. It has long fallen into disuse.

THE'OREM, n. [Fr. theoreme; Sp. and It. teorema; Gr. θεώρημα, from θεωρέω, to see.] In math., a proposition to be proved by a chain of reasoning; any proposition which states its conclusion or makes any affirmation or negation; as distinguished from a problem, which requires a conclusion to be arrived at, without so much as stating whether that conclusion is even possible. A theorem wants demonstration only; a problem requires solution, or the discovery both of method and demonstration.—2. A speculative truth; a position laid down as an acknowledged truth.—3. In alge. or analysis, it is sometimes used to denote a rule, particularly when that rule is expressed by symbols or formulæ; as, the binomial theorem, Taylor's theorem, &c.—A universal theorem extends to any quantity without restriction.—A particular theorem extends only to a particular quantity.—A negative theorem expresses the impossibility of any assertion.—A local theorem is that which relates to a surface.—A solid theorem is that which considers a space terminated by a solid, that is, by any of the three conic sections.

THEOREMAT'IC, THEOREMAT'ICAL, THEOREM'IC, a. Pertaining to a theorem; comprised in a theorem; consisting of theorems; as, theoremic truth.

THEORET'IC, THEORET'ICAL, a. [Gr. θεωρητικός. See THEORY.] Pertaining to theory; depending on theory or speculation; speculative; terminating in theory or speculation; not practical; as, theoretical learning; theoretic sciences. The sciences are divided into theoretical, as, theology, philosophy, and the like, and practical, as medicine and law.

THEORET'ICALLY, adv In or by theory; in speculation; speculatively; not practically. Some things appear to be theoretically true, which are found to be practically false.

THEORET'ICS, n. plur. The speculative parts of a science.

THE'ORIC,† n. Speculation; theory.

THEOR'IC, for Theoretic, is not now used. [See THEORETIC.]

THEOR'ICA, n. plur. [Gr. θεωρικός.] A term applied to the public moneys expended at Athens on festivals and in largesses.

THEOR'ICAL,† a. Theoretical.

THEOR'ICALLY,† adv. Speculatively.

THE'ORIST, n. One who forms theories; one given to theory and speculation.

> The greatest theorists have given the preference to such a government as that of this kingdom. Addison.

THE'ORIZE, v. i. To form a theory or theories; to speculate; as, to theorize on the existence of phlogiston.

THE'ORIZER, n. A theorist.

THE'ORIZING, ppr. Forming a theory.

THE'ORY, n. [Fr. theorie; It. teoria; L. theoria; Gr. θεωρία, from θεωρέω, to see or contemplate.] 1. Speculation; a doctrine or scheme of things, which terminates in speculation or contemplation, without a view to practice. It is here taken in an unfavourable sense, as implying something visionary.—2. An exposition of the general or abstract principles of any science; as, the theory of music.—3. The science distinguished from the art; as, the theory and practice of medicine.—4. In the arts, the rules of an art as distinguished from the practice; or the knowledge of an art, so far as results from speculation on its nature, on the end which it proposes to attain, on the means which it is necessary to employ in order to attain the end proposed, &c., without being occupied with its practice.—5. A collected view of all that is known on any speculative subject; a connected body of truths having a dependence on one another, and belonging to one or more common principles; or it is a connected arrangement of facts, according to their bearing on some real or hypothetical law.—In physical science, a theory is defined, "An explanation of natural phenomena, founded on facts known to be true from evidence independent of those phenomena or appearances. Thus, we have the theory of gravitation, the atomic theory, theories of light, theories of heat, theory of combustion, lunar theory, theory of dew, theories of the earth, &c. A theory is often nothing else but a contrivance for comprehending a certain number of facts under one expression. Many theories are founded entirely on analogy, and such theories may have all degrees of evidence from the least to the greatest. The evidence of a theory increases with the number of facts which it explains, and the precision with which it explains them. It diminishes with the number of facts which it does not explain, and with the number of different suppositions that will afford explanations equally precise. A theory may not deserve to be rejected because it does not explain all the phenomena, if it explains a great number, and be not absolutely inconsistent with any one, but a single fact inconsistent with any theory may be sufficient to overturn it. Theory is distinguished from hypothesis thus: a theory is founded on inferences drawn from principles which have been established on independent evidence; a hypothesis is a proposition assumed to account for certain phenomena, and has no other evidence of its truth, than that it affords a satisfactory explanation of those phenomena. It is necessary to keep this distinction in view, as the terms theory and hypothesis are very frequently confounded both in speaking and writing. The terms theory and practice are also often used in a very loose and inaccurate manner, and are liable to a very common fallacy, namely, that of applying to one sense of a word, ideas or associations derived from another. By practice, as distinguished from theory, is often meant the application of that knowledge which comes from experience only, and is not sufficiently connected with any general principles to be entitled to the name of a theory; but as there is no theorist whose knowledge is all theory, so there is no practical man whose skill is all derived from experience. [See Sig. 1.]

—Theory of couples, by couples in physics is meant a pair of equal and opposite forces not equilibrating each other, and the explanation or investigation of the phenomena or effects resulting from such forces is termed the theory of couples.—Theory of equations, that part of algebra which treats of the properties of rational and integral functions of a single variable, its great object being to develope the properties, and to evolve the values of the real and imaginary roots of equations of every degree.—Theory of numbers. [See NUMBER.]

THEOSOPH'IC, THEOSOPH'ICAL, a. Pertaining to theosophism or to theosophists; divinely wise.

THEOS'OPHISM, n. [Gr. θεος, God, and σοφισμα, comment; σοφος, wise.] Pretension to divine illumination; enthusiasm.

THEOS'OPHIST, n. One who pretends to divine illumination; one who pretends to derive his knowledge from divine revelation.

THEOS'OPHIZE, v. i. To treat of God or of divine things.

THEOS'OPHY, n. Divine wisdom; godliness.—2. Knowledge of God derived from divine illumination; a supposed intercourse with God and superior spirits, by which a person acquires not only an intimate knowledge of God and of all divine truth, but obtains access to the most sublime secrets of nature, by physical processes. Such notions have been held by Jacob Böhme, Swedenborg, and others.

THERAPEU'TÆ, n. [Gr. θεραπευω, to worship.] A Jewish sect of devotees, of the first century after Christ; so called from the extraordinary purity of their religious worship. They withdrew into solitary places, where they devoted themselves to a life of religious contemplation.

THERAPEU'TIC, a. [Gr. θεραπευτικος, from θεραπευω, to nurse, serve, or cure.] Curative; that pertains to the healing art; that is concerned in discovering and applying remedies for diseases.

> Medicine is justly distributed into prophylactic, or the art of preserving health, and therapeutic, or the art of restoring it. Watts.

THERAPEU'TICS, n. That part of medicine which relates to the composition, the application, and the modes of operation of the remedies for diseases. It not only includes medicines properly so called, but also hygiene and dietetics, or the application of diet, and atmospheric and other non-medical influences, to the preservation or recovery of health.—2. The Therapeutæ,—which see.

THER'APY, n. [Gr. θεραπεια.] Therapeutics.

THERE, adv. [Sax. thær; Goth. thar; D. daar; Sw. där; Dan. der. This word was formerly used as a pronoun, as well as an adverb of place. Thus in Saxon, thærto was to him, to her, or to it.] 1. In that place.

> The Lord God planted a garden eastward in Eden, and there he put the man whom he had formed; Gen. ii.

2. It is sometimes opposed to here; there denoting the place most distant.

> Darkness there might well seem twilight here. Milton.

3. Here and there, in one place and another; as, here a little and there a little.—4. It is sometimes used by way of exclamation, calling the attention to something distant; as, there, there; see there; look there.—5. There is used to begin sentences, or before a verb; sometimes pertinently, and sometimes without signification; but its use is so firmly established that it cannot be dispensed with.

> Wherever there is sense or perception, there some idea is actually produced. Locke.

> There have been that have delivered themselves from their ills by their good fortune or virtue. Suckling.

> And there came a voice from heaven, saying, Thou art my beloved Son; Mark i.

6. In composition, there has the sense of a pronoun, as in Saxon; as thereby, which signifies by that.

THEREABOUT', THEREABOUTS', comp. [there and about. The latter is less proper, but most commonly used.] 1. Near that place.—2. Nearly; near that number, degree or quantity; as, ten men or thereabouts.—3. Concerning that. [Not much used.] Luke xxiv.

THEREAFTER, comp. [there and after. Sax. thær-æfter, after that.] 1. According to that; accordingly.

> When you can draw the head indifferently well, proportion the body thereafter. Peacham.

2. After that.

THEREAT', comp. [there and at.] At that place.

> Wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there are who go in thereat; Matth. vii.

2. At that; at that thing or event; on that account.

> Every error is a stain to the beauty of nature; for which cause it blusheth thereat. Hooker.

THEREBY', comp. [there and by.] By that; by that means; in consequence of that.

> Acquaint now thyself with him, and be at peace; thereby good shall come to thee; Job xxii.

THEREFOR', comp. [there and for.] For that or this, or it.

THEREFORE, comp. (ther'fore.) [there and for.] 1. For that; for that or this reason, referring to something previously stated.

> I have married a wife, and therefore I cannot come; Luke xiv.

2. Consequently.

> He blushes; therefore he is guilty. Spectator.

3. In return or recompense for this or that.

> What shall we have therefore? Matt. xix.

THEREFROM', comp. [there and from.] From this or that.

> Turn not aside therefrom to the right hand or to the left; Josh. xxiii.

THEREIN', comp. [there and in.] In that or this place, time, or thing.

> Bring forth abundantly in the earth and multiply therein; Gen. ix.

> Ye shall keep the sabbath...whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off; Exod. xxxi.

> Therein our letters do not well agree. Shak.

THEREINTO', comp. [there and into.] Into that.

THEREOF', comp. [there and of.] Of that or this.

> In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die; Gen. ii.

THEREOL'OGIST, n. One versed in thereology.

THEREOL'OGY, n. [Gr. θεραπευω, to medicate, and λογος, knowledge.] The study of diseases, and the practice of medicine; the art of healing; therapeutics.

THEREON', comp. [there and on.] On that or this.

> Then the king said, Hang him thereon; Esth. vii.

THEREOUT', comp. [there and out.] Out of that or this; Lev. ii.

THERETO', THEREUNTO', comp. [there and to.] To that or this.

> Add the fifth part thereto; Lev. v.

THERETOFORE, adv. Before that time; the counterpart of heretofore, or before this time. [American, but useful.]

THEREUN'DER, comp. [there and under.] Under that or this.

THEREUPON', comp. [there and upon.] Upon that or this.

> The remnant of the house of Judah, they shall feed thereupon; Zeph. ii.

2. In consequence of that.

> He hopes to find you forward,
> And thereupon he sends you this good news. Shak.

3. Immediately.

THEREWHILE,† comp. [there and while.] At the same time.

THEREWITH', comp. [there and with.] With that or this.

> I have learned in whatever state I am, therewith to be content; Phil. iv.

THEREWITHAL', comp. [there and withal.] Over and above.—2. At the same time.—3. With that. [This word is obsolete.] [The foregoing compounds of there with the prepositions, are for the most part deemed inelegant and obsolete. Some of them however are in good use, and particularly in the law style.]

THERF-BREAD,† n. (therf'bred) [Sax. thærf, theorf, unfermented.] Unleavened bread.

THE'RIAC, THERI'ACA, n. [L. theriaca, Gr. θηριακη, treacle.] A name given by the ancients to various compositions esteemed efficacious against the effects of poison, but afterward restrained chiefly to what has been called Theriaca Andromachi, or Venice treacle, which is a compound of sixty-four drugs, prepared, pulverized, and reduced by means of honey to an electuary.

THE'RIAC, THERI'ACAL, a. Pertaining to theriac; medicinal.

THERM, n. In arch., a pedestal increasing upwards, for the reception of a bust.

THER'MÆ, n. plur. [L. from Gr. θερμος, warm.] In ancient arch., the name given to the public baths, which contained not only the warm baths, but also the cold.

THER'MAL, a. [L. thermæ, warm baths; Gr. θερμαι, from θερω, to warm.] Pertaining to heat; warm.—Thermal waters, or springs, are warm or tepid mineral waters, which occur in various parts of the world. The range of temperature of the thermal springs in Europe is from 66° to 165°.

THER'MIDOR, n. [Fr. from G. θερμος, warm.] The name of the 11th month of the year, in the first French republic. It commenced on the 19th of July, and ended on the 17th of August.

THER'MO-ELECTRIC, a. Pertaining to thermo-electricity; as, thermo-electric currents.

THER'MO-ELECTRICITY, n. Electricity developed by heat; a branch of electro-magnetism. When wires or bars of metal of different kinds are placed in close contact, end to end, and disposed so as to form a periphery or continuous circuit, and heat then applied to the ends or junctions of the bars, electric currents are produced. The electricity thus developed is termed thermo-electricity.

THER'MOGEN, n. [Gr. θερμη, heat, and γινος, γινομαι, to generate.] The elementary matter of heat; caloric.

THER'MO-LAMP, n. [Gr. θερμος, warm, from θερμη, heat, and lamp.] An instrument for furnishing light by means of inflammable gas.

THERMOM'ETER, n. [Gr. θερμος, warm, from θερμη, heat, and μετρον, measure.] An instrument for measuring heat, or by which the temperatures of bodies are ascertained; founded on the property which heat possesses of expanding all bodies, the rate or quantity of expansion being supposed proportional to the degree of heat applied, and hence indicating that degree. The thermometer consists of a slender glass tube, with a small bore, containing in general mercury or alcohol, which expanding or contracting by variations in the temperature of the atmosphere, or on the instrument being brought into contact with any other body, or immersed in a liquid or gas, which is to be examined, the state of the atmosphere, the body, liquid, or gas, with regard to heat, is indicated by a scale either applied to the tube, or engraven on its exterior surface. There are several kinds of thermometers, but the one in common use in this country is Fahrenheit's, so called from the name of the inventor. It consists of a small tube, terminating in a ball containing mercury, the air having been expelled, and the tube hermetically sealed. There are two points on the scale, corresponding to fixed and determinate temperatures; the first corresponds to the temperature of freezing water, and is marked 32°, the other corresponds to the temperature of boiling water, and is marked 212°; hence, the zero of the scale, or that point marked 0°, is 32° below the freezing point, and the interval or space between the freezing and boiling points consists of 180°. On the Continent, particularly in France, the centigrade thermometer is used. The space between the freezing and boiling points is divided into 100 equal parts or degrees, the zero being at freezing, and the boiling point at 100°. Reaumur's thermometer, which is in use in Germany, has the space between the freezing and boiling points divided into 80 equal parts, the zero being at freezing. The following formulæ, deduced from the manner in which the three scales are divided, will serve to convert any given number of degrees of Fahrenheit's scale into the corresponding number of degrees on Reaumur's, and the centigrade scales, and vice versâ: Let F, R, and C, represent any corresponding numbers of degrees on the three scales respectively, then; $(F - 32^0) \times \frac{4}{9} = R$, and $(F - 32^0) \times \frac{5}{9} = C$; $\frac{9}{4} \times R + 32^0 = F$, and $\frac{9}{5} \times C + 32 = F$; Also, $\frac{4}{5} \times C = R$, and $\frac{5}{4} \times R = C$. For extreme degrees of cold, thermometers filled with spirit of wine must be employed, as no degree of cold known is capable of freezing that liquid, whereas mercury freezes at about 39° below zero. On the other hand, spirit of wine is not adapted to high temperatures, as it is soon converted into vapour, whereas mercury does not boil till its temperature is raised to 660°. Of all fluids, mercury is the best adapted for thermometers employed for indicating all ordinary temperatures.—Register thermometer. [See REGISTER.]—Differential thermometer. [See DIFFERENTIAL.] The thermometer indicates only the sensible heat of bodies, and gives us no information respecting the quantity of latent heat, or of combined heat, which those bodies may contain.

THERMOMET'RICAL, a. Pertaining to a thermometer; as, the thermometrical scale or tube.—2. Made by a thermometer; as, thermometrical observations.

THERMOMET'RICALLY, adv. By means of a thermometer.

THER'MOSCOPE, n. [Gr. θερμη, heat, and σκοπεω, to see.] An instrument showing the temperature of the air, or the degree of heat and cold; a thermometer contrived by Count Rumford, for measuring minute differences of temperature. The same name was at first given to Leslie's differential thermometer.

THERMOSCOP'IC, a. Pertaining to the thermoscope.

THER'MOSTAT, n. [θερμος, and στατος, standing.] An apparatus contrived by Dr. Ure, for regulating temperature in the processes of distillation and vaporization, in baths, hot houses, in adjusting the heat of stoves and furnaces, &c. It operates upon the principle that when two thin metallic bars of different degrees of expansibility are riveted or soldered face ways together, any change of temperature will cause the compound bar to bend, the side on which the least expansible bar is becoming concave, and the other convex. These flexures are made to operate in regulating valves, stop-cocks, stove registers, &c., and thereby to regulate the flow of heated liquids, or the admission or emission of air.

THERMOSTAT'IC, a. Pertaining to the thermostat.

THERMOTEN'SION, n. [Gr. θερμος, hot, and L. tensio, a stretching.] Literally, a stretching by heat. This word is applied by Professor Johnson to a process of increasing the direct cohesion of wrought iron. It consists in heating the metal to a determinate temperature, generally from 500° to 600°, of Fahrenheit, and in that state giving to it, by appropriate machinery, a mechanical strain or tension, in the direction in which the strain is afterwards to be exerted. The degree of tensile force applied is determined beforehand by trials on the same quality of metal at the ordinary temperature, in order to ascertain what force would, in that case, have been sufficient to break the piece which is to be submitted to thermotension.

THESAU'RUS, } n. [Lat.] A
THESAURA'RIUM, } treasury. Thesaurus verborum, a treasury of words; a lexicon.

THESE, pron. plur. of This: pronounced theez, and used as an adjective or substitute. These is opposed to those, as this is to that, and when two persons or things or collections of things are named, these refers to the things or persons which are nearest in place or order, or which are last mentioned.

> Some place the bliss in action, some in ease;
> Those call it pleasure, and contentment these. Pope.

Here these is a substitute for these persons, and for the persons last mentioned, who place their bliss in ease.

THE'SIS, n. [L. thesis; Gr. θεσις, a position, from τιθημι, to set.] 1. A position or proposition which a person advances and offers to maintain, or which is actually maintained by argument; a theme; a subject propounded for a school or college exercise; the exercise itself.—2. In logic, every proposition may be divided into thesis and hypothesis. Thesis contains the thing affirmed or denied, and hypothesis the conditions of the affirmation or negation.—3. In music, the unaccented part of the measure, which the Greeks expressed by the downward beat.

THE'SIUM, n. A genus of plants of the class Pentandria, and order Monogynia, Linn., nat. order Santalaceæ. The species are small weeds, scentless, and slightly astringent. T. linophyllum, or bastard toad-flax, is a British plant, which grows in elevated pastures.

THES'MOTHETE, n. [Gr.] A lawgiver.

THESPE'SIA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Malvaceæ. The species are trees with large entire leaves. T. populnea, or the umbrella tree, is a native of the East Indies, Guinea, and the Society Islands. It grows to the height of about 40 feet, and has large yellow flowers, with a dark red centre. In tropical countries it is planted about monasteries and convents, and hence it is looked upon with a sort of religious regard.

Thespesia populnea.

THES'PIAN-ART, n. A name given to tragedy or tragic acting, from Thespis, an Athenian, who first introduced tragedy on the stage, about 600 years before Christ.

THE'TA, n. [Gr. θ.] The unlucky letter of the Greek alphabet, so called from being used by the judges in passing condemnation on a prisoner, it being the first letter of the Greek θανατος, death.

THET'ICAL, a. [from Gr. θετικος. See THESIS.] Laid down.

THE'TIS, n. In Grecian myth., the daughter of Nereus, and Doris, and hence one of the Nereids. She was married to Peleus, king of the Myrmidons and became the mother of Achilles. Thetis was a symbol of water in the ancient cosmogonies.

THEUR'GIC, } a. [from theurgy.]
THEUR'GICAL, } Pertaining to the power of performing supernatural things.—Theurgic hymns, songs of incantation.

THE'URGIST, n. One who pretends to or is addicted to theurgy.

THE'URGY, n. [Gr. θεουργια: θεος, God, and εργον, work.] The art of doing things which it is the peculiar province of God to do; or the power or act of performing supernatural things by invoking the names of God or of subordinate agents; magic. This has been divided by some writers into three parts; theurgy, or the operation by divine or celestial means; natural magic, performed by the powers of nature; and necromancy, which proceeds by invoking demons.

THEW, n. [Sax. theaw; Gr. εθος.] 1.† Manner; custom; habit; form of behaviour.—2.† Brawn; muscle; sinew; strength.

THEW'ED,† a. Accustomed; educated.

THEWS, n. pl. Bodily robustness; proportions indicating corporeal strength.

THEY, pron. plur; objective case, Them. [Sax. thæge; Goth. thai, thaim.] 1. The men, the women, the animals, the things. It is never used adjectively, but always as a pronoun referring to persons, or as a substitute referring to things.

They and their fathers have transgressed against me; Ezek. ii.

They of Italy salute you; Heb. xiii.

Blessed are they who hunger and thirst after righteousness; Matth. v.

2. It is used indefinitely, as our ancestors used man and as the French use on. They say, [on dit,] that is, it is said by persons, indefinitely.

THI'A, n. The name given by Leach to a genus of crustaceans, belonging to the family Oxystomes. They live buried in the sand at a small distance from the sea-shore. T. polia, is found in the British channel, and the Mediterranean.

THI'BET, } THIBE'TIAN, } a. Of or belonging to Thibet, in Asia; as, Thibet shawls.

THI'BLE,† n. A slice; a skimmer; a spatula. It is the same as the Scottish thivel, a stick for stirring a pot of broth, pottage, &c.

THICK, a. [Sax. thic, thicca; G. dick, dicht; Sw tiock; Dan. tyk and dit, thick, tight; Gael. and Ir. tiugh; W. tew, contracted. The sense is probably taken from driving, forcing together, or pressing.] 1. Dense; not thin; as, thick vapours; a thick fog.—2. Inspissated; as, the paint is too thick.—3. Turbid; muddy; feculent; not clear; as, the water of a river is thick after a rain.—4. Noting the diameter of a body; as, a piece of timber seven inches thick.

My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins; 1 Kings xii.

5. Having more depth or extent from one surface to its opposite than usual; as, a thick plank; thick cloth; thick paper.—6. Close; crowded with trees or other objects; as, a thick forest or wood; thick grass; thick corn.

The people were gathered thick together. Locke.

7. Frequent; following each other in quick succession. The shot flew thick as hail.

Favours came thick upon him. Wotton.

Not thicker billows beat the Libyan main. Dryden.

8. Set with things close to each other; not easily pervious.

Black was the forest, thick with beech it stood. Dryden.

9. Not having due distinction of syllables or good articulation; as, a thick utterance. He speaks too thick.—10. Dull; somewhat deaf; as, thick of hearing.—11. Intimate; [various dialects.]

THICK, n. The thickest part, or the time when any thing is thickest.

In the thick of the dust and smoke he presently entered his men. Knolles.

2.† A thicket. Thick and thin, whatever is in the way.

Through thick and thin she follow'd him. Hudibras.

THICK, adv. Frequently; fast.

I hear the trampling of thick beating feet. Dryden.

2. Closely; as, a plat of ground thick sown.—3. To a great depth, or to a thicker depth than usual; as, a bed covered thick with tan; land covered thick with manure. Thick and three-fold, in quick succession, or in great numbers. [Not in use.]

THICK,† v. i. To become thick or dense.

THICKEN, v. t. (thik'n.) [Sax. thiccian.] 1. To make thick or dense.—2 To make close; to fill up interstices; as, to thicken cloth.—3. To make concrete; to inspissate; as, to thicken paint, mortar or a liquid.—4. To strengthen; to confirm.

And this may help to thicken other proofs.† Shak.

5. To make frequent, or more frequent; as, to thicken blows.—6. To make close, or more close; to make more numerous; as, to thicken the ranks.

THICKEN, v. i. (thik'n.) To become thick or more thick; to become dense; as, the fog thickens.—2. To become dark or obscure.

Thy lustre thickens
When he shines by. Shak.

3. To concrete; to be consolidated; as, the juices of plants thicken into wood.—4. To be inspissated; as, vegetable juices thicken, as the more volatile parts are evaporated.—5. To become close, or more close or numerous.

The press of people thickens to the court. Dryden.

6. To become quick and animated.

The combat thickens. Addison.

7. To become more numerous; to press; to be crowded. Proofs of the fact thicken upon us at every step.

THICK'ENED, pp. Made dense, or more dense; made more close or compact; made more frequent; inspissated.

THICK'ENING, ppr. Making dense or more dense, more close, or more frequent; inspissating.

THICK'ENING, n. Something put into a liquid or mass to make it more thick.

THICK'ER, a. comp. More thick.

THICK'EST, a. superl. Most thick.

THICK'ET, n. A wood or collection of trees or shrubs closely set; as, a ram caught in a thicket; Gen. xxii.

THICK'HEAD, } THICK'HEADED, } a. Having a thick skull; dull; stupid.

THICK'ISH, a. Somewhat thick.

THICK'LY, adv. Deeply; to a great depth.—2. Closely; compactly.—3. In quick succession.

THICK'NESS, n. The state of being thick; denseness; density; as, the thickness of fog, vapour, or clouds.—2. The state of being concrete or inspissated; consistence; spissitude; as, the thickness of paint or mortar; the thickness of honey; the thickness of the blood.—3. The extent of a body from side to side, or from surface to surface; as, the thickness of a tree; the thickness of a board; the thickness of the hand; the thickness of a layer of earth.—4 Closeness of the parts; the state of being crowded or near; as, the thickness of trees in a forest; the thickness of a wood.—5. The state of being close, dense or impervious; as, the thickness of shades.—6. Dulness of the sense of hearing; want of quickness or acuteness; as, thickness of hearing.

THICK-RIBBED,† a. Closely run together, or close ridged; as, thick-ribbed ice.

THICK'SET, a. [thick and set.] Close planted; as, a thickset wood.—2. Having a short thick body.

THICK'SKIN, n. [thick and skin.] A coarse gross person; a blockhead.

THICK'SKULL, n. [thick and skull.] Dulness; or a dull person; a blockhead.

THICK'SKULLED, a. Dull; heavy; stupid; slow to learn.

THICK'SPRUNG, a. [thick and sprung.] Sprung up close together.

THIEF, n. plur. Thieves. [Sax. theof; Sw. tiuf; D. dief; G. dieb; Goth. thiubs; Dan. tyv.] A person guilty of theft. 1. One who secretly, unlawfully, and feloniously takes the goods or personal property of another. The thief takes the property of another privately; the robber by open force.—2. One who takes the property of another wrongfully, either secretly or by violence; Job xxx.

A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho, and fell among thieves, who stripped him of his raiment; Luke x.

3. One who seduces by false doctrine; John x.—4. One who makes it his business to cheat and defraud; as, a den of thieves; Matth. xxi.—5. An excrescence or waster in the snuff of a candle.

THIEF-CATCHER, n. [thief and catch.] One who catches thieves, or whose business is to detect thieves and bring them to justice.

THIEF-LEADER, n. [thief and lead.] One who leads or takes a thief. [Not much used.]

THIEF-TAKER, n. [thief and taker.] One whose business is to find and take thieves and bring them to justice.

THIEVE, v. i. [from thief.] To steal; to practice theft.

THIEVE'LESS, } THEW'LESS, } a. Unprofitable, inactive; cold; dry; insipid; spoken of a person's demeanour. [Scotch.]

THIEVERY, n. The practice of stealing; theft. [See THEFT.]

Among the Spartans, thievery was a practice morally good and honest. South.

2. That which is stolen.

THIEVISH, a. Given to stealing; addicted to the practice of theft; as, a thievish boy.

Or with a base and boist'rous sword enforce
A thievish living on the common road. Shak.

2. Secret; sly; acting by stealth; as, thievish minutes.—3. Partaking of the nature of theft; as, a thievish practice.

THIEVISHLY, adv. In a thievish manner; by theft.

THIEVISHNESS, n. The disposition to steal.—2. The practice or habit of stealing.

THIG, v. t. [Ancient German, thigen, to ask.] To ask; to beg; to go about receiving supply, not as a mendicant, but rather as affording others an opportunity of manifesting their liberality. [Scotch.]

THIGH, n. [Sax. thegh, theo or theoh; D. dye; G. dick-bein, thick-bone. The German explains the word; thigh is thick.] The femur, that part of men, quadrupeds, and fowls, which is between the leg and the trunk. As the word signifies, it is the thick part of the lower limbs.

THIGH-BONE, n. The femoris os, a long cylindrical bone which is situated between the pelvis and tibia.

THILK,† pron. [Sax. 'thilc.] The same.

THILL, n. [Sax. thil or thill.] The shaft of a cart, gig, or other carriage. The thills are the two pieces of timber extending from the body of the carriage on each side of the last horse, by which the carriage is supported in a horizontal position.

THILL'ER, } n. The horse which THILL'-HORSE, } goes between the thills or shafts, and supports them. In a team, the last horse.

THIM'BLE, n. [Originally thumb-bell or cover, having been first worn on the thumb, as the sailor's thimble still is; Scotch, thummle.] 1. A kind of cap or cover for the finger, usually made of metal, used by tailors and seamstresses for driving the needle through cloth. —2. In sea language, an iron ring with a hollow or groove round its whole circumference, to receive the rope which is spliced about it.

THIM'BLEFUL, n. [thimble and full.] As much of any thing as a thimble would hold.—2. A very small quantity. [Familiar.]

THIM'BLERIG, n. A sleight of hand trick played with three small cups, shaped like thimbles, and a small ball.

THIM'BLE RIGGER, n. One who practises the game of thimblerig.—2. In cant language, a low trickster.

THIME. See THYME.

THIN, a. [Sax. thinn, thynn; G. dünn; Sw. tunn; W. tenau, teneu; L. tenuis; Gaelic, tanadh; Russ. tonkei. Qu. Gr. στενος, narrow. It appears to be connected with W. ten, tan, stretched, extended, Gr. τεινω. Qu. Ar. wadana. In sense it is allied to Syr. Heb. Ch. and Eth. קָטָן, katan, but we know not whether the first consonant of this word is a prefix.] 1. Having little thickness or extent from one surface to the opposite; as, a thin plate of metal; thin paper; a thin board; a thin covering.—2. Rare; not dense; applied to fluids or soft mixtures; as, thin blood; thin milk; thin air.

> In the day when the air is more thin. Bacon.

3. Not close; not crowded; not filling the space; not having the individuals that compose the thing in a close or compact state; as, the trees of a forest are thin; the corn or grass is thin. A thin audience in church is not uncommon. Important legislative business should not be transacted in a thin house.—4. Not full or well grown.

> Seven thin ears; Gen xli.

5. Slim; small; slender; lean. A person becomes thin by disease. Some animals are naturally thin.—6. Exile; small; fine; not full.

> Thin hollow sounds, and lamentable screams. Dryden.

7. Not thick or close; of a loose texture; not impervious to the sight; as, a thin vail.—8. Not crowded or well stocked; not abounding.

> Ferrara is very large, but extremely thin of people. Addison.

9. Slight; not sufficient for a covering; as, a thin disguise.

THIN, adv. Not thickly or closely; in a scattered state; as, seed sown thin.

> Spain is thin sown of people. Bacon.

THIN, v. t. [Sax. thinnian; Russ. tonyu; L. tenuo. See ATTENUATE.] 1. To make thin; to make rare or less thick; to attenuate; as, to thin the blood.—2. To make less close, crowded, or numerous; as, to thin the ranks of an enemy; to thin the trees or shrubs of a thicket.—3. To attenuate; to rarefy; to make less dense; as, to thin the air; to thin the vapours.—Thin out, in geol.: when strata gradually diminish in thickness until they disappear, they are said to thin out.

THIN'-CLAD, a. Lightly dressed.

THINE, pronominal adj. [Goth. theins, theina; Sax. thin; G. dein; Fr. tien; probably contracted from thigen. See THOU.] Thy; belonging to thee; relating to thee; being the property of thee. It was formerly used for thy, before a vowel.

> Then thou mightest eat grapes thy fill, at thine own pleasure; Deut. xxxii.

But in common usage, thy is now used before a vowel in all cases. The principal use of thine now is when a verb is interposed between this word and the noun to which it refers. I will not take any thing that is thine. Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory. In the following passage thine is used as a substitute for thy righteousness.

> I will make mention of thy righteousness, even of thine only; Ps. lxxi.

In some cases it is preceded by the sign of the possessive case, like nouns, and is then also to be considered as a substitute.

> If any of thine be driven out to the utmost parts of heaven; Deut. xxx.

It is to be observed that thine, like thou, is used only in the solemn style. In familiar and common language, your and yours are always used in the singular number as well as the plural.

THIN'-FACED, a. Having a meagre or attenuated visage.

THING, n. [Sax. thing, a thing, a cause; for his thingon, for his cause or sake; also, thing and gething, a meeting, council or convention; thingan, thingian, to hold a meeting, to plead, to supplicate; thingere, an intercessor; thingung, intercession; G. ding, a thing, a court; dingen, to go to law, to hire or haggle; Dingstag, Tuesday, [thing's day;] beding, condition, clause; bedingen, to agree, to bargain or contract, to cheapen; D. ding, thing, business; dingen, to plead, to attempt, to cheapen; dingbank, the bar; dingdagen, session-days; dinger, dingster, a pleader; dingtaal, plea; Dingsdag, Tuesday; beding, condition, agreement; bedingen, to condition; Sw. ting, thing, cause, also a court, assizes; tinga, to hire, bargain, or agree; Dan. ting, a thing, affair, business, case, a court of justice; tinger, to strike up a bargain, to haggle; tingbog, records of a court, [thing-book;] tingdag, the court day, the assizes; tinghold, jurisdiction; tingmænd, jurors, jury, [thing-men;] tingsag, a cause or suit at law, [thing-sake.] The primary sense of thing is that which comes, falls, or happens, like event, from L. evenio. The primary sense of the root, which is tig or thig, is to press, urge, drive, or strain, and hence its application to courts, or suits at law; a seeking of right. We observe that Dingsdag, Dingdag, in some of the dialects signifies Tuesday, and this from the circumstance that that day of the week was, as it still is in some states, the day of opening courts; that is, litigation day, or suitors' day, a day of striving for justice; or perhaps combat-day, the day of trial by battle. This leads to the unfolding of another fact. Among our ancestors, Tig or Tiig, was the name of the deity of combat and war, the Teutonic Mars; that is, strife, combat deified. This word was contracted into tiw or tu, and hence Tiwesdæg or Tues-dæg, Tuesday, the day consecrated to Tiig, the god of war. But it seems this is merely the day of commencing court and trial; litigation day. This Tiig, the god of war, is strife, and this leads us to the root of thing, which is to drive, urge, strive. So res, in Latin, is connected with reus, accused. For words of like signification, see SAKE and CAUSE.] 1. An event or action; that which happens or falls out, or that which is done, told, or proposed. This is the general signification of the word in the Scriptures; as, after these things, that is, events.

> And the thing was very grievous in Abraham's sight, because of his son; Gen. xxi.
> Then Laban and Bethuel answered and said, The thing proceedeth from the Lord; Gen. xxiv.
>
> And Jacob said, All these things are against me; Gen. xlii.
> I will tell you by what authority I do these things; Matth. xxi.
>
> These things said Esaias when he saw his glory; John xii.
> In learning French, choose such books as will teach you things as well as language. Jay to Littlepage.

2. Any substance; whatever is distinct, or conceived to be distinct, from one's self, and from other intelligent beings; that which is created; any particular article or commodity.

> He sent after this manner; ten asses laden with the good things of Egypt; Gen. xlii.
> They took the things which Micah had made; Judges xviii.

3. An animal; as, every living thing; every creeping thing; Gen. i. [This application of the word is improper, but common in popular and vulgar language.] — 4. A portion or part; something.

> Wicked men who understand any thing of wisdom. Tillotson.

5. In contempt.

> I have a thing in prose. Swift.

6. Used of persons in contempt.

> See, sons, what things you are. Shak.
> The poor thing sigh'd. Addison.
> I'll be this abject thing no more. Granville.

7. Used in a sense of honour.

> I see thee here,
> Thou noble thing! Shak.

8. Things, in colloq. lan., clothes; accoutrements; what one carries about with him.

THINK, v. i. pret. and pp. Thought, pron. thaut. [Sax. thincan, thencan; Goth. thaghyan; D. denken, to think, and gedagt, thought; G. denken, to think, and gedächtniss, remembrance; gedanke, thought; nachdenken, to ponder or meditate; Gr. δοκεω: Syr. and Ch. דוך, duk, allied to L. duco. We observe n is casual, and omitted in the participle thought. The sense seems to be to set in the mind, or to draw out, as in meditation.] 1. To have the mind occupied on some subject; to have ideas, or to revolve ideas in the mind.

For that I am
I know, because I think. Dryden.
These are not matters to be slightly thought on. Tillotson.

2. To judge; to conclude; to hold as a settled opinion. I think it will rain to-morrow. I think it not best to proceed on our journey.

Let them marry to whom they think best; Numb. xxxvi.

3. To intend.

Thou thought'st to help me. Shak
I thought to promote thee to great honour; Numb. xxiv.

4. To imagine; to suppose; to fancy.

Edmund, I think, is gone
In pity of his misery, to dispatch
His 'nighted life. Shak.
Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall; 1 Cor. x.

5. To muse; to meditate.

While Peter thought on the vision; Acts x.
Think much, speak little. Dryden.

6. To reflect; to recollect or call to mind.

And when Peter thought thereon, he wept; Mark xiv.

7 To consider; to deliberate. Think how this thing could happen.

He thought within himself, saying, What shall I do? Luke xii.

To presume.

Think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father; Matth. iii.

9. To believe; to esteem.—To think on or upon, to muse on: to meditate on.

If there be any virtue, if there be any praise, think on these things; Phil. iv.

2. To light on by meditation. He has just thought on an expedient that will answer the purpose.—3. To remember with favour.

Think upon me, my God, for good; Neh. v.

To think of, to have ideas come into the mind. He thought of what you told him. I would have sent the books, but I did not think of it.—To think well of, to hold in esteem; to esteem.

THINK, v. t. To conceive; to imagine.

Charity thinketh no evil; 1 Cor. xiii.

2. To believe; to consider; to esteem.

Nor think superfluous others' aid. Milton.

3. To seem or appear, as in the phrases, me thinketh or methinks, and methought These are genuine Saxon phrases, equivalent to it seems to me, it seemed to me. In these expressions, me is actually in the dative case; almost the only instance remaining in the language. Sax. "genoh thuht," satis visum est, it appeared enough or sufficient; "me thinceth," mihi videtur, it seems to me; I perceive.—To think much, to grudge.

He thought not much to clothe his enemies. Milton.

To think much of, to hold in high esteem.—To think scorn, to disdain; Esth. iii.

THINK'ER, n. One who thinks; but chiefly, one who thinks in a particular manner; as, a close thinker; a deep thinker; a coherent thinker.

THINK'ING, ppr. Having ideas; supposing; judging; imagining; intending; meditating.—2. a. Having the faculty of thought; cogitative; capable of a regular train of ideas. Man is a thinking being.

THINK'ING, n. Imagination; cogitation; judgment.

I heard a bird so sing,
Whose music, to my thinking, pleas'd the king. Shak.

THINK'INGLY, adv. By thought.

THIN'-LIPPED, a. Having thin lips.

THIN'LY, adv. [from thin.] In a loose, scattered manner; not thickly; as, ground thinly planted with trees; a country thinly inhabited.

THIN'NED, pp. Made thin; made rare or less thick.

THIN'NER, a. comp. of Thin.—n. One who thins, or makes thin.

THIN'NESS, n. The state of being thin; smallness of extent from one side or surface to the opposite; as, the thinness of ice; the thinness of a plate; the thinness of the skin.—2. Tenuity; rareness; as, the thinness of air or other fluid.—3. A state approaching to fluidity, or even fluidity; opposed to spissitude; as, the thinness of honey, of white wash, or of paint.—4 Exility; as, the thinness of a point.—5. Rareness; a scattered state; paucity; as, the thinness of trees in a forest; the thinness of inhabitants.

THIN'NING, ppr. Making thin, rare, or less thick; attenuating.

THIN'NING, n. In arboriculture, the operation of reducing the number of plants or trees which have been sown or planted, in order that those which remain may attain a more mature growth. Natural woods are also thinned for the same purpose. It is a principle in thinning, that the branches of no tree should be allowed to touch those of another tree.

THIN'-SKINNED, a. Having a thin skin; hence, unduly sensitive.

THIONU'RATE, n. A compound formed by the union of thionuric acid with a base; as thionurate of ammonia; thionurate of lime.

THIONU'RIC ACID, n. An acid discovered by Wöhler and Liebig. It is formed by the action of sulphurous acid on Alloxan. It is a bibasic acid, crystallizable, but very soluble, and contains the elements of 1 equivalent of alloxan, 1 of ammonia, and 2 of sulphurous acid. Its most striking character is, that when its solution is heated, it becomes turbid from the deposition of a new compound uramile; and in the liquid there is found sulphuric acid, which was not previously present.

THIOSIN'NAMINE, n. An organic base obtained from oil of mustard, when mixed with ammonia. It is crystalline, bitter, soluble in hot water, alcohol, and ether. It combines with acids, but its salts do not crystallize.

THIR, pron. These. [Scotch.]

THIRD, a. (thurd.) [Sax. thridda; Goth. thridya; G. dritte; D. derde; Sw. and Dan. tredie; Fr. tiers; L. tertius; Gr. τρίτος: W. trydy.] The first after the second; the ordinal of three. The third hour in the day, among the ancients, was nine o'clock in the morning.—Third estate, in the British nation, is the commons; or in the legislature, the house of commons.—Third order, among the Romanists, is a sort of religious order that observes the same rule and the same manner of life, in proportion as some other two orders previously instituted; as, the third order of Franciscans, instituted by St. Francis in 1221.—Third point or tierce point, in architecture, the point of section in the vertex of an equilateral triangle.—Third coat, in arch., the stucco when painting is to be used, or the setting for the reception of paper.—Third rate, in navies. A third rate ship carries from 64 to 72 guns.—Third sound, in music. [See the noun, Third.]

THIRD, n. (thurd.) The third part of any thing. A man takes land and tills it for one third of the produce; the owner taking two thirds.—2. The sixtieth part of a second of time.—3. In music, an interval containing three diatonic sounds; the major composed of two tones, called by the Greeks ditone, and the minor called hemiditone, consisting of a tone and a half; or, the major third comprises inclusively five semitones; the minor, only four.

THIRDBOROUGH, n. (thurd'burro.) [third and borough.] An under constable.

THIRD'INGS, n. The third year of the corn or grain growing on the ground at the tenant's death, due to the lord for a heriot, within the manor of Turfat in Herefordshire.

THIRD'LY, adv. In the third place.

THIRL, v. t. (thurl.) [Sax. thirlian.] To bore; to perforate. It is now written drill and thrill. [See these words, and see Nostril.]

THIRL, v. t. [Sax. thræl; Suio-Goth. træl; a bond servant.] To enslave; to thrill; to bind or subject to; to bind or astrict by the terms of a lease or otherwise; to grind at a certain mill.—2. To thrill. [Scotch.]

THIRL, n. In Scots law, a term used to denote those lands the tenants of which were bound to bring all their grain to a certain mill.

THIRLAGE, n. (thurl'age.) [See Thirl.] In Scots law, a species of servitude, formerly very common in Scotland, and also prevalent in England, by which the proprietors or other possessors of lands were bound to carry the grain produced on the lands to a particular mill to be ground, to which mill the lands were said to be thirled or astricted, and also to pay a certain proportion of the grain, varying in different cases, as a remuneration for the grinding, and for the expense of the erection and maintenance of the mill. The principal duty chargeable in thirlage was multure, which consisted of a proportion varying from about $\frac{1}{30}$ to about $\frac{1}{12}$ of the grain carried, or of the meal or flour ground, deliverable to the miller or other possessor of the mill under the proprietor, or to the proprietor or superior himself. There were also smaller duties of knaveship, bannock, lock and gowpen, called sequels, [see these terms,] which fell to the servants of the mill, according to the particular usage of each mill. This kind of servitude having become, in many cases, exceedingly oppressive, has fallen into disuse, an annual payment in grain or in money being substituted for it.

THIRST, n. (thurst.) [Sax. thurst, thyrst; G. durst; Dan. törst, from tör, dry; törrer, to dry, L. torreo, Sw. torka.] 1. A painful sensation of the throat or fauces, occasioned by the want of drink. Water is the proper object of this sensation or desire, although man, owing to disposition or his artificial mode of life, often satisfies it with other liquids. By satisfying thirst the body is provided with the quantity of water necessary for the repair of its tissues, and the maintenance of their proper moisture, and for the replacement of the fluid constantly lost by perspiration and other discharges. If thirst be long unallayed it produces one of the most dreadful states which man can be compelled to endure. Thirst is a common symptom of febrile and other diseases.

Wherefore is it that thou hast brought us out of Egypt, to kill us and our children and our cattle with thirst? Exod. xvii.

2. A vehement desire of drink; Ps. civ. — 3. A want and eager desire after any thing.

Thirst of worldly good. Fairfax.
Thirst of knowledge. Milton.
Thirst of praise. Granville.
Thirst after happiness. Cheyne.

But for is now more generally used after thirst; as, a thirst for worldly honours; a thirst for praise.—4. Dryness; drought.

The rapid current, through veins
Of porous earth with kindly thirst updrawn,
Rose a fresh fountain. Milton.

THIRST, v. i. (thurst.) [Sax. thyrstan; G. dursten; Sw. törsta.] 1. To experience a painful sensation of the throat or fauces, for want of drink.

The people thirsted there for water; Exod. xvii.

2. To have a vehement desire for any thing.

My soul thirsteth for the living God; Ps xlii.

THIRST, v. t. To want to drink; as, to thirst blood. [Not English.]

THIRST'ER, n. One who thirsts.

THIRST'ILY, adv. In a thirsty manner.

THIRST'INESS, n. [from thirsty.] The state of being thirsty; thirst.

THIRST'ING, ppr. Feeling pain for want of drink; having eager desire.

THIRST'Y, a. [from thirst.] Feeling a painful sensation of the throat or fauces, for want of drink.

Give me a little water, for I am thirsty; Judges iv.

I was thirsty, and ye gave me no drink. Matt. xxv.

2. Very dry; having no moisture; parched.

The thirsty land shall become springs of water; Is. xxxv.

3. Having a vehement desire of any thing; as, in blood-thirsty; Is. xliv., lxv.

THIRTEEN, a. (thur'teen.) [Sax. threottyne; three and ten; Sw. tretton; G. dreyzehn; D. dertien.] Ten and three; as, thirteen times.

THIR'TEEN, n. The number which consists of ten and three.

THIRTEENTH, a. (thur'teenth.) [supra.] The third after the tenth; the ordinal of thirteen; as, the thirteenth day of the month.

THIRTEENTH, n. (thur'teenth.) In music, an interval forming the octave of the sixth, or sixth of the octave.

THIRTIETH, a. (thur'tieth.) [from thirty; Sax. thrittigotha.] The tenth threefold; the ordinal of thirty; as, the thirtieth day of the month.

THIRTY, a. (thur'ty.) Sax. thrittig; G. dreissig; D. dertig.] Thrice ten; ten three times repeated; or twenty and ten. The month of June consists of thirty days. Joseph was thirty years old when he stood before Pharaoh.—Thirty years' war, in hist., a series of wars carried on between the Protestant and Roman Catholic leagues in Germany in the first half of the 17th century.

THIR'TY, n. The number which consists of three times ten.

THIS, definitive adjective, or substitute. plur. These. [Sax. this; Dan. plur. disse; G. das, dessen; D. deeze, dit.] 1. This is a definitive, or a definitive adjective, denoting something that is present or near in place or time, or something just mentioned. Is this your younger brother? What trespass is this which ye have committed?

Who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind? John ix.

When they heard this, they were pricked to the heart; Acts ii.

In the latter passage, this is a substitute for what had preceded, viz., the discourse of Peter just delivered. In like manner, this often represents a word, a sentence, or clause, or a series of sentences or events. In some cases, it refers to what is future, or to be immediately related.

But know this, that if the good man of the house had known in what watch the thief would come, he would have watched, and would not have suffered his house to be broken up; Matt. xxiv.

Here this refers to the whole subsequent member of the sentence.—2. By this, is used elliptically for by this time; as, by this the mail has arrived.—3. This is used with words denoting time past; as, I have taken no snuff for this month; and often with plural words. I have not wept this forty years. In this case, this, in the singular, refers to the whole term of time, or period; this period of forty years.—4. This is opposed to that.

This way and that the wav'ring sails they bend. Pope.

A body of this or that denomination is produced. Boyle.

This and that, in this use, denote difference indefinitely.—5. When this and that refer to different things before expressed, this refers to the thing last mentioned, and that to the thing first mentioned. [See THESE.]

Their judgment in this we may not, and in that we need not, follow. Hooker.

6. It is sometimes opposed to other.

Consider the arguments which the author had to write this, or to design the other, before you arraign him. Dryden.

THIS'TLE, n. (this'l.) [Sax. thistel; G. and D. distel; Sw. tistel.] The common name of prickly plants of the genus Carduus, a genus belonging to the class Syngenesia, and order Polygamia æqualis, Linn.; nat. order Compositæ. It consists of upwards of 30 species, most of which are inhabitants of Europe; as the musk thistle (C. nutans); milk thistle (C. marianus); welted thistle (C. acanthoides); slender-flowered thistle (C. tenuiflorus). The name thistle is also given to numerous prickly plants belonging to other genera; as the spear-thistle (Cnicus lanceolatus); field thistle (Cnicus arvensis), a well-known plant, very troublesome to the farmer. The cotton thistle belongs to the genus Onopordum; the common cotton-thistle (O. acanthium) attains a height of from four to six feet. It is cultivated in Scotland as the Scotch thistle, but it is doubtful whether the thistle which constitutes the national badge has any existing type. The carline thistle belongs to the genus Carlina; the blessed thistle is the Centaurea benedicta; and the star-thistle is the Centaurea calcitrapa. The sow-thistle belongs to the genus Sonchus, and the globe-thistle to the genus Echinops. Some species of the thistle are admitted into gardens, where they form a pretty variety for borders. Thistles sow themselves extensively by means of their winged seeds, and hence they are great pests to the farmer.—Order of the Thistle, an ancient Scottish order of knighthood, sometimes called the order of St. Andrew. The date of its institution is not known, but it was revived by James V. of Scotland in 1540, again by James VII. of Scotland and II. of England in 1687, and a third time in 1703 by Queen Anne, who increased the number of knights to twelve, and placed the order on a permanent footing. In 1827, the number of knights was permanently extended to sixteen. The decorations of the order consist of a collar of enamelled gold, composed of sixteen thistles, interlaced with sprigs of rue, fastened to the mantle by a white riband; a small golden image of St. Andrew suspended from the collar; a gold medal having an image of St. Andrew within a circle, containing the motto of the order, "Nemo me impune lacessit," (no one provokes me with impunity;) a thistle; a green riband to which the medal is attached, and a star which is worn on the left shoulder. The thistle, as is well known, is the national emblem of Scotland, and the national motto is the same as that of the order of the thistle.

THIS'TLE-CROWN, n. A gold coin of James I. king of England.

THIS'TLE-FINCH,† n. The goldfinch.

THISTLY, a. (this'ly.) Overgrown with thistles; as, thistly ground.

THITHER, adv. [Sax. thider, thyder.] 1 To that place; opposed to hither.

This city is near, O let me escape thither; Gen. xix.

Where I am, thither ye cannot come; John vii.

2. To that end or point.—Hither and thither, to this place and to that; one way and another.

THITH'ERTO,† adv. To that point; so far.

THITH'ERWARD, adv. [thither and ward.] Toward that place.

They shall ask the way to Zion with their faces thitherward; Jer. l.

THIT'LING,† n. A hamlet.

THLAS'PI, n. Shepherd's purse, or bastard cress, a genus of European plants. The common shepherd's purse of the waysides belongs to the genus Capsella.

THLASPID'EÆ, n. A tribe of plants of the nat. order Cruciferæ, having for its type the genus Thlaspi.

THO', a contraction of Though. [See THOUGH.]—2.† Tho, for Sax. thonne, then.

THOLE, n. [Sax. thol; Ir. and Gael. dula, a pin or peg.] 1. A pin inserted into the gunwale of a boat, to keep the oar in the rowlock, when used in rowing.—2. The pin or handle of a scythe.

THOLE, v. t. [Sax. tholian; G. and D. dulden; Sw. töla; L. tollo, tolero.] To bear; to endure; to undergo; to allow; to wait; to expect. [Scotch.]

THOLE, v. i. [supra.] To wait. [Scotch.]

THOLE, THO'LUS, n. [L. tholus.] In ancient arch., a dome or cupola; any circular building.

THOL'OBATE, n. [Gr. θόλος, a coved roof, and βάσις, basis.] In arch., the substructure on which a dome rests.

THOMÆ'AN, } n. One belonging to THO'MITE, } a church of early Christians, said to have been founded, on the Malabar coast of India, by St. Thomas.

THO'MAISM, } n. The doctrine of St.
THO'MISM, } Thomas Aquinas with respect to predestination and grace.

THO'MIST, n. A follower of Thomas Aquinus, in opposition to the Scotists.

THOM'SONITE, n. [from Thomson.] A mineral of the zeolite family, from Dumbarton, occurring generally in masses of a radiated structure, and of a glassy or vitreous structure. It consists of silica, alumina, and lime, with some soda, and 14 per cent. of water.

THONG, n. [Sax. thwang.] A strap of leather, used for fastening any thing.

And nails for loosen'd spears, and thongs for shields provide. Dryden.

THOR, n. In Scandinavian myth., the son of Odin and Freya, and the divinity who presided over all mischievous spirits that inhabited the elements. He was also the Jupiter of the ancient Germans, and worshipped as the god of thunder. He was represented as an old man with a long beard, a crown with diverging rays, dressed in a long garment, holding in his right hand a sceptre with a lily, and having around his head a circle of stars. Thursday (day of Thor) has its name from him.

THORAC'IC, a. [L. thorax, the breast.] Pertaining to the breast; as, the thoracic arteries. The thoracic duct is the trunk of the absorbent vessels. It runs up along the spine from the receptacle of the chyle to the left subclavian vein, in which it terminates.

THORAC'ICS, n. plur. In ichthyology, the name given by Linnæus to an order of bony fishes, respiring by means of gills only, the character of which is that the bronchia are ossiculated, and the ventral fins are placed underneath the thorax, or beneath the pectoral fins. It comprehends the flounders, turbot, mackerel, &c.

THO'RAL, a. [L. torus.] Pertaining to a bed.

THORI'A, } n. A white earthy sub-
THORI'NA, } stance, obtained by Berzelius, in 1828, from the mineral called thorite, of which it constitutes 58 per cent. It is an oxide of thorinum; and when pure is a white powder, without taste, smell, or alkaline reaction on litmus. Its specific gravity is 9·4. It is insoluble in all the acids except the sulphuric.

THO'RITE, n. [from Thor, the Scandinavian deity.] A massive and compact mineral, found in Norway, in syenite, and resembling gadolinite. It is of a black colour, and contains about 58 per cent. of thorina, mixed with 13 metallic and other bodies.

THORI'UM, } n. The metallic base
THORI'NUM, } of thoria, discovered by Berzelius. It is in the form of a heavy metallic powder, and has an iron-grey tint. It burns in air or oxygen, when heated, with great splendour, and is converted into thorina or oxide of thorinum. It unites energetically with chlorine, sulphur, and phosphorus. Hydrochloric acid readily dissolves it, with the evolution of hydrogen gas.

THORN, n. [Sax. thorn; G. dorn; Dan. torne; Slav. tern; W. draen. Qu. is not the latter contracted from the Gaelic dreaghum?] 1. A tree or shrub armed with sharp ligneous shoots, which consist of abortive and indurated twigs; as the black-thorn, white-thorn, sallow-thorn, buck-thorn, &c. [See CRATÆGUS.] The word is sometimes incorrectly applied to a bush with prickles; as, a rose on a thorn —2. A sharp ligneous or woody shoot from the stem of a tree or shrub; a sharp process from the woody part of a plant; an abortive or imperfectly developed twig, which has assumed a hard texture and terminates in a sharp point. Thorns or spines must not be confounded with prickles; the former are continuous with the woody tissue of the plant, while the latter are merely attached to the surface of the bark. Thorns are in fact modified branches or leaves, while prickles are indurated hairs. In common usage, thorn is applied to the prickle of the rose, and in fact the two words are used promiscuously. — 3. Any thing troublesome. St. Paul had a thorn in the flesh; 2 Cor. xii.; Num. xxxiii.—4. In scrip., great difficulties and impediments.

I will hedge up thy way with thorns; Hos. ii.

5. Worldly cares; things which prevent the growth of good principles; Matt xiii.

THORN'-APPLE, n [thorn and apple.] A plant of the genus Datura; a popular name of the Datura Stramonium. [See DATURA.]

THORN'-BACK, n. [thorn and back.] A fish, a species of Ray, the Raia clavata. It is distinguished by the short and strong recurved spines, which are scattered over the back and tail. It grows to about two feet long, is very voracious, feeding on small flounders, herrings, sand-eels, crabs, lobsters, &c. It is common on the British and Irish coasts. Great quantities are taken every year, and the flesh is considered to be excellent food. The female is in Scotland called the maiden-skate.

Thornback (Raia clavata).

THORN'-BUSH, n. A shrub that produces thorns.

THORN'-BUT, n. A fish, a but or turbot.

THORN'-HEDGE, n. [thorn and hedge.] A hedge or fence consisting of thorn.

THORN'LESS, a. Destitute of thorns; as, a thornless shrub or tree.

THORN'-SET, a. Set with thorns.

THORN'Y, a. Full of thorns or spines; rough with thorns; as, a thorny wood; a thorny tree; a thorny diadem or crown.—2. Troublesome; vexatious; harassing; perplexing; as, thorny care; the thorny path of vice.—3. Sharp; pricking; vexatious; as, thorny points.

THORN'Y REST-HARROW, n. A plant of the genus Ononis, the O. arvensis. [See ONONIS.]

THORN'Y-TREFOIL, n. A plant of the genus Fagonia, the F. trifolium.

THŎROUGH, a. (thur'ro.) [Sax. thurh; G. durch; D. door. In these languages, the word is a preposition; but as a preposition we write it through. See this word. It is evidently from the root of door, which signifies a passage, and the radix of the word signifies to pass.] 1. Literally, passing through or to the end; hence, complete; perfect; as, a thorough reformation; thorough work; a thorough translator; a thorough poet.—2. Passing through; as, thorough lights in a house.—Thorough framing, in arch., an old term for the framing of doors and windows. — Thorough lighted rooms, rooms which have windows on opposite sides.

THŎROUGH, prep. (thur'ro.) From side to side, or from end to end.—2.† By means of. [See THROUGH.]

THOROUGH, n. (thur'ro.) An interfurrow between two ridges.

THOR'OUGH, n. In British hist., a word used in the reign of Charles I. by Wentworth, earl of Stafford, in his confidential correspondence. He employed it to express the scheme he meditated for subverting the liberties of his countrymen and making Charles an absolute monarch.

THŎROUGH-BASE, } n. (thur'ro-THŎROUGH-BASS, } base or bass.) [thorough and base or bass.] In music, the art of playing on keyed instruments and according to the rules of harmony, an accompaniment from figures representing chords, such figures being placed either over or under the notes of the instrumental base staff. The figures used in thorough base are the nine units. These represent certain intervals or sounds. The same name is given to the accompaniment itself as well as to the art of playing it.

THOROUGH-BRED, a. (thur'ro-bred.) [thorough and bred.] 1. Completely taught or accomplished.—2. Produced by parents of full blood on both sides; as, a thorough-bred horse.

THŎROUGH-FARE, n. (thur'ro-fare.) [thorough and fare.] 1. A passage through; a passage from one street or opening to another; an unobstructed way.—2. Power of passing.

THOROUGH-GOING, a. Going all lengths.

THŎROUGHLY, adv. (thur'roly.) Fully; entirely; completely; as, a room thoroughly swept; a business thoroughly performed. Let the matter be thoroughly sifted. Let every part of the work be thoroughly finished.

THŎROUGHNESS, n. (thur'roness.) Completeness; perfectness.

THŎROUGH-PĀCED, a. (thur'ro-paced.) [thorough and paced.] Perfectly trained; perfect in what is undertaken; complete; going all lengths; as, a thorough-paced tory or whig.

THŎROUGH-WŎRT, n. (thur'ro-wort.) The popular name of a plant, the Eupatorium perfoliatum, a native of North America. It is also known by the name of Boneset. An infusion of the heads of the flowers, and part of the plant in boiling water, is applied medicinally in cases of rheumatism and rheumatic fevers, and also for relieving colds. It is also employed as an emetic and purgative. [See EUPATORY.]

THORP, THORPE, Sax. thorpe; D. dorp; G. dorf; Sw. and Dan. torp; W. trev; Gael. Ir. treabh; L. tribus. The word in Welsh signifies a dwelling place, a homestead, a hamlet, a town. When applied to a single house, it answers to the Sax. ham, a house, whence hamlet and home. In the Teutonic dialects, it denotes a village. The primary sense is probably a house, a habitation, from fixedness; hence a hamlet, a village, a tribe; as in rude ages the dwelling of the head of a family was soon surrounded by the houses of his children and descendants. In our language it occurs now only in names of places and persons.

THOS, THOUS, n. A name given to the Thoan group of dogs, which is a kind intermediate between the wolf, the fox, and the jackal, of all of whose natures it somewhat partakes. The thous are larger than a jackal; they do not burrow, and are marked on the back by black and white colours, the rest of the fur being in general ochrey buff. Among the different species are the Thous Anthus, or canis anthus, the wild dog of Egypt, T. variegatus, Nubian thous, T. mesomelas, Cape jackal, T. senegalensis, Senegal thous or jackal, &c.

THŌSE, pron. (s as z.) plur. of That; as, those men; those temples. When those and these are used in reference to two things or collections of things, those refers to the first mentioned, as these does to the last mentioned. [See THESE, and the example there given.]

THOTH, n. An Egyptian divinity whom the Greeks considered to be identical with Mercury. He was regarded as the inventor of writing and Thoth, from a bronze in the British Museum.

Egyptian philosophy, and is represented as a human figure with the head of a lamb or ibis.

THOU, pron. in the obj. Thee, plur. Ye or You. [Sax. thu; G Sw. and Dan. du; L. Fr. It. Sp. Port. and Russ. tu; Sans. tuam. The nominative case is probably contracted, for in the oblique cases it is in Sw. and Dan. dig, in Goth. thuk, Sax. thec. So in Hindoo, tu in the nominative, makes in the dative, tuko; Gipsy, tu, tuke. In Russ. the verb is tukayu, to thou. The second personal pronoun, in the singular number; the pronoun which is used in addressing persons in the solemn style.

Art thou he that should come; Matt. xi.

I will fear no evil, for thou art with me; Ps. xxiii.

Thou is used only in the solemn style, unless in very familiar language, and by the Quakers. [See YE and YOU.]

THOU, v. t. To treat with familiarity.

If thou thouest him some thrice, it shall not be amiss. Shak.

THOU, v. i. To use thou and thee in discourse.

THOUGH, v. i. (tho.) [Sax. theah; Goth. thauh; G. doch; Sw. dock; D. and Dan. dog. This is the imperative of a verb; Ir. daighim, to give, D. dokken.] 1. Grant; admit; allow. "If thy brother be waxen poor—thou shalt relieve him; yea, though he be a stranger." Grant or admit the fact that he is a stranger, yet thou shalt relieve him; Lev. xxv.

Though he slay me, yet will I trust in him; Job xiii.

That is, grant or admit that he shall slay me, yet will I trust in him.

Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished; Prov. xi.

That is, admit the fact that the wicked unite their strength, yet this will not save them from punishment.

Not that I so affirm, though so it seem. Milton.

That is, grant that it seems so, yet I do not so affirm.—2. Used with as.

In the vine were three branches, and it was as though it budded; Gen. xl.

So we use as if; it was as if it budded; and if is gif, give. The appearance was like the real fact if admitted or true.—3. It is used in familiar language, at the end of a sentence.

A good cause would do well though. Dryden

This is generally or always elliptical, referring to some expression preceding or understood.—4. It is compounded with all, in although,—which see.

THOUGHT, pret. and pp. of Think; pronounced thaut.

THOUGHT, n. (thaut.) [primarily the passive participle of think, supra; Sax. theaht.] 1. Properly, that which the mind thinks. Thought is either the act or operation of the mind, when attending to a particular subject or thing, or it is the idea consequent on that operation. We say, a man's thoughts are employed on government, on religion, on trade, or arts, or his thoughts are employed on his dress or his means of living. By this we mean that the mind is directed to that particular subject or object; that is, according to the literal import of the verb think, the mind, the intellectual part of man, is set upon such an object, it holds it in view or contemplation, or it extends to it, it stretches to it.

Thought cannot be superadded to matter, so as in any sense to render it true that matter can become cogitative. Dwight.

2. Idea; conception. I wish to convey my thoughts to another person. I employ words that express my thoughts, so that he may have the same ideas; in this case, our thoughts will be alike.—3. Fancy; conceit; something framed by the imagination.

Thoughts come crowding in so fast upon me, that my only difficulty is to choose or reject. Dryden.

4. Reflection; particular consideration.

Why do you keep alone?
Using those thoughts which should have died
With them they think on. Shak.

5. Opinion; judgment.

Thus Bethel spoke, who always speaks his thoughts. Pope.

6. Meditation; serious consideration.

Pride, of all others the most dangerous fault,
Proceeds from want of sense or want of thought. Roscommon.

7. Design; purpose.

All their thoughts are against me for evil; Ps. lvi.; xxxiii.; Jer. xxix.

8. Silent contemplation.—9. Solicitude; care; concern.

Hawis was put in trouble, and died with thought and anguish before his business came to an end Bacon.

10. Inward reasoning; the workings of conscience.

Their thoughts the meanwhile accusing or else excusing one another; Rom. ii.

11 † A small degree or quantity; as, a thought longer; a thought better.—To take thought, to be solicitous or anxious; Matth. vi.

THOUGHT'FUL, a. Full of thought; contemplative; employed in meditation; as, a man of thoughtful mind.—2. Attentive; careful; having the mind directed to an object; as, thoughtful of gain.—3. Promoting serious thought; favourable to musing or meditation.

War, horrid war, your thoughtful walks invades. Pope.

4. Anxious; solicitous.

Around her crowd distrust and doubt and fear,
And thoughtful foresight, and tormenting care. Prior.

THOUGHT'FULLY, adv. With thought or consideration; with solicitude.

THOUGHT'FULNESS, n. Deep meditation.—2. Serious attention to spiritual concerns.—3. Anxiety; solicitude.

THOUGHT'LESS, a. Heedless; careless; negligent.

Thoughtless of the future. Rogers.

2. Gay; dissipated.—3. Stupid; dull.

Thoughtless as monarch oaks that shade the plain Dryden

THOUGHT'LESSLY, adv. Without thought; carelessly: stupidly.

THOUGHT'LESSNESS, n. Want of thought; heedlessness; carelessness, inattention.

THOUGHT'SICK, a. [thought and sick.] Uneasy with reflection.

THOU'SAND, a. (s as z.) [Sax. thusend; Goth. thusund; G. tausend; Sw. tusend.] 1. Denoting the number of ten hundred. —2. Proverbially, denoting a great number indefinitely. It is a thousand chances to one that you succeed.

THOU'SAND, n. The number of ten hundred.

A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; Ps. xci.

Thousand is sometimes used plurally without the plural termination, as in the passage above, ten thousand; but it often takes the plural termination. In former times, how many thousands perished by famine!

THOU'SANDFOLD, a. Doubled a thousand times.

THOU'SANDTH, a. The ordinal of thousand; as, the thousandth part of a thing; also, proverbially, very numerous.

THOU'SANDTH, n. The thousandth part of any thing; as, two thousandths of a tax.

THOWL, } n. A pin inserted into the THOWLE, } gunwale of a boat to keep the oar in the rowlock when used in rowing. It is also written Thole,—which see.

THRAP'PLE, n. The windpipe of an animal. It is a corruption of the English throttle. [Scotch.]

THRASH, v. t. [Sax. tharscan, or therscan; G. dreschen; D. dorschen; Sw. tröska; Ice. thershia. It is written thrash or thresh. The common pronunciation is thrash.] 1. To beat out or separate grain or seeds from the straw or haulm, by means of a flail or thrashing machine, or by treading with oxen; as, to thrash wheat, rye, or oats. —2. To beat soundly with a stick or whip; to drub.

THRASH, v. i. To practise thrashing: to perform the business of thrashing: as, a man who thrashes well.—2. To labour; to drudge

I rather would be Mevius, thrash for rhymes Like his the scorn and scandal of the times Dryden.

THRASH'ED, pp. Beaten out of the husk or off the ear.—2. Freed from the grain by beating, or by a machine, or by the feet of oxen.

THRASH'EL, n. An instrument to thrash with.

THRASH'ER, n. One who thrashes grain.—2. A species of shark, the Squalus vulpes, or sea-fox, called the thrasher from the length of its tail. [See SEA-FOX.] Brown thrasher, an American singing bird of the thrush family, the Turdus rufus.

THRASH'ING, ppr. Beating out of the husk or off the ear, or separating from the straw; beating soundly with a stick or whip.

THRASH'ING, n. The operation by which grain is separated from the straw. This operation is performed in various ways; as, by the feet of animals, by a flail, or by a thrashing-machine. The first mode was that employed in the ages of antiquity, and it is still practised in the south of Europe, and in Persia and India. Oxen were generally employed for this purpose, either alone or with the addition of a kind of roller studded with iron knots, which the oxen dragged over the corn sheaves, which latter were spread on a circular floor in the form of a circle, the ends containing the grain being placed towards the centre. Thrashing by the flail is still practised in various parts of this and other countries, but thrashing machines have been very extensively introduced, which effect a great saving in time and labour to the farmer.—2. A sound drubbing.

THRASH'ING-FLOOR, n. [thrash and floor.] A floor or area on which grain is beaten out. In eastern countries, from the earliest ages, thrashing-floors were in the open air; but in colder and moister climates, such as ours, such floors must be under cover. Accordingly, a thrashing-floor with us is a space in a barn-floor, on which the grain is thrashed out by the flail.

THRASH'ING-MACHINE, } n. A ma-
THRASH'ING-MILL, } chine for separating grain, as wheat, oats, barley, &c., from the straw; and in which the moving power is that of horses, oxen, wind, water, or steam. Water and horses are most generally employed. The thrashing-machine was invented in Scotland in 1758, by Michael Stirling, a farmer in Perthshire; it was afterwards improved by Mr. Andrew Meikle, a millwright in East Lothian, about the year 1785. Since that time it has undergone various other improvements. The thrashing-machines mostly employed at farm-houses may be briefly described as consisting of three rotative drums or cylinders, which receive motion from a water-wheel, or from a horizontal wheel driven by horses, or by steam power. The first drum which comes into operation has projecting ribs called beaters on its outer surface, parallel to its axis. This drum receives a very rapid motion on its axis. The sheaves of corn are first spread out on a slanting table, and are then drawn in between two rollers called feeding rollers. The beaters of the drum act on the straw as it passes through the rollers, and beat out the grain. The thrashed corn is then carried forward to two successive drums or shakers, which, being armed with numerous spikes, lift up and shake the straw so as to free it entirely from the loose grain lodged in it. The grain is made to pass through a grated floor, and is generally conducted to a winnowing machine, which is driven by the same power which drives the thrashing-machine itself, by which means the grain is separated from the chaff. Thrashing-machines effect a great saving in labour; they do the work speedily, and at the time required; and they do the work better than the flail, separating the corn (particularly wheat) more completely from the straw.

THRASON'ICAL, a. [from Thraso, a boaster in old comedy.] 1. Boasting; given to bragging.—2. Boastful; implying ostentatious display.

THRASON'ICALLY, adv. Boastingly.

THRATCH, v. i. To gasp convulsively, as one does in the agonies of death. As a noun, the oppressed and violent respiration of one in the last agonies. [Scotch.]

THRAVE,† n. [Sax. draf, a drove.] A drove; a herd.

THRAVE, n. [W. drev a, twenty-four; drev, a bundle or tie.] 1. The number of two dozen.—2. Twenty-four sheaves of grain set up in the field, and forming two stooks, or shocks, of twelve sheaves each. It is also written Threave. [Scotch.]

THRAW, v. t. [Sax. thrawian.] To wreathe; to twist; to wrench; to distort; to wrest; to oppose; to resist. As a verb intran., to cast; to warp; to twist from agony. [Scotch.]

THRAW, n. A twist; a wrench. [Scotch.]

THRA'WARD, a. Forward; perverse; backward; reluctant. [Scotch.]

THRA'WIN, } pp. and a. Distorted;
THRAWN, } having the appearance of ill humour; cross-grained; of a perverse humour. [Scotch.]

THREAD, n. [Sax. thred, thræd; D. draad; Sw. träd; Dan. traad; probably from drawing.] 1. A small line made by twisting together a number of fibres of some vegetable or animal substance, such as flax, cotton, or silk; whence its names of linen, cotton, or silk thread. Sewing thread, and the various kinds of thread used in the manufacture of bobbin-net, lace, and some other kinds of textile fabrics, consist of two or more yarns, or simple spun threads, firmly united together by twisting. Thread is spun doubled, tripled, &c., and twisted by machines. —2. In bot., the filament of a flower. —3. The filament of any fibrous substance, as of bark.—4. A fine filament or line of gold or silver.—5. Air-threads, the fine white filaments which are seen floating in the air in summer, the production of spiders.—6. THREAD'BARENESS, n. The state of being threadbare or trite.

THREAD'EN, a. Made of thread; as, threaden sails. [Little used.]

THREAD'LIKE, a. Resembling thread.

THREAD'-PLANTS, n. Plants whose fibres or filaments may be manufactured into thread: as flax and cotton-plants, various kinds of nettle and broom, the stems of the wild hop, swallow-wort, &c.

THREAD'SHAPED, a. In bot., filiform.

THREAD'Y, a. Like thread or filaments; slender.—2. Containing thread.

THREAP, v. t. [Sax. threapian, or rather threagan.] To aver with pertinacity; to contend; to quarrel; to urge with pertinacity; to continue to assert in reply to denial. [Scotch.]

THREAT, n. (thret.) [Sax. threat. See the verb.] A menace; denunciation of ill; declaration of an intention or determination to inflict punishment, loss, or pain on another.

There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats. Shak.

In English criminal law, threats of personal violence, or any other threats by which a man of ordinary firmness may be put in fear, and by means of which money or other property is extorted from him, amount to the crime of robbery. It is also a misdemeanor at common law to threaten another in order to deter him from doing some lawful act, or to compel him to do some unlawful one, or to extort money or goods from him, or to obtain any other benefit to the person who makes the threat. In Scots law, threats, when used so as to infer just ground of fear, or even if less violent, when accompanied with importunity, will void a deed granted by any person while under the influence; and using threats of death to any person, or attempting or pretending to carry them into execution, in order to compel a confession of a real or supposed crime, is punishable at common law. [See THREATENING.]

THREAT, v. t. (thret.) To threaten,—which see. Threat is used only in poetry.

THREATEN, v. t. (threat'n.) [Sax. threatian, from threat. But threat appears to be contracted from threagan, which is written also threawian; D. dreigen; G. drohen; Dan. tretter, to chide, to scold, dispute, wrangle.] 1. To declare the purpose of inflicting punishment, pain, or other evil on another, for some sin or offence; to menace. God threatens the finally impenitent with everlasting banishment from his presence.—2. To menace; to terrify or attempt to terrify by menaces; as for extorting money. To send threatening letters is a punishable offence.—3. To charge or enjoin with menace, or with implied rebuke; or to charge strictly.

Let us straitly threaten them, that they speak henceforth to no man in his name; Acts iv.

4. To menace by action; to present the appearance of coming evil; as, rolling billows threaten to overwhelm us.—5. To exhibit the appearance of something evil or unpleasant approaching; as, the clouds threaten us with rain or a storm.

THREAT'ENED, pp. (thret'nd.) Menaced with evil.

THREATENER, n. (thret'ner.) One that threatens.

THREATENING, ppr. (thret'ning.) Menacing; denouncing evil.—2. a. Indicating a threat or menace; as, a threatening look.—3. Indicating something impending; as, the weather is threatening; the clouds have a threatening aspect.—Threatening letters. In English law, the sending or delivering any letter with menaces, with or without any name or signature, or with a fictitious name or signature, demanding money or any other valuable commodity, or threatening (without any demand) to kill or murder, or set fire to the house, or the like, is a felony. By the common law of Scotland, such offences are punishable arbitrarily, and have been punished by pillory and transportation for life.

THREATENING, n. (thret'ning.) The act of menacing; a menace; a denunciation of evil, or declaration of a purpose to inflict evil on a person or country, usually for sins and offences. The prophets are filled with God's threatenings against the rebellious Jews; Acts iv.

THREATENINGLY, adv. (thret'ningly.) With a threat or menace; in a threatening manner.

THREATFUL, a. (thret'ful.) Full of threats; having a menacing appearance; minacious.

THREAVE. See THRAVE.

THREE, a. [Sax. threo, thri, thry, and thrig; Sw. and Dan. tre; G. drei; Fr. trois; Sp. and L. tres; Gael. and W. tri; Gipsy, tre; Gr. τρεις; Sans. treja, tri. We know not the last radical, nor the primary sense of three. Owen, in his Welsh Dictionary, suggests that it signifies fixed, firm. But see EXTRICATE and TRICK. It is probably contracted from thrig.] 1. Two and one.

I offer thee three things; 2 Sam. xxiv.

2. It is often used like other adjectives, without the noun to which it refers.

Abishai...attained not to the first three; 2 Sam. xxiii.

3. Proverbially, a small number.

Away, thou three-inched fool. Shak.

Rule of three, in arith., a rule by which three quantities being given (the first and second being of the same kind), a fourth quantity is found, such that the first has the same ratio to the second that the third has to the fourth; or such that the first is the same multiple, part or parts, of the second that the third is of the fourth. This has been called the golden rule, on account of its great value. The immense variety of questions which may be solved by finding a fourth proportional defies all classification; but they may all be reduced to one form, viz., A produces B, what will C produce. [See PROPORTION, RATIO.]

THREE, n. The number which consists of two and one.

THREE-CAP'SULED, a. Tricapsular; having three capsules.

THREE-CELL'ED, a. Trilocular; having three cells.

THRESH'ING. See THRASHING.

THRESH'ING-FLOOR. See THRASHING-FLOOR.

THRESH'ING MACHINE, n. See THRASHING-MACHINE.

THRESH'OLD, n. [Sax. therscwald; G. thürschwelle; Sw. tröskel; Ice. throsulldur The Saxon and Swedish words seem by their orthography to be connected with thrash, thresh, and the last syllable to be wald, wood; but the German word is obviously compounded of thür, door, and schwelle, sill; door-sill.] 1. The door-sill: the plank, stone, or piece of timber which lies at the bottom or under a door, particularly of a dwelling-house, church, temple, or the like; hence, entrance; gate; door.—2. Entrance; the place or point of entering or beginning. He is now at the threshold of his argument.

Many men that stumble at the threshold. Shak.

THREW, pret. of Throw.

THRICE, adv. [from three; perhaps three and L. vice; or a change of Fr. tiers.] 1. Three times.

Before the cock crow, thou shalt deny me thrice; Matth. xxvi.

2. Sometimes used by way of amplification; very.

Thrice noble lord, let me entreat of you
To pardon me. Shak.

THRICE-FAVOURED, a. Favoured thrice; highly favoured.

THRID, v. t. [W. treiziaw, to penetrate; treidiaw, to course, to range.] To slide through a narrow passage; to thread; to slip, shoot, or run through, as a needle, bodkin, or the like.

Some thrid the mazy ringlets of her hair. Pope.

THRUSH, n [Sax. thrisc; G. drossel; W. tresglen; Sw. trast.] 1. A bird of the genus Turdus, or of the family Turdidæ; but the name is applied by way of eminence to the song thrush, (Turdus musicus.) [See THROSTLE and MAVIS.] The thrushes (Turdidæ or Merulidæ,) form a family of dentirostral passerine birds, having the bill of middle size, sharp edged, compressed, and decurved at the tip, with a notch near the point, and a few loose hairs over the base; the nostrils oval, lateral, half concealed by membrane, the middle toe not so long as the tarsus, and the outer toes joined to it at the base. They resemble the shrikes, but they are more frugivorous, generally feeding upon berries, though they prefer small animals, especially molluscs and worms, when these can be obtained. Their habits are mostly solitary, but several species are gregarious in winter. Thrushes have been celebrated from very remote antiquity on account of their powers of song; they are widely diffused, being found in all the quarters of the globe. Among European thrushes we have the blackbird (Merula vulgaris), the black-throated thrush (Turdus atrogularis), the missel thrush (Turdus viscivorus), the field-fare (Turdus pilaris), the song thrush or throstle (Turdus musicus), the water-ouzel (Cinclus aquaticus), the rock-thrush (Petrocincla saxatilis), &c. Turdus erythrogaster belongs to Asia; Turdus stripitans, to Africa; and Turdus melodus, or the wood thrush, to America.—2. [Qu. thrust.] An affection of the inflammatory and suppurating kind, in the feet of the horse and some other animals. In the horse it is in the frog.—3. In med., (L. aphthæ.) A disease characterized by roundish granular vesicles of a pearl colour, affecting the lips and mouth, and sometimes the whole alimentary canal, terminating in curd-like sloughs; occasionally occurring in successive crops. It is common in infants who are ill fed or brought up by hand. In adults, it commonly occurs in the advanced stages of many diseases, as typhoid and other acute fevers; in short, in nearly all cases in which there is great prostration of strength, thrush may occur.

THRUSH'-PASTE, n. An astringent for curing thrush in the feet of horses. It is composed of calamine, verdigris, white vitriol, alum, and tar.

THRUST, v. t. pret. and pp. Thrust. [L. trudo, trusum, trusito; Ch. טרד, terad; Ar. tarada.] 1. To push or drive with force; as, to thrust any thing with the hand or foot, or with an instrument.

> Neither shall one thrust another; Joel ii.; John xx.

THRUST, n. A violent push or driving, as with a pointed weapon, or with the hand or foot, or with any instrument; a word much used in fencing.

> Polites Pyrrhus with his lance pursues,
> And often reaches, and his thrusts renews. Dryden.

2. Attack; assault.

> There is one thrust at your pure, pretended mechanism. More

3. In mech., the force exerted by any body or system of bodies, against another body or system.—Thrust of an arch, the force exerted by the arch stones, considered as a combination of wedges, to overturn the abutments or walls from which the arch springs. The force exerted by rafters or beams against the walls which bear them is also termed a thrust.

Note.—Push and shove do not exactly express the sense of thrust. The two former imply the application of force by one body already in contact with the body to be impelled. Thrust, on the contrary, often implies the impulse or application of force by a moving body, a body in motion before it reaches the body to be impelled. This distinction does not extend to every case.

THRUST'ER, n. One who thrusts or stabs.

THRUST'ING, ppr. Pushing with force; driving; impelling; pressing.

THRUST'ING, n. The act of pushing with force.—2. In dairies, the act of squeezing curd with the hand, to expel the whey. [Local.]

THUD, n. [Sax. thoden; G. duden; Ir. dud.] Impetus; as of a gust of wind; a stroke; a blow. As a verb, to move with velocity; to beat; to strike. [Scotch.]

THUGS, n. (tugs.) [Hind. thagna; to deceive.] A secret and wide spread association of robbers and murderers in the upper provinces of Hindostan. The existence of this association was scarcely known to the British government before the year 1810, and no combined measures were taken to put it down until about 1830. The Thugs are considered to be a degenerate sect of Kâli worshippers, and are peculiarly superstitious in their observances. To rob and murder is with them a sacred duty, and they are directed in all their proceedings by auguries, supposed to be vouchsafed by their tutelary goddess Behowanee. They usually move in gangs, consisting of from ten to two hundred or three hundred men, of all races, castes, sects, and religions, yet all joining in the worship of Kâli, and sacrificing to their tutelary goddess every victim they can seize, and sharing the plunder among themselves. Still they shed no blood unless when forced by circumstances, but strangle their victims by means of a rope or handkerchief. Particular classes, however, are altogether exempt from their attacks; among whom are dancing girls, minstrels, sikhs, some religious mendicants, tailors, oilmen, blacksmiths and carpenters. In 1830 vigorous measures were adopted for their suppression, and between 1830 and 1837 upwards of 3000 were brought to justice. In consequence of these measures, the numbers of Thugs have rapidly diminished, and it is to be hoped that they will soon be totally extinct. The system practised by the Thugs is termed Thugee.

THU'JA, } THU'YA, } n. A genus of plants, nat. order Coniferæ. The species are known by the name of arbor vitæ, or tree of life; they are evergreens, trees or shrubs, and are inhabitants of Asia, Africa, and North America. T. occidentalis, the American arbor vitæ, and T. orientalis, the Chinese arbor vitæ, have been introduced into this country as ornamental plants.

THU'LE, n. The name given by the ancients to the most northern country with which they were acquainted. This is generally believed to have been Iceland. Hence the Latin phrase ultima thule.

THU'LITE, n. A rare mineral of a peach blossom colour, found in Norway. It consists of silica, alumina, and lime, with minute portions of soda, potash, and the oxides of iron and manganese.

THUMB, n. [Sax. thuma; G. daumen; D. duim; Dan. tomme; Sw. tumme.] The short thick finger of the human hand, or the corresponding member of other animals.

THUMB, v. t. To handle awkardly; to play with the fingers; as, to thumb over a tune.—2. To soil with the fingers.

THUMB, v. i. To play on with the fingers.

THUMB'-BAND, n. [thumb and band.] A twist of any thing as thick as the thumb.

THUMB'ED, a. Having thumbs.

THUMB'ED, pp. Handled awkwardly; soiled with the fingers.

THUMB'ING, ppr. Soiling with the fingers.

THUMBKIN, n. See THUMB-SCREW.

THUMB'-LATCH, n. A kind of door-latch, which receives its name from the thumb being placed on the lever, to raise its latch.

THUMB'-RING, n. A ring formerly worn on the thumb.

THUMB'-SCREW, n. A screw which may be turned by the application of the finger and thumb; as a screw for fastening a window sash.—2. An ancient instrument of torture for compressing the thumb; called also a thumbkin.

Scotch Thumbkin, time of Charles I.

THUMB'-STALL, n. [thumb and stall.] A kind of thimble or ferule of iron, horn, or leather, with the edges turned up to receive the thread in making sails. It is worn on the thumb to tighten the stitches.—2. A case or sheath of leather or other substance to be worn on the thumb.

THUM'ERSTONE, n. A mineral, so called from Thum, in Saxony, where it was found. It is called also axinite, from the resemblance of its flat sharp edges to that of an axe. It is either massive or crystallized; its crystals are in the form of a compressed oblique rhomboidal prism. It is of the silicious kind, and of a brown gray or violet colour. [See AXINITE.]

THU'MITE, n. In mineral., the axinite.

THUM'MIM, n. plur. A Hebrew word denoting perfections. The Urim and Thummim were worn in the breastplate of the high priest, but what they were has never been satisfactorily ascertained. [See URIM.]

THUMP, n. [It. thombo.] A heavy blow given with any thing that is thick, as with a club or the fist, or with a heavy hammer, or with the breech of a gun.

> The watchman gave so great a thump at my door, that I awaked at the knock. —Tatler.

THUMP, v. t. To strike or beat with something thick or heavy.

THUMP, v. i. To strike or fall on with a heavy blow.

> A watchman at night thumps with his pole. —Swift.

THUMP'ED, pp. Struck with something heavy.

THUMP'ER, n. The person or thing that thumps. In low lan., a person or thing which is huge or great.

THUMP'ING, ppr. Striking or beating with something thick or blunt.—2. a. Heavy.—3. Vulgarly, stout; fat; large.

THUN'DER, n. [Sax. thunder, thunor; G. donner; D. donder; Sw. dunder; Dan. dundren; L. tonitru, from tono, to sound; Fr. tonnerre; It. tuono; Pers. thondor or thundur.] 1. The sound which follows an explosion of electricity or lightning; the report of a discharge of electrical fluid, that is, of its passage from one cloud to another, or from a cloud to the earth, or from the earth to a cloud.—Thunder is not lightning, but the effect of it. The character of the sound of thunder varies with the force and the distance of the explosion, the situation of the observer, the nature of the surrounding country, and it is no doubt affected also by the relative situations of the clouds. In general, it is considered that lightning, by its heat, creates a partial vacuum in the atmosphere, and that the sudden rushing of air into the void space produces the sound; but this explanation will not account for the prolongation of the sound. The true cause seems to be the vibration of the air, agitated to a greater or less extent by the passage of the electric fluid with a greater or less degree of intensity. When lightning strikes an object near us in the earth, it produces a noise resembling that of a violent crash, which is not repeated or prolonged by reflection. When the explosion is more distant, a rumbling, irregular, and recurring noise is heard, which gradually dies away in the distance. Thunder frequently commences with a loud rattle, which may be occasioned by a series of discharges of electric matter in rapid succession, from a highly charged thunder cloud. The distance of a thunder cloud may be ascertained by counting the number of seconds which elapse between the time of seeing the flash, and that of hearing the report, and multiplying 1130 feet by that number of seconds, (1130 feet being the distance which sound travels per second); the result will be the distance of the cloud in feet. When the flash and the sound occur almost simultaneously, the thunder cloud is very near; but when 2 or 3 seconds elapse between the time of seeing the former and that of hearing the latter, the cloud may be considered at a safe distance. In thunder storms the lightning frequently does great mischief, destroying trees, killing men and animals, and even shattering buildings. During a thunder storm, persons should avoid going near any object or thing which acts as a conductor to the fluid; such as trees, hedges, water, fire places, gilt furniture, bell wires, and all large metallic surfaces. In a house, the safest place is in the middle of a room, and the security may be increased by sitting or lying upon a feather bed, a hair mattress, or thick woollen rug. Cellars are dangerous, as the discharge is often from the earth to a cloud, and buildings frequently sustain the greatest damage from lightning in the basement story. Thunder can scarcely ever be heard at the distance of more than 20 or 30 miles from the flash which produces it.

> There were thunders and lightnings; Exod. xix.

2. Thunder is used for lightning, or for a thunderbolt, either originally through ignorance, or by way of metaphor, or because the lightning and thunder are closely united.

The revenging gods
'Gainst parricides all the thunder bend. Shak.

3. Any loud noise; as, the thunder of cannon.

Sons of thunder; Mark iii.

4. Denunciation published; as, the thunders of the Vatican.

THUN'DER, v. i. To sound, rattle, or roar, as an explosion of electricity.

Canst thou thunder with a voice like him? Job xl.

2. To make a loud noise, particularly a heavy sound of some continuance.

His dreadful voice no more
Would thunder in my ears. Milton.

3. To rattle, or give a heavy rattling sound.

And roll the thund'ring chariot o'er the ground. J. Trumbull.

THUN'DER, v. t. To emit with noise and terror.

Oracles severe
Were daily thunder'd in our gen'ral's ear. Dryden.

2. To publish any denunciation or threat.

An archdeacon, as being a prelate, may thunder out an ecclesiastical censure. Ayliffe.

THUN'DER-BLASTED, a. Blasted by thunder.

THUN'DERBOLT, n. [thunder and bolt.] A shaft of lightning; a brilliant stream of the electrical fluid, passing from one part of the heavens to another, and particularly from the clouds to the earth; Ps. lxxviii. In popular lan., when lightning acts with extraordinary violence, and breaks or shatters any thing, it is called a thunderbolt, and ignorant people suppose it to be a hard body, otherwise it could not produce such effects.—2. Figuratively, a daring or irresistible hero; as, the Scipios, those thunderbolts of war.—3. Fulmination; ecclesiastical denunciation.

He severely threatens such with the thunderbolt of excommunication. Hakewill.

4. In mineral., thunder-stone.

THUN'DER-BURST, n. A burst of thunder.

THUN'DER-CLAP, n. [thunder and clap.] A burst of thunder; sudden report of an explosion of electricity.

When suddenly the thunder-clap was heard. Dryden.

THUN'DER-CLOUD, n. [thunder and cloud.] A cloud that produces lightning and thunder.

THUN'DERER, n. He that thunders.

THUN'DER-HOUSE, n. An instrument for illustrating the manner in which buildings receive damage by lightning, when not protected by thunder rods or conductors. It is in the form of a small model of a house, having wires connected with it so as to form imperfect conductors.

THUN'DERING, ppr. Making the noise of an electrical explosion; uttering a loud sound; fulminating denunciations. Thundering barrels, casks which contain the fire pots in a fire ship.

THUN'DERING, n. The report of an electrical explosion; thunder.

Entreat the Lord that there be no more mighty thunderings and hail; Exod. ix.

THUN'DERINGLY, adv. With loud noise.

THUN'DEROUS, a. Producing thunder.

How he before the thunderous throne doth lie. [Little used.] Milton.

THUN'DER-PROOF, a. Secure against thunder.

THUN'DER-ROD, n. A rod or bar of metal, attached to a building, and having its lower end extending below the level of the ground, and its upper end rising several feet above the highest part of the building, or of the steeple, if the building have one, in order to protect the building from the effects of lightning: the upper extremity of the rod is made to terminate in a point. Extensive buildings, or those which have several pinnacles rising from their tops, require several rods for their protection, as it is found that the influence of a single rod is limited by the circumference of a circle described about the rod, with a radius equal to twice its height above the top of the building. Ships are protected from the effects of lightning by rods in the same manner as buildings. Thunder rods are also termed conductors, because they serve to conduct the electric fluid or lightning which strikes them safely and rapidly to the ground, and do not allow it to fall upon any part of the building.

THUN'DER-SHOWER, n. [thunder and shower.] A shower accompanied with thunder.

THUN'DER-STONE, n. Thunder stones are crystals of iron pyrites, of a cylindrical form, found in chalk beds, and were so named because they were fabulously supposed to be emitted by thunder. The same name is given to fossil echinites of the family cidaris.

THUN'DER-STORM, n. [thunder and storm.] A storm accompanied with lightning and thunder, generally preceded by a tempestuous wind, which soon subsides, and succeeded by violent showers of rain or hail, or both together. Such storms are common in tropical regions, and often cause great damage. In America, the violence of the wind at the commencement of the storm is sometimes equal to that of a hurricane, and then it is the explosions of electricity are the most terrible. This violence of the wind seldom continues longer than a few minutes, and after it subsides, the rain continues, but the peals of thunder are less frequent. These violent showers sometimes continue for hours; more generally, they are of shorter duration.

THUN'DER-STRIKE, v. t. [thunder and strike.] 1. To strike, blast, or injure by lightning. [Little used in its literal sense.] -2. To astonish or strike dumb, as with something terrible.] [Little used except in the participle.]

THUN'DER-STROKE,† n. A thunder clap.

THUN'DER-STRUCK, pp. or a. Astonished; amazed; struck dumb by something surprising or terrible suddenly presented to the mind or view. [This is a word in common use.]

THUN'DERY, a. Accompanied with thunder.

THUN'NY, n. A fish. [See TUNNY.]

THU'RIBLE,† n. [L. thuribulum, from thus, thuris, frankincense.] A censer; a pan for incense.

THURIF'EROUS, a. [L. thurifer; thus and fero, to bear.] Producing or bearing frankincense.

THURIFICA'TION, n. [L. thus, thuris, and facio, to make.] The act of fuming with incense; or the act of burning incense.

THURLS, n. Among miners, the name given to short communications between the adits in mines.

THURS'DAY, n. [Dan. Torsdag, that is, Thor's day, the day consecrated to Thor, the god of thunder, answering to the Jove of the Greeks and Romans, L. dies Jovis; It. Giovedì; Sp. Jueves; Fr. Jeudi. So in G. donnerstag, D. donderdag, thunder-day. This Thor is from the root of W. taran, thunder; taraw, to strike, hit, or produce a shock; Gaelic and Ir. toirn, a great noise; toirneas, thunder. The root of the word signifies to drive, to rush, to strike. In Sw. thördon is thunder.] The fifth day of the week.

THUS, adv. [Sax. thus; D. dus.] 1. In this or that manner; on this wise; as, thus saith the Lord; the Pharisee prayed thus.

Thus did Noah, according to all that God commanded him; Gen. vi.

2. To this degree or extent; as, thus wise; thus peaceable.

Thus far extend, thus far thy bounds. Milton.

3. In the phrase, thus much, it seems to be an adjective, equivalent to this much.

THUS, n. [Gr. θυω, to sacrifice, because it was used by the ancients in sacrifices.] Frankincense,—which see. The same name is given to the resin of the spruce fir.

THWACK, v. t. [Qu. Sax. thaccian, to feel or stroke lightly. It does not well accord with this verb. The word twit is the Sax. ætwitan, or othwitan, a compound of æth or oth, to or at, and witan. In like manner, thwack may be formed from our vulgar whack, which is precisely the Eth. wakea, Ar. wakaa, to strike.] To strike with something flat or heavy; to bang; to beat or thrash. [This and the two following words are only used in low or ludicrous language.]

THWACK, n. A heavy blow with something flat or heavy; a bang.

THWACK'ING, ppr. Striking with a heavy blow.

THWAITE, n. A fish, a variety of the shad, Alosa finta.—2. A plain parcel of ground, cleared of wood and stumps, inclosed and converted to tillage. [Local.]

THWART, a. (thwort.) [D. dwars; Dan. tver, tvert, tvers; Sw. tvärs, tvart; probably a compound of Sax. æth, oth, to, and the root of veer, L. verto, versus.] Transverse; being across something else.

Moved contrary with thwart obliquities. Milton.

2.† Perverse.

THWART, v. t. (thwort.) To cross; to belie; or come across the direction of something.

Swift as a shooting star
In autumn thwarts the night. Milton.

2. To cross, as a purpose; to oppose; to contravene; hence, to frustrate or defeat. We say, to thwart a purpose, design, or inclination; or to thwart a person.

If crooked fortune had not thwarted me. Shak.

The proposals of the one never thwarted the inclinations of the other. South.

THWART, v. i. To be in opposition.

A proposition that shall thwart at all with these internal oracles. [Unusual and improper.] Locke.

THWART † adv. Obliquely; athwart.

THWART, n. The seat or bench of a boat on which the rowers sit, placed athwart the boat.
THWART'ED, pp. Crossed; opposed; frustrated.
THWART'ER, n. A disease in sheep, indicated by shaking, trembling, or convulsive motions.
THWART'ING, ppr. Crossing; contravening; defeating.
THWART'ING n. The act of crossing or frustrating.
THWART'INGLY, adv. In a cross direction; in opposition.
THWART'NESS, n. Untowardness; perverseness.
THWART'SHIPS, adv. Across the ship.
THWITE, v. t. [Sax. thwitan.] To cut or clip with a knife. [Local.]
THWIT'TLE,† v. t. To whittle. [See WHITTLE.]
THY, a. [contracted from thine, or from some other derivative of thou. It is probable that the pronoun was originally thig, thug or thuk, and the adjective thigen. See THOU.] Thy is the adjective of thou, or a pronominal adjective, signifying of thee, or belonging to thee, like tuus in Latin. It is used in the solemn and grave style.

These are thy works, Parent of good. —Milton.

THY'INE WOOD, n. [Gr. θυινος.] A precious wood, mentioned Rev. xviii. It seems to have been the wood of the thuja articulatus, or jointed arbor vitæ of Africa, which yields a wood of delightful scent. [See THUJA.]
THY'ITE, n. The name of a species of indurated clay, of the morochthus kind, of a smooth regular texture, very heavy, of a shining surface, and of a pale green colour.
THYME, n. usually pronounced time. [Fr. thym; L. thymus; Gr. θυμος.] In bot., a genus of plants (Thymus), nat. order Lamiaceæ. The species are small undershrubs, most of them inhabitants of Europe; only one species is a native of Britain, viz., wild thyme, (T. serpyllum), although the Linnæan genus Thymus included other three British plants, but these are now referred to Acinos and Calamintha. The common or garden thyme, (T. vulgaris) has long been a favourite plant on account of its strong, pungent, aromatic odour and taste, and many varieties of it are cultivated in gardens. It is a native of the south-west parts of Europe, and is employed for culinary purposes. It yields an essential oil, which is extremely acrid and pungent. Wild thyme or mother of thyme, (T. serpyllum), grows in Britain on hills and in dry pastures, and has the same sensible properties as the garden thyme. Bees are said to be greatly attached to this plant, and it has been alleged to give a fine flavour to mutton. The volatile oil obtained from the wild and garden thyme, is frequently used as an application to carious teeth. It is also much used for culinary purposes.
THYMELA'CEÆ, n. [from thymelea, one of the genera.] A nat. order of shrubby exogens, related to Santalaceæ, from which it differs in its inferior calyx. It consists of shrubs or small trees, with non-articulated, sometimes spiny branches, having a very tenacious bark. The species are not common in Europe; they are found chiefly in the cooler parts of India and South America, at the Cape of Good Hope, and in New Holland. The Daphnes are valued for their fragrance; the various species of the Australian genus Pimelea, and the Gnidias and Struthiolas of the Cape of Good Hope, are favourite objects of cultivation. The most remarkable property of the order is the causticity which resides in the bark. When applied to the skin it acts as a blister; and when chewed it produces pain in the mouth. The berries of Daphne laureola, are poisonous to all animals, except birds. The bark of some species is manufactured into cordage.
THYMELA'CEOUS, a. In bot., relating to or like the thymelaceæ.
THY'MUS, n. [Gr. θυμος.] In anat., a glandular body, divided into lobes, situated behind the sternum in the duplicature of the mediastinum. It is largest in the fetus, diminishes after birth, and in adults often entirely disappears. It has no excretory duct, and its use is unknown. In calves and lambs it is called sweet-bread; but the term sweet-bread is also applied to the pancreas, a very different organ.—2. A genus of plants. [See THYME.]—3. In surg., a small indolent fleshy tubercle, arising about the anus, or the pudenda, and resembling the flowers of thyme; whence the name.
THY'MY, a. Abounding with thyme; fragrant.
THYN'NUS, n. A subdivision of the genus Scomber, (mackerel), to which the fish called the tunny, (Thynnus vulgaris, Cuvier), belongs. [See TUNNY.]
THY'RIS, n. [Gr. θυρις.] In entom., a genus of butterflies.
THY'ROID, THY'REOID, a. [Gr. θυρεος, a shield, and ειδος, form.] Resembling a shield; applied to one of the cartilages of the larynx, so called from its figure, to a gland situated near that cartilage, and to the arteries and veins of the gland. The thyroid cartilage constitutes the anterior, superior, and largest part of the larynx. The thyroid gland is situated on the sides and front of the lower part of the larynx, and the upper part of the trachea. It is copiously supplied with blood, but is not known to furnish any secretion. It is the seat of the bronchocele or goitre.
THYRSE, THYR'SUS, n. [L. thyrsus; Gr. θυρσος.] 1. In bot., a species of inflorescence; a panicle contracted into an ovate form, or a dense or close panicle, more or less of an ovate figure, as in the lilac, privet, and horse chestnut.—2. A panicle, whose middle branches are longer than those of the base and apex.—3. In Grecian and Roman antiquities, one of the most common attributes of Bacchus and his followers. It consisted of a spear or staff wrapped round with ivy and vine branches, or of a lance having the iron part thrust into a cone of pine. The Bacchanals carried thyrsi in their hands when they celebrated the orgies of Bacchus.
THYRS'OID, a. In bot., having somewhat the form of a thyrsus.
THYSANU'RANS, THYSANU'RA, n. plur. [Gr. θυσανουρος, having a long bushy tail.] An order of apterous insects, supported by six feet, that undergo no metamorphosis, and have, in addition, particular organs of motion, either on the sides, or at the extremity of the abdomen.
THYSELF', pron. [thy and self.] A pronoun used after thou, to express distinction with emphasis. "Thou thyself shalt go;" that is, thou shalt go and no other. It is sometimes used without thou, and in the nominative as well as objective case.

These goods thyself can on thyself bestow. —Dryden.

TI'AR, n. A tiara,—which see.
TIA'RA, n. [Fr. tiare; L. Sp. and It. tiara; Gr. τιαρα: Sax. tyr; Syr. chadur; and Heb. עטר, atar. From the former probably the Latins had their cidaris, and tiara from the latter; the same word with different prefixes.] 1. An ornament or article of dress with which the ancient Persians covered their heads; a kind of turban. As different authors describe it, it must have been of different forms. The kings of Persia alone had a right to wear it straight or erect; the lords and priests wore it depressed, or turned down on the fore side. Xenophon says the tiara was encompassed with the diadem, at least in ceremonials.—2. An ornament worn by the Jewish high priest; Exod. xxviii.—3. The pope's triple crown. The tiara and keys are the badges of the papal dignity; the tiara of his civil rank, and the keys of his jurisdiction. It was formerly a round high cap. It was afterward encompassed with a crown, then with a second and a third rising one above the other. These crowns are covered with precious stones, and ornamented with an orb, on which stands a cross, and on two sides of it a chain of precious stones.—4. Figuratively, the papal dignity.
TIA'RAED, a. Adorned with a tiara.
TIA'RIS, n. The name given by Swainson to a genus of Fringillidæ, or finches, and which is placed by him between Amadina and Carduelis. The birds belonging to this genus belong to South America only.
TIB'IA, n. [L.] The largest bone of the leg. It is of a long, thick, and triangular shape, and is situated on the internal part of the leg. Its name is said to have reference to its resemblance to the ancient pipe or flute (tibia).—2. In entom., the fourth joint of the leg.
TIB'IAL, a. [L. tibia, a flute, and the large bone of the leg.] 1. Pertaining to the large bone of the leg; as, the tibial artery; tibial nerve. The tibial arteries are the two principal branches of the popliteal artery.—2. Pertaining to a pipe or flute.
TIB'URO, n. A fish of the shark kind.
TICAL', n. A Siamese coin, worth about 2*s.* 6*d.* sterling.
TIC DOULOUREUX', n. [Fr. tic, spasm, and douloureux, painful.] A very painful affection of a nerve, coming on in sudden and excruciating attacks. It is characterized by acute pain, attended with convulsive twitchings of the muscles, and continuing from a few minutes to several hours. It is a species of neuralgia, and most commonly attacks the facial nerves. The cause of this affection is unknown, and it often baffles the skill of the physician.
TICE,† for Entice.
TICH'ORRHINE, n. In geol., a fossil species of rhinoceros.
TICK, n. [In Gaelic, doigh is trust. But tick may signify a cut, a notch, W. twc, from the manner of keeping accounts among unlettered men. See DOCK and TICKET.] Credit; trust; score; as, to buy upon tick. To go on tick, to go on trust or credit. [Vulgar.]

TICK, n. [Fr. tique; G. zecke; It. zecca.] The common name of various parasitical insects of the genus Acarus, Linn., and which are otherwise termed mites. They are very small animals, of a livid colour, and globose-ovate form, that infest sheep, dogs, goats, cows, &c. The dog-tick is the A. ricinus; the domestic tick is the A. domesticus; and the itch-tick is the A. scabiei. The ticks form the genus Ixodes of Latreille.

TICK, n. [D. teek, tyk; probably from covering, L. tego, Eng. to deck; Russ. tik, tent-cloth.] The cover or case of a bed, which contains the feathers, wool, or other material.

TICK, v. i. [from tick, credit.] To run upon score.—2. To trust.

TICK, v. i. [D. tikken. It coincides in elements with L. tango, tago.] To beat; to pat; or to make a small noise by beating or otherwise; as a watch.

TICK-BEAN, n. A variety of the common bean (Faba vulgaris), and of a smaller size. It is used for feeding horses and other animals.

TICK'EN, } n. A sort of strong linen
TICK'ING, } or cotton for bed-ticks, or cases for beds.

TICK'ET, n. [Fr. étiquette; W. tocyn, a short piece or slip, a ticket, from tociaw, to curtail, to clip, to dock. We have dock and docket from the same root. It denotes a piece or slip of paper.] 1. A piece of paper or a card, which gives the holder a right of admission to some place; as, a ticket for the play-house or any other exhibition.—2. A piece of paper or writing, acknowledging some debt, or a certificate that something is due to the holder. Of such a nature is a railway ticket, and a pawnbroker's ticket; but the latter is more usually called a duplicate.—3. A piece of paper bearing some number in a lottery, which entitles the owner to receive such prize as may be drawn against that number. When it draws no prize, it is said to draw a blank, and the holder has nothing to receive.—4. A notice put on a window, or attached to a wall; as, tickets of goods to sell, houses, or lodgings to let, &c.

TICK'ET, v. t. To distinguish by a ticket.

TICK'ETED, pp. Distinguished by a ticket.

TICK'ETING, ppr. Distinguishing by a ticket.—2. a. Relating to, or by means of tickets attached; as, retailers of wares now deal much on the ticketing system.

TICK'ET-PORT'ER, n. A licensed porter who wears a ticket, by which he may be identified.

TICK'ING, ppr. Beating; patting.—2. Trusting; scoring.

TICK'ING. See TICKEN.

TICK'LE, v. t. [dim. of touch; perhaps directly from tick, to pat, or it is the L. titillo, corrupted.] 1. To touch lightly and cause a peculiar thrilling sensation, which cannot be described. A slight sensation of this kind may give pleasure, but when violent it is insufferable.—2. To please by slight gratification. A glass of wine may tickle the palate.

> Such a nature
> Tickled with good success. Shak.

TICK'LE, v. i. To feel titillation.

> He with secret joy therefore > Did tickle inwardly in every vein. Spenser.

TICK'LE, a. Tottering; wavering, or liable to waver and fall at the slightest touch; unstable; easily overthrown.

> Thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, > that a milkmaid, if in love, may sigh it off. Shak.

> The state of Normandy
> Stands on a tickle point. Shak.

[This word is obsolete. Ticklish is the word used.]

TICK'LE-BRAIN,† n. He, who, or that which tickles or pleases.

TICK'LENESS,† n. Unsteadiness.

TICK'LER, n. One that tickles or pleases.

TICK'LING, ppr. Affecting with titillation.

TICK'LING, n. The act of affecting with titillation.

TICK'LISH, a. Sensible to slight touches; easily tickled. The bottom of the foot is very ticklish, as are the sides. The palm of the hand, hardened by use, is not ticklish.—2. Tottering; standing so as to be liable to totter and fall at the slightest touch; unfixed; easily moved or affected.

> Ireland was a ticklish and unsettled state. Bacon.

3. Difficult; nice; critical; as, these are ticklish times.

TICK'LISHLY, adv. In a ticklish manner.

TICK'LISHNESS, n. The state or quality of being ticklish or very sensible.—2. The state of being tottering or liable to fall.—3. Criticalness of condition or state.

TICKS, n. Tick-beans. [See TICK-BEAN.]

TICK-SEED, n. A plant of the genus Coreopsis, and another of the genus Corispermum.

TICK'TACK, n. A word expressive of the sounds produced by the beating of a watch, or of sounds resembling it.—2. A game at tables. [See TRIC-TRAC.]

TICK'TACK, adv. With a sound resembling the beating of a watch.

TID, a. [Sax. tydder.] Tender; soft; nice.

TIDAL, a. Pertaining to tides; periodical rising and falling, or flowing and ebbing; as, tidal waters.—Tidal harbours, harbours into which the tide flows, in distinction from such as are kept at high-water by means of docks with flood-gates.—Tidal river, a river into which the tide flows.

TID'BIT, n. [tid and bit.] A delicate or tender piece of any thing eatable. It is often written and pronounced Titbit.

TID'DLE, } v. t. To use with tender-
TID'DER, } ness; to fondle.

TID'DLED, pp. Fondled.

TIDE, n. [Sax. tidan, to happen; tid, time, season, opportunity, an hour; G. zeit; D. tyd. This word is from a root that signifies to come, to happen, or to fall or rush, as in betide; corresponding in sense with time, season, hour, opportunity. Tid, time, is the fall, the occasion, the event. Its original meaning is entirely obsolete, except in composition, as in Shrovetide, Whitsuntide.] 1. Time; season.

> Which, at the appointed tide,
> Each one did make his bride. Spenser.

[This sense is obsolete.]

2. The alternate rising and falling of the waters of the ocean, and of bays, rivers, &c., connected therewith. The tide appears as a general wave of water, which gradually elevates itself to a certain height, then as gradually sinks till its surface is about as much below the medium level as it was before above it. From that time the wave again begins to rise; and this reciprocating motion of the waters continues constantly, with certain variations in the height, and in the times of attaining the greatest degree of height and of depression. The alternate rising and falling of the tide wave are observed to take place, generally twice in the course of a lunar day, or of 24h. 49m. of mean solar time, in most of the shores of the ocean, and in the greater part of the bays, firths, and rivers which communicate freely with it. The tides form what are called a flood and an ebb, a high and low water. The whole interval between high and low water is called a tide; the water is said to flow and to ebb, and the rising is called the flood tide, and the falling the ebb tide. The rise or fall of the waters, in regard to elevation or depression, is exceedingly different at different places, and is also variable everywhere. The different heights of tide succeed each other in a regular series, diminishing from the greatest to the least, and then increasing from the least to the greatest. The greatest is called a spring tide, and the least a neap tide. This series is completed in about 15 days, or rather two series are completed in a lunar month. For the spring tide at any place happens at a certain interval of time, generally between one and two days, after new or full moon; and the neap tide, at a certain interval after the first or last quarter. Thus, the whole series of tides appears to be chiefly regulated by the moon, and to be only to a small extent under the influence of the sun. The moon, by her attraction, not only raises the waters of the ocean under her, but also at the same time raises them on the opposite side; the sun also raises similar waves by his attraction, but to a much less extent, owing to his great distance. Hence, the combined actions of the sun and moon, when these bodies are in conjunction, or opposition, that is at new or full moon, may be readily conceived to produce the spring tides, and the diminutions of each other's attractions when in quadratures to produce the neap tides. These tides will also vary, according as the sun or moon is in perigee or apogee, and likewise according to their respective declinations. The interval between two succeeding high waters is variable. It is shortest about new and full moon, being then about 12h. 19m.; and about the time of the moon's quadratures it is 12h. 30m. But these intervals are somewhat different at different places. The tides being of great importance to all commercial nations, it becomes an object of great importance to obtain the means of predicting them, but the subject, in a general point of view, is attended with many difficulties, and each place requires to have its own tide tables. The theory of the tides, considered as a consequence of the attractions of the sun and moon, unites some of the greatest difficulties that occur in the various departments of natural philosophy and astronomy.—Atmospheric tides, waves produced in the atmosphere similar to those produced in the waters of the ocean, and by the same causes, viz., the attractions of the sun and moon.—

Priming and lagging of the tides, an effect of the combination of the solar and lunar tides. In the first and third quarters of the moon, the solar wave is to the westward of the lunar one, and consequently the observed tide, which is the result of the combination of the two waves, will be to the westward of the place it would occupy, if the moon acted alone, and the time of high water will be accelerated. Hence what is termed the priming of the tides. In the second and fourth quarters, the general effect of the sun is to produce, for a like reason, a retardation in the time of high water. Hence what is called the lagging of the tides. These effects are most remarkable about the time of new and full moon. —3. Stream; course; current; as, the tide of the times.

Time's ungentle tide. Byron.

4. Favourable course.

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune. Shak.

5.† Violent confluence; accumulated multitude.—6. Among miners, the period of twelve hours.—7. Current; flow of blood.

And life's red tide runs ebbing from the wound. Battle of Frogs and Mice.

TIDE, v. t. To drive with the stream.

TIDE, v. i. To work in or out of a river or harbour by favour of the tide, and anchoring when it becomes adverse.—2. To pour a flood; to be agitated by the sea.—To tide it, is to pursue a ship's course by means of the tide, with a foul wind, anchoring during the intervals of the contrary tide.—To tide over, used metaphorically, is to surmount difficulties by means of a succession of favourable incidents, or by delay merely; as, the unpopular premier managed to tide over the parliamentary session.

TIDE,† v. i. To betide.

TIDE-DIAL, n. A dial for exhibiting the state of the tides at any place.

TIDE-GATE, n. A gate through which water passes into a basin when the tide flows, and which is shut to retain the water from flowing back at the ebb.—2. Among seamen, a place where the tide runs with great velocity.

TIDE′-GAUGE, n. A contrivance for registering the state of the tide continuously at every instant of time.

TIDELESS, a. Having no tide.

TIDE′-LOCK, or GUARD′-LOCK, n. A lock situated between an entrance-basin and a canal, harbour, or river, and forming a communication between them. It has double gates by which vessels can pass either way, at all times of the tide.

TIDE-MILL, n. [tide and mill.] A kind of water-mill in which the machinery is driven by the alternate flow and ebb of the tide, acting upon a water-wheel. The water required for impelling the machinery may be admitted either from the side of a river into which the tide flows, or immediately from the sea. Tide-mills are employed for grinding corn; but they have never been brought into common use, on account of the great expense of their construction.

TIDES-MAN, n. An officer who remains on board of a merchant's ship till the goods are landed, to prevent the evasion of the duties.

TIDE′-TABLES, n. Tables showing the time of high-water at any place, or at different places, for each day throughout the year. Such tables are given in most almanacs.

TIDE-WAITER, n. [tide and waiter.] An officer who watches the landing of goods, to secure the payment of duties.

TIDE-WAY, n. [tide and way.] The channel in which the tide sets.

TI′DIED, pp. Made tidy.

TI′DILY, adv. [from tidy.] Neatly; with neat simplicity; as, a female tidily dressed.

TI′DINESS, n. Neatness without richness or elegance; neat simplicity; as, the tidiness of dress.—2. Neatness; as, the tidiness of rooms.

TI′DINGLESS, a. Having no tidings.

TI′DINGS, n. plur. [Sw. tidning; Dan. tidende, news. It is the participle of Sax. tidan, to happen, or some other verb connected with tide, and denotes coming, or that which arrives.] News; advice; information; intelligence; account of what has taken place, and was not before known.

I shall make my master glad with these tidings. Shak.

Behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people; Luke ii.

TI′DY, a. [from tide, time, season; Dan. and Sw. tidig, seasonable.] 1. In its primary sense, seasonable; favourable; being in proper time; as, weather fair and tidy.—2. Neat; dressed with neat simplicity; as, a tidy lass; the children are tidy; their dress is tidy; that is primarily, proper for the time or occasion.—3. Neat; being in good order. The apartments are well furnished and tidy.

TI′DY, v. t. To make neat; to put in good order.

TI′DYING, ppr. Making tidy.

TIE, v. t. [Sax. tian, for tigan, to bind; tig, tige, a tie, a purse. The primary sense is to strain, and hence its alliance to tug, to draw, Sw. tiga, L. taceo, to be silent. The Gr. δέω may be the same word.] 1. To bind; to fasten with a band or cord and knot.

My son, keep thy father's commandments...bind them continually upon thine heart, and tie them about thy neck; Prov. vi.

2. To fold and make fast; as, to tie a knot.—3. To knit; to complicate.

We do not tie this knot with an intention to puzzle the argument. Burnet.

4. To fasten; to hold; to unite so as not to be easily parted.

In bond of virtuous love together tied. Fairfax.

5. To oblige; to constrain; to restrain; to confine. People, in their jealousy, may tie the hands of their ministers and public agents, so as to prevent them from doing good.

Not tied to rules of policy, you find Revenge less sweet than a forgiving mind. Dryden.

6. In music, to unite notes by a cross line, or by a curve line drawn over them or under them.—7. In arch., to bind together two bodies by means of a piece of timber or metal. [See the noun.]—To tie up, to confine; to restrain; to hinder from motion or action; as, to tie up the tongue; to tie up the hands.—To tie down, to fasten so as to prevent from rising.—2. To restrain; to confine; to hinder from action.

TIE, n. A knot; fastening.—2. Bond; obligation, moral or legal; as, the sacred ties of friendship or of duty; the ties of allegiance.—3. A knot of hair.—4. In arch., a timber-string, chain, or a rod of metal connecting and binding two bodies together which have a tendency to separate or diverge; such as tie-beams, diagonal ties, truss-posts, &c.—Angle-tie, angle brace. [See under ANGLE.]—5. In music, a character used to connect syncopated notes; a ligature.—6. An equality in numbers, as of votes, &c., which prevents either party from being victorious.—Ride and tie, a term familiarly used when two persons travel having but one horse to use: each gets up as the other gets down, and thus they are said to ride and tie.

TIE′-BEAM, n. In arch., the beam which connects the bottom of a pair of principal rafters, and prevents them from thrusting out the wall. [See ROOF.]

TI′ED, pp. Bound; fastened with a knot; confined; restrained; united, as notes.

TIER, n. [Heb. טור, tur. See TIRE.] A row; a rank; particularly when two or more rows are placed one above another; as, a tier of seats in a theatre; a tier of casks; a tier of balls, &c. Thus in ships of war, the range of guns on one deck and one side of a ship, is called a tier. Those on the lower deck are called the lower tier, and those above, the middle or upper tiers. Ships with three tiers of guns are three-deckers. The tiers of a cable are the ranges of fakes or windings of a cable, laid one within another when coiled.—Tier, in organs, is a rank or range of pipes in the front of the instrument, or in the interior, when the compound stops have several ranks of pipes.

TIERCE, n. (ters.) [Fr. from tiers, third.] 1. Formerly, a liquid measure equal to one-third of a pipe, or 42 gallons, equal to 35 imperial gallons. The same name was given to the cask containing 42 gallons.—2. A weight by which provisions are sold. The tierce of beef for the navy, is 304lb., and for India, 336lb.—3. In music, a major or minor third.—4. In gaming, a sequence of three cards of the same colour.—5. A thrust in fencing.—6. In her., a term for the field when divided into three equal parts of different colours or metals.—Tierce point, in arch., the vertex of an equilateral triangle.

TIER′CEL, } n. In falconry, a name
TIER′CELET, } given to the male hawk, as being a third part less than the female.

TIERCE′-MA′JOR, n. In gambling, a sequence of the three best cards.

TIER′CET, n. (ter′cet.) [from tierce.] In poetry, a triplet; three lines, or three lines rhyming.

TIERS ETAT, n. (teerz′a-tä′.) [Fr.] In France, the third branch or estate; the commonalty, answering to the commons in Great Britain. Previous to the first revolution, the French were divided into three classes or estates, the nobles, the clergy, and the commonalty. At present, however, the tiers etat may be considered as the nation itself.

TIEUK, n. The name given to a kind of upas poison procured from the Strychnos Tieute. It produces tetanic spasms.

TIFF, n. [Qu. tipple tope.] 1. Liquor; or rather a small draught of liquor. [Vulgar.]—2. A pet or fit of peevishness; a slight altercation.

TIFF, v. i. To be in a pet. [Low.]

TIFF,† v. t. [F. tiffer.] To dress; to deck.

TIF'FANY, n. [According to the Italian and Spanish Dictionaries, this word is to be referred to taffeta, but it seems rather to be derived from the French tiffer, to dress, to adorn.] A species of gauze or very thin silk.

TIFFEDEMER', n. A species of sea plant, so called by Count Marsigli, from its resemblance to the heads of the Typha palustris, or cat's tail. It has a smooth surface and a velvety look. It grows to two feet in height, and is elegantly branched. It grows on rocks and stones, and when first taken out of the sea, is full of a yellow viscous water, but when this is pressed out and the substance is dried, it becomes of a dusky brown colour.

TIF'FIN, n. A word introduced from India, denoting a lunch or slight repast between breakfast and dinner.

TIG, n. A play. [See TAG.]

TIGE, n. [Fr. a stalk.] The shaft of a column from the astragal to the capital.

TI'GER, n. [Fr. tigre; It. tigro; L. tigris; said to be from גיר gir, a dart; whence חגיר tiger.] A fierce and rapacious animal of the genus Felis, (F. tigris.) The tiger, or royal tiger as it is called, is as large as the lion, but the body is longer, and the head rounder; of a lively fawn colour above; a pure white below, irregularly crossed with black stripes. It is clothed with short hairs, and has no mane. The tiger is found in Asia only, and is rarely, if ever met with on this side of the Indus. He is the most formidable and cruel of all quadrupeds, and the scourge of the less inhabited parts of India. He is insidious, blood-thirsty, and malevolent, and seems to prefer preying on the human race. The bound with which the ambushed tiger throws himself upon his prey, is as wonderful in its extent, as it is terrible in its effects. Man is a mere puppet in his gripe; and the Indian buffalo is not only borne down by him, but carried off by his enormous strength. The American tiger is the jaguar (Felis onça, Linn.,) an inhabitant of South America. The jaguar is nearly as large as the royal tiger, and in some districts almost as dangerous. [See JAGUAR.] — Tiger-cats, the common name of all those lesser striped and spotted Asiatic, African, and American cats, which do not come under the well understood denomination of Tigers, Leopards, and Panthers; as, the Felis nepalensis of Asia, the Felis serval of Africa, and the Felis pardalis or ocelot of America.—2. A servant in livery who rides with his master or mistress.

TI'GER-BITTERN, n. A bird of South America, of the genus Tigrisoma, of Swainson, belonging to the family Ardeadæ. It receives its name from the marlings on its body, somewhat resembling those of a tiger.

TI'GER-FLOWER, n. Tigridia, a genus of bulbous plants, nat. order Iridaceæ. They are natives of Mexico, and bear remarkably curious, though fugitive flowers. T. pavonia is frequently cultivated in gardens, on account of the magnificence of its flowers.

TI'GER-FOOTED, a. Hastening to devour; furious.—2.† Swift as a tiger.

TI'GERISH, a. Like a tiger.

TI'GER-LILY, n. A plant of the genus lilium, the L. tigrina, having the upper leaves cordate, oval, and the petals spotted.

TI'GER-MOTH, n. In entom., a name given by collectors to the individuals of various species of moths, of the genera Arctia, Hypercampa, and Nemeophila.

TI'GER-MOTH, n. A large moth, with richly streaked wings.

TI'GER'S-FOOT, n. A plant of the genus Ipomœa or Convolvulus.

TI'GER-SHELL, n. [tiger and shell.] A name given to a red shell with large white spots. In the Linnæan system, the tiger-shell is a species of Cypræa, the C. tigris; also called tiger-cowry.

TIGH, n. In Kent, a close or inclosure.

TIGHT, a. [G. dicht; D. Sw. and Dan. digt; allied to thick and tie, and to Sw. tiga, to be silent, L. taceo; that is, close, closely compressed; Russ. tugei, stiff. See TACK.] 1. Close; compact; not loose or open; having the joints so close that no fluid can enter or escape; not leaky; as, a tight ship, or a tight cask.—2. Close; not admitting much air; as, a tight room.—3. Sitting close to the body; as, a tight coat or other garment.—4. Close; not having holes or crevices; not loose; applied to many vessels, &c.—5. Close; hard; as, a tight bargain.—6. Close; parsimonious; saving; as, a man tight in his dealings.—7. Closely dressed; not ragged.

> I'll spin and card, and keep our children tight. Gay.

8. Hardy; adroit.—9. Not slack or loose, stretched, applied to a rope, wire, or chain, extended or stretched so as to have a considerable degree of tension.

Note. This is the taut or taught of seamen, applied to a rope stretched. The primary sense is strained.

10. Scarce of something; as, the money market is tight; that is, money is hard to be had. [Colloq.]

TIGHTEN, v. t. (ti'tn.) To draw tighter; to straiten; to make more close in any manner.

TIGHTENED, pp. Drawn tighter; straitened.

TIGHTENING, ppr. Drawing tighter; making more close in any manner.

TIGHTER,† n. A ribbon or string used to draw clothes closer.—2. a. More tight.

TIGHTLY, adv. Closely; compactly. 2 Neatly; adroitly.

TIGHTNESS, n. Closeness of joints; compactness; straitness.—2. Neatness, as in dress.—3. Parsimoniousness; closeness in dealing.—4. Scarcity; as, there is a tightness in the money market. [Colloquial.]

TIGHTS, n. pl. A close garment; close fitting trowsers or pantaloons. [Familiar.]

TI'GRESS, n. [from tiger.] The female of the tiger.

TI'GRINE, a. Like a tiger.

TI'GRISH, a. Resembling a tiger; fierce.

TIKE, n. A tick. [See TICK.]

TIKE, n. [Celtic, tiak, tiac, a ploughman; Arm. tiec, a housekeeper.] 1. A countryman or clown.—2. A dog; a cur. In Scotch this word is usually written tyke, and is not only applied to a dog, but is used to signify a selfish, snarling, or obstinate person.

TIL'BURY, n. A gig or two wheeled carriage, without a top or cover.

TILE, n. [Sax. tigel; D. tegel or tichgel; G. ziegel; Dan. and Sw. tegel; L. tegula; It. tegola; Sp. teja, contracted. This word is undoubtedly from the root of L. tego, to cover, Eng. to deck.] 1. A kind of thin brick or plate of baked clay, used for covering the roofs of buildings, and occasionally for paving floors, constructing drains, &c. The best qualities of brick-earth are used for making tiles, and the process is similar to that of brick-making. Roofing-tiles are chiefly of two sorts, plain-tiles and pan-tiles. [See these terms.] Tiles of a semi-cylindrical form, laid in mortar, with their convex or concave sides uppermost, respectively, are used for covering ridges and gutters.—Paving-tiles are usually of a square form, and thicker than those used for roofing. A fine kind was made in former times, and used for paving the floors of churches and other important buildings. They were generally of two colours, and ornamented with a variety of elegant devices. They were highly glazed, and are often called encaustic tiles. They are also sometimes, though erroneously, called Norman tiles, for they belong to a much later period than the Norman era.—Drain-tiles are usually made in the form of an arch, and laid upon flat tiles, called soles.—Dutch tiles, for chimneys, are made of a whitish earth, glazed, and painted with various figures. They are seldom used.—2. In metallurgy, a small flat piece of dried earth, or earthenware, used to cover vessels in which metals are fused.

TILE, v. t. To cover with tiles; as, to tile a house.—2. To cover, as tiles.

> The muscle, sinew, and vein,
> Which tile this house, will come again.
> Donne.

In freemasonry, to tile a lodge, is to close or secure its entry against the uninitiated or disorderly.

TILE-CREASING, n. In arch., two rows of plain tiles placed horizontally under the coping of a wall, and projecting about an inch and a half over each side to throw off the rain-water.

TILED, pp. Covered with tiles; closed in.

TILE-DRAIN, n. In agriculture, a drain constructed with tiles.

TILE-FIELD, n. Ground on which tiles are made; as, the palace of the Tuilleries is thus named, from standing on what was once a tile-field.

TILE-KILN, n. A kiln for baking tiles.

TILE-ORE, n. A subspecies of octahedral red copper ore.

TILER, n. A man whose occupation is to cover buildings with tiles.—2. The door-keeper of a mason-lodge; he is usually armed with a sword.

TIL'GATE-BEDS, n. In geol., the name given by Dr. Mantell to a portion of the great series of strata in the Weald of Kent and Sussex, interposed between the green-sands and the Portland oolite.

TIL'IA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Tiliaceæ, the species of which, in this country, are known by the name of lime-trees. [See under LIME.]

TILIA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of polypetalous dicotyledonous plants, consisting chiefly of trees or shrubs, with simple, toothed, alternate leaves, furnished with stipules. The flowers are axillary, and usually white or pink. It is nearly allied to Sterculiaceæ and Malvaceæ. The species are generally diffused throughout the tropical and temperate parts of the globe. They have all a mucilaginous wholesome juice, and are remarkable for the toughness of the fibres of their inner bark, which are used for various economical purposes, under the name of bast. The most important genera are Tilia, Corchorus, Luhea, Grewia, and Berrya.

TI'LING, ppr. Covering with tiles.

TI'LING, n. A roof covered with tiles; Luke v.—2. Tiles in general.—3. The operation of covering roofs with tiles.

TILL, } TEEL, } n. In bot., the Sesamum orientale, an East India oil plant.

TILL, n. A money box in a shop; a drawer. It is sometimes written Tiller.

TILL, n. A kind of clayey earth; coarse obdurate land. [Provincial.]

TILL, prep. or adv. [Sax. til, tille; Sw. and Dan. til; Sax. atillan, to reach or come to. This word in Sw. and Dan. as in Scottish, signifies to or at, and is the principal word used where we use to. The primary sense of the verb is expressed in the Saxon.] 1. To the time or time of. I did not see the man till the last time he came; I waited for him till four o'clock; I will wait till next week.—Till now, to the present time. I never heard of the fact till now.—Till then, to that time. I never heard of the fact till then.—2. It is used before verbs and sentences in a like sense, denoting to the time specified in the sentence or clause following. I will wait till you arrive.

He said to them, Occupy till I come; Luke xix.

Certain Jews . bound themselves under a curse, saying that they would neither eat nor drink till they had killed Paul; Acts xxiii.

Meditate so long till you make some act of prayer to God. Taylor.

Note.—In this use, till is not a conjunction; it does not connect sentences like and, or like or. It neither denotes union nor separation, nor an alternative. It has always the same office, except that it precedes a single word or a single sentence; the time to which it refers being in one case expressed by a single word, as now, or then, or time, with this, or that, &c., and in the other by a verb with its adjuncts; as, occupy till I come, that is, to I come. In the latter use, till is a preposition preceding a sentence, like against, in the phrase, against I come.

TILL, v. t. [Sax. tilian, tiligan, to work, to toil, to cultivate, to prepare; W. telu, to strain. In G. bestellen, from stellen, to set, to put in order, has the sense of tilling, cultivating. These words are doubtless of one family.] 1. To labour; to cultivate; to plough and prepare for seed, and to dress crops. This word includes not only ploughing, but harrowing, and whatever is done to prepare ground for a crop, and to keep it free from weeds.

The Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden to till the ground from whence he was taken; Gen. iii.

2. In the most general sense, to till may include every species of husbandry, and this may be its sense in Scripture.

TILL'ABLE, a. Capable of being tilled; arable; fit for the plough.

TILLÆ'A, n. A genus of plants, class and order Tetrandria tetragynia, Linn.; nat. order Crassulaceæ. T. muscosa, or mossy tillæa, is a British plant, with branched stems decumbent at the base. It grows on moist, barren, sandy heaths, in various parts of England, and is a very troublesome weed in gravel walks, in some parts of Norfolk and near London.

TILL'AGE, n. The operation, practice, or art of preparing land for seed, and keeping the ground free from weeds which might impede the growth of crops. Tillage includes manuring, ploughing, harrowing, and rolling land, or whatever is done to bring it to a proper state to receive the seed, and the operations of ploughing, harrowing, and hoeing the ground, to destroy weeds and loosen the soil after it is planted; culture; a principal branch of agriculture. Tillage of the earth is the principal as it was the first occupation of man, and no employment is more honourable.

TILL'AGE LANDS, n. Lands kept under the plough, and regularly cropped.

TILLAND'SIA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Bromeliaceæ. The species are most of them parasitical, and are natives of South America. T. utriculata is the wild pine of the colonists of Jamaica. The leaves of most of the species serve as reservoirs for water, and the filaments of the stems of T. usneoides are used in America for the same purposes as horse hair.

TILL'ED, pp. Cultivated; prepared for seed and kept clean.

TILL'ER, n. One who tills; a husbandman; a cultivator; a ploughman.—2. The bar or lever employed to turn the rudder of a ship.—3. A small drawer; a till.—4. Among farmers, the shoot of a plant, springing from the root or bottom of the original stalk; also, the sprout or young tree that springs from the root or stump, but the term is applied chiefly to culmiferous plants.—5. A young timber tree. [Local.]

TILL'ER, v. i. To put forth new shoots from the root, or round the bottom of the original stalk; as, we say, wheat or rye tillers; it spreads by tillering. The common orthography is tiller. Sir Joseph Banks writes it tillow.

TILL'ERING, ppr. Sending out new shoots round the bottom of the original stem.

TILL'ERING, n. The act of sending forth young shoots from the root or around the bottom of the original stalk.

TILL'ER-ROPES, n. [Naut.] Ropes leading from the tiller-head round the barrel of the wheel, by which the vessel is steered. They are more usually termed wheel-ropes.

TILL'ING, ppr. Cultivating.

TILL'ING, n. The operation of cultivating land; culture.

TILL'MAN,† n. A man who tills the earth; a husbandman.

TILL'Y-FALLY, } TILL'Y-VALLY, } † adv. or a. A word formerly used when any thing said was rejected as trifling or impertinent.

TIL'MUS, n. [L. from Gr. τιλλω, to pluck.] Floccillation, or picking of bed-clothes. [See FLOCCILLATION.]

TILT, n. [Sax. teld; Dan. telt; Ice. tiald; W. telu, to stretch over.] 1. A tent; a covering over head.—2. The cloth covering of a cart or waggon.—3. The cover of a boat; a small canopy or awning of canvas or other cloth, extended over the stern sheets of a boat.

TILT, v. t. To cover with a cloth or awning.

TILT, n. [See the Verb.] A thrust; as, a tilt with a lance.—2. Formerly, a military exercise on horseback, in which the combatants attacked each other with lances; as, tilts and tournaments.—3. A large hammer; a tilt-hammer; used in iron manufactures.—4. Inclination forward; as, the tilt of a cask; or a cask is a-tilt.

TILT, v. t. [Sax. tealtian, to lean, to incline, to nod; Dan. tylder, to pour out, to decant. In D. tillen signifies to lift, L. tollo. This is probably a derivative verb.] 1. To incline; to raise one end, as of a cask, for discharging liquor; as, to tilt a barrel.—2. To point or thrust, as a lance.

Sons against fathers tilt the fatal lance. Philips.

3. To hammer or forge with a tilt-hammer or tilt; as, to tilt steel to render it more ductile.—4. To cover with a tilt.

TILT, v. i. To run or ride and thrust with a lance: to practise the military game or exercise of thrusting at each other on horseback.—2. To fight with rapiers.

Swords out and tilting one at other's breast. Shak.

3. To rush as in combat.—4. To play unsteadily; to ride, float, and toss.

The fleet swift tilting o'er the surges flew. Pope.

5. To lean; to fall as on one side.

The trunk of the body is kept from tilting forward by the muscles of the back. Grew.

TILT'-BOAT, n. A boat covered with canvas or other cloth.

TILT'ED, pp. Inclined off the level; as, tilted strata; made to stoop.—2. Covered with cloth or awning.—3. Hammered; prepared by beating; as steel.

TILT'ER, n. One who tilts; one who uses the exercise of pushing a lance on horseback; one who fights.

Let me alone to match your tilter. Granville.

2. One who hammers with a tilt.

TILTH, n. [Sax. tilth; from till.] 1 † That which is tilled; tillage ground.—2. In agriculture, the degree or depth of soil turned by the plough or spade; that available soil on the earth's surface into which the roots of crops strike.—3. The state of being tilled or prepared for a crop. We say, land is in good tilth, when it is manured, ploughed, broken, and mellowed for receiving the seed. We say also, ground is in bad tilth. When we say, land is in tilth, we mean in good condition for the seed; not in tilth, in a bad condition.

TILT'-HAMMER, n. [tilt and hammer.] A heavy hammer used in iron works, which is worked by machinery, impelled either by a water-wheel or a steam-engine. Such hammers are extensively used in the manufacture of iron and steel. The hammer used for hammering the blooms of iron, is usually called a lift or helve hammer, and is sometimes of the enormous weight of six tons. The tilt-hammer, properly so called, is of lighter dimensions, and is worked with greater rapidity; a specimen of the kind usually employed in the manufacture of steel, and in the forging of anchors, axles, &c., is represented in the accompanying engraving.

Tilt-Hammer.

a is the shank or helve, usually formed of timber, and sometimes of wrought iron; it is hung upon an axis at about one-third of its length, and is worked by a series of revolving cams or tappets, c, c, fixed into the circumference of the cam-ring, b, mounted upon the shaft of a steam-engine or water-wheel. These cams act successively by depressing the shorter limb of the shank, a, until, by the continued revolution, it is disengaged, and the opposite extremity, armed with a heavy cast-iron hammer, d, descends with considerable force upon the anvil, e. Thus a repetition of blows is kept up as long as may be required.

TILT'ING, ppr. Inclining; causing to stoop or lean; using the game of thrusting with the lance on horseback; also, hammering with a tilt-hammer.

TILT'ING, n. The process of hammering or forging by means of tilt-hammers. The tilting of steel is the process by which blistered steel is rendered ductile. This is done by beating with the tilt-hammer.

TILT'ING-FILLET, n. A chamfered fillet of wood laid under slating where it joins to a wall, to raise it slightly and prevent the water from entering the joint.

TILT'ING-SPEAR, n. A spear or lance used in tilts and tournaments. [See TOURNAMENT.]

TILT'-MILL, n. A name sometimes given to the machinery by which tilt-hammers are worked.

TILT'-YARD, n. A place for tilting; lists for combats.—2. A hippodrome.

TIMA'LIA, n. A genus of birds, family Turdidæ, or thrushes. T. pileuta is found in Java.

TIM'BAL, n. A kettle drum.

TIM'BER, n. [Sax. timber, wood, a tree, structure; timbrian, to build, to edify, in a moral sense; Goth. timbryan, to construct; Sw. timmer, wood fit for building; timra, to build, to frame; Dan. tömmer, timber; tömrer, to build; D. timmer, an apartment; timber, a crest; timmeren, to build; timmerhout, timber; G. zimmer, an apartment; zimmern, to square, fit, fabricate; zimmerholz, timber. If m is radical, which is probable, this word coincides with Gr. δεμω, L. domus, a house, and Gr. δεμας, the body. The primary sense is probably to set, lay, or found.] 1. That sort of wood which is squared, or capable of being squared, and fit for being employed in house or ship-building, or in carpentry, joinery, &c. We apply the word to standing trees which are suitable for the uses above mentioned, as a forest contains excellent timber; or to the beams, rafters, boards, planks, &c., hewed or sawed from such trees. But in the language of the customs, when a tree is sawn into thin pieces, not above 7 inches broad, it is called batten; when of greater breadth, such thin pieces are called deal. Timber is generally sold by the load. A load of rough or unhewn timber is 40 cubic feet, and a load of squared timber 50 cubic feet. In regard to planks, deals, &c., the load consists of so many square feet: thus, a load of 1 inch plank is 600 square feet. The most useful timbers of Europe are the oak, the ash, the Scotch pine, the larch, and the spruce fir; those of North America, are the hiccory, the different species of pine, and some species of oak; those of tropical countries, are the teak tree, the different species of bamboo, and the palm. Wood is a general term, comprehending under it timber, dye woods, fancy woods, firewood, &c., but the word timber is often used in a loose sense for all kinds of felled and seasoned wood. —2. The body or stem of a tree.—3. The materials; in irony.

> Such dispositions are the fittest timber to make politics of. — Bacon.

4. A single piece or squared stick of wood for building, or already framed; one of the main beams of a fabric.

> Many of the timbers were decayed. — Coxe's Switzerland.

5. In ships, a timber is a rib or curving piece of wood, branching outward from the keel in a vertical direction. One timber is composed of several pieces united in one frame.—Timber, or timmer of furs, as of martens, ermines, sables, and the like, denotes forty skins; of other skins, one hundred and twenty; an old mercantile term, used both in England and Scotland.—Timbers of ermine, in her., denote the ranks or rows of ermine in noblemen's coats.

TIM'BER, v. t. To furnish with timber. [See TIMBERED.]

TIM'BER,† v. i. To light on a tree.—2. In falconry, to make a nest.

TIM'BER-BRICK, n. A piece of timber of the size and shape of a brick, inserted in brickwork to attach the finishings to.

TIM'BERED, pp. or a. Furnished with timber; as, a well timbered house.—2. Built; formed; contrived. [Little used.]

TIM'BER-HEAD, n. [timber and head.] In ships, the top end of a timber, rising above the gunwale, and serving for belaying ropes, &c.; otherwise called kevel-head.

TIM'BERING, ppr. Furnishing with timber.

TIM'BERLING, n. A small timber tree. [Local.]

TIM'BER-MEASURE, n. The method employed by artificers in measuring trees, joists, beams, or in ascertaining their solid contents. This is treated of under Mensuration of solids.

TIM'BER-MER'CHANT, n. A dealer in timber.

TIM'BERS, n. The timbers of a ship are the ribs, or curved pieces of wood, branching outward from the keel in a vertical direction. Their use is to give strength, figure, and solidity to the whole fabric.

TIM'BER-SOW,† n. A worm in wood.

TIM'BER-TRADE, n. Commerce in timber; as, the timber-trade of Canada.

TIM'BER-TREE, n. [timber and tree.] A tree suitable for timber. [See TIMBER.]

TIM'BER-WORK, n. [timber and work.] Work formed of wood.

TIM'BER-YARD, n. [timber and yard.] A yard or place where timber is deposited.

TIM'BRE, n. [D. timber.] In her., the helmet, mitre, coronet, &c., when placed over the arms in a complete achievement.

TIM'BREL, n. [Sp. tamboril, a tabor or drum; It. tamburo; Fr. tambourin, tambour; Ir. tiompan; L. tympanum; Gr. τυμπανον. This is probably the same as tabor, or from the same root; m being casual. It is from beating; Gr. τυπτω.] An instrument of music; a kind of drum, tabor, or tabret, which has been in use from the highest antiquity. It is now known under the name of tambourine, or tambour de basque. [See TAMBOURINE.]

> And Miriam took a timbrel in her hand... and all the women went out after her with timbrels and with dances; Exod. xv.

TIM'BRELLED, a. Sung to the sound of the timbrel.

TIME, n. [Sax. tim, tima, time in general; Dan. time, Sw. timme, an hour; L. tempus; It. and Port. tempo; Sp. tiempo; Fr. temps, time in general; all from the root of the Sw. tima, to happen, to come, to befal; but the root, in some of its applications, must have signified to rush with violence. Hence the sense of temples, L. tempora, the falls of the head, also tempest, &c. See TEMPEST. Time is primarily equivalent to season; to the Gr. ὡρα in its original sense, opportunity, occasion, a fall, an event, that which comes.] 1. A particular portion or part of duration, whether past, present, or future. The time was; the time has been; the time is; the time will be.

> Lost time is never found again. — Franklin.

> God, who at sundry times, and in divers manners, spoke in time past to the fathers by the prophets; Heb. i.

2. A proper time; a season.

> There is a time to every purpose; Eccles. iii.

> The time of figs was not yet; Mark xi.

3. Duration.

> The equal and uniform flux of time does not affect our senses. — Cyc.

Time is absolute or relative; absolute time is considered without any relation to bodies or their motions. It is conceived by us as unbounded, continuous, homogeneous, unchangeable in the order of its parts, and divisible without end. Relative time is the sensible measure of any portion of duration, by means of motion. Thus the diurnal revolution of the sun measures a space of time or duration. Hence,—4. A space or measured portion of duration. In this sense, time is measured by certain conventional or natural periods, and often marked by particular phenomena; as the revolution of the heavenly bodies, more especially the revolution of the sun, or the rotation of the earth on its axis. Time is divided into years, months, weeks, days, hours, minutes, and seconds, but of these portions the years and days only are marked by celestial phenomena. In order to measure time we employ some equable motion, and we judge those times to be equal, which pass while a moving body proceeding with a uniform motion passes over equal spaces. The machines employed for measuring time are clocks, watches, chronometers, clepsydras, hour-glasses, and dials, but the three former are those chiefly used.—5. Life or duration in reference to occupation. One man spends his time in idleness; another devotes all his time to useful purposes.

Believe me, your time is not your own; it belongs to God, to religion, to mankind. Buckminster.

6. Age; a part of duration distinct from other parts; as, ancient times; modern times. The Spanish armada was defeated in the time of Queen Elizabeth.—7. Hour of travail.

She was within one month of her time. Clarendon.

8. Repetition; repeated performance, or mention with reference to repetition. The physician visits his patient three times in a day.—9. Repetition; doubling; addition of a number to itself; as, to double cloth four times; four times four amount to sixteen.—10. In music, the relative duration of sounds or the measurement of that duration. The term is also used to signify that which divides a bar into two or three equal parts, and subdivides these; and likewise the movement, that is, the quickness or slowness of a composition. The duration of a single sound is known by the particular note, that is, as minim or crotchet, &c. The semibreve is considered as the measure note, it being the longest. Its average length is about four beats of a healthy man's pulse. In regard to the division of bars, the time is either duple or triple, of which there are several varieties. A variety of terms are employed to indicate the movement, as andante, adagio, allegro, &c. In concerts, it is all important that the performers keep time, or exact time.—11. The state of things at a particular period; as when we say, good times, or bad times, hard times, dull times for trade, &c. In this sense, the plural is generally used.—12. The present life; as, in time or eternity. —13. In gram., tense.—14. Among phrenologists, one of the perceptive faculties. Its organ is situated on each side of eventuality. This faculty gives the power of judging of time, and of intervals in general. It is essential to music and versification.—In time, in good season; sufficiently early. He arrived in time to see the exhibition.—2. A considerable space of duration; process or continuation of duration. You must wait patiently; you will in time recover your health and strength. —At times, at distinct intervals of duration. At times he reads; at other times he rides.

The Spirit began to move him at times; Judges xiii.

Time enough, in season; early enough.

Stanley at Bosworth-field, came time enough to save his life. Bacon.

To lose time, to delay.—2. To go too slow; as, a watch or clock loses time. —Apparent time, in astron., true solar time, regulated by the apparent motions of the sun. It is the same as that shown by a properly adjusted sun-dial. —Mean time, equated time, a mean or average of apparent time. It is the same as that shown by a well regulated clock.—Sidereal time, is that which is shown by the apparent diurnal revolutions of the stars.—Astronomical time, that measured by the motions of the heavenly bodies only.—Astronomical time of day, the time past mean noon of that day, and is reckoned into 24 hours in mean time.—Civil time, mean time adapted to civil uses, and distinguished into years, months, days, &c. —Equinoctial time, a system of reckoning time by mean solar days, and parts of a day, counted from a fixed instant, common to all the world, and determined by no local circumstance such as noon or midnight, but is numerically the same, at the same instant, in every part of the globe.—Equation of time. [See under EQUATION.]—Time of descent, in physics, is the time employed by a material particle in falling down an arc of a curve by the action of gravity. [See DAY, SOLAR, SIDEREAL, YEAR.]

TIME, v. t. To adapt to the time or occasion; to bring, begin, or perform at the proper season or time; as, the measure is well timed, or ill timed. No small part of political wisdom consists in knowing how to time propositions and measures.

Mercy is good, but kings mistake its timing. Dryden.

2. To regulate as to time; as, he timed the stroke.—3. To measure; as in music or harmony.

TIME'-BARGAIN, n. An illegal bargain between two stockholders, who agree that on a specified future day, the difference in value of a nominal sum in some particular stock, as may be agreed upon, shall be paid over to the individual in whose favour the rise may be determined. Accordingly, when what is termed the settling day arrives, the amount of the wager is paid to the winner.

TIME'-BEWAST'ED,† a. Wasted by time.

TIME'-BOOK, n. A book kept by farmers and others who employ labourers or workmen, for registering the days and parts of days each person has been at his work, and the particular description of work in which he has been employed. Its chief use is to regulate the payment of wages.

TIMED, pp. Adapted to the season or occasion.

TIME'-ENDUR'ING, a. Lasting as time itself.

TIMEFUL, a. Seasonable; timely; sufficiently early. [Not much used.]

TIME-HONOURED, a. Honoured for a long time.

TIMEIST, n. In music, a performer who keeps good time.—2.† One who conforms with the times; a time-server.

TIME-KEEPER, n. [time and keeper.] A clock, watch, or chronometer.

TIME-KILLING, a. Adapted to kill time.

TIMELESS, a. Unseasonable; done at an improper time.

Nor fits it to prolong the heav'nly feast Timeless.† Pope.

2.† Untimely; immature; done or suffered before the proper time; as, a timeless grave.

TIMELESSLY, adv. Unseasonably.

TIMELINESS, n. [from timely.] Seasonableness; being in good time.

TIMELY, a. Seasonable; being in good time; sufficiently early. The defendant had timely notice of this motion. Timely care will often prevent great evils.—2.† Keeping time or measure.

TIMELY, adv. Early; soon; in good season.

Timely advised, the coming evil shun. Prior.

TIMEOUSLY, a. Seasonably; in good time.

TIME-PIECE, n. [time and piece.] A clock, watch, or other instrument, to measure or show the progress of time; a chronometer.

TIME-PLEASER, n. (s as z.) [time and please.] One who complies with the prevailing opinions, whatever they may be.

TIME-SANCTIONED, a. Sanctioned by long use.

TIME-SCORN'ER, n. One who scorns time.

TIME-SERVER, n. [time and serve.] One who adapts his opinions and manners to the times; one who obsequiously complies with the ruling power.

TIME-SERVING, a. Obsequiously complying with the humours of men in power.

TIME-SERVING, n. An obsequious compliance with the humours of men in power, which implies a surrender of one's independence, and sometimes of one's integrity.

TIME-WASTING, a. Wasting time.

TIME-WORN, a. Impaired by time.

TIM'ID, a. [Fr. timide; L. timidus, from timeo, to fear; Gaelic, tim, time, fear; Sp. temblar, to shake with fear; temer, to fear. The sense is probably to shake, or to fail, fall, recede, or shrink.] Fearful; wanting courage to meet danger; timorous; not bold.

Poor is the triumph o'er the timid hare. Thomson.

TIMID'ITY, n. [Fr. timidité; L. timiditas.] Fearfulness; want of courage or boldness to face danger; timorousness; habitual cowardice. Timidity in one person may be a good trait of character, while in another it is a deep reproach.

TIM'IDLY, adv. In a timid manner; weakly; without courage.

TIM'IDNESS, n. Timidity.

TIMING, ppr. Adapting to the season or occasion.

TI'MIST. See TIMEIST.

TIMOC'RACY, n. [Gr. τιμη, honour, worth, and κρατεω, to hold.] In Grecian hist., government by men of property, who were possessed of a certain income. It also signified a government which formed a sort of mean between aristocracy and oligarchy, when the ruling class, composed of the best and noblest citizens, struggled for pre-eminence among themselves.

TIMONEER, n. [Fr. timon; L. temo.] A helmsman.

TIMORO'SO, adv. [It. with dread or fearfulness.] In music, a term applied when the style of performance expresses awe and dread.

TIM'OROUS, a. [It. timoroso; from

L. timor. See TIMID.] 1. Fearful of danger; timid; destitute of courage; as, a timorous female.—2. Indicating fear; full of scruples; as, timorous doubts; timorous beliefs.

TIM'OROUSLY, adv. Fearfully; timidly; without boldness; with much fear.

Let dastard souls be timorously wise. Philips.

TIM'OROUSNESS, n. Fearfulness; timidity; want of courage.

TIM'OTHY GRASS, n. A valuable fodder-plant, the Phleum pratense, or common cat's tail grass. It is extensively cultivated in North America. [See PHLEUM.]

TIMOUS,† a. [from time.] Early; timely.

TIMOUSLY,† adv. In good season.

TIN, n. [Sax. tin; D. tin; G. zinn; Dan. tin, pewter, and tinblik, tin, that is, tin-plate; Ir. stan; W. ystaen, that is, spread or is sprinkled over, a stain, and tin; Corn. staen; Arm. stean; Fr. etain; L. stannum; Sp. estaño; Port. estanho; It. stagno. The latter signifies tin, pewter, and a pond, L. stagnum.] 1. A metal of a white brilliant colour, slightly tinged with grey, being one of the simple or elementary bodies. In hardness it is intermediate between gold and lead; it is very malleable, and may be beaten out into leaves less than the thousandth of an inch in thickness. It is more tenacious than lead, and very flexible, and when bent in the fingers it emits a peculiar crackling sound. Its specific gravity is 7·2. It melts at 442°, and if heated to whiteness in air, it takes fire and burns with a white flame, forming peroxide of tin. Tin is rather a scarce metal, being found in few places of the world in any quantity. The mines in Cornwall are its most productive source; it also occurs in Bohemia, Saxony, and Spain; in Malacca and Banca, in Asia; in Mexico and Chili; and in Massachusetts, in North America. There are only two ores of tin: the native peroxide, called tin stone, and the double sulphuret of tin and copper, called tin pyrites,—which see. The peroxide of tin is found in Cornwall in two forms: 1. In veins where it is blended with several other metals; as arsenic, copper, zinc, and tungsten; 2. In loose rounded masses, grains, or sand in alluvial soil, in which state it is called stream tin. The former, when reduced to the metallic state, yields block tin, while the latter yields grain tin, which is the purer of the two. What is termed wood tin is found in reniform and botryoidal masses, or in wedge-shaped pieces. Oxygen combines with tin, forming the protoxide, sesquioxide, and peroxide of tin. Chlorine unites with tin, forming the protochloride and perchloride of tin. The compounds of sulphur and tin are the protosulphuret, sesquisulphuret, and persulphuret. The uses of tin are numerous. It is much used as a covering to several other metals, as in tin-plate, and cooking vessels of copper. Combined with copper it forms bronze, bell-metal, and several other useful alloys. With lead it forms pewter, and solder of various kinds. Tin-foil coated with mercury forms the reflecting surface of glass-mirrors. The solutions of tin in the nitric, muriatic, nitro-sulphuric, and tartaric acids, are much used in dyeing. Tin is much used in the state of very thin leaves or tin-foil.—2. Thin plates of iron covered with tin. [See TIN-PLATE.]—3. A cant name for money. [Low.]

TIN, v. t. To cover with tin, or overlay with tinfoil.

TIN'AMON, } TIN'AMUS, } n. A genus of South American birds, family Tetraonidæ. They are remarkable for a long slender neck, covered with feathers, the tips of the barbs being slender and slightly curled.

Great Tinamou (T. Brasiliensis).

They vary in size from that of a pheasant down to that of a quail, and even smaller. They either perch on low trees or hide among long grass; are easily caught with a running noose, and when cooked the flesh is delicately white.

TIN'CA, n. A genus of fishes founded by Cuvier, and comprising the tenches. [See TENCH.]

TIN'CAL, n. The commercial name of borax in its crude or unrefined state. It is an impure biborate of soda, consisting of small crystals of a yellowish colour, and is unctuous to the feel.

TINCH'ILL, } TINCH'EL, } n. [Gael. timchioll, circuit, compass.] A circle of sportsmen, who, by surrounding a great space, and gradually closing in, bring immense quantities of deer together, by which means they are captured or killed.—2. A snare or gin. [Scotch.]

TINCT,† v. t. [L. tingo, tinctus] To stain or colour; to imbue.

TINCT,† n. Stain; colour. [We now use tinge and tincture.]

TINCTO'RIAL, a. Pertaining to colours or dyes; imparting colour. Tinctorial matter is colouring matter.

TINC'TURE, n. [L. tinctura; Fr. teinture. See TINGE.] 1.† The finer and more volatile parts of a substance, separated by a menstruum; or an extract of a part of the substance of a body, communicated to the menstruum. —2. In med., tinctures are solutions of the active principles, chiefly of vegetables, sometimes of saline medicines, more rarely of animal matters, in certain solvents. They are called tinctures from possessing more or less of colour. Alcoholic tinctures are such as are prepared with alcohol. When sulphuric ether is used as the solvent, they are termed etherial tinctures; when ammonia is used, they are termed ammoniated tinctures; and when wine is used, they are called medicated wines. Simple tinctures are such as hold only one substance in solution; and compound tinctures are those in which two or more ingredients are submitted to the solvent. The greater number of tinctures are prepared with proof spirit, and the most important are those which contain highly active ingredients, as the tincture of opium, &c.—3. A tinge or shade of colour; as, a tincture of red.—4. Slight taste superadded to any substance; as, a tincture of orange peel. — 5. Slight quality added to any thing; as, a tincture of French manners.

All manners take a tincture from our own. Pope.

6. In her., the colour of any thing in coat-armour, including the two metals or and argent, or gold and silver, and furs.

TINC'TURE, v. t. To tinge; to communicate a slight foreign colour to; to impregnate with some extraneous matter.

A little black paint will tincture and spoil twenty gay colours. Watts.

2. To imbue the mind; to communicate a portion of any thing foreign; as, a mind tinctured with scepticism.

TINC'TURED, pp. Tinged; slightly impregnated with something foreign.

TINC'TURING, ppr. Tinging; imbuing; impregnating with a foreign substance.

TIND, v. t. [Sax. tendan, tynan, to kindle; Goth. tandyan; Sw. tända; Dan. tænder; Eng. tine; tinder, G. zunder; probably allied to Ir. and Gael. teine, fire, W. Corn. and Arm. tan; and perhaps our word sun is of the same family.] To kindle;† hence, TIND'ER, n. [Sax. tyndre.] Something very inflammable, used for kindling fire from a spark; as scorched linen.

TIND'ER-BOX, n. [tinder and box.] A box in which tinder is kept.

TIND'ER-LIKE, a. [tinder and like] Like tinder; very inflammable.

TINE,† v. t. [Sax. tynan.] To kindle; to set on fire. [See TIND.]

TINE, v. t. [Sax. tynan; L. teneo.] To shut or inclose; to fill. [Not in use or local.]

TINE, n. [Sax. tinder; Ice. tindr; probably the L. dens, G. zahn, W. dant, a tooth; at any rate, it is a shoot.] 1. The tooth or spike of a fork; a prong; also, the tooth of a harrow or drag.—2.† Trouble; distress.

TINE,† v. i. [Sax. tynan, from teine, tan, fire, supra.] To rage; to smart; to fight.

TINE, } TYNE, } v. t. To lose; as, to tyne money. [Scotch.]

TINE, } TYNE, } v. i. To be lost; to perish in whatever way. [Scotch.]

TIN'EA, n. [L. from teneo, to hold.] The scald-head; porrigo. In this disease certain cellular plants are met with which have all the appearance of fungi, and are called porrigophytes.—2. A genus of nocturnal lepidopterous insects. It comprises the species generally known under the name of clothes-moths. In the accompanying figure, a is the Tinea tapetzella, or woollen clothes moth; b, the case or cloak of the caterpillar of Tinea pellionella, which infests furs.

TINED, a. Furnished with tines.

TINEMAN, n. Anciently an officer of the forest in England, who had the nocturnal care of vert and venison.

TI'NET, n. [tine, to shut, supra.] In old writers, brushwood and thorns for making and repairing hedges.

TIN'FLOORS, n. In tin mines, the name usually given to small veins, or thin flat masses of tinstone, interposed between certain rocks, and parallel to their beds. The same name is occasionally given to stock-works, or the large irregular masses of tin ore.

TIN'FOIL, n. [tin and L. folium, a leaf.] Tin reduced to a thin leaf.

TING,† n. A sharp sound. [Children use ding, dong. See TINGLE.]—2. The room in a Chinese temple containing the idol.

TING,† v. i. To sound or ring.

TINGE, v. t. [L. tingo; Gr. τεγγω, Sax. deagan; Eng. to dye; G. tunken, to dip; Fr. teindre, to stain. See DYE. Ar. taicha, to perish, to die, to tinge. Tinging is from dipping. The primary sense of the verb is to plunge, or to throw down, to thrust, and intransitively to fall; hence we see the words to die, that is, to fall or perish, and to dye, or colour may be from one root.] To imbue or impregnate with something foreign; to communicate the qualities of one substance, in some degree, to another, either by mixture, or by adding them to the surface; as, to tinge a blue colour with red; an infusion tinged with a yellow colour by saffron; to tinge a decoction with a bitter taste. The jaundice tinges the eyes with yellow.

The virtues of Sir Roger, as well as his imperfections, are tinged with extravagance. Addison.

TINGE, n. Colour; dye; taste; or rather a slight degree of some colour, taste, or something foreign, infused into another substance or mixture, or added to it; tincture; as, a red colour that has a tinge of blue; a dish of food that has a tinge of orange peel in its taste.

TINĠ'ED, pp. Imbued or impregnated with a small portion of something foreign.

TINĠ'ENT, a. Having the power to tinge.

As for the white part it appeared much less enriched with the tingent property. [Little used.] Boyle.

TINĠ'ING, ppr. Imbuing or impregnating with something foreign.

TIN'-GLASS, n. Bismuth,—which see.

TIN''GLE, v. i. [W. tincial, tincian, or tinciaw, to tink, to tinkle, or tingle, to ring, to draw, or drain the last drop. Qu. D. tintelen, Fr. tinter, L. tinnio.] 1. To feel a kind of thrilling sound; as in the ears.

At which both the ears of every one that heareth it shall tingle; 1 Sam. iii.

2. To feel a sharp, thrilling pain.

The pale boy senator yet tingling stands. Pope.

3. To have a thrilling sensation, or a sharp, slight penetrating sensation.

They suck pollution through their tingling veins. Tickel.

TING''LING, ppr. Having a thrilling sensation.

TING''LING, n. A thrilling, jarring, tremulous sensation.

TINK, v. i. [W. tinciaw, supra.] To make a sharp, shrill noise; to tinkle. [The latter is generally used.]

TINK'AL, n. Tincal,—which see.

TINK'ER, n. [W. tincerz, the ringer, from tinciaw, to ring.] A mender of brass kettles, pans, and the like.

TINK'ER, v. t. To work as a tinker; to mend; to repair; to cobble.

TINK'ERING, n. The act or employment of a tinker.

TINK'ERLY, adv. In the manner of a tinker.

TINK'LE, v. i. [W. tincial, supra, under tingle.] 1. To make small, quick, sharp sounds, as by striking on metal; to clink; to tingle.

...And have not charity, I am become as sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal; 1 Cor. xiii.; Is. iii.

The sprightly horse
Moves to the music of his tinkling bells. Dodsley.

The moment the money tinkles in the chest the soul mounts out of purgatory Tetzel in Milner.

2. To hear a small, sharp sound.

And his ears tinkled, and his colour fled. Dryden.

TINK'LE, v. t. To cause to clink or make sharp, quick sounds.

TINK'LER, n. A tinker. [Scotland and North of England.]

TINK'LING, ppr. Making a small, quick, sharp noise.

The grots that echo to the tinkling rills. Pope.

TINK'LING, n. A small, quick, sharp sound.

Making a tinkling with their feet; Is. iii.

TIN'MAN, n [tin and man.] A manufacturer of tin vessels; a dealer in tin ware.

TIN'-MINE, n. [tin and mine.] A mine where tin is obtained.

TIN'NED, pp. Covered with tin.

TIN'NER, n. [from tin.] One who works in the tin mines.—2. A tinman.

TIN'NIENT,† a. [L. tinnio, to ring; ppr. Tinniens.] Emitting a clear sound or tingling noise.

TIN'NING, ppr. [from tin.] Covering with tin or tinfoil.

TIN'NING, n. The act, art, or process of covering plates of iron, the inner surfaces of iron or copper vessels, &c., with a thin coat or layer of tin, to protect them from oxidation, or from being corroded by rust.—2. The covering or layer thus put on.

TIN'NITUS AURIUM, n. [L.] In medical pathol., a ringing in the ears; a common symptom in many diseases, and especially of organic disease of the auditory nerve.

TINNUN'CULUS, n. In ornith., a genus of Falconidæ, comprising the kestrells, or stonegalls.

TIN'NY, a. Abounding with tin.

TIN'PENNY, n. [tin and penny] A customary duty in England, formerly paid to tithingmen, for liberty to dig in the tin mines.

TIN'PLATE, n. Thin sheet iron coated with tin, in order to protect it from oxidation or rust. It is also known by the name of white-iron. The uses of tin-plate are well known. It is formed into vessels of all sorts, boxes, trinkets, and a variety of other articles. —Crystallized tin-plate, tin-plate having its surface of a crystalline texture. This is effected by washing over the surface of common tin-plate with a weak acid, and then cleaning it with an alkaline ley; after which the surface is covered over with a transparent varnish. It forms an ornamental article, known by the name of moirée metallique.

TIN PYRI'TES, n Native sulphuret of tin; a double sulphuret of tin and copper. It occurs crystallized and massive. The crystallized variety has an uneven fracture with a metallic lustre; is readily scratched and reduced to powder. Its colour is steel-gray mixed with yellow, and its specific gravity is 4·35. Tin pyrites is a rare substance, having been found only in Cornwall.

TIN'SAW, n. A kind of saw used by bricklayers for sawing bricks.

TIN'SEL, n. [Fr. etincelle, a spark.] 1. Something very shining and gaudy, something superficially shining and showy, or having a false lustre, and more gay than valuable.

Who can discern the tinsel from the gold? Dryden.

If the man will too curiously examine the superficial tinsel good, he undeceives himself to his cost. Norris.

2. A kind of shining cloth.—3. A kind of lace.

TIN'SEL, n. In Scots law, a term used to signify loss; forfeiture from the Scottish tine or tyne, to lose.—Tinsel of the feu, the loss or forfeiture of a feu-right by failure to pay the feu-duty for two years whole and together. This is an irritancy incident to every feu-right. — Tinsel of superiority, a remedy introduced by statute for unentered vassals whose superiors are themselves uninfeft, and therefore cannot effectually enter them. In this case the vassal must charge the superior to obtain himself infeft in the superiority within forty days, under certification that, if he fail, he shall lose the tenant for his life time; that is, he shall lose the casualties that may fall to him, through the act or delinquency of the vassal, besides making up the damage sustained by his failure.

TIN'SEL, a. Gaudy; showy to excess; specious; superficial.

TIN'SEL, v. t. To adorn with something glittering and showy, without much value; to make gaudy.

She, tinsel'd o'er in robes of varying hues. Pope.

TIN'SELLED, pp. Decorated with gaudy ornaments.

TIN'SELLING, ppr. Adorning with tinsel or superficial lustre.

TIN' STONE, n. A native peroxide of tin; the principal ore of tin found in the mines of Cornwall. It occurs in attached and imbedded crystals, and massive. [See TIN.] Tin stone sometimes yields nearly 80 per cent. of its weight in tin.

TINT, n. [It. tinta; Fr. teint; from L. tinctus, tingo. See TINGE.] A dye; a colour, or rather a slight colouring or tincture distinct from the ground or principal colour; as, red with a blue tint, or tint of blue. In painting, tints are the colours considered as more or less bright, deep, or thin, by the due use and intermixture of which a picture receives its shades, softness, and variety.

Or blend in beauteous tint the colour'd mass. Pope.

Their vigour sickens, and their tints decline. Harte.

TINT, v. t. To tinge; to give a slight colouring to.

TINT, pp. of the verb to tine. Lost. [Scotch.]

TIN'TAMAR,† n. [Fr. tintamarre; L. tinnitus and Mars. Ash.] A hideous or confused noise.

TINT'ED, pp. Tinged.

TINT'ING, ppr. Giving a slight colouring to.

TINT'ING, n. A forming of tints.

TINTINNAB'ULARY, a. [L. tintinnabulum, a little bell.] Having or making the sound of a bell.

TIN'-WORM, n. [tin and worm.] An insect; a species of millepede.

TIN'Y, a. [from the root of thin,—which see.] Very small; little; puny. It is often joined with little, as an augmentation; as, a little tiny thing. [A word used in burlesque.]

When that I was a little tiny boy. Shak.

TIP, n. [D. tip, a different orthography of top; G. zipfel; that is, a shoot or extension to a point. Qu. Eth. thybe, the nipple.] 1. The end; the point or extremity of any thing small; as, the tip of the finger; the tip of a spear; the tip of the tongue; the tip of the ear.—2. One part of the play at nine-pins.—3. In bot., an anther.—4. A gentle stroke; a tap.

TIP, v. t. To form a point with something; to cover the tip, top, or end; as, to tip any thing with gold or silver.

With truncheon tipp'd with iron head. Hudibras.

Tipp'd with jet,
Fair ermines spotless as the snows they press. Thomson

TIP, v. i. In the phrase to tip off, that is, to fall headlong; hence, to die. [Vulgar.]

TIP'PED, TIPT, pp. Having the end covered.

TIP'PET, n. [Sax. tæppet. It seems to be formed from tæppe, tape.] A narrow garment or covering for the neck, worn by females. It is now generally made of fur, though formerly of some kind of cloth.

TIP'PING, ppr. Covering the end or tip.—2. In music, a distinct articulation given to the flute, by striking the tongue against the roof of the mouth.

TIP'PING WAGGON, n. A waggon that can be upset or canted up in order to discharge its load, without requiring the horses to be unyoked.

TIP'PLE, v. i. [Qu. D. zuipen; Fr. toper. This word and tope are probably of one family, and I suspect them to be from the root of dip. See DRINK.] To drink spirituous or strong liquors habitually; to indulge in the frequent and improper use of spirituous liquors. When a man begins to tipple, let his creditors secure their debts.

TIP'PLE, v. t. To drink, as strong liquors, in luxury or excess.

Himself for saving charges
A peel'd, slic'd onion eats, and tipples verjuice. Dryden.

TIP'PLE, n. Drink; liquor taken in tippling.

TIP'PLE, n. In hay-making, a bundle of hay collected from the swath, and formed into a conical shape. This is tied near the top, so as to make it taper to a point, and set upon its base to dry. [Lancashire.]

TIP'PLED, pp. Drank in excess.—2. a. Intoxicated; inebriated.

TIP'PLER, n. One who habitually indulges in the excessive use of spirituous liquors; a drunkard; a sot. It however often signifies a person who habitually drinks strong liquors, without absolute drunkenness.

TIP'PLING, ppr. Indulging in the habitual use of strong or spirituous liquors.

TIP'PLING, n. The habitual practice of drinking strong or spirituous liquors; a drinking to excess.

TIP'PLING, n. A mode of making hay, by forming it into tipples. [See TIPPLE.]

TIP'PLING-HOUSE, n. [tipple and house.] A house in which liquors are sold in drams or small quantities, and where men are accustomed to spend their time and money in excessive drinking.

TIP'SILY, adv. In a tipsy manner.

TIP'-STAFF, n. [tip and staff.] An officer who bears a staff tipped with metal; a constable. Tip-staffs are officers who attend upon the judges of the King's (Queen's) Bench, with a kind of rod tipped with silver; they also take into custody all persons who are committed by the court.—2. A staff tipped with metal.

TIP'SY, a. [from tipple.] Fuddled; overpowered with strong drink; intoxicated.

TIP'TOE, n. [tip and toe.] The end of the toe.

Upon his tiptoes stalketh stately by. Spenser.

To be or to stand a tiptoe, to be awake or alive to any thing; to be roused; as, to be a tiptoe with expectation.

TIP'TOP, n. The highest or utmost degree.

TIP'ULA, n. A genus of dipterous insects, which includes the various species of crane-fly. They have very long legs, as may be seen in T. sylvestris, or Father-long-legs. There are nearly fifty British species.

TIP'ULARY, a. [L. tipula.] Pertaining to insects of the genus Tipula or crane fly.

TIPU'LIDÆ, n. Leach's name for a very extensive family of dipterous insects belonging to the section nemocera. It corresponds with the genus Tipula of Linnæus.

TIRADE, n. [It. tirata; Fr. tirade, a train or series, from tirer, to draw.] 1. Formerly in French music, the filling of an interval by the intermediate diatonic notes.—2. In modern usage, a strain or flight; a series of violent declamation; a declamatory flight of censure or reproof.

Here he delivers a violent tirade against all persons who profess to know any thing about angels. Quart. Review.

TIRAIL'LEUR, n. (tiräl'-yur.) [Fr.] A French skirmishing soldier, corresponding to the sharp-shooters in the British army.

TIRE, n. [Heb. טור tur, a row or series.] 1. A tier; a row or rank. This is the same word as tier, differently written. [See TIER and TOUR.]—2. A head dress; something that encompasses the head. [See TIARA.] Ezek. xxiv; Is. iii.

On her head she wore a tire of gold. Spenser.

3. Furniture; apparatus; as, the tire of war.—4. Attire. [See ATTIRE.]—5. A band or hoop of iron, used to bind the fellies of wheels, to secure them from wearing and breaking; as, cart-tire; waggon-tire. This tire, however, is sometimes formed of different pieces, and is not one entire hoop.

TIRE,† v. t. To adorn; to attire; to dress; as the head. [See ATTIRE.] 2 Kings ix.

TIRE, v. t. [Sax. teorian, ateorian, geteorian, to fail. In D. teeren signifies to tar, to pine, to waste or consume, to digest; Gr. τείρω; L. tero. In Ir. and Gaelic, tor, toras, tuirse, is weariness; tuirsighim, to weary, to tire.] 1. To weary; to fatigue; to exhaust the strength by toil or labour; as, to tire a horse or an ox. A long day's work in summer will tire the labourer.

Tir'd with toil, all hopes of safety past. Dryden.

2. To weary; to fatigue; to exhaust the power of attending, or to exhaust patience with dulness or tediousness. A dull advocate may tire the court and jury, and injure his cause.—To tire out, to weary or fatigue to excess; to harass.

TIRE, v. i. To become weary; to be fatigued; to have the strength fail; to have the patience exhausted. A feeble body soon tires with hard labour.

TIRE,† v. i. To tear or rend in pieces; to prey upon; as a bird.

TIRED, pp. Wearied; fatigued.

TIREDNESS, n. The state of being wearied; weariness.

TIRE-SMITH, n. One who makes iron-work for coaches, &c.

TIRESOME, a. Wearisome; fatiguing; exhausting the strength; as, a tiresome day's work; a tiresome journey.—2. Tedious; exhausting the patience; as, a tiresome discourse. The debates in parliament are said to be sometimes very tiresome.

TIRESOMENESS, n. The act or quality of tiring or exhausting strength or patience; wearisomeness; tediousness; as, the tiresomeness of work or of a dull speaker.

TIREWOMAN,† n. [tire and woman.] A woman whose occupation is to make head dresses.

TIRING, ppr. Wearying; fatiguing; exhausting strength or patience.

TIRING-HOUSE, TIRING-ROOM, n. The room or place where players dress for the stage.

TIRL, n. A smart tap or stroke. [Scotch.]

TIRL, v. t. To uncover; as to tirl a house; to strip. As a verb intran., to touch so as to produce a tremulous motion. [Scotch.]

TIR'O, n. [L.] A tyro,—which see.

TIROCIN'IUM, n. [L.] The first service of a soldier; the first rudiments of any art; novitiate: hence used by Cowper, as a title for a poem on schools.

TIRO'NIAN NOTES. The short hand of Roman antiquity, said to have been introduced into Rome by Tiro the freedman, and favourite of Cicero. The Tironian notes consist of arbitrary signs, substituted for words and phrases. They are still common in marginal notes.

TIRR, v. t. [Sax. tyrwan, to tear.] To tear; to uncover; to unroof; to strip; to pare off the sward by means of a spade. [Scotch.]

TIR'RA LIR'RA,† n. The note of the lark.

TIR'RIT,† n. Terror; affright.

TIR'WIT, n. One of the names given to the Lapwing, the Vanellus cristatus, a well known migratory bird. [See LAPWING.]

'TIS, a contraction of it is, often used in poetry.

TISAN. See PTISAN.

TIS'IC, } a. (s as z.) [for phthisic, TIS'ICAL, } phthisical.] Consumptive.

TIS'IC, n. (s as z.) [supra.] Consumption; morbid waste.

TIS'RI, n. The first Hebrew month of the civil year, and the seventh of the ecclesiastical; answering to a part of our September and a part of October.

TISSUE, n. (tish'u.) [Fr. tissu, woven; tisser, to lay the ground-work of lace, to weave.] 1. Cloth interwoven with gold or silver, or with figured colours.

A robe of tissue, stiff with golden wire. Dryden.

2. In anat., texture or organization of parts. The peculiar intimate structure of a part is called its tissue. A part of a fibrous structure is called a fibrous tissue. The organs of the body are made up of simpler elements, some generally diffused through the body, and others peculiar to particular organs. These simpler structures are called the tissues of the body; as, the cellular tissue; the mucous tissue, &c. The cellular tissue is the cellular membrane. —3. In bot., the minute elementary parts of which the organs of plants are composed. These elementary structures differ from each other, and are so minute as generally to be distinctly visible only with the aid of the microscope. They are named elementary organs, organic tissue, or vegetable tissue. When a leaf or a portion of the stem of one of the higher plants is submitted to the microscope, it is found to consist, 1. of a thin transparent homogeneous membrane, which is arranged in the form of cells or cylindrical tubes; 2. of fibres which are arranged in a spiral form in the interior of the cells or tubes; and, 3. of a fluid, filling the cells, and existing between them, and containing in it globules of various sizes and kinds. These parts constitute what are known respectively as elementary membrane, elementary fibre, and organic mucus. The elementary fibre is only found in the higher forms of plants, the other two are found in all plants. The tissues of plants then are composed of elementary membrane and elementary fibre, and the principal forms under which they exhibit themselves constitute the fibrous tissue, cellular tissue, and vascular tissue. Fibrous tissue is that in which elementary fibre alone is apparent. Cellular tissue is composed of membrane in the form of cells or cavities which are closed on all sides, and are commonly of a spheroidal form, although they often assume various other forms. The pith of plants is entirely composed of cellular tissue, but it enters largely into the structure of other parts, and in many is the only tissue. When the cells are composed of membrane and fibre combined, or of fibre alone, they constitute the fibrocellular tissue. Vascular or tubular tissue is composed of very elongated membranous tubes, tapering at each end. It comprehends the woody and laticiferous tissues. When the tubes have within them a spiral fibre, or their walls marked with broken spiral lines or dots, arranged in a circular or spiral direction, they constitute fibro-vascular tissue.—4. A connected series; as, the whole story is a tissue of forgeries or of falsehood.—Tissue paper, very thin gauze-like paper, such as is used to protect engravings in books.

TIS'SUE, v. t. To form tissue; to interweave; to variegate.

The chariot was covered with cloth of gold tissued upon blue. Bacon.

TIS'SUED, pp. Interwoven; formed with variegated work.

TIS'SUING, ppr. Interweaving; forming with variegated work.

TIT, n. Anything small; a small horse, in contempt; a woman, in contempt; a small bird; a titmouse or tomtit.

TI'TAN, n. In myth., a son of Cœlus and Terra, or of Heaven and Earth. The name of Titans was given to the children of Cœlus and Terra in general. They are said to have dethroned their father, and waged war with Jupiter for the government, but were defeated and thrown into Tartarus.

TITA'NIAN, } a. Pertaining to titTITANIT'IC, } anium.

TITA'NIATE, n. A saline compound formed by the union of titanic acid with a salifiable base.

TITA'NIC ACID, n. Peroxide of titanium. It is obtained from rutile, which is a native titaniate of iron and manganese. It is a snow-white infusible solid, in its relations somewhat analogous to silicic acid. It is used in making the finer kinds of enamel for artificial teeth, from its whiteness and hardness.

TITANIF'EROUS, a. [titan or titanium, and L. fero.] Producing titanium; as, titaniferous pyrites.

TI'TANITE, n. An ore of titanium, called also Sphene,—which see.

TITA'NIUM, n. In mineral., a metal discovered by Gregor in 1791, in a black sand in Cornwall. It was afterwards discovered by Klaproth in some other minerals, and he gave it the name it now bears. In 1822, Wollaston examined it, and ascertained its properties. It is found oxidized in several minerals; and occurs occasionally in the metallic form, in the slag iron works; as small cubical crystals, exactly similar to bright copper in appearance; of specific gravity 5·3, and very infusible. When heated with nitre they are oxidized, producing titanic acid. Titanium is dissolved in a mixture of nitric and hydrofluoric acid, under a very high temperature. Oxygen and titanium combine, forming the protoxide, which is a deep purple-coloured powder, and the peroxide or titanic acid. Titanium also combines with chlorine forming a bichloride, and with sulphur forming a bisulphuret. The ores of this metal are called memachanite, from Menachan in Cornwall, where it was originally found; iserine, from the river Iser, in Silesia; nigrine, from its black colour; sphene, rutile, brookite, axotomous iron, crichtonite, ilmenite, mohsite, æschynite, greenovite, and octahedrite or anatase.

TIT'BIT, n. A tender piece. [See TIDBIT.]

TITHABLE, a. Subject to the payment of tithes.

TITHE, n. [Sax. teotha, probably contracted from teogetha, as the verb is teighthian, to decimate. See TEN.] The tenth part of any thing; but appropriately, the tenth part of the increase annually arising from the profits of land and stock, allotted to the clergy for their support. Tithes are personal, predial, or mixed; personal, when accruing from labour, art, trade, and navigation; predial, when issuing from the earth, as, hay, wood, grain, and fruit; and mixed, when accruing from beasts, which are fed from the ground. Another division of tithes is into great and small. Great tithes, consist of all species of corn and grain, hay, and wood; and small tithes, of predial tithes of other kinds, together with mixed and personal tithes. The great tithes belong to the rector, and are hence called parsonage tithes; and the latter are due to the vicar, and are hence called vicarage tithes. Tithes are either due de jure or by custom; to the latter class belong all personal tithes. The exemptions from tithes are composition, a modus decimandi, prescription, or act of parliament. Commutation of tithes, the conversion of tithes into a rent charge, payable in money, and chargeable on the land. Several acts of parliament have been passed for effecting the commutation of tithes in England and Ireland. In regard to tithes in Scotland, see TEINDS.

TITHE, v. t. To levy a tenth part on; to tax to the amount of a tenth.

When thou hast made an end of tithing all the tithes of thine increase; Deut. xxvi.
Ye tithe mint and rue; Luke xi.

TITHE, v. i. To pay tithes.

TITHED, pp. Taxed a tenth.

TITHE-FREE, a. Exempt from the payment of tithes.

TITHE-GA'THERER, n. One who collects tithes.

TITHE-PAYING, a. Paying tithes; subjected to pay tithes.

TITHER, n. One who tithes, or collects tithes.

TITHING, ppr. Levying a tax on, to the amount of a tenth.

TITHING, n. [Sax. tithinga, from theothunge.] A decennary; a number or company of ten householders, who dwelling near each other, were sureties or free pledges to the king for the good behaviour of each other. The institution of tithings in England is ascribed to Alfred, and although this institution has long ceased, the name and division are still retained in many parts of England.

TITHING-MAN, n. [tithing and man.] In former times the chief man of a tithing; a headborough; one elected to preside over the tithing.—2. A peace officer; an under constable.—3. In New England, America, a parish officer annually elected to preserve good order in the church during divine service, and to make complaint of any disorderly conduct.

TITHON'IC, a. [Gr. Τιθωνος.] Pertaining to or denoting those rays of light which produce chemical effects.

TITHONIC'ITY, n. A name given to that property of light by which it produces chemical effects; supposed by some to be a distinct imponderable agent.

TITH'YMAL, n. [Fr. tithymale; Gr. τιθυμαλλος, from τιτθος, the breast.] A plant of the genus Euphorbia, E. antiquorum.

TIT'ILLATE, v. i. [L. titillo.] To tickle.

The pungent grains of titillating dust. Pope.

TIT'ILLATING, ppr. Tickling.

TITILLA'TION, n. [Fr. from L. titillatio.] 1. The act of tickling; or the state of being tickled.—2. Any slight pleasure.

The products of those titillations that reach no higher than the senses. Glanville.

TIT'LARK, n. [tit and lark.] A small bird, a species of Alauda or lark, the Alauda pratensis, Linn. According to modern ornithologists, the titlarks form a separate genus (Anthus.) They are slender shaped birds, having the plumage and long hinder toes of the true larks, but with the slender bills of the wagtails. The tree pipit (A. trivialis), the meadow pipit (A. pratensis), and the rock pipit (A. obscurus), are all known by the name of titlark.

TI'TLE, n. [L. titulus; It. titolo. This may belong to the family of Gr. τιθημι, to set or put; Sax. tithian, to give.] 1. An inscription put over any thing as a name by which it is known.—2. The inscription in the beginning of a book, containing the subject of the work, and sometimes the author's name.—3. In the civil and canon laws, a chapter or division of a book.—4. An appellation of dignity, distinction, or pre-eminence given to persons.—Titles of honour, are words and phrases which belong to certain persons as their right in consequence of certain dignities being inherent in them, or conferred upon them; as, Emperor, King, Prince, Duke, Earl, Marquis, Knight, Right Reverend, Reverend, Doctor, Mayor, Provost, &c. &c.—5. A name; an appellation.

Ill worthy I such title should belong
To me transgressor. Milton.

6. Right; or that which constitutes a just cause of exclusive possession; that which is the foundation of ownership; as, a good title to an estate; or an imperfect title. The lowest degree of title is naked possession, then comes the right of possession, and lastly the right of property, all which united complete the title. But possession is not essential to a complete title. A title to personal property may be acquired by occupancy. A claim is not a title. Title, in the legal sense, signifies the means by which a man becomes seised of real property, or possessed of personal property; as, title by descent, title by purchase, title by administration, title by bankruptcy, title by marriage, &c. The term is also used to signify, generally, a right to land. In Scotland, a title to heritage is regulated by the feudal system, and is therefore called a feudal title; also the writings shewing the derivation of the title are called a feudal progress.—Active and passive titles, in Scotch law,—see under PASSIVE.—7. The instrument which is evidence of a right; as a title deed, a charter, &c.—8. In the canon law, that by which a beneficiary holds a benefice. This is true and valid, or colourable. A valid title gives a right to the benefice. A colourable title appears to be valid, but is not.—9. In ancient church records, a church to which a priest was ordained, and where he was to reside.

TI'TLE, v. t. To name; to call; to entitle.

TI'TLED, pp. Called; named.—2. a. Having a title.

TI'TLE-DEEDS, n. In law, the writings evidencing a man's right or title to property. [See DEED.]

TIT'LE-LEAF,† n. The leaf of a book on which the title is printed.

TI'TLELESS,† a. Not having a title or name.

TIT'MOUSE, n. plur. Titmice. [tit, small, and mouse.] The Parus of Linn., a passerine genus of birds, having a slender, short, conical, and straight beak, furnished with little hairs at the base, and the nostrils concealed among the feathers. The titmice are very active little birds, continually flitting and climbing from branch to branch, suspending themselves from the sprays in all sorts of positions, rending asunder the seeds on which they feed, devouring insects, wherever they see them; and not sparing even small birds when they happen to find them sick, and are able to put an end to them. Their notes are shrill and wild. They lay up stores of seeds, and build in the holes of old trees. The Great tit, Blue tit, Crested tit, Coal tit, Marsh tit, Long-tailed tit, and Bearded tit, are British species.

Blue Titmouse, male and female (Parus cæruleus).

TIT'TER, v. i. To laugh with the tongue striking against the root of the upper teeth; to laugh with restraint.

TIT'TER, n. A restrained laugh.—2. A weed.

TIT'TERING, n. Restrained laughter.

TIT'TLE, n. [from tit, small.] A small particle; a minute part; a jot; an iota.

TIT'TLE, v. i. To prate idly; to whisper. [Scotch.]

TIT'TLE-TATTLE, n. [tattle, doubled.] Idle trifling talk; empty prattle.—2. An idle trifling talker. [Less proper.]

TIT'TLE-TATTLE, v. i. To talk idly; to prate.

TIT'TLE-TAT'TLING, n. The act of prating idly.

TIT'UBATE, v. i. [L. titubo.] To stumble.

TITUBA'TION, n. [L. titubo, to stumble.] The act of stumbling.—2. In med., restlessness; an inclination to constant change of position.

TIT'ULAR, a. [Fr. titulaire; from L. titulus.] 1. Existing in title or name only; nominal; having or conferring the title only; as, a titular king or prince.—2. Having the title to an office or dignity without discharging the duties of it.

Both Valerius and Austin were titular bishops. Ayliffe.

TIT'ULAR, TIT'ULARY, n. A person invested with a title, in virtue of which he holds an office or benefice, whether he performs the duties of it or not. The term is generally applied to one who has the title only without possession or enjoyment. Titulars of the tithes, in Scottish ecclesiastical history the name sometimes given to the Lords of Erection. [See under LORD.]

TITULAR'ITY, n. The state of being titular.

TIT'ULARLY, adv. Nominally; by title only.

TIV'ERING, n. The act or practice of marking with tiver. [Local.]

TIV'Y, adv. [See TANTIVY.] With great speed; a huntsman's word or sound.

TME'SIS, n. [Gr.] In gram., a figure by which a compound word is separated into two parts, and one or more words inserted between them; as, of whom be thou ware also; 2 Tim. iv. 15, for of whom beware thou also.

TO, prep. [Sax. to; D. te or toe; G zu; Ir. and Gaelic, do; Corn. tho. This is probably a contracted word, but from what verb it is not easy to ascertain. The sense is obvious; it denotes passing, moving toward. The pronunciation is to or too, and this depends much on its application or its emphasis.] 1. Noting motion toward a place; opposed to from, or placed after another word expressing motion toward. He is going to church.—2. Noting motion toward a state or condition. He is going to a trade; he is rising to wealth and honour.—3. Noting accord or adaptation; as, an occupation suited to his taste; she has a husband to her mind.—4. Noting address or compellation, or the direction of a discourse. These remarks were addressed to a large audience.

To you, my noble lord of Westmoreland;
I pledge your grace. Shak.

5. Noting attention or application.

Go, buckle to the law. Dryden.

Meditate on these things; give yourself wholly to them; 1 Tim. iv.

6. Noting addition.

Add to your faith, virtue; 2 Pet. i.

Wisdom he has, and to his wisdom, courage. Denham.

7. Noting opposition. They engaged hand to hand.—8. Noting amount, rising to. They met us, to the number of three hundred.—9. Noting proportion; as, three is to nine as nine is to twenty-seven. It is ten to one that you will offend by your officiousness.—10. Noting possession or appropriation. We have a good seat; let us keep it to ourselves.—11. Noting perception; as, a substance sweet to the taste; an event painful to the mind.—12. Noting the subject of an affirmation.

I have a king's oath to the contrary. Shak.

13. Noting the subject of remark or discussion; as, I shall speak to one point only; to speak to the question.—14. In comparison of.

All that they did was piety to this. B. Jonson.

15. As far as.

Few of the Esquimaux can count to ten Quart. Rev

16. Noting intention.

Marks and points out each man of us to slaughter. B. Jonson.

[In this sense, for is now used.]—17. After an adjective, noting the object; as, deaf to the cries of distress; alive to the sufferings of the poor. He was attentive to the company, or to the discourse.—18. Noting obligation; as, duty to God, and to our parents.—19. Noting enmity; as, a dislike to spirituous liquors. — 20. Toward; as, she stretched her arms to heaven.—21. Noting effect or end. The prince was flattered to his ruin. He engaged in a war to his cost. Violent factions exist to the prejudice of the state.

Numbers were crowded to death. Clarendon.

22. To, as a sign of the infinitive, precedes the radical verb. Sometimes it is used instead of the ancient form, for to, noting purpose. David in his lifetime intended to build a temple. The legislature assembles annually to make and amend laws. The court will sit in February to try some important causes.—23. It precedes the radical verb after adjectives, noting the object; as, ready to go: prompt to obey; quick to hear, but slow to censure — 24. It precedes the radical verb, noting the object.

The delay of our hopes teaches us to mortify our desires. Smallridge.

25. It precedes the radical verb, noting consequence.

I have done my utmost to lead my life so pleasantly as to forget my misfortunes. Pope

26. It notes extent, degree, or end. He languishes to death, even to death. The water rises to the height of twenty feet. The line extends from one end to the other.—27. After the substantive verb, and with the radical verb, it denotes futurity. The construction, we are to meet at ten o'clock, every man at death is to receive the reward of his deeds, is a particular form of expressing future time.—28. After have it denotes duty or necessity. I have a debt to pay on Saturday.—29. To-day, to-night, to-morrow, are peculiar phrases derived from our ancestors. To in the two first, has the sense or force of this; this day, this night. In the last, it is equivalent to in or on; in or on the morrow. The words may be considered as compounds, to-day, to-night, to-morrow, and usually as adverbs. But sometimes they are used as nouns; as, to-day is ours.—To and fro, backward and forward. In this phrase, to is adverbial.—To the face, in presence of; not in the absence of.

I withstood him face to face; Gal. ii.

To-morrow, to-morrow, and to-morrow;
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day. Shak.

Note. In the foregoing explanation of to, it is to be considered that the definition given is not always the sense of to by itself, but the sense rather of the word preceding it, or connected with it, or of to in connection with other words. In general, to is used in the sense of moving toward a place, or toward an object, or it expresses direction toward a place, end, object, or purpose. To is often used adverbially to modify the sense of verbs; as, to come to; to heave to. The sense of such phrases is explained under the verbs respectively. In popular phrases like the following, "I will not come; you shall to, or too," a genuine Saxon phrase, to denotes moreover, besides, L. insuper.

TOAD, n. [Sax. tade, tadige.] A paddock; the common name of the batrachian reptiles of the genus Bufo. Toads have a thick bulky body covered with warts or papillæ; a thick lump behind the ears, pierced with pores from which issues a milky and fetid fluid. They have no teeth; the hind feet are but slightly elongated. They leap badly, and generally avoid the water. They are hideous and disgusting animals, whose bite, saliva, &c., were formerly considered poisonous, but are now ascertained to be harmless. They have been known to remain whole years in walls, hollow trees, in the earth, and even, it is said, in the heart of a stone. Toads are found in all quarters of the world. The common toad and green toad inhabit not only Europe, but also Asia and Africa. Toads are most abundant in America. There are now several subgenera; such as Rhinellus, Otilophis, Pipa, &c.

TOAD-EATER, n. A vulgar name given to a fawning, obsequious parasite; a mean sycophant. [This name is said to have been first given to a gluttonous parasite, famous for his indiscriminate enjoyment and praise of all viands whatever set before him. To test his powers of stomach and complaisance, one of his patrons had a toad cooked and set before him, which he both ate and praised in his usual way.]

TOAD-FISH, n. [toad and fish.] A cartilaginous fish of the genus Lophius, the L. europæus, or piscatorius; called also fishing-frog, angler, sea-devil, and wide-gab. [See ANGLER, FISHING-FROG, &c.]

TOAD-FLAX, n. [toad and flax.] The English name of various plants of the genus Linaria. The common toad-flax is the L. vulgaris, which in its general habit is not unlike flax. The flowers are of a bright yellow, the corolla labiate, and provided with a long spur. It grows in hedges, and at the edges of fields. [See LINARIA.]

TOAST-MASTER, n. An officer appointed to announce toasts at great public banquets.

TOBACCO, n. [perhaps from Tabaco, a province of Yucatan, in Spanish America, where it was first found by the Spaniards. But this account of its origin is very doubtful. Las Casas says, that in the first voyage of Columbus, the Spaniards saw in Cuba many persons smoking dry herbs or leaves rolled up in tubes called tabacos. Charlevoix, in his History of St. Dominique, says that the instrument used in smoking was called tabaco.] A plant, a native of America, of the genus Nicotiana, the N. tabacum, the dried leaves of which are much used for smoking and chewing, and in snuff. As a medicine, it is narcotic, emetic, and cathartic; and it possesses two additional powers at least, if not more. Tobacco has a strong disagreeable smell, and an acrid taste. When first used it sometimes occasions vomiting, &c., but the practice of using it in any form soon conquers distaste, and forms a relish for it that is strong and almost unconquerable. There are many other species of Nicotiana, most of which yield tobacco for smoking, and many of these are cultivated in the gardens of Europe. Tobacco is now very extensively cultivated on the European continent, in the Levant, and in India, but the tobacco of the United States is still very generally admitted to be superior to most others. The tobacco plants belong to the nat. order Solanaceæ. [See NICOTIANA.]

Tobacco (Nicotiana tabacum).

TOBAC'CO-BOX, } n. A recep-
TOBAC'CO-POUCH, } tacle for holding tobacco.

TODDA'LIA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Rutaceæ. The species, which are few in number, consist of moderate-sized shrubs, with alternate trifoliate leaves full of pellucid dots; the flowers in axillary or terminal racemes or panicles. They inhabit the hot parts of India, the Mauritius, and Brazil. The bark and root of T. aculeata, which grows at the base of the Himalayan mountains, are said to be used as a cure for the remittent fever of jungly situations. Many of the allied species are possessed of bitter and aromatic properties.

TOD'DLE, v. i. To saunter about feebly; to walk with short steps in a tottering way, as a child or an old man. [Scotch, also an obsol. Eng. word.]

TOD'DY, or PALM WINE, n. A name given to the juice which flows from the wounded spathes of many palms, such as cocoa-nut, taliput palm, Raphia vinifera, and Mauritia vinifera. When newly drawn the juice is sweet, and has a peculiar flavour, operating in general as a laxative. It is much in demand as a beverage in the neighbourhood of villages in India, especially where European troops are stationed. When it has undergone fermentation, it is highly intoxicating. The fermented juice distilled with some other ingredients forms the spirituous liquor called arrack, or rack.—2. A mixture of spirit and water sweetened; as, whisky toddy; rum toddy, &c. Toddy differs from grog in having a less proportion of spirit, and in being sweetened. Grog is made with cold water, but toddy always with boiling water.

TODIRAM'PHUS, n. A genus of kingfishers, found in the islands of the South Seas.

TODO', n. Ado; bustle; hurry. [Colloq.]

TO'DY, n. The popular name of an insectivorous genus of passerine birds of America, somewhat resembling the king-fishers. They are small birds, living upon insects which they catch in the mud, or in the water. There is only one determined species, the Todus viridis, or green tody.

TOE, n. [Sax. ta; G. zehe; Sw. tå; Dan. taae; Fr. doigt du pied; L. digitus. Toe is contracted from tog, the primary word on which L. digitus is formed, coinciding with dug, and signifying a shoot.] 1. One of the small members which form the extremity of the foot, corresponding to a finger on the hand. The toes in their form and structure resemble the fingers, but are shorter.—2. The fore part of the hoof of a horse, and of other hoofed animals.—3. The member of a beast's foot corresponding to the toe in man.

TOKĀY, n A rich highly prized wine produced at Tokay in Upper Hungary, made of white grapes. It is distinguished from other wines by its aromatic taste. It is not good till it is about three years old, and it continues to improve as long as it is kept. This wine is produced from grapes grown in the vineyards on the side of a low chain of hills, never more than about 700 feet above the sea level, named the Hegyalla. The total annual production is estimated at 200,000 to 240,000 eimer of 12 gallons each. Much wine, the produce of other localities in Hungary, is sold as Tokay.

TOKEN, n. (to'kn.) [Sax. tacn, tacen; Goth. taikns; Sw. teckn; G zeichen. This may be the same word as the L. signum, dialectically varied, or from the same radix; Gr. δείκνυμι.] 1. A sign; something intended to represent or indicate another thing or an event. Thus the rainbow is a token of God's covenant established with Noah. The blood of the paschal lamb, sprinkled on the doors of the Hebrews, was a token to the destroying angel of God's will that he should pass by those houses; Gen. ix.; Exod. xii.

Show me a token for good; Ps. lxxxvi.

2. A mark; indication; symptom. In pestilential diseases, tokens are livid spots upon the body, which indicate the approach of death.

They have not the least token or show of the arts and industry of China. Heylin.

TOLED,† pp. Drawn; allured; induced to follow.

TOLE'DO, } n. A sword-TOLE'DO-BLADE, } blade of the finest temper, so named from Toledo in Spain, which, during the 15th and 16th centuries, was famous for manufacturing sword-blades of a superior temper.

You sold me a rapier; you told me it was a toledo B. Jonson.

Tables of Toledo, a set of astronomical tables, calculated for the meridian of Toledo, about the year 1080, by a Moor of the name of Arzachel They are found to be very inaccurate.

TOL'ERABLE, a. [Fr. from L. tolerabilis. See TOLERATE.] 1. That may be borne or endured; supportable, either physically or mentally. The cold in Canada is severe, but tolerable The insults and indignities of our enemies are not tolerable.

It shall be more tolerable for the land of Sodom and Gomorrah in the day of judgment, than for that city; Matth. x.

2. Moderately good or agreeable; not contemptible; not very excellent or pleasing, but such as can be borne or received without disgust, resentment, or opposition; as, a tolerable translation; a tolerable entertainment; a tolerable administration.

TOL'ERABLENESS, n. The state of being tolerable.

TOL'ERABLY, adv. Supportably; in a manner to be endured.—2. Moderately well; passably; not perfectly; as, a constitution tolerably firm. The advocate speaks tolerably well.

TOL'ERANCE, n. [L. tolerantia, from tolero, to bear.] The power or capacity of enduring; or the act of enduring.

Diogenes one frosty morning came to the market-place shaking, to show his tolerance. [Little used.] Bacon.

2. A feeling or habit which disposes a person to be patient and indulgent towards those whose opinions or practices differ from his own, provided such opinions are sincerely maintained, and such practices spring from upright motives. To reprobate and denounce others, merely because their actions, honestly meant, and opinions, sincerely maintained, differ from our own, is intolerance.

TOL'ERANT, a. Enduring; indulgent; favouring toleration.

TOL'ERATE, v. t. [Fr. tolerer; L. tolero, from tollo, to lift; Ch. דלל, deal, to lift or raise.] To suffer to be or to be done without prohibition or hinderance; to allow or permit negatively, by not preventing; not to restrain; as, to tolerate opinions or practices. The Protestant religion is tolerated in France, and the Romish in Great Britain.

Crying should not be tolerated in children. Locke.

The law of love tolerates no vice, and patronizes every virtue. G. Spring.

TOL'ERATED, pp. Suffered; allowed; not prohibited or restrained.

TOL'ERATING, ppr. Enduring; suffering to be or to be done; allowing; not restraining.

TOLERA'TION, n. [L. toleratio.] The act of tolerating; the allowance of that which is not wholly approved; appropriately, the allowance of religious opinions and modes of worship in a state, when contrary to or different from those of the established church or belief. Toleration implies a right in the sovereign to control men in their opinions and worship, or it implies the actual exercise of power in such control. Every person is as much entitled to liberty of opinion on religious subjects as on any other, and has a right to adopt any mode of worship, and hold any doctrines which are not inconsistent with the peace and safety of the state, and the moral welfare of its members. The civil magistrate has a right to check the propagation of opinions and doctrines, which tend only to sap the foundations of morality, and to disturb the peace of society; but he has no right to restrain men from publicly professing any system of faith, which comprehends the being and providence of God, the great laws of morality, and a future state of rewards and punishments. There are two kinds of toleration, as laid down by Paley: 1. The allowing to dissenters the unmolested profession and exercise of their religion, but with an exclusion from offices of trust and emolument in the state; this is called a partial toleration. 2. The admitting dissenters, without distinction, to all the civil privileges and capacities of other citizens; this is called a complete toleration. Where no power exists or none is assumed to establish a creed and a mode of worship, there can be no toleration, in the strict sense of the word, for one religious denomination has as good a right as another to the free enjoyment of its creed and worship.—2. In an eccles. sense, the allowance which the church grants to its members to differ in certain opinions, not considered fundamental.—Toleration act, an act passed in the reign of William and Mary, in favour of dissenters and Roman catholics.

TŌLING,† ppr. Drawing away; inducing to follow.

TŌLL, n. [Sax. toll; D. tol; G. zoll; W. toll, a fraction, a toll; toli and toliaw, to curtail, to diminish, to take away, to spare or save, to deal out, from tawl, a throw, a casting off, a separation, a cutting off; tolli, from toll, to subtract, to take toll; Gr. τέλος, toll, custom, and end, exit, from cutting off; Fr. tailler, to cut off, [see TAIL;] Ir. deilim, to separate; dail, a share, Eng. dole; dialum, to sell, to exchange, to pay toll. This is from the root of deal. See DEAL, Sax. bedælan.] 1. A tax paid, or duty imposed, for some liberty or privilege. Particularly a payment directed to be made to the proprietors of canals and railways, the trustees of turnpike roads or bridges, &c., in respect of the passage of passengers, or the conveyance of cattle and goods. The right whether to take toll, or to be exempt from its payment, rests upon prescriptive usage or royal grant.—2. A fixed sum payable to the owner of a fair or market, or to the corporation of a town, from the buyer of tollable articles sold there. Also, the compensation paid for the use of the soil by those who erect stalls in the fair or market, or for the liberty of picking holes for the purpose of temporary erections; but the former payment is more properly called stallage, and the latter picage.—3 A portion of grain taken by a miller as a compensation for grinding. Also, the portion of mineral which the owner of the soil is entitled by custom or agreement to take, without paying for it, out of the quantity brought to the surface; or, as it is technically called, to grass.—Toll traverse, the toll taken by a person for beasts or goods passing across his ground.—Toll thorough, the toll taken by a town for persons, cattle, or goods going through it, or over a bridge or ferry maintained at its cost. —Port tolls, tolls claimed by the owner or owners of a port, in respect of goods shipped or landed there. Such tolls are more commonly called port-dues.—Turn toll, a toll in some cases demandable for beasts which are driven to the market, and return unsold.

TŌLL, v. i. To pay toll or tallage.—2. To take toll, as by a miller.

TŌLL, v. t. To take from, as a part of a general contribution or tax; to exact, as a tribute.

TŌLL, v. i. [W. tol, tolo, a loud sound, a din; Pers. talidan, to sound, to ring. We see that W. tawl, supra, is a throw or cast, a driving, and this is the radical sense of sound.] To sound or ring, as a bell, with strokes uniformly repeated at intervals, as at funerals, or in calling assemblies, or to announce the death of a person.

Now sink in sorrows with a tolling bell Pope.

TŌLL, v. t. [supra.] To cause a bell to sound with strokes slowly and uniformly repeated, as for summoning public bodies or religious congregations to their meetings, or for announcing the death of a person, or to give solemnity to a funeral.

TŌLL-GATE, n. A gate where toll is taken.

TŌLL-GATHERER, n. The man who takes toll.

TŌLL-HOP, n. In English law, a dish to take toll in.

TŌLL-HOUSE, n. A house or shed placed by a road near a toll-gate, or at the end of a toll-bridge, or by a canal, where the man who takes the toll remains.

TŌLLING, ppr. Causing to sound in a slow grave manner.—2. Taking away; removing.—3. Sounding, as a bell.

TŌLL′-MAN, n. A toll-gatherer.

TŌL′MEN, or DŌL′MEN, n. [Celtic dol, table, and men, stone.] A species of druidical monument, composed of a large stone placed horizontally upon other stones, fixed vertically in the earth, about three or four feet high, and not fewer in number than three, nor more than fifteen. In form it is generally a parallelogram. The tolmen is also at times composed only of Constantine Tolmen, Cornwall.

Consisting of a vast stone 33 feet long, 14½ deep, and 18¾ across. This stone is calculated to weigh 750 tons, and is poised on the points of two natural rocks.

a large stone, one end resting on the ground, and the other end supported by a stone placed under it. The large stone or table has generally a hole pierced through. Some have supposed the tolmen to be a kind of druidal oracle, the hole through the stone being an acoustic contrivance, by means of which the priests could return oracular answers. Others suppose the tolmens to have been altars on which victims were sacrificed; the hole being used as a means of dispersing the blood of the victim on those who wished such bloody baptism. A third opinion is, that they indicate, or rather constitute, places of sepulture. They are also called cromlechs.

TŌL′SEY,† n. A toll-booth; a place where port-tolls were set or assessed, and where merchants usually assembled, and commercial courts were held, as at the modern exchange.

TŌLT, n. [L. tollit, tollo.] In English courts, the precept of a sheriff, by which a writ of right is removed from the court baron into the county court.

TONDI'NO, n. [It.] In arch., the same as Astragal,—which see.

TONE, n. [Fr. ton; Sp tono; Sw and G. ton; L. tonus; Gr. τονος, sound; L. tono, Gr. τονοω, to sound, from the root of τεινω, to strain or stretch. The L. sonus is probably the same word in a different dialect.] 1. Sound, or a modification of sound; any impulse or vibration of the air which is perceptible by the ear; as, a low tone, high tone, or loud tone; a grave tone; an acute tone; a sweet tone; a harsh tone.—2. In music, a property of sound by which it comes under the relation of grave or acute; or it is the gravity or acuteness which any sound has, arising from the number of vibrations made by the sonorous body producing it, in a given time. Grave tones are produced by slow vibrations in the sonorous body, and acute tones by quick vibrations. Each particular sound in our musical system is called a tone.—3 Accent; or rather, a particular inflection of the voice, adapted to express emotion or passion; a rhetorical sense of the word Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes. Dryden.

4. A whining sound, a whine; a kind of mournful strain of voice; as, children often read with a tone.—5. An affected sound in speaking.—6. In music, an interval of sound; as, the difference between the diapente and diatessaron, is a tone. Of tones there are two kinds, major and minor. The tone major is in the ratio of 8 to 9, which results from the difference between the fourth and fifth. The tone minor is as 9 to 10, resulting from the difference between the minor third and the fourth.—7. The tone of an instrument, is its peculiar sound with regard to softness, richness, fulness, evenness, and the like.—8. In med., that state of a body, in which the animal functions are healthy and performed with due vigour. Tone, in its primary signification, is tension, and tension is the primary signification of strength. Hence its application to the natural healthy state of animal organs. Tone, therefore, in medicine, is the strength and activity of the organs, from which proceed healthy functions So we say, the body is in a sound state, the health is sound or firm—9. In painting, the harmonious relation of the colours of a picture in light and shade. The term is often used to qualify, or as synonymous with, depth, richness, and splendour, in pictures. It has also been more recently used to denote the characteristic expression of a picture as distinguished by its colour.

TONE, v. t. To utter in an affected tone —2. To tune. [See TUNE.] In painting, to tone down a picture, is to soften the colouring, so that a subdued harmony of tint may prevail, and all undue glare be avoided.

TONGUE-TIE, v. t. [tongue and tie.] To deprive of speech or the power of speech, or of distinct articulation.

TONGUE-TI'ED, a. Destitute of the power of distinct articulation; having an impediment in the speech.—2. Unable to speak freely, from whatever cause.

Love and tongue-tied simplicity. Shak.

TON'IC, a. [from Gr. τονος, L. tonus. See TONE.] 1. Literally, increasing tension; hence, increasing strength, as tonic power.—2. In med., increasing strength, or the tone of the animal system; obviating the effects of debility, and restoring healthy functions. —3. Relating to tones or sounds.—4.† Extended.—Tonic spasm, in med., is a steady and continuous spastic contraction enduring for a comparatively long time. It is opposed to a chronic spasm, in which the muscular fibres contract and relax alternately in very quick succession, producing the appearance of agitation. In tonic spasms, however, there is always alternate contraction and relaxation. The spasms of tetanus are tonic.

TON'IC, n A medicine that increases the strength and gives vigour of action to the system. Such are vegetable bitters, stimulants, astringents, &c.—2. In music, the key-note or principal sound upon which all regular melodies depend. Its octaves, both above and below, are called by the same name. [Fr. tonique.]—3. In music, a certain degree of tension, or the sound produced by a vocal string in a given degree of tension.

TONIC'ITY, n. The elasticity of living parts.

TO-NIGHT, n. [to and night.] The present night, or the night after the present day.

TON'KIN. See TONQUIN.

TON'NAGE, n. [from ton.] The weight of goods carried in a boat or ship.—2. The cubical content or burthen of a ship in tons; or the amount of weight which she may carry. Properly speaking, the tonnage of a ship is an expression for the interior capacity by the number of tons of sea water which it could contain; hence, if the interior capacity were found in cubic feet, and this divided by 35 (the number of cubic feet of sea-water which are equal in weight to one ton), the quotient would be the tonnage. The tonnage, however, is frequently understood to express the capacity, by the number of tons of sea-water which might be contained between a horizontal plane passing through the ship when she floats in still water, with only her equipments and stores on board, and a horizontal plane passing through the ship when laden; that is, between what are called the light-water and load-water planes; the contents of that part of the ship expressed in cubic feet being divided by 35, as in the former case. The result evidently gives the weight of the ship's cargo merely. As, however, the determination of the tonnage of ships, according to either of the above cases, is very laborious and difficult in practice, several empirical rules have been laid down, by which an approximate value of the tonnage may be more easily found. Tonnage is the only term used to give an idea of the size of merchant ships, which are invariably spoken of according to their tonnage, or as being ships of 100, 500, or 1000 tons. Not only are all dues and customs levied according to the tonnage, but ships are also built, and bought and sold for a certain price per ton of their admeasurement. Sometimes the tonnage of goods and stores is taken by weight and not by measurement.—3. A duty or impost on ships, formerly estimated at so much per ton of freight, but now proportioned to the registered size of the vessels.—Tonnage and Poundage. [See POUNDAGE.]

TON'QUIN BEAN, } n. The fruit of TON'KA BEAN, } the Dipterix odorata or Coumarouna odorata, a shrubby plant of Guiana. The fruit is an oblong dry fibrous drupe, containing a single seed. The odour of the kernel is extremely agreeable. It is used in perfumery. [See COUMARINE, COUMAROUNA ODORATA.]

TON'SIL, n [L. tonsillæ. This word seems to be formed from tonsus, tondeo, to clip.] In anat., the tonsils are two oblong suboval glands on each side of the throat or fauces. The tonsils are called also from their shape, amygdalæ, and in popular language, almonds. Their use is to secrete a mucous humour for lubricating the passages; and they have several excretory ducts opening into the mouth.

TON'SILE, a. That may be clipped.

TONSILLI'TIS, n. Inflammation of the tonsils; quinsy; malignant sore throat.

TON'SOR, n. [L.] A barber; one that shaves. [Not English.]

TONSO'RIAL, a. Pertaining to a barber, or to shaving. [Rarely used.]

TON'SURE, n. [Fr. from L. tonsura, from tonsus, shaved; tondeo, to clip or shave.] 1. The act of clipping the hair, or of shaving the head; or the state of being shorn. — 2. In the Romish church, tonsure is the first ceremony used for devoting a person to the service of God and the church; the first degree of the clericate, given by a bishop, who with scissors cuts off a part of the candidate's hair, with prayers and benedictions. Hence, tonsure is used to denote entrance or admission into holy orders.—3. In the Romish church, the corona or crown, a distinguishing mark of the clergy, formed by clipping away the hair from a circular space on the back of the head. This crown is preserved by repeated trimming; and the practice is to enlarge it as the wearer rises in ecclesiastical station and dignity.

TONTI'NE, n. [Fr. tontine; said to be from its inventor, Tonti, an Italian.] An annuity or survivorship; or a loan raised on life annuities, with the benefit of survivorship. Thus, an annuity is shared among a number, on the principle that the share of each, at his death, is enjoyed by the survivors, until at last the whole goes to the last survivor, or to the last two or three, according to the terms on which the money is advanced.

TORPE'DO, n. [L. from torpeo, to be numb.] 1. The cramp fish or electric ray. A genus of fishes of the Ray family (Raiidæ), distinguished by their having the tail short and moderately thick, and the disk of the body nearly circular, the anterior margin being formed by two produced portions from the head, which, inclining sideways, join the pectorals. There are several species, which are commonly confounded with each other. These fishes are usually taken in forty fathoms water, on the coasts of France and England, and in the Mediterranean. A touch of them occasions a numbness in the limb, accompanied with an indescribable and painful sensation, and is really an electric shock. The electrical apparatus in the Torpedo, consists of small membranous tubes, which occupy the space between the head, the pectoral fins, and the branchiæ. They are disposed like a honey comb, and divided by horizontal partitions into small cells, which are filled with a mucous substance, the whole being in many respects analogous to the galvanic pile. The shocks given by the Torpedo are very severe, and are supposed to be used by the animal, both as a means of defence and of disabling its prey. When dead, they lose the power of producing this sensation.—2. A machine invented by Robert Fulton, an American, for destroying ships, by blowing them up. The principal part of the apparatus consisted of a copper box or case, enclosing a certain quantity of gunpowder and combustible matter. These cases were to be applied under the keels of the vessels to be destroyed by means of a kind of submarine boat. The inventor, who was encouraged in his scheme by Bonaparte, attempted, by means of his infernal machine, to blow up a British man-of-war in 1801, but providentially failed, owing to the vessel suddenly changing her position.

TOR'PENT, a. [L. torpens, torpeo.] Benumbed; torpid; having no motion or activity; incapable of motion.

A comprehensive expedient to assist the frail and torpent memory through so multifarious an employment. Evelyn.

TOR'PENT, n. In med., that which diminishes the exertion of the irritative motions.

TORPES'CENCE, n. A state of insensibility; torpidness; numbness; stupidity.

TORPES'CENT, a. [L. torpescens.] Becoming torpid or numb, or incapable of motion.

Their torpescent soul clenches their coin. Shenstone.

TOR'PID, a. [L. torpidus, torpeo; perhaps W. torp, a lump.] 1. Having lost motion or the power of exertion and feeling; numb; as, a torpid limb.

Without heat all things would be torpid. Ray.

2. Dull; stupid; sluggish; inactive. The mind as well as the body becomes torpid by indolence. Impenitent sinners remain in a state of torpid security.

TORPID'ITY, n. Torpidness.

TOR'PIDNESS, TOR'PITUDE, n. The state of being torpid; numbness. Torpidness may amount to total insensibility or loss of sensation.—2. Dullness; inactivity; sluggishness; stupidity.

TOR'PIFIED, pp. Rendered torpid.

TOR'PIFY, v. t. To make torpid.

TOR'PIFYING, ppr. Rendering torpid.

TOR'POR, n. [L.] Numbness; inactivity; loss of motion, or of the power of motion. Torpor may amount to a total loss of sensation, or complete insensibility. It may however be applied to the state of a living body which has not lost all power of feeling and motion.—2. Dulness; laziness; sluggishness; stupidity.

TORPORIF'IC, a. [L. torpor and facio.] Tending to produce torpor.

TOR'QUED, pp. [L. torqueo, to wreathe, to twist.] In her., wreathed, said of a dolphin haurient, which forms a figure nearly resembling the letter S. The term torgant or turgant, is used to signify the same thing.

Torqued.

TOR'QUES, n. [L. Brit. torch or dorch.] In archæology, a personal ornament of the Celtic period. It was used by the ancient Britons, and consisted of a chain or collar, formed of a number of small metal ringlets, interlaced with each other, and worn round the neck as a symbol of rank and command.

Torques, with manner of wearing it, from the sculptures on the monument of Vigna Amendola.

TORREFAC'TION, n. [Fr. from L. torrefacio; torridus and facio.] 1. The operation of drying by a fire.—2. In metallurgy, the operation of roasting ores.—3. In phar., the drying or roasting of drugs on a metalline plate, placed over or before coals of fire, till they become friable to the fingers, or till some other desired effect is produced.

TOR'REFIED, pp. Dried; roasted; scorched. Torrefied earth, in agriculture, is that which has undergone the action of fire.

TOR'REFY, v. t. [L. torrefacio; L. torridus, torreo, and facio; Fr. torréfier.] 1. To dry by a fire.—2. In metallurgy, to roast or scorch, as metallic ores.—3. In phar., to dry or parch, as drugs, on a metalline plate till they are friable, or are reduced to any state desired.

TOR'REFYING, ppr. Drying by a fire; roasting; parching.

TOR'RENT, n. [L. torrens. This is the participle of torreo, to parch. But the sense of the word torrent, allies it to the W. tori, to break, and the Eng. tear. They are all of one family, denoting violent action.] 1. A violent rushing stream of water falling suddenly from mountains, where there have been great rains, or an extraordinary melting of snow; a violent rushing stream of any other fluid; a stream suddenly raised and running rapidly, as down a precipice; as, a torrent of lava.—2. A violent or rapid stream; a strong current; as, a torrent of vices and follies; a torrent of corruption.

Erasmus, that great injur'd name,
Stemm'd the wild torrent of a barb'rous age. Pope.

TOR'RENT, a. Rolling or rushing in a rapid stream; as, waves of torrent fire.

TORRICEL'LIAN, a. Pertaining to Torricelli, an Italian philosopher and mathematician, who, in 1643, discovered the true principle on which the barometer is constructed, by means of an experiment called from him the Torricellian experiment. This experiment consisted in filling with mercury a glass tube closed at one end, and then inverting it, and bringing the open end under the surface of mercury in a vessel; when the column of mercury in the tube was observed to descend, till it stood at a height equal to about 29½ inches above the level of the mercury in the vessel, leaving what is considered to be a perfect vacuum at the top, between the upper extremity of the column and that of the tube. This experiment led to the discovery that the column of mercury in the tube is supported by the pressure of the atmosphere, acting on the surface of the mercury in the vessel, and that this column is an exact counterbalance to the atmospheric pressure. [See BAROMETER.]—Torricellian tube is a glass tube thirty or more inches in length, open at one end, and hermetically sealed at the other, such as is used in the barometer.—Torricellian vacuum, a vacuum produced by filling a barometer tube with mercury, as in the Torricellian experiment; the vacuum above the mercurial column in the barometer.

TOR'RID, a. [L. torridus, from torreo, to roast.] 1. Parched; dried with heat; as, a torrid plain or desert.—2. Violently hot; burning or parching; as, a torrid heat.—Torrid zone, in geography, that space or broad belt of the earth included between the tropics, over which the sun is vertical at some period twice every year, and where the heat is always great.

TOR'RIDNESS, n. The state of being very hot or parched.

TORSE, n. [Fr. torse; L. tortus.] In her., a wreath.

TOR'SEL, n. [supra.] Any thing in a twisted form.—2. In arch., torsels are the pieces of timber lying under the mantle-tree. They are otherwise called tassels.

TOR'SION, n. [L. torsio, from torqueo, to twist.] The act of turning or twisting.—2. In mech., the twisting or wrenching of a body by the exertion of a lateral force. The resistance which cylinders and prisms formed of different substances oppose to torsion, furnishes one of the usual methods of determining the strength of materials. Such machines as capstans and windlasses, also axles which revolve with their wheels, are, when in action, subject to be twisted, or undergo the strain of torsion. If a slender rod of metal be suspended vertically, so as to be fixed at the point of suspension, and then twisted through a certain angle, it will, when the twisting force ceases to act, untwist itself, or return in the opposite direction with a greater or less force or velocity until it come to rest in its original position. The limits of torsion within which the body will return to its original state, depend upon its elasticity; and the force with which it tends to recover its natural state is called elasticity of torsion. This force is always proportional to the angle through which the body has been twisted. If a body is twisted so as to exceed the limit of its elasticity, its particles will either be wrenched asunder, or it will take a set, and will not return to its original position on the withdrawal of the twisting force. The word torsion is also used to signify that force with which a thread or slender wire returns to a state of rest when it has been twisted by being turned round on its axis; the thread or wire, which is suspended vertically, being attached at the upper extremity to some fixed object, and having at its lower extremity a weight with a horizontal index, or a stirrup, which is to carry a needle or bar in a horizontal position.—Torsion balance, or Balance of torsion. If a piece of very fine wire, silk, or spun glass, be suspended in the manner above stated, and then twisted, it will, when released, begin to untwist itself, and by the momentum acquired in the act of untwisting, will twist in the opposite direction to a greater or less extent, according to the amount of twisting to which it had been subjected. It will then begin to return; and thus by a series of oscillations continually diminishing in extent, it will at length gradually settle in its original position. Now, if a needle or an index be attached to the lower extremity of the suspended wire or thread, and a graduated circle placed immediately beneath the index in a horizontal position, so that the centre of the circle may be directly below the point of suspension of the index, the apparatus thus constructed will form the torsion balance. This balance has been employed to measure certain forces too minute to be estimated by the ordinary methods, and by means of it Coulomb was enabled to determine, by direct experiment, the laws which govern the variation of magnetic and electric forces. By means of the same instrument, Cavendish afterward detected and measured the attraction of gravitation existing between balls of lead. To measure small forces, such as those of electricity, magnetism, &c., with the torsion balance, they are made to act upon one extremity of the index, and thus cause it to turn round, and when the force is in equilibrio with the tendency of the suspended wire to untwist, the angle which the index makes with its original position, which is called the angle of torsion, and which is measured by the graduated circle, is the measure of the force employed. In making experiments with the torsion balance, the length of the suspended wire, its diameter, and the weights attached to its lower extremity, must be taken into account. When the balance is adapted to measure electric forces, it is called the torsion electrometer; when it is adapted to measure galvanic forces, it is called the torsion galvanometer; and, when applied to measure magnetic forces, it receives the name of the torsion magnetometer.

TORSK, TUSK, n. A northern species of malacopterygious fish of the cod tribe, Brosmius vulgaris. It is found in great quantities among the Orkney and Shetland islands, where it constitutes a very considerable article of trade. It varies from 18 to 30 inches in length.

TOR'SO, n. [It.] In sculp., the trunk of a statue, deprived of its head and limbs; as, the torso of Hercules.

TORT, n. [Fr. from L. tortus, twisted, from torqueo. The primary sense is to turn or strain, hence to twist.] 1. In law, any wrong or injury. Torts are injuries done to the person or property of another, as trespass, assault and battery, defamation, and the like.—2. Mischief; calamity. [Except in the legal sense above explained, it is obsolete.]

TOR'TEAU, n. plur. Torteaux. In her., a red roundel.

TORT'ILE, a. [L. tortilis.] Twisted; wreathed; coiled. In bot., coiled like a rope; as, a tortile awn.

TOR'TION,† n. [L. tortus.] Torment; pain.

TOR'TIOUS, a. [from tort.] Injurious; done by wrong.—2. In law, implying tort, or injury, for which the law gives damages.

TOR'TIOUSLY, adv. In Eng. law, injuriously.

TORT'IVE, a. [L. tortus.] Twisted; wreathed.

TORT'NESS, n. Tension of a rope when stretched.

TORTOISE, n. (tor'tis.) [from L. tortus, twisted.] 1. An animal of the order Testudinata, or Chelonia, covered with a shell or crust. The tortoises form a numerous and highly interesting order (Testudinata) of reptiles. They are also called Chelonians from χελώνη (Chelone), the Greek name for a tortoise, and are readily distinguished by the double shield in which their body is enclosed, whether they are terrestrial, fresh water, or marine. They were all comprised by Linn. under his genus Testudo, but modern naturalists have subdivided them chiefly according to the forms and teguments of their shell, and their feet. According to some of the modern arrangements, the land tortoises form the genus Testudo; the fresh-water tortoises, the genus Emys; and the sea tortoises, the genus Chelonia. Those Chelonians which resemble fresh-water tortoises, but are distinguished from them by their mouth, which opens cross-wise, and is unarmed with the horny beak common to the former, form the genus Chelys, while the soft shelled tortoises form the genus Trionyx.—2. In the milit. art, a defence used by the ancients, formed by the troops arranging themselves in close order and placing their bucklers over their heads, making a cover resembling a tortoise-shell.

Common or Greek Tortoise (Testudo Græca).

TOR'TOISE-SHELL, n. [tortoise and shell.] The shell or rather scales of the Testudo imbricata, Linn., or the Chelonia imbricata of modern zoologists, a species of tortoise which inhabits tropical seas, otherwise known by the name of Hawk's bill turtle. The Hawk's-bill Turtle (Chelonia imbricata).

Hawk's-bill Turtle, under side.

horny scales or plates which form the covering of this animal, under the name of tortoise-shell, are extensively used in the manufacture of combs, snuff-boxes, &c., and in inlaying and other ornamental work. The goodness of tortoise-shell depends mainly on the thickness and size of the scales, and in a smaller degree upon the clearness and brilliancy of the colours. The best tortoise-shell is that of the Indian archipelago.

TORT'UOSE, TORT'UOUS, a. [L. tortuosus; Fr. tortueux.] 1. Twisted; wreathed; winding; as, a tortuous train; a tortuous leaf or corol, in bot.—2. Tortuose stem, one that is bent in the manner of a flexuose stem, but less angularly; as in Cakile maritima.—3. Tortious. [See TORTIOUS.].

TORTUOS'ITY, n. [from tortuous; The state of being twisted or wreathed; wreath; flexure.

TORT'UOUSLY, adv. In a winding manner.

TORT'UOUSNESS, n. The state of being twisted.

TORT'URE, n. [Fr. torture; It. and Sp. tortura; from L. tortus, torqueo, to twist; W. torçi; probably from the root of turn. See TOUR.]—1. Extreme pain; anguish of body or mind; pang; agony; torment.

Ghastly spasm or racking torture. Milton.

2. Severe pain inflicted judicially, either as a punishment for a crime, or for the purpose of extorting a confession from an accused person. Torture may be and is inflicted in a variety of ways, as by water or by fire, or by the boot or thumbkin. But the most usual mode is by the rack or wheel. Torture was virtually abolished in England in 1640, and in Scotland in the 7th year of Queen Anne.

TORT'URE, v. t. To pain to extremity; to torment.—2. To punish with torture; to put to the rack; as, to torture an accused person.—3. To vex; to harass.—4.† To keep on the stretch, as a bow.

TORT'URED, pp. Tormented; stretched on the wheel; harassed.

TORT'URER, n. One who tortures; a tormenter.

TORT'URING, ppr. Tormenting; stretching on the rack; vexing.

TORT'URINGLY, adv. So as to torture or torment.

TORT'UROUS,† a. Tormenting.

TOR'ULOSE, TORULOUS, a. In bot., cylindrical, with several swells and contractions.

TO'RUS, n. [L. a rope.] In arch., a large moulding used in the bases of columns.

Torus.

Its section is semi-circular, and it differs from the astragal only in size, the astragal being much smaller. It is sometimes written Tore.—2. In bot., the receptacle or part of the flower on which the carpels are seated.

TORV'ITY, n. [L. torvitas ; from twisting, supra.] Sourness or severity of countenance.

TORV'OUS, a. [L. torvus, from the root of torqueo, to twist.] Sour of aspect; stern; of a severe countenance.

TO'RY, n. [said to be an Irish word, and meaning originally a robber; the Irish robbers of former days, when they called to a party to stand and deliver, usually crying, Tora, tora! Give, give!] The name given to an adherent to the ancient constitution of England and to the apostolical hierarchy. One who, in political principles, always leans to church and state; who supports the regal, ecclesiastical, and aristocratical institutions of the country, and who is jealous of the extension of democratic power. The tories thus differ from the whigs and radicals, who, on the other hand, are jealous of the encroachments of the crown, and the privileged classes, and who give their support, in various degrees, to an extension of the power of the people. Of late years the term conservative has been adopted by the tories, as tending to convey the best idea of their principles. [See CONSERVATIVE.] The distinctions of tory and whig, as applied to political partizans, were not known before the year 1678, in the reign of Charles II. [See WHIG.]

The bogs of Ireland ... afforded a refuge to popish outlaws ... called tories. The name of tory was therefore [first] given to Englishmen who refused to concur in excluding a Roman Catholic prince [James II. of England] from the throne. Macaulay.

In America, during the revolution, those who opposed the war and favoured the claims of Great Britain, were called tories.

TO'RY, a. Pertaining to the tories; as, tory principles; tory measures.

TO'RYISM, n. The principles of the tories.

TOSE, v. t. (s as z.) To tease wool. [Not in use or local.]

TOSS, v. t. pret. and pp. tossed or tost. [W. tosiaw, to toss, to jerk. Qu. G. stossen, to thrust.]—1. To throw with the hand; particularly, to throw with the palm of the hand upward, or to throw upward; as, to toss a ball.—2. To throw with violence.—3. To lift or throw up with a sudden or violent motion; as, to toss the head; or to toss up the head.

He toss'd his arm aloft. Addison.

4. To cause to rise and fall; as, to be tossed on the waves.

We being exceedingly tossed with a tempest; Acts xxvii.

5. To move one way and the other; Prov. xxi.—6. To agitate; to make restless.

Calm region once,
And full of peace, now tost and turbulent. Milton.

7. To keep in play; to tumble over; as, to spend four years in tossing the rules of grammar.

TOSS, v. t. To toss the oars, in a boat, is to throw them with their blades up, in a perpendicular direction, as a salute.

TOSS, v. i. To fling; to roll and tumble; to writhe; to be in violent commotion.

To toss and fling, and to be restless, only frets and enrages our pain. Tillotson.

2. To be tossed.—To toss up, is to throw a coin into the air and wager on what side it will fall.

TOSS, n. A throwing upward or with a jerk; the act of tossing; as, the toss of a ball.—2. A throwing up of the head; a particular manner of raising the head with a jerk. It is much applied to horses, and may be applied to an affected manner of raising the head in men.

TOSS'ED, pp. Throwing upward suddenly or with a jerk; made to rise and fall suddenly.

TOSS'EL. See TASSEL.

TOSS'ER, n. One who tosses.

TOSS'ING, ppr. Throwing upward with a jerk; raising suddenly; as the head.

TOSS'ING, n. The act of throwing upward; a rising and falling suddenly; a rolling and tumbling. A violent commotion.

Dire was the tossing, deep the groans. Milton.

TOSS'-POT, n. [toss and pot.] A toper; one habitually given to strong drink.

TOST, pret. and pp. of TOSS.

In a troubled sea of passion tost. Milton.

TO'TAL, a. [Fr.; L. totalis, totus ; W. twt.]—1. Whole; full; complete; as, total darkness; a total departure from the evidence; a total loss; the total sum or amount.—2. Whole; not divided.

Myself the total crime. Milton.

TO'TAL, n. The whole; the whole sum or amount. These sums added, make the grand total of five millions.

TOTAL'ITY, n. [Fr. totalité.] The whole sum; whole quantity or amount.

Identity, diversity; possibility, act; totality, parts, &c., are but wise cautions against ambiguities of speech. Bacon.

TO'TALLY, adv. Wholly; entirely; fully; completely; as, to be totally exhausted; all hope totally failed; he was totally absorbed in thought.

The obdurate sinner, that hath long hardened his own heart against God, thereby provokes him totally to withdraw all inward grace from him. Hammond.

TO'TALNESS,† n. Entireness.

TOTALIZE, v. t. To render entire.

TO'TAM, n. In American myth., a good spirit that every North American Indian believes to watch over him. It is represented under the form of a beast, or some other figure; consequently, the Indians never kill, hunt, nor eat the animal whose form the totam is supposed to have taken, being persuaded that if they killed it, even by mistake, they would expose themselves to the wrath of the disposer of life.

TOTA'NUS or GAM'BET, n. A genus of wading birds allied to the Scolopacidæ, and including numerous species which, under different names, are found in nearly all parts of the world. Their form is light and their legs long. Four species are British—the Totanus ochropus, green sandpiper or whistling snipe; the T. glareola, wood sandpiper; T. calidris, redshank; and T. fuscus, spotted snipe. Perhaps the most remarkable species is the T. melanoleucus, a native of North America, known to sportsmen by the name of Tell-tale. It has received this cognomen from annoying duck shooters by giving timely warning of their approach to all the feathered tribe within hearing, by means of the loud shrill whistle which it raises.

TOTE, v. t. To carry or bear. [A word used in slaveholding countries; said to have been introduced by the blacks. This word is said also to be the same as tolt, which see, the l being omitted.]

TOTE, n. [Lat. totus.] The entire body, or all; as, the whole tote. [Colloq. or vulgar.]

TOTE, n. Among joiners, the handle of a plane.

TOT'ED, pp. Carried or borne.

T'OTHER, a vulgar pronunciation of the other.

TOT'IDEM VERBIS. [L.] In so many words; in the very words.

TO'TIES QUO'TIES. [L.] As often as one, so often the other.

TOTIPAL'MES, TOTIPAL'MATES, n. [L. totus, entire, and palma, a palm.] A tribe of Palmipedes, or swimming birds, whose hind-toe is united with the others in a continuous membrane. The Pelicans, the Cormorants, the Frigate birds, the Boobies, the Anhingas, and the Tropic birds, belong to this tribe.

TO'TO CŒ'LO. [L.] By the whole hemisphere; as opposite as possible.

IN TO'TO. [L.] In the whole.

TOT'TER, v. i. [This may be allied to titter.]—1. To shake so as to threaten a fall; to vacillate; as, an old man totters with age; a child totters when he begins to walk.—2. To shake; to reel; to lean.

As a bowing wall shall ye be, and as a tottering fence; Ps. lxii.

Troy nods from high, and totters to her fall. Dryden.

TOT'TERER, n. One who totters.

TOT'TERING, ppr. Shaking, as threatening a fall; vacillating; reeling; inclining.

TOT'TERINGLY, adv. In a tottering manner.

TOT'TERY, } † a. Shaking; trembling
TOT'TY, } or vacillating as if about to fall; unsteady. [Spenser wrote tottle.]

TOTTLE, v. i. To toddle. [Local, and familiar.]

TOU'CAN, n. A bird of tropical America of several species, belonging to the genus Ramphastos, remarkable for the very large size of its bill. The feet of the Toucans, like those of parrots, are formed for grasping.—2. A small modern constellation of the southern hemisphere.

Red-billed Toucan (Rhamphastos erythorynchus).

TOUCH, v. t. (tuch.) [Fr. toucher; Arm. touicha, touchan or touchein; Goth. tekan, attekan; G. tichen; D. tekken; Sp. and Port. tocar; It. toccare; Gr. θίγω; L. tango, originally tago, [our vulgar tag;] pret. tetigi, pp. tactus. The sense is to thrust or strike. It appears by the laws of Numa Pompilius, that in his days this word was written without n. "Pellex aram Junonis ne tagito."]—1. To come in contact with; to hit or strike against.

He touched the hollow of his thigh; Gen. xxxii.; Matth. ix.

Esther drew near and touched the top of the sceptre; Esth. v.

2 In geom, to meet; to be in contact with. A straight line is said to touch a circle or curve, when it meets the circle or curve, and being produced, does not cut it; and two circles or curves are said to touch each other when they meet but do not cut each other. A straight line touches a circle or curve only in one point; two circles or spheres touch each other only in one point; and a sphere touches a plane in only one point. [See CONTACT, TANGENT.]—3. To perceive by the sense of feeling.

Nothing but body can be touch'd or touch. Creech.

4. To come to; to reach; to attain to.

The God vindictive doom'd them never more,
Ah men unbless'd! to touch that natal shore. Pope.

5. To try, as gold with a stone.

Wherein I mean to touch your love indeed. Shak.

6. To relate to; to concern.

The quarrel toucheth none but thee alone. Shak.

[This sense is now nearly obsolete.]

7. To handle slightly.—8. To meddle with. I have not touched the books.—9. To affect.

What of sweet
Hath touch'd my sense, flat seems to this. Milton.

10. To move; to soften; to melt.

The tender sire was touch'd with what he said. Addison.

11. To mark or delineate slightly.

The lines, though touch'd but faintly. Pope.

12. To infect; as, men touched with pestilent diseases. [Little used.]—13. To make an impression on.

Its face must be...so hard that the file will not touch it. Moxon.

14. To strike, as an instrument of music; to play on.

They touch'd their golden harps. Milton.

15. To influence by impulse; to impel forcibly.

No decree of mine
To touch with lightest moment of impulse
His free will. Milton.

16. To treat slightly. In his discourse, he barely touched upon the subject deemed the most interesting.—17. To afflict or distress; Gen. xxvi.—To touch up, to repair; or to improve by slight touches or emendations.—To touch the wind, in seamen's language, is to keep the ship as near the wind as possible.

TOUCH, v. i. (tuch.) To be in contact with; to be in a state of junction, so that no space is between. Two spheres touch only in one point. [See the active verb, No. 2.]—2. To fasten on; to take effect on.

Strong waters will touch upon gold, that will not touch silver. Bacon.

3. To treat of slightly in discourse.—4. Among seamen, the sails are said to touch, when they are braced so sharp, or so near the wind, that they begin to shake.—To touch at, to come or go to, without stay. The ship touched at Lisbon.

The next day we touched at Sidon; Acts xxvii.

To touch on or upon, to mention slightly.

If the antiquaries have touched upon it, they have immediately quitted it. Addison.

2. In the sense of touch at. [Little used.]

TOUCH, n. (tuch.) Contact; the hitting of two bodies; the junction of two bodies at the surface, so that there is no space between them. The mimosa shrinks at the slightest touch.—2. The sense of feeling or common sensation, one of the five senses. The sense of touch resides in the nervous papillæ of the skin, and is shared in a minor and modified degree by those parts of the mucous membranes, which, at the various orifices of the body, are continuous prolongations of the same structure as that of the skin. Although the sense of touch is diffused over the whole body, it is much more exquisite in some parts than others. In man the hand is the principal organ of touch, and the greatest degree of sensibility resides in the extremities of the fingers. By the sense of touch we are enabled to ascertain the properties of bodies, in so far as they can be ascertained by contact. [See FEELING.] We say, a thing is cold or warm to the touch; silk is soft to the touch.

The spider's touch, how exquisitely fine! Pope.

3. The act of touching. The touch of cold water made him shrink.—4. The state of being touched.

That never touch was welcome to thy hand
Unless I touch'd. Shak.

5. Examination by a stone.—6. Test; that by which any thing is examined.

Equity, the true touch of all laws. Carew.

7. Proof; tried qualities.

My friends of noble touch. Shak.

8. Single act of a pencil on a picture.

Never give the least touch with your pencil, till you have well examined your design. Dryden.

9. Feature; lineament.

Of many faces, eyes and hearts,
To have the touches dearest priz'd Shak.

10. Act of the hand on a musical instrument.

Soft stillness and the night
Become the touches of sweet harmony. Shak.

11. Power of exciting the affections.

Not alone
The death of Fulvia, with more urgent touches
Do strongly speak t' us. Shak.

12. Something of passion or affection.

He both makes intercession to God for sinners, and exercises dominion over all men, with a true, natural and sensible touch of mercy. Hooker.

13. Particular application of any thing to a person.

Speech of touch toward others should be sparingly used † Bacon.

I never bore any touch of conscience with greater regret. King Charles.

16. Exact performance of agreement.

I keep touch with my promise.† More.

17. A small quantity intermixed.

Madam, I have a touch of your conscience. Shak.

18 A hint; suggestion; slight notice.

A small touch will put him in mind of them. Bacon.

19. A cant word for a slight essay.

Print my preface in such form as, in the bookseller's phrase, will make a sixpenny touch.† Swift.

20. In music, the resistance of the keys of an instrument to the fingers; as, a heavy touch or light touch.—21. In music, an organ is said to have a good touch or stop, when the keys close well.—22. In ship-building, touch is the broadest part of a plank worked top and butt; or the middle of a plank worked anchor-stock fashion; also, the angles of the stern timbers at the counters.

TOUCHABLE, a. (tuch'able.) That may be touched; tangible.

TOUCH-HOLE, n. (tuch'-hole.) [touch and hole.] The vent of a cannon or other species of fire-arms, by which fire is communicated to the powder of the charge. It is now called the vent.

TOUCHILY, adv. (tuch'ely.) With irritation; peevishly.

TOUCHINESS, n. (tuch'iness.) [from touchy.] Peevishness; irritability; irascibility.

TOUCHING, ppr. (tuch'ing.) Coming in contact with; hitting; striking; affecting.—2. Concerning; relating to; with respect to.

Now as touching things offered to idols; 1 Cor. viii.

In this sense, touching is usually reckoned a preposition.—3. a. Affecting; moving; pathetic.

TOUCHING, n. (tuch'ing.) Touch; the sense of feeling.

TOUCHING-LINE, n. In geom., a tangent.

TOUCHINGLY, adv. (tuch'ingly.) In a manner to move the passions; feelingly.

TOUCH-ME-NOT, n. A plant of the genus Impatiens, the I. noli-me-tangere. [See IMPATIENS.]—2. Among physicians, a species of herpes, affecting the skin. [See NOLI-ME-TANGERE.]

TOUCH-NEEDLE, n. (tuch'-needle.) [touch and needle.] Touch-needles are small bars of gold and silver, some of which are pure, and others alloyed with various definite proportions of copper, used by assayers for trying gold and silver, or alloys of them, by comparing the colour and streak which they leave upon a piece of hard black stone, called a touchstone, with that produced by the metals to be tried. By this means the purity of gold and silver is discovered, and also the relative quantities of gold and silver in alloys of these metals.

TOUCHSTONE, n. (tuch'stone.) [touch and stone.] 1. A variety of extremely compact silicious schist, almost as close as flint, used in conjunction with the touch-needles for ascertaining the purity of gold and silver. It was also called Lydian stone, or Lapis Lydia, by the ancients, because it was found in Lydia in Asia Minor.—2. Any test or criterion by which the qualities of a thing are tried; as, money, the touchstone of common honesty.—Irish touchstone is the basalt, the stone which composes the Giant's Causeway.

TOUCH-WOOD, n. (tuch'-wood.) [touch and wood.] Decayed wood, used like a match for taking fire from a spark.

The quality of a substance which renders it in some degree flexible, without brittleness or liability to fracture; flexibility with a firm adhesion of parts; as, the toughness of steel.—2. Viscosity; tenacity; clamminess; glutinousness; as, the toughness of mucus.—3. Firmness; strength of constitution or texture.

TOUPEE, } n. [Fr. toupet, from touffe, TOU'PET, } a tuft, or its root.] A little tuft; a curl or artificial lock of hair.

TOUR, n. [Fr. tour, a turn; D. toer; Heb. תור, tur, Ar. taura, to go round.] 1. Literally, a going round; hence, a journey in a circuit; as, the tour of Europe; the tour of France or England. —2. A turn; a revolution; as, the tours of the heavenly bodies. [Not now in use.]—3. A turn; as, a tour of duty; a military use of the word.—4. A tress or circular border of hair on the head, worn sometimes by both sexes.—5.† A tower.

TOURA'CO, n. A genus of birds, (Corythaix,) natives of Africa, allied to the Scansores. The prevailing colour of the touracos is green, varied in some species with purple on the wings and tail. They feed chiefly on soft fruits, and frequent the highest branches of the forest trees. The most elegant species is the C. erythrolophus of Touraco (Corythaix erythrolophus).

Swainson. Its crest is red, and it is erected when the bird is excited, giving the head the appearance of being helmeted.

TOURBILL'ON, n. [Fr.] In pyrotechnics, a kind of whirling firework.

TOURIST, n. One who makes a tour, or performs a journey in a circuit.

TOUR'MALIN, } n. [probably a cor-
TOUR'MALINE, } ruption of tournamal, a name given to this stone in Ceylon.] A mineral occurring crystallized in three-sided or six-sided prisms, terminated by three-sided pyramids, the primary form being a rhomboid. Fracture uneven, conchoidal. Hardness, scratches glass easily. Specific gravity from 3·069 to 3·076. Colour, white, brown, blue, yellow, green, red, and black. The blue variety is called Indicolite, and the red Rubellite. Lustre, vitreous. Transparent, translucent, opaque. Tourmaline occurs most commonly in primary rocks, especially in granite, gneiss, and mica-slate. It is found in England, Scotland, Sweden, America, Spain, Siberia, and other parts. Its chief constituents are silica and alumina, with about 10 per cent. of soda, and a little oxide of manganese and of iron; but the proportions of the constituents are extremely variable. The tourmaline by friction exhibits vitreous electricity, and the prismatic crystals of the transparent varieties, when heated, produce vitreous electricity at one end, and resinous at the other. Some of the transparent varieties also exhibit polarization, and are employed in experiments on the polarization of light. Both the green and red varieties are highly esteemed in jewelry, when clear and of a large size. Tourmaline is considered as a variety of shorl.

TOURN, n. In law, the turn or circuit, anciently made by the sheriff, three times every year, for the purpose of holding in each hundred the great court leet of the county. The tourn has long fallen into disuse.—2.† A spinning wheel.

TOURNAMENT, n. (turn'ament.) [from Fr. tourner, to turn.] A martial sport or species of combat, performed in former times by knights and cavaliers on horseback, for the purpose of exercising and exhibiting their courage, prowess, and skill in arms. The tournament furnished an exciting show, and gave valour and military talent an opportunity of acquiring distinction; but it not unfrequently happened that angry passions burst forth on such occasions, so that a tournament often ended in a hostile conflict. The arms usually employed were lances without heads, and with round braces of wood at the extremity, and swords without points, and with blunted edges; but those who desired to signalize themselves in an extraordinary degree, encountered each other with the ordinary arms of warfare. Tournaments were usually held on the invitation of some prince, which was proclaimed by heralds throughout his own dominions, and likewise at foreign courts, so that parties from different countries might join in such exercises. The tournament differed from the joust, which was merely a trial of military skill between one knight and another.

TOURNEY, n. (turn'ey.) A tournament, [supra.]

TOURNEY, v. i. (turn'ey.) To tilt; to perform tournaments.

TOURNIQUET, n. (turn'eket.) [Fr.] A surgical instrument or bandage which is straitened or relaxed with a screw, and used to check hemorrhages in the operations of amputation.

TOURNOIS', a. [Fr.] This epithet is used only in the compound term livres tournois, French money of account under the old régime. Each livre tournois was worth 99 centimes, or about 9½*d.* sterling.

TOW'ER, n. [Sax. tor, tirre; Ir. tor; Fr. and Arm. tour; W. twr, a heap or pile; G. thurm; D. torn; L. turris; Gr. τύῤῥις: Heb. טירה, turah.] 1. A lofty building, of a round, square, or polygonal form, and often consisting of several stories. When towers are erected with other buildings, as they usually are, they rise above the main edifice. They are generally flat on the top, and thus differ from steeples or spires. Before the invention of guns, places were fortified with towers, and attacked with movable towers mounted on wheels, which placed the besiegers on a level with the walls. Such towers were frequently combined with a battering ram, and thus served the double purpose of breaching the walls and giving protection to the besiegers.—2. A citadel; a fortress; Ps. lxi.—3. In costume, a high commode, or head dress, worn by females in the reigns of William III. and Queen Anne. It was composed of pasteboard, ribands,

TO WIT, To know; namely.

TOWN, n. [Sax. tun; W. din, dinas, a fortified hill, a fort; Gaelic, dun, Sax. dun, dune, a hill, whence downs. The Sax. tun signifies an inclosure, a garden, a village, a town, and tynan is to shut, to make fast; G. zaun, a hedge; D. tun, a garden. If the original word signified a hill, the sense is a mass or collection. But probably the original word signified fortified, and the rude fortifications of uncivilized men were formed with hedges and stakes; hence, also, a garden. See GARDEN and TUN. Sax. leactune, a garden, that is, leek-town, an inclosure for leeks, that is, plants. This shows that the primary sense of town is an inclosure for defence.] 1. Originally, a walled or fortified place; a collection of houses inclosed with walls, hedges, or pickets for safety. Rahab's house was on the town wall; Josh. ii.

A town that hath gates and bars; 1 Sam. xxiii.

2. Any collection of houses, larger than a village. In this use the word is very indefinite, and a town may consist of twenty houses, or of twenty thousand.—3. In popular lan., in England, a large assemblage of adjoining, or nearly adjoining, houses, to which a market is usually incident. Towns (taking the word in its general sense) are divided into cities, boroughs, and upland towns, or country towns, which latter class have been described as places which, though inclosed, are not governed as cities and boroughs are, by their own elected officers.—4. In legal lan., the word town corresponds with the Norman vill. A vill or town is a subdivision of a county, as a parish is part or subdivision of a diocese. The law presumes, until the contrary is shown, that towns (or vills) and parishes are co-extensive, so that every parish is a vill, and every vill a parish. Many towns, however, both in the popular and legal sense of the term, contain several parishes, and many parishes several vills, which vills are usually called tithings or townships.—5. The inhabitants of a town. The town sends two members to parliament, or the town agreed to petition parliament to grant a bill for improving the harbour, opening up new streets, &c.—6. In popular usage, in America, a township; the whole territory within certain limits.—7. In England, the court end of London, or the people who originate and give currency to the fashions, taste, and opinions of the day.—8. The inhabitants of the metropolis.—9. The metropolis. The gentleman lives in town in winter; in summer he lives in the country. The same form of expression is used in regard to other populous towns.—10. A cant name at Oxford and Cambridge for the men of a town. Thus the students in these two cities adopt the phrase gown and town, to designate the university men and the other male inhabitants. The terms are used in an antagonistic sense.

TOWN'-CLERK, n. [town and clerk.] An officer who keeps the records of a town or borough, and enters all its official proceedings. In Scotland, the town-clerk of a royal burgh acts as clerk to the burgh court, and as notary in all infeftments granted of burgage property. He is the proper custodier of the burgh records, and is entitled and bound to give extracts therefrom.

TRACHEOT'OMY, n. [trachea and τεμνω, to cut.] In sur., the operation of making an opening into the trachea or windpipe. It is sometimes also called Bronchotomy; and a similar operation on the lower part of the larynx is termed Laryngotomy. [See these terms.]

TRACHI'NUS, n. [Gr. τραχυς, rough.] A genus of acanthopterygious fishes of the percoid family. Several species are found in the Atlantic, of which the best known is the T. draco, or dragon weaver, which is formidable to fishermen from its having the power of inflicting wounds with its opercular spine. The flesh is esteemed.

TRACHI'TIS, n. Inflammation of the trachea or windpipe.

TRA'CHYTE, n. [Gr. τραχυς, rough.] A nearly compact feldspathic, pyrogenous rock, breaking with a rough surface, and often containing crystals of glassy feldspar, with sometimes hornblende and mica. This rock is extremely abundant among the products of modern volcanoes, and forms whole mountains in countries where igneous action is very slightly or not at all perceived.

TRACHYT'IC, a. Pertaining to trachyte, or consisting of it.

TRACING, ppr. [from trace.] Marking out; drawing in lines; following by marks or footsteps.—Tracing lines, in a ship, are lines passing through a block or thimble, and used to hoist a thing higher.

TRACING, n. Course; regular track or path.

TRACK, n. [It. traccia; Sp. traza; Fr. trace. See TRACE. Track is properly a mark made by drawing, not by stepping; the latter is a derivative sense.] 1. A mark left by something that has passed along; as, the track of a ship, a wake; the track of a meteor; the track of a carriage wheel.—2. A mark or impression left by the foot, either of man or beast. Savages are said to be wonderfully sagacious in finding the tracks of men in the forest.—3. [illegible]d; a beaten path.

Behold Torquatus the same track pursue. Dryden.

4. Course; way; as, the track of a comet.

TRACK, v. t. To follow when guided by a trace, or by the footsteps, or marks of the feet; as, to track a deer in the snow.—2. To tow; to draw a vessel or boat, by a line reaching from her to the shore or bank.

TRACK'AGE, n. A drawing or towing, as of a boat.

TRACK'ED, pp. Followed by the footsteps.

TRACK'ING, ppr. Following by the impression of the feet; drawing a boat; towing.

TRACK'LESS, a. Having no track; marked by no footsteps; untrodden; as, a trackless desert.

TRACK'LESSLY, adv. So as to leave no track.

TRACK'LESSNESS, n. The state of being without a track.

TRACK'-ROAD, n. [track and road.] A towing-path.

TRACK'-SCOUT, n. [track and D. schuit, boat.] A boat or vessel employed on the canals in Holland, usually drawn by a horse.

TRACK'-WAY, n. A tram-road. [See TRAMS.]

TRACT, n. [L. tractus; It. tratto; Fr. trait; from L. traho, Fr. traire, to draw.] 1. Something drawn out or extended.—2. A region, or quantity of land or water, of indefinite extent. We may apply tract to the sandy and barren desert of Syria and Arabia, or to the narrow vales of Italy and Sardinia. We say, a rich tract of land in England or in Scotland, a stony tract, or a mountainous tract.—3. A short composition in which some particular subject is treated, generally in the form of a pamphlet. Tract and Treatise are identical in origin and etymological meaning; but the latter is usually applied to a discourse or dissertation of greater length than the former.—Tracts for the times, the name given to a series of pamphlets issued by those divines of the Church of England called Puseyites, in which their peculiar opinions and doctrines are developed. [See PUSEYISM.]—4. In hunting, the trace or footing of a wild beast.—5.† Treatment; exposition.—6.† Track.—7.† Continuity or extension of any thing; as, a tract of speech.—8. Continued or protracted duration; length; extent; as, a long tract of time.

TRACT, a. An epithet used only in the compound term tract society. Tract societies are associations formed for printing and distributing of religious tracts.

TRACT,† v. t. To trace out; to draw out.

TRACTABIL'ITY, n. [from tractable.] The quality or state of being tractable or docile; docility; tractableness.

TRACT'ABLE, a. [L. tractabilis, from tracto, to handle or lead; Fr. traitable; It. trattabile.] 1. That may be easily led, taught or managed; docile; manageable; governable; as, tractable children; a tractable learner.—2. Palpable; such as may be handled; as, tractable measures.

TRACT'ABLENESS, n. The state or quality of being tractable or manageable; docility; as, the tractableness of children.

TRACT'ABLY, adv. In a tractable manner; with ready compliance.

TRACTA'RIAN, n. A term applied to the writers of the tracts for the times,* or the Oxford tracts, in favour of Puseyism, and also to those who acquiesce in their opinions. [See PUSEYISM.]

TRACTA'RIAN, a. Pertaining to the Tractarians or their doctrines; as, the tractarian controversy.

TRACTA'RIANISM, n. Another name for Puseyism.

TRACT'ATE,† n. [L. tractatus.] A treatise; a tract.

TRACTA'TION, n. [L. tractatio.] Treatment or handling of a subject; discussion.

TRACTA'TRIX, n. In geom., a curve line.

TRACT'ILE, a. [L. tractus.] Capable of being drawn out in length; ductile.

Bodies are tractile or intractile. Bacon.

TRACTIL'ITY, n. The quality of being tractile; ductility.

TRAC'TION, n. [L. tractus, traho.] 1. The act of drawing, or state of being drawn; as, the traction of a muscle.—2. Attraction; a drawing toward.—3. In mech., the act of drawing a body along a plane, usually by the power of men, animals, or steam; as, when a vessel is towed upon the surface of water, or a carriage upon a road or railway. The power exerted in order to produce the effect is called the force of traction. This term has recently come much into use in reference to the draught on railways, canals, &c., and numerous experiments have been made for the purpose of determining the force of traction, in different cases, and the most advantageous mode of applying this power. The line in which the force of traction acts, is called the line of traction, and the angle which this line makes with the plane along which a body is drawn by the force of traction is called the angle of traction. It is synonymous with the angle of draught. [See DRAUGHT.]

TRACTI''TIOUS, a. Treating of, handling.

TRAC'TIVE, a. That pulls or draws; drawing along; as, tractive power or force.

TRACT'OR, n. That which draws, or is used for drawing. Metallic tractors, the name given to two small pointed bars of brass and steel, which by being drawn over diseased parts of the body, were supposed to give relief through the agency of some electric or magnetic virtue, produced by the mode of using them. They were contrived by Dr. Perkins, an American physician, and were in great vogue about 40 years ago. Wonderful cures of local complaints are said to have been performed by them, but they have now fallen into disrepute.

TRAC'TRIX, TRAC'TORY, n. [L. traho, to draw.] In math., a curve whose tangent is always equal to a given line. It may be described by a small weight attached to a string, the other end of which is moved along a given straight line or curve. The evolute of this curve is the common catenary.

TRADE, n. [Sp. and Port. trato; tratar, to handle, to trade; It. tratta, trattare, from L. tracto, to handle, use, treat The Fr. traite, traiter, are the same words.] 1. The act or business of exchanging commodities by barter; or the business of buying and selling for money; commerce; traffic; barter. Trade comprehends every species of exchange or dealing, either in the produce of land, in manufactures, in bills or money. It is, however, chiefly used to denote the barter or purchase and sale of goods, wares, and merchandise, either by wholesale or retail. Trade is either foreign, or domestic or inland. Foreign trade consists in the exportation and importation of goods, or the exchange of the commodities of different countries. Domestic or home trade is the exchange or buying and selling of goods within a country. Trade is also by the wholesale, that is, by the package or in large quantities, or it is by retail, or in small parcels. The carrying trade is that of transporting commodities from one country to another by water. Trade was originally carried on chiefly by barter; but it is now carried on chiefly by means of money or bills.—2. The business which a person has learned and which he carries on for procuring subsistence or for profit; occupation; particularly, mechanical employment; distinguished from the liberal arts and learned professions, and from agriculture. Thus we speak of the trade of a smith, of a carpenter, or mason. But we never say, the trade of a farmer or of a lawyer or physician.—3. Business pursued; occupation; in contempt; as, piracy is their trade.

Hunting their sport, and plund'ring was their trade. Dryden.

4. Instruments of any occupation.

The shepherd bears
His house and household goods, his trade of war. Dryden.

5. Employment not manual; habitual exercise.—6. Custom; habit; standing practice.

Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade. Shak.

7. Men engaged in the same occupation. Thus booksellers speak of the customs of the trade.—8. The trades, the trade-winds.—Board of trade, a department of the government, being a committee of the Privy Council, appointed principally "for the consideration of all matters relating to trade, and foreign plantations." It is practically under the direction of a president and vice-president, but several members of the cabinet and officers of state are members of it. All laws passed by colonial legislatures must receive the formal sanction of the Board of Trade, before they can receive the assent of the Crown.

TRĀDE, v. i. To barter, or to buy and sell; to deal in the exchange, purchase, or sale of goods, wares, and merchandise, or any thing else; to traffic; to carry on commerce as a business. Thus, British merchants trade with the Americans at New York, and New Orleans; they trade with the French at Havre; they trade with the Russians at Cronstadt; and they trade with Turkey and China. The country shopkeepers trade with London merchants. Our banks are permitted to trade in inland bills of exchange.—2. To buy and sell or exchange property, in a single instance. Thus we say, a man treats with another for the lease of his farm, but cannot trade with him. A. traded with B. for a horse or a number of sheep.—3. To act merely for money.

How did you dare
To trade and traffic with Macbeth? Shak.

4. To have a trade wind.

They on the trading flood ply tow'rd the pole. [Unusual.] Milton.

TRĀDE, v. t. To sell or exchange in commerce.

They traded the persons of men; Ezek. xxvii.

[Not legitimate.]

TRĀDED,† a. Versed; practised.

TRĀDEFUL, a. Commercial; busy in traffic.

TRĀDER, n. One engaged in trade or commerce; a dealer in buying and selling or barter; as, a trader to New York; a trader to China; a country trader.

TRADESCAN'TIA, n. A genus of plants; nat. order Commelinaceæ. The species are natives of America and India, and many of them are cultivated as ornamental plants in flower-gardens. T. virginica, a north American species, Spider wort (Tradescantia virginica).

is known by the name of spider-wort, from its being employed in cases of bites of venomous spiders. It is common in the flower-borders of English gardens.

TRĀDESFŌLK,† n. People employed in trade.

TRĀDESMAN. n. [trade and man] A shopkeeper. A merchant is called a trader, but not a tradesman.

TRĀDES-PEOPLE, n. People employed in various trades.

TRĀDES-WŎMAN, n. A woman who trades or is skilled in trade.

TRĀDE-WINDS, n. [trade and wind.] The trade-winds are those perpetual or constant winds which occur in all open seas, on both sides of the equator, and to the distance of about 30 degrees north and south of it. They are so named because they are favourable to navigation and trade. On the north of the equator, their direction is from the north-east, (varying at times a point or two of the compass either way); on the south of the equator they proceed from the south-east. The origin of the trade-winds is this:—the great heat of the torrid zone rarefies and makes lighter the air of that region, and in consequence of this rarefaction, the air rises, and ascends into the higher regions of the atmosphere. To supply its place, colder air from the northern and southern regions rushes towards the equator, which, also becoming rarefied, ascends in its turn. The heated air which thus ascends into the upper regions of the atmosphere, being there condensed, flows northward and southward to supply the deficiency caused by the under currents blowing towards the equator. These under currents coming from the north and south, are, in consequence of the earth's rotation on its axis, deflected from their course as they approach the equatorial region, and thus become north-east and south-east winds, constituting the trade-winds. The space included between the second and fifth degrees of north latitude, is the internal boundary of the trade winds; and this space experiences calms, frequently interrupted, however, by violent storms. The position of the sun has an influence on the strength and direction of the trade-winds; for when the sun is near the tropic of Cancer, the south-east wind becomes gradually more southerly and stronger, and the north-east weaker and more easterly; the effect is reversed when the sun approaches towards the tropic of Capricorn. Trade-winds are constant only over the open ocean, and the larger the expanse of ocean over which they blow, (as in the Pacific,) the more steady they are. When these winds blow over land, they are obstructed and their direction changed by coming in contact with high land or mountains. In some places the trade-winds become periodical, blowing one half of the year in one direction, and the other half in the opposite direction. [See MONSOON.]

TRĀDING, ppr. Trafficking; exchanging commodities by barter, or buying and selling them.—2. a. Carrying on commerce; as, a trading company.

TRĀDING, n. The act or business of carrying on commerce.

TRADI''TION, n. [Fr. from L. traditio, from trado, to deliver.] 1. Delivery; the act of delivering into the hands of another.

A deed takes effect only from the tradition or delivery. Blackstone.

The sale of a movable is completed by simple tradition. Cyc.

2. The delivery of opinions, doctrines, practices, rites, and customs from father to son, or from ancestors to posterity; the transmission of any opinions or practice from forefathers to descendants by oral communication, without written memorials. Thus, children derive their vernacular language chiefly from tradition. Most of our early notions are received by tradition from our parents.—3. That which is handed down from age to age by oral communication. The Jews pay great regard to tradition in matters of religion, as do the Romanists. Protestants reject the authority of tradition in sacred things, and rely only on the written word. Traditions may be good or bad, true or false.

Stand fast, and hold the traditions which ye have been taught, whether by word or our epistle; 2 Thess. ii.

Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your traditions? Matth. xv.

4. In Scots law, delivery. Tradition or delivery is necessary to every conveyance of property, where the acquirer has not already the custody or possession. Tradition is either actual, or, where actual is impracticable, symbolical, as in the case of heritage.

TRADI''TIONAL, } a. Delivered
TRADI''TIONARY, } orally from father to son; communicated from ancestors to descendants by word only: transmitted from age to age without writing; as, traditional opinions; traditional evidence; the traditional expositions of the Scriptures.

The reveries of the Talmud, a collection of Jewish traditionary interpolations, are unrivalled in the regions of absurdity. Buckminster.

2.† Observant of tradition.

TRADI''TIONALLY, adv. By transmission from father to son, or from age to age; as, an opinion or doctrine traditionally derived from the Apostles is of no authority.

TRADI''TIONARILY, adv. By tradition.

TRADI''TIONARY, n. Among the Jews, one who acknowledges the authority of traditions, and explains the Scriptures by them. The word is used in opposition to Cairite, one who denies the authority of traditions.

TRADI''TIONER, } n. One who ad-
TRADI''TIONIST, } heres to tradition.

TRAD'ITIVE, a. [Fr. from L. trado.] Transmitted or transmissible from father to son, or from age to age, by oral communication.

Suppose we on things traditive divide. Dryden.

TRAD'ITOR, n. plur. Traditores. [L.] A deliverer; a name of infamy given to Christians who in the first ages of the church, during the persecutions, delivered the Scriptures or the goods of the church to their persecutors, to save their lives.

TRADUCE, v. t. [L. traduco; trans, over, and duco, to lead; Fr. traduire; It. tradurre.] 1. To represent as blamable; to condemn.

The best stratagem that Satan hath, is by traducing the form and manner of the devout prayers of God's church. Hooker.

2. To calumniate; to vilify; to defame; wilfully to misrepresent.

As long as men are malicious and designing, they will be traducing. Gov. of the Tongue

I've had the baseness to traduce me in libel Dryden.

3. To propagate; to continue by deriving one from another.

From these only the race of perfect animals was propagated and traduced over the earth.† Hale.

TRADUCED, pp. Misrepresented; calumniated.

TRADUCEMENT, n. Misrepresentation; ill founded censure; defamation; calumny. [Little used.]

TRADU'CENT, a. Slandering; slanderous.

TRADU'CER, n. One that traduces; a slanderer; a calumniator.

TRADU'CIBLE, a. That may be orally derived or propagated. [Little used.]

TRADU'CING, ppr. Slandering; defaming; calumniating.

TRADU'CINGLY, adv. Slanderously; by way of defamation.

TRADUCT',† v. t. [L. traductus, traduco.] To derive.

TRADUC'TION, n. [L. traductio.] 1. Derivation from one of the same kind; propagation.

If by traduction came thy mind,
Our wonder is the less to find
A soul so charming from a stock so good. Dryden.

2. Tradition; transmission from one to another; as, traditional communication and traduction of truth. [Little used.]—3. Conveyance; transportation; act of transferring; as, the traduction of animals from Europe to America by shipping.—4. Transition.

TRADUC'TIVE, a. Derivable; that may be deduced.

TRAF'FIC, n. [Fr. trafic; It. traffico; Sp. trafago; a compound of L. trans, Celtic tra and facio, or some other verb of the like elements.] 1. Trade; commerce, either by barter or by buying and selling. This word, like trade, comprehends every species of dealing in the exchange or passing of goods or merchandise from hand to hand for an equivalent, unless the business of retailing may be excepted. It signifies appropriately foreign trade, but is not limited to that.

My father,
A merchant of great traffic through the world. Shak.

2. Commodities for market.

TRAF'FIC, v. i. [Fr. trafiquer; It. trafficare; Sp. traficar or trafagar.] 1. To trade; to pass goods and commodities from one person to another for an equivalent in goods or money; to barter; to buy and sell wares; to carry on commerce. The English and Americans traffic with all the world.—2. To trade meanly or mercenarily.

TRAF'FIC, v. t. To exchange in traffic.

TRAF'FICABLE,† a. Marketable.

TRAF'FICKED, pp. Exchanged in traffic.

TRAF'FICKER, n. One who carries on commerce; a trader; a merchant; Is. viii.

TRAF'FICKING, ppr. Trading; bartering; buying and selling goods, wares, and commodities.

TRAF'FICLESS, a. Destitute of trade.

TRAG'ACANTH, n [L. tragacanthum; Gr. τραγακανθα: τραγος, a goat, and ακανθα, thorn.] 1. Goat's thorn; a leguminous plant of the genus Astragalus, the A. tragacantha, long reputed to be the source of the tragacanth of commerce, which yields however no concrete gum, but merely a gummy juice used in confectionary.—2. A variety of gum familiarly termed gum-dragon. It is the produce of several species of the genus Astragalus. The greater part of this gum used in Europe is yielded by A verus, a native of the north of Persia, Armenia, and Asia Minor, and by A. gummifer, a native of Tragacanth (Astragalus gummifer).

Mount Lebanon, Arabia, &c. It is yielded, though more sparingly, by A. creticus, A. aristatus, and one or two other species. In commerce, tragacanth occurs in small twisted thread-like pieces, or in flattened cakes. The colour is whitish or yellowish. Both sorts are hard, yet somewhat soft, and even flexible before breaking; the fracture dull and splintery. Tragacanth is devoid of taste or smell. It swells in the mouth, and is lubricous. It is composed of gum, bassorin, starch, and vegetable membrane, and is imperfectly soluble. It is used in the form of mucilage, and of powder, to suspend heavy powders in water, and also to make lozenges and pills. It is demulcent, and is used in coughs and catarrhs. In Persia and France it is used to stiffen and glaze silk, and inferior kinds are used by shoemakers to glaze the edges of the soles of boots and shoes.

TRAGACAN'THINE, n. The principle of tragacanth; the soluble gum of tragacanth.

TRAGE'DIAN, n. [L. tragœdus. See Tragedy.] 1. A writer of tragedy.—2. More generally, an actor of tragedy.

TRAG'EDY, n. [Fr. tragedie; It. and Sp. tragedia; Gr. τραγωδια: said to be composed of τραγος, a goat, and ωδη, a song, because originally it consisted in a hymn sung in honour of Bacchus by a chorus of music, with dances and the sacrifice of a goat; but some recent writers consider τραγος an ancient Greek adjective, signifying melancholy, or lamentable. According to this opinion, tragedy properly signifies a melancholy song.] 1. A dramatic poem representing some signal action performed by illustrious persons, and generally having a fatal issue. A Greek tragedy always consisted of two distinct parts; the dialogue, which corresponded in its general features to the dramatical compositions of modern times; and the chorus, the whole tone of which was lyrical rather than dramatical, and which was meant to be sung while the dialogue was intended to be recited. The unity of time;—namely, that the duration of the action should not exceed twenty-four hours; and that of place,—namely, that the scene in which the events occur should be the same throughout, are modern inventions. Eschylus is called the father of tragedy.—2. A fatal and mournful event; any event in which human lives are lost by human violence, more particularly by unauthorized violence.

TRA'GIA, n. A genus of plants; nat. order Euphorbiaceæ. The species are climbing in habit, and some of them sting like nettles. They are found in India and America. The roots of T. cannabina, given in infusion, are considered diaphoretic and alterative.

TRAG'IC, } a. [L. tragicus; Fr.
TRAG'ICAL, } tragique; It. tragico.] 1. Pertaining to tragedy; of the nature or character of tragedy; as, a tragic poem; a tragic play or representation.—2. Fatal to life; mournful; sorrowful; calamitous; as, the tragic scenes of Hayti; the tragic horrors of Scio and Missolonghi; the tragical fate of the Greeks.—3. Mournful; expressive of tragedy, the loss of life, or of sorrow.

I now must change those notes to tragic. Milton

TRAG'ICALLY, adv. In a tragical manner; with fatal issue; mournfully; sorrowfully. The play ends tragically.

TRAG'ICALNESS, n. Fatality; mournfulness; sadness.

We moralize the fable in the tragicalness of the event. Decay of Piety.

TRAĠI-COM'EDY, n. [Fr. tragicomedie; tragedy and comedy.] A kind of dramatic piece representing some action passed among eminent persons, in which serious and comic scenes are blended. All the plays of Shakspeare, with the exception of the Merry Wives of Windsor, and the Twelfth Night, are, strictly speaking, of this nature, and indeed almost all the works of the old English dramatists; but some writers confine the word tragi-comedy to dramatic pieces, partaking of the nature of tragedy and comedy, of which the event is not unhappy.

TRAĠI-COM'IC, } a. Pertaining
TRAĠI-COM'ICAL, } to tragi-comedy; partaking of a mixture of grave and comic scenes.

TRAĠI-COM'ICALLY, adv. In a tragi-comical manner.

TRA'ĠICUS, n. [See TRAGUS.] In anat., a proper muscle of the ear, which pulls the point of the tragus a little forward.

TRAGOPO'GON, n. Goat's beard, a genus of plants. [See GOAT'S BEARD.]

TRA'GUS, n. [Gr. τράγος, a goat, so named from its being furnished, in some persons, with a tuft of hair, like the beard of a goat.] In anat., a small cartilaginous eminence at the entrance of the external ear.

TRĀIL, v. t. [W. rhel, a flagging, a trailing; rhelyw, a trail; Sp. traillar, to level the ground; trailla, a leash, packthread, an instrument for levelling the ground; W. trail, a drawing over, a trail, a turn, as if from traigyl, a turn or revolution; treilliaw, to turn, to roll, to traverse, to dredge; Gael triallam, to go, to walk, [qu. travel;] Port. tralho, a fishing net, as if from drawing, L. traho; D. treillen, to draw, to tow; Norm. trailler, to search for. The Welsh seems to accord with troll; the others appear to be formed on drag, L. traho. Qu.] 1. To hunt by the track. [See the Norman, supra.] —2. To draw along the ground; to drag. Trail your pikes.

> And hung his head, and trail'd his legs along Dryden.
> They shall not trail me through the streets
> Like a wild beast. Milton.
> That long behind he trails his pompous robe. Pope.

3. To lower; as, to trail arms.—4. In America, to tread down grass by walking through; to lay flat; as, to trail grass.

TRĀIL, v. i. To be drawn out in length.

> When his brother saw the red blood trail. Spenser.

TRĀIL, n. Track followed by the hunter; scent left on the ground by the animal pursued.

> How cheerfully on the false trail they cry. Shak.

2. Any thing drawn to length; as, the trail of a meteor; a trail of smoke.

> When lightning shoots in glitt'ring trails along. Rowe.

3. Any thing drawn behind in long undulations; a train.

> And drew behind a radiant trail of hair. Pope.

4. The entrails of a fowl; applied sometimes to those of sheep.—5. In gunnery, the end of a travelling carriage, opposite to the wheels, and upon which the carriage slides, when unlimbered or upon the battery.—Trail-boards, in ship-building, a term for the carved work between the cheeks of the head, at the heel of the figure.

Trail-board in Ships.

a, Trail-board. b, b, Cheeks of the head. c, Rails of the head. d, Cat-head.

TRĀILED, pp. Hunted by the tracks; laid flat; drawn along on the ground; brought to a lower position; as, trailed arms.

TRĀILING, ppr. Hunting by the track; drawing on the ground; treading down; laying flat; bringing to a lower position; drawing out in length.

> Since the flames pursu'd the trailing smoke. Dryden.
> Swift men of foot whose broad-set backs
> Their trailing hair did hide. Chapman.

Trailing plants, such plants as are of a creeping habit.

TRĀIN, v. t. [Fr. trainer; It. trainare, trainare, to draw or drag; Sp. traina, a train of gunpowder. Qu. drain, or is it a contracted word, from L. traho, to draw?] 1. To draw along.

> In hollow cube he train'd
> His devilish enginery. Milton.

2. To draw; to entice; to allure.

> If but twelve French
> Were there in arms, they would be as a call
> To train ten thousand English to their side. Shak.

3. To draw by artifice or stratagem.

> O train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note. Shak.

4. To draw from act to act by persuasion or promise.

> We did train him on. Shak.

5. To exercise; to discipline; to teach and form by practice; as, to train the militia to the manual exercise; to train soldiers to the use of arms and to military tactics. Abram armed his trained servants; Gen. xiv. 14.—6. To break, tame, and accustom to draw; as oxen.—7. In gardening, to lead or direct and form to a wall or espalier; to form to a proper shape by growth, lopping, or pruning; as, to train young trees.—8. In mining, to trace a lode or any mineral appearance to its head.—To train a gun, is to point it at some object, either forward or abaft the beam, that is, not directly on the side. —To train or train up, to educate; to teach; to form by instruction or practice; to bring up.

> Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it; Prov. xxii.

TRĀIN, n. Artifice; stratagem of enticement.

> Now to my charms,
> And to my wily trains. Milton.

2. Something drawn along behind, the end of a gown, &c.; as, the train of a gown or robe.—3. The tail of a hawk, or fowl.

TRALIN′EATE,† v. t. [L. trans and linea, line] To deviate from any direction.

TRALU′CENT, a. [L. tralucens; trans and luceo.] Transparent; clear.

TRAM′MEL, n. [Fr. tramail, a drag-net; tra and mail. In Sp. traba is a fetter, Fr. entraves. This seems to be a different word.] 1. A kind of long net for catching birds or fishes.

The trammel differs not much from the shape of the bunt. Carew.

2. A kind of shackles used for regulating the motions of a horse, and making him amble.—3. An iron hook, of various forms and sizes, used for hanging kettles and other vessels over the fire.—4. Trammels, in mech., elliptic compasses, an instrument for drawing ovals, used by joiners and other artificers. One part consists of a cross with two grooves at right angles; the other is a beam carrying two pins which slide in those grooves, and also the describing pencil The engines for turning ovals or ellipses, are constructed on the same principles as the trammels.

TRAM′MEL, v. t. [Sp. trabar, to join, to seize, to shackle. Qu.] 1. To catch; to intercept.—2. To confine; to hamper; to shackle.

TRAM′MELLED, pp. Caught; confined; shackled.—2. In the manege, a horse is said to be trammelled, when he has blazes or white marks on the fore and hind foot of one side.

TRAM′MELLING, ppr. Catching; confining; shackling.

TRAMON′TANE, n. One living beyond the mountain; a stranger; a barbarian.

TRAMON′TANE, a. [It. tramontana; tra, L. trans, beyond, and mons, mountain.] Lying or being beyond the mountain; foreign; barbarous. The Italian painters apply this epithet to all such as live north of the Alps, as in Germany and France; and a north wind is called a tramontane wind. The French lawyers call certain Italian canonists tramontane or ultramontane doctors; considering them as favouring too much the court of Rome.

TRAMP, n. Travel on foot; a walk; a journey.—2. A tramper; a beggar; a vagrant; a stroller. [All trivial.]—3. An instrument used in making hedges.

TRAMP, v. t. [Sw. trampa.] To tread.

TRAMP, v. i. To travel; to wander or stroll; to travel on foot. [Colloq.]

TRAMP′ER, n. A stroller; a vagrant or vagabond.

TRAM′PLE, v. t. [G. trampeln, trampen; Dan. tramper; Sw. trampa. If m is casual, as we suppose, these words are the D. trappen, to tread; trap, a step.] 1. To tread under foot; especially, to tread upon with pride, contempt, triumph, or scorn.

Neither cast ye your pearls before swine, lest they trample them under their feet; Matth. vii.

2. To tread down; to prostrate by treading; as, to trample grass.—3. To treat with pride, contempt, and insult.

TRAM′PLE, v. i. To tread in contempt.

Diogenes trampled on Plato's pride with greater of his own. Gov. of the Tongue.

2. To tread with force and rapidity.

TRAM′PLE, n. The act of treading under foot with contempt.

TRAM′PLED, pp. Trod on; trodden under foot.

TRAM′PLER, n. One that tramples; one that treads down.

TRAM′PLING, ppr. Treading under foot; prostrating by treading; treading with contempt and insult.

TRAM′-ROAD, TRAM′-WAY, } n. A plate railway; a road prepared for the easy transit of trams or waggons, by forming the wheel tracks of smooth beams of wood, blocks of stone, or plates of iron. It may be considered a species of railway adapted for the passage of carriages or waggons with wheels of the ordinary form. [See TRAMS, RAILWAY.]

TRAMS, n. A local name given to coal waggons which are used in the collieries, in the North of England, for conveying the coals from the pits to the place of shipment. Hence, the roads formed for such waggons to run on were termed tram-roads or tram-ways.

TRANA′TION,† n. [L. trano.] The act of passing over by swimming.

TRÂNCE, n. (trâns.) [Fr. transe; supposed to be from the L. transitus, a passing over; transeo, to pass over; trans and eo. The L. trans seems to be the W. tra, It. tra and tras, Sp. tras, and Fr. tres, very; so that it may be inferred that n is not radical.] 1. An ecstacy; a state in which the soul seems to have passed out of the body into celestial regions, or to be rapt into visions.

My soul was ravished quite as in a trance. Spenser.

While they made ready, he fell into a trance, and saw heaven opened; Acts x.

2. In med., catalepsy, i. e. total suspension of mental power and voluntary motion, pulsation and breathing continuing; muscles flexible; body yielding to and retaining any given position not incompatible with the laws of gravitation. Trance, or catalepsy, differs from ecstacy in the circumstance that in the latter the muscles are rigid, and the body erect and inflexible.

TRÂNCED, a. Lying in a trance.

And there I left him tranc'd. Shak.

TRAN′GRAM,† n. An odd thing intricately contrived.

TRAN′KEY, n. A kind of boat used in the Persian gulf.

TRAN′NEL, n. A trenail or treenail.

TRAN′QUIL, a. [Fr. tranquille; L. tranquillus.] Quiet; calm; undisturbed; peaceful; not agitated. The atmosphere is tranquil. The state is tranquil. A tranquil retirement is desirable; but a tranquil mind is essential to happiness.

TRANQUIL′LITY, n. [L. tranquillitas.] Quietness; a calm state; freedom from disturbance or agitation. We speak of the tranquillity of public affairs, of the state of the world, the tranquillity of a retired life, the tranquillity of mind proceeding from conscious rectitude.

TRANQUILLIZA′TION, n. The act of tranquillizing, or state of being tranquillized.

TRAN′QUILLIZE, v. t. To quiet; to allay when agitated; to compose; to make calm and peaceful; as, to tranquillize a state disturbed by factions or civil commotions; to tranquillize the mind.

Religion haunts the imagination of the sinner, instead of tranquillizing his heart. Rob. Hall.

TRAN′QUILLIZED, pp. Quieted; calmed; composed.

TRAN′QUILLIZER, n. A kind of chair, in which a raving maniac may be so fixed as to be motionless. It is used for the production of tranquillity, in a paroxysm of raving.

TRAN′QUILLIZING, ppr. Quieting; composing.

TRAN′QUILLIZINGLY, adv. So as to tranquillize.

TRAN'QUILLY, adv. Quietly; peacefully.

TRAN'QUILNESS, n. Quietness; peacefulness.

TRANS, a Latin preposition, used in English as a prefix, signifies over, across, beyond, as in transalpine, beyond the Alps; through, as in transpierce. Hence, in a moral sense, it denotes a complete change; as to transform; also, from one to another, as to transfer.

TRANSACT', v. t. [L. transactus, transigo; trans and ago, to act or drive through.] To do; to perform; to manage; as, to transact commercial business. We transact business in person or by an agent.

TRANSACT', v. i. To conduct matters; to treat; to manage.

TRANSACT'ED, pp. Done; performed; managed.

TRANSACT'ING, ppr. Managing; performing.

TRANSAC'TION, n. The doing or performing of any business; management of any affair.—2. That which is done; an affair. We are not to expect in history a minute detail of every transaction.—3. In the civil law, an adjustment of a dispute between parties by mutual agreement.—Philosophical transactions, the published volumes containing the several papers relating to the sciences, which have been read at the meetings of certain philosophical societies, as the Royal Society of London, and the Royal Society of Edinburgh, and which have been thought worthy of being made public at the expense of such societies. These transactions contain the several discoveries and histories relative to the sciences, such as natural history, mathematics, mechanical philosophy, chemistry, &c., either made by the members themselves, or communicated by them from their correspondents, with the various experiments, observations, &c., made by them or transmitted to them.

TRANSACT'OR, n. One who performs or conducts any business.

TRANSAL'PINE, a. [L. trans, beyond, and Alpine, of the Alps.] Lying or being beyond the Alps in regard to Rome, that is, on the north or west of the Alps; as, Transalpine Gaul; opposed to Cisalpine.

TRANSAN'IMATE, v. t. [trans and animate.] To animate by the conveyance of a soul to another body.

TRANSAN'IMATED, pp. Animated by the conveyance of the soul from one body to another.

TRANSANIMA'TION, n. [L. trans and anima.] Conveyance of the soul from one body to another; transmigration. [The latter is the word generally used.]

TRANSATLAN'TIC, a. [L. trans, beyond, and Atlantic.] Lying or being beyond the Atlantic. When used by a person in Europe or Africa, transatlantic signifies being in America; when by a person in America, it denotes being or lying in Europe or Africa.

TRANSCA'LENCY, n. [L. transcaleo.] State of being transcalent.

TRANSCA'LENT, a. Pervious to heat.

TRANSCEND', v. t. [L. transcendo; trans and scando, to climb.]—1. To rise above; to surmount; as, lights in the heavens transcending the region of the clouds.—2. To pass over; to go beyond.

> It is a dangerous opinion to such hopes as shall transcend their limits. Bacon.

3. To surpass; to outgo; to excel; to exceed.

> How much her worth transcended all her kind. Dryden.

TRANSCEND',† v. i. To climb; to surpass thought.

TRANSCEND'ED, pp. Overpassed; surpassed, exceeded.

TRANSCEND'ENCE, } TRANSCEND'ENCY, } n. Superior excellence; super-eminence.—2. Elevation above truth; exaggeration.

TRANSCEND'ENT, a. [L. transcendens.] Very excellent; superior or supreme in excellence; surpassing others; as, transcendent worth; transcendent valour.

> Clothed with transcendent brightness. Milton.

2. In the philosophy of Kant, transcending or going beyond the bounds of human knowledge, going beyond the limits of human reason, of possible experience, and of philosophizing, applied to baseless or illusory knowledge.

TRANSCENDENT'AL, a. Supereminent; surpassing others; as transcendental being or qualities.—2. In the Kantian philosophy, pertaining to that which transcends or goes beyond the limits of actual experience. The term, however, as distinguished from transcendent, is applied to that which does not indeed originate from experience, but yet is connected with it, because it contains the grounds of the possibility of experience. "I call," says Kant, "all knowledge transcendental, which occupies itself not so much with objects as with the way of knowing these objects, as far as this is possible à priori. A system of such notions would be called transcendental philosophy, and would be the system of all the principles of pure reason;" or, as he says in another passage, "the pure, merely speculative reason from which the practical is separated."—In math., a term applied to any equation, curve, or quantity which cannot be represented or defined by an algebraical equation of a finite number of terms, with numeral and determinate indexes. Transcendental quantities include all exponential, logarithmic, and trigonometrical lines, because there is no finite algebraical formulæ by which these quantities can be expressed.—Transcendental equation is an equation into which transcendental quantities enter. But transcendental equations sometimes signify such differential equations as can only be integrated by means of some curve, logarithm, or infinite series.—Transcendental curve is such as cannot be defined by any algebraic equation, or of which, when it is expressed by an equation, one of the terms is a variable quantity.

TRANSCENDENT'ALISM, n. In the Kantian philosophy, the transcending or going beyond empiricism, and ascertaining à priori, the fundamental principles of human knowledge. But, according to Schelling and Hegel, who reject Kant's distinction between transcendant and transcendental ideas, transcendentalism is that which aims at a true knowledge of all things, material and immaterial, human and divine, so far as the mind is capable of knowing them. And in this sense the term transcendentalism is now most used. Sometimes it is also used for that which is vague and illusive in philosophy.

TRANSCENDENT'ALIST, n. One who believes in transcendentalism.

TRANSCENDENTAL'ITY, n. The quality of being transcendental. [Rare.]

TRANSCENDENT'ALLY, adv. In a transcendental manner.

TRANSCEND'ENTLY, adv. Very excellently; super-eminently; by way of eminence.

> The law of Christianity is eminently and transcendently called the word of truth. South.

TRANSCEND'ENTNESS, n. Superior or unusual excellence.

TRANSCEND'ING, ppr. Rising above; surmounting; surpassing.

TRANSCEN'SION,† n. Act of transcending.

TRANS'COLATE, v. t. [L. trans and colo, to strain.] To strain; to cause to pass through a sieve or colander.

TRANSCOLAT'ING, ppr. Straining through a sieve.

TRANSCORP'ORATE,† v. i. To pass from one body to another.

TRANSCRIB'BLER, n. One who transcribes. [In contempt.]—2. A plagiary.

TRANSCRIBE, v. t. [L. transcribo; trans, over, and scribo, to write.]—To copy; to write over again or in the same words; to write a copy of anything; as, to transcribe Livy or Tacitus; to transcribe a letter.

TRANSCRIBED, pp. Copied.

TRANSCRIBER, n. A copier; one who writes from a copy.

TRANSCRIBING, ppr. Writing from a copy; writing a copy.

TRAN'SCRIPT, n. [L. transcriptum.]—1. A copy; a writing made from and according to an original; a writing or composition consisting of the same words with the original.

> The decalogue of Moses was but a transcript, not an original. South.

2. A copy of any kind.

> The Roman learning was a transcript of the Grecian. Glanville.

TRANSCRIP'TION, n. [Fr.] The act of copying. Corruptions creep into books by repeated transcriptions.

TRANSCRIP'TIVELY, adv. In manner of a copy.

TRANSCUR',† v. i. [L. transcurro; trans and curro, to run.] To run or rove to and fro.

TRANSCUR'RENCE,†, n. A roving hither and thither.

TRANSCUR'SION, n. [supra.] A rambling or ramble; a passage beyond certain limits; extraordinary deviation; as, the transcursion of a comet.

> I am to make often transcursions into the neighbouring forests as I pass along. Howell.

[Excursion has in a great measure superseded this word.]

TRANSDUC'TION, n. [L. trans and duco.] The act of carrying over.

TRANSE, n. Ecstasy. [See TRANCE.]

TRANSELEMENT'ATION, n. [trans and element.] The change of the elements of one body into those of another, as of the bread and wine into the actual body and blood of Christ; transubstantiation.

TRAN'SEPT, n. [L. trans and septum.] In arch., the transverse portion of a church which is built in the form of a cross; that part which is placed between the nave and choir, and extends beyond the sides of the area which contains these divisions, forming the short arms of the cross, upon which the plan is laid out.

TRANSEX'ION,† n. Change of sex.

TRANSFER', v. t. [L. transfero; trans and fero, to carry.] 1. To convey from one place or person to another; to transport or remove to another place or person; as, to transfer the laws of one country to another. We say, a war is transferred from France to Germany. Pain, or the seat of disease in the body, is often transferred from one part to another. Engravings and lithographs are transferred from paper to wood or other material. Electricity is transferred from an electric to a non-electric or conducting substance, and from one conducting substance to another. Chemical substances may be transferred from one vessel to another by galvanic action.—2. To make over; to pass; to convey, as a right, from one person to another; to sell; to give. The title to land is transferred by deed. The property of a bill of exchange may be transferred by indorsement. Stocks are transferred by assignment, or entering the same under the name of the purchaser in the proper books.

TRANS'FER, n. The removal or conveyance of a thing from one place or person to another.—2. The conveyance of right, title, or property, either real or personal, from one person to another, either by sale, by gift, or otherwise.—Transfer, in Eng. law, corresponds to conveyance, in Scots law, but the particular forms and modes included under the former term, differ very materially from those included under the latter. [See CONVEYANCE, CONVEYANCING.] Of late years various statutes have been passed for the purpose of facilitating the transfer of real property.

TRANSFERABIL'ITY, n. Quality of being transferable.

TRANSFER'ABLE, a. That may be transferred or conveyed from one place or person to another.—2. Negotiable, as a note, bill of exchange, or other evidence of property, that may be conveyed from one person to another by indorsement or other writing. The stocks of the public and of companies are transferable.

TRANSFER'RED, pp. Conveyed from one to another.

TRANSFERREE', n. The person to whom a transfer is made.

TRANSFER'RENCE, } n. The act of TRANS'FERENCE, } transferring; the act of conveying from one place, person, or thing, to another; the passage of any thing from one place to another, as the transference of electricity from one conducting body to another; the transference of chemical substances from one vessel to another by the agency of voltaic electricity.—2. In Scots law, that step by which a depending action is transferred from a person deceased to his representatives.

TRANSFER'RER, n. One who makes a transfer or conveyance.

TRANSFERRIBI'LITY. See TRANSFERABILITY.

TRANSFER'RIBLE, a. See TRANSFERABLE.

TRANSFER'RING, ppr. Removing from one place or person to another; conveying to another, as a right.

TRANSFER'RING, n. The act of conveying or removing from one place or person to another, as the transferring of lithographic prints or copperplate engravings from paper to wood or other material.—2. The act of conveying to another as a right.

TRANSFIGURA'TION, n. [Fr. See TRANSFIGURE.] A change of form; particularly, the supernatural change in the personal appearance of our Saviour on the mount. See Matt. xvii.—2. A feast held by the Romish church on the 6th of August, in commemoration of the miraculous change above mentioned.

TRANSFIG'URE, v. t. [L. trans and figura; Fr. transfigurer.] To transform; to change the outward form or appearance.

And was transfigured before them; Matt. xvii.

TRANSFIG'URED, pp. Changed in form.

TRANSFIG'URING, ppr. Transforming; changing the external form.

TRANSFIX', v. t. [L. transfixus, transfigo; trans and figo.]—To pierce through, as with a pointed weapon; as, to transfix one with a dart or spear.

TRANSFIX'ED, pp. Pierced through.

TRANSFIX'ING, ppr. Piercing through with a pointed weapon.

TRANSFIX'ION, n. The act of piercing through.

TRANS'FLUENT, a. In her. a term used to express water appearing in a coat, as if running through a bridge.

TRANS'FORATE, v. t. [L. transforo.] To bore through.

TRANS'FORATED, pp. Pierced, perforated.

TRANS'FORATING, ppr. Boring through.

TRANSFORM', v. t. [Fr. transformer; L. trans and forma.]—1. To change the form of; to change the shape or appearance; to metamorphose; as, a caterpillar transformed into a butterfly.—2. To change one substance into another; to transmute. The alchemists sought to transform lead into gold.—3. In theol., to change the natural disposition and temper of man from a state of enmity to God and his law, into the image of God, or into a disposition and temper conformed to the will of God.

Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind; Rom. xii

4. In the Romish church, to change the elements, bread and wine, into the flesh and blood of Christ.—5. Among the mystics, to change the contemplative soul into a divine substance, by which it is lost or swallowed up in the divine nature.—6. In alge., to change an equation into another of a different form, but of equal value. [See TRANSFORMATION, No. 7.]

TRANSFORM', v. i. To be changed in form; to be metamorphosed.

His hair transforms to down. Addison.

TRANSFORMA'TION, n. The act or operation of changing the form or external appearance.—2. Metamorphosis; change of form in insects; as, from a caterpillar to a butterfly.—3. Transmutation; the change of one metal into another, as of copper or tin into gold. 4. The change of the soul into a divine substance; as, among the mystics.—5. Transubstantiation.—6. In theol, a change of heart in man, by which his disposition and temper are conformed to the divine image; a change from enmity to holiness and love.—7. In math., a change made in the object of a problem, or in the shape of a formula, in such a way that the original problem or formula is more easily solved, calculated, or used after the change.—In alge., the transformation of an equation is the reducing it to an equation of a different form, but of equal value, in order to facilitate the solution; as, when an equation is changed to another whose roots are greater or less than the roots of the proposed equation, or some multiple or quotient of them.—8. In patho., a morbid change in a part, which consists in the conversion of its texture into one which is natural to some other part; as, when soft parts are converted into cartilage or bone.

TRANSFORM'ATIVE, a. Having power or a tendency to transform.

TRANSFORM'ED, pp. or a. Changed in form or external appearance; metamorphosed; transmuted; renewed.

TRANSFORM'ING, ppr. Changing the form or external appearance; metamorphosing; transmuting; renewing.—2. a. Effecting or able to effect a change of form or state; as, the transforming power of true religion.

TRANSFREIGHT',† v. i. (transfra'te.) To pass over the sea.

TRANSFRETA'TION, n. [L. trans and fretum, a strait.] The passing over a strait or narrow sea. [Little used.]

TRANSFUND',† v. t. [L. transfundo.] To pour from one vessel into another.

TRANSFUND'ED, pp. Transfused.

TRANSFUND'ING, ppr. Transfusing.

TRANSFUSE', v. t. (transfu'ze.) [Lat. transfusus, transfundo; trans and fundo.]—1. To pour, as liquor, out of one vessel into another.—2. To transfer, as blood from one animal to another.—3. To cause to pass from one to another; to cause to be instilled or imbibed; as, to transfuse a spirit of patriotism from one to another; to transfuse a love of letters.

TRANSFUSED, pp or a. Poured from one vessel into another.

TRANSFU'SIBLE, a. That may be transfused, &c.

TRANSFUSING, ppr. Pouring out of one vessel into another; transferring.

TRANSFUSION, n. (transfu'zhon.) The act of pouring, as liquor, out of one vessel into another. In chem. and phar. transfusions of liquors are frequent.—2. The act or operation of transferring the blood of one animal into the vascular system of another by means of a tube. This operation was long used in the hope that by injecting the blood of a healthy man or animal into the vessels of a diseased one, the health of the latter would be restored, but the attempt only proved mischievous. It has been found, however, that the injection of blood from the veins of a healthy person into the vessels of another person sinking from the effects of hæmorrhage, or great loss of blood, has been attended in various instances with the most beneficial effects.

TRANSGRESS', v. t. [Fr. transgresser; L. transgressus, transgredior; trans and gradior, to pass.]—1. To pass over or beyond any limit; to surpass.—2. In a moral sense, to overpass any rule prescribed as the limit of duty; to break or violate a law, civil or moral. To transgress a divine law, is sin. Legislators should not transgress laws of their own making.

TRANSGRESS', v. i. To offend by violating a law; to sin. 1 Chron. ii.

TRANSGRESS'ED, pp. Overpassed; violated.

TRANSGRESS'ING, ppr. Passing beyond; surpassing; violating; sinning.

TRANSGRES'SION, n. [Fr.] The act of passing over or beyond any law or rule of moral duty; the violation of a law or known principle of rectitude; breach of command.

He mourned because of the transgression of them that had been carried away. Ezra x.

Forgive thy people all their transgressions; 1 Kings viii.

2. Fault; offence; crime.

TRANSGRES'SIONAL, a. That violates a law or rule of duty.

TRANSGRESS'IVE, a. Faulty; culpable; apt to transgress.

TRANSGRESS'IVELY, adv. By transgressing.

TRANSGRESS'OR, n. One who breaks a law or violates a command; one who violates any known rule or principle of rectitude; a sinner.

The way of transgressors is hard; Prov. xiii.

TRANSHIP', v. t. [trans and ship.] To convey from one ship to another; a commercial word.

TRANSHIP'MENT, n. The act of transferring, as goods, from one ship to another.

TRANSHIP'PED, pp. Carried from one ship to another.

TRANSHIP'PING, ppr. Carrying from one ship to another.

TRAN'SIENCY, n. Transientness.

TRANSIENT, a. (tran'shent.) [L. transiens, transeo; trans and eo.] 1. Passing; not stationary; hence, of short duration; not permanent; not lasting or durable. How transient are the pleasures of this life!

Measur'd this transient world. Milton.

2. Hasty; momentary; imperfect; as, a transient view of a landscape.—Transient person, a person that is passing or travelling through a place; one without a settled habitation.—Transient effect, in painting, is a representation of appearances in nature produced by causes that are not stationary, as the shadows cast by a passing cloud. The term accidents has often the same signification.—Transient ship, a vessel not belonging to a line of packets; as, we had that news, by a transient ship, four days in advance. [Both this, and the term transient person, are confined to American use.]

TRAN'SIENTLY, adv. [supra.] In passage; for a short time; not with continuance.

I touch here but transiently ..on some few of those many rules of imitating nature, which Aristotle drew from Homer. Dryden.

TRAN'SIENTNESS, n. [supra.] Shortness of continuance; speedy passage.

TRANSIL'IENCE, TRANSIL'IENCY, n. [L. transiliens, transilio; trans and salio.] A leap from thing to thing. [Not much used.]

TRANSI'RE, n. [L.] A custom-house warrant, giving free passage for goods to a place; a permit.

TRANS'IT, n. [L. transitus, from transeo.] 1. A passing; a passing over or through; conveyance; as, the transit of goods through a country.—2. In astron., the passage of a heavenly body across the meridian of any place. The determination of the exact times of the transits of the heavenly bodies across the meridian of the place of observation enables the astronomer to ascertain the differences of right ascensions, and the relative situations of the fixed stars, and the motions of the sun, planets, and comets, in respect of the celestial meridians.—3. The passage of one heavenly body over the disc of a larger one. But the term is chiefly restricted to the passage of the inferior planets, Mercury and Venus, over the sun's disc. The transits of Venus are of great importance in astronomy, as they afford the best means of determining the sun's parallax, and consequently the dimensions of the planetary system. These transits are of rare occurrence. The last one took place June 3, 1769, and the next will happen December 8, 1874. The transits of Mercury occur more frequently, but they are comparatively useless, from the difficulty of observation.

TRANS'IT, v. t. To pass over the disc of a heavenly body.

TRANS'IT-DUTY, n. A duty paid on goods that pass through a country.

TRANS'ITED, pp. Passed over the disc of a heavenly body.

TRAN'SIT INSTRUMENT, n. An important astronomical instrument, which consists essentially of a telescope fixed at right angles to a horizontal axis, having its ends directed to the east and west points of the horizon, so that the line of collimation of the telescope may move in the plane of the meridian. The instrument is susceptible of certain nice adjustments, so that the axis can be made perfectly horizontal, and at right angles to the plane of the meridian, in which plane the telescope must move. The principal use of the transit instrument is to determine the exact moment when a celestial body passes the meridian of the place of observation. [See TRANSIT.]

TRANSI''TION, n. (transizh'on.) [L. transitio.] 1. Passage from one place or state to another; change; as, the transition of the weather from hot to cold. Sudden transitions are sometimes attended with evil effects.

The spots are of the same colour throughout, there being an immediate transition from white to black. Woodward.

2. In rhet., a passing from one subject to another. This should be done by means of some connection in the parts of the discourse, so as to appear natural and easy.

He with transition sweet new speech resumes. Milton.

3. In music, a change of key from major to minor, or the contrary; or in short, a change from any one genus or key to another; also, the softening of a disjunct interval by the introduction of intermediate sounds.—Transition rocks, transition series, or transition formations, in geol., names formerly given to the older secondary rocks, or to the lowest uncrystalline stratified rocks, erroneously supposed to contain no organic remains, and so named because they were considered to have been formed when the world was passing from an uninhabitable to a habitable state. The term transition, however, is no longer applicable in its original signification; and, accordingly, modern geologists include within the tertiary series all kinds of stratified rocks, from the earliest slates, in which we find the first traces of animal and vegetable remains, to the termination of the great coal formation. [See STRATA.]

TRANSI''TIONAL, TRANSI''TIONARY, a. Containing or denoting transition.

TRANS'ITIVE, a. Having the power of passing.—2. In gram., a transitive verb is one which is or may be followed by an object; a verb expressing an action which passes from the agent to an object, from the subject which does, to the object on which it is done. Thus, "Cicero wrote letters to Atticus." In this sentence, the act of writing, performed by Cicero, the agent, terminates on letters, the object. All verbs not passive, may be arranged in two classes, transitive and intransitive. In Eng., this division is correct and complete.

TRANS'ITIVELY, adv. In a transitive manner.

TRANS'ITIVENESS, n. State of being transitive.

TRANS'ITORILY, adv. [See TRANSITORY.] With short continuance.

TRANS'ITORINESS, n. A passing with short continuance; speedy departure or evanescence. Who is not convinced of the transitoriness of all sublunary happiness?

TRANS'ITORY, a. [L. transitorius.] 1. Passing without continuance; continuing a short time; fleeting; speedily vanishing.

O Lord, comfort and succour all them who, in this transitory life, are in trouble. Com. Prayer

2. In law, a transitory action is one which may be brought in any county, as actions for debt, detinue, slander, and the like. It is opposed to local.

TRAN'SIT TRADE, n. In com., the trade which arises from the passage of goods through one country to another.

TRANSLA'TABLE, a. [from translate.] Capable of being translated or rendered into another language.

TRANSLATE, v. t. [L. translatus, from transfero; trans, over, and fero, to bear; Sp. trasladar; It. traslatare.] 1. To bear, carry, or remove from one place to another. It is applied to the removal of a bishop from one see to another; and in Scotland, to the removal of a clergyman from one parish or one congregation to another.

The bishop of Rochester, when the king would have translated him to a better bishoprick, refused. Camden.

2. To remove or convey to heaven, as a human being, without death.

By faith, Enoch was translated, that he should not see death; Heb. xvi.

3. To transfer; to convey from one to another; 2 Sam. iii.—4. To cause to remove from one part of the body to another; as, to translate a disease.—5. To change.

Happy is your grace,
That can translate the stubbornness of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a style. Shak.

6. To interpret; to render into another language; to express the sense of one language in the words of another. The Old Testament was translated into the Greek language more than two hundred years before Christ. The Scriptures are now translated into most of the languages of Europe and Asia.—7. To explain.

TRANSLATED, pp. or a. Conveyed from one place to another; removed to heaven without dying; rendered into another language.

TRANSLATING, ppr. Conveying or removing from one place to another; conveying to heaven without dying; interpreting in another language.

TRANSLA'TION, n. [Fr. from L. translatio.] 1. The act of removing or conveying from one place to another; removal; as, the translation of a disease from the foot to the breast.—2. The removal of a bishop from one see to another; and in Scotland, the removal of a clergyman from one parish or one congregation to another. —3. The removal of a person to heaven without subjecting him to death.—4. The act of turning into another language; interpretation; as, the translation of Virgil or Homer.—5. That which is produced by turning into another language; a version. We have a good translation of the scriptures.—Motion of translation, in mech., a body is said to have motion of translation, when all its points move in parallel straight lines, or when all its points move with the same velocity. The motion of a single point considered by itself must always be that of translation. When all the points of a moving body have not the same motion, it must either move about a permanent or varying axis, or else its motion must be a compound of translation and rotation.

TRANSLATI′′TIOUS, a. Transposed; transported.

TRANSLA′TIVE, a. Taken from others.

TRANSLA′TOR, n. One who renders into another language; one who expresses the sense of words in one language by equivalent words in another.

TRANS′LATORY, } a. Transferring;
TRANSLA′TORY, } serving to translate.

TRANSLA′TRESS, n. A female translator.

TRANSLOCA′TION, n. [L. trans and locatio, loco.] Removal of things reciprocally to each others' places; or rather substitution of one thing for another.

> There happened certain translocations of animal and vegetable substances at the deluge. Woodward.

TRANSLU′CENCE, } n. [L. translu-
TRANSLU′CENCY, } cens; trans, through, and luceo, to shine.] 1. In min., the property of admitting rays of light to pass through, but not so as to render objects distinguishable.—2. Transparency.

TRANSLU′CENT, a. In min., transmitting rays of light, but not so as to render objects distinctly visible.—2. Transparent; clear.

> Replenish'd from the cool translucent springs. Pope.

TRANSLU′CENTLY, adv. In a translucent manner.

TRANSLU′CID, a. [L. translucidus, supra.] Transparent; clear. [See TRANSLUCENT.]

TRANSLUN′ARY,† a. [trans and luna.] Being beyond the moon.

TRANSMARINE, a. [L. transmarinus; trans and marinus; mare, sea.] Lying or being beyond the sea.

TRANSME′ATE, v. t. [L. trans, and meo, to pass; to flow.] To pass over or beyond. [Little used.]

TRANSMEW′,† v. t. [Fr. transmuer; L. transmuto.] To transmute; to transform; to metamorphose.

TRANS′MIGRANT, a. [See TRANSMIGRATE.] Migrating; passing into another country or state for residence, or into another form or body.

TRANS′MIGRANT, n. One who migrates or leaves his own country and passes into another for settlement.—2. One who passes into another state or body.

TRANS′MIGRATE, v. i. [L. transmigro; trans and migro, to migrate.] 1. To migrate; to pass from one country or jurisdiction to another for the purpose of residing in it; as men or families.—2. To pass from one body into another.

> Their souls may transmigrate into each other. Howell.

TRANS′MIGRATING, ppr. Passing from one country, state, or body into another.

TRANSMIGRA′TION, n. The passing of men from one country to another for the purpose of residence, particularly of a whole people.—2. The passing of a thing into another state, as of one substance into another.—3. The passing of the soul into another body, according to the opinion of Pythagoras; metempsychosis, - which see.

TRANS′MIGRATOR, n. One who transmigrates.

TRANSMI′GRATORY, a. Passing from one place, body, or state to another.

TRANSMISSIBIL′ITY, n. [from transmissible.] The quality of being transmissible.

TRANSMIS′SIBLE, a. [See TRANSMIT.] That may be transmitted or passed from one to another.—2. That may be transmitted through a transparent body.

TRANSMIS′SION, n. [Fr. from L. transmissio.] 1. The act of sending from one place or person to another; as, the transmission of letters, writings, papers, news, and the like, from one country to another; or the transmission of rights, titles, or privileges from father to son, and from one generation to another.—2. The passing of a substance through any body, as of light, through glass or other transparent body.

TRANSMIS′SIVE, a. Transmitted; derived from one to another.

> Itself a sun, it with transmissive light
> Enlivens worlds denied to human sight. Prior.

TRANSMIT′, v. t. [L. transmitto; trans and mitto, to send.] 1. To send from one person or place to another; as, to transmit a letter or a memorial; to transmit dispatches; to transmit money or bills of exchange from one city or country to another. Light is transmitted from the sun to the earth; sound is transmitted by means of vibrations of the air. Our civil and religious privileges have been transmitted to us from our ancestors; and it is our duty to transmit them to our children.—2. To suffer to pass through; as, glass transmits light; metals transmit electricity.

TRANSMIT′TAL, n. Transmission.

TRANSMIT′TED, pp. Sent from one person or place to another; caused or suffered to pass through.

TRANSMIT′TER, n. One who transmits.

TRANSMIT′TIBLE,† a. Transmissible.

TRANSMIT′TING, ppr. Sending from one person or place to another; suffering to pass through.

TRANSMOGRIFICA′TION, n. The act of transmogrifying, or transforming. [Low.]

TRANSMOG′RIFY, v. t. To transform. [A ludicrous and low word.]

TRANSMUTABIL′ITY, n. [See TRANSMUTE.] Susceptibility of change into another nature or substance.

TRANSMU′TABLE, a. [from transmute.] Capable of being changed into a different substance, or into something of a different form or nature.

> The fluids and solids of an animal body are transmutable into one another. Arbuthnot.

TRANSMUT′ABLENESS, n. Quality of being transmutable; transmutability.

TRANSMU′TABLY, adv. With capacity of being changed into another substance or nature.

TRANSMUTA′TION, n. [L. transmutatio.] 1. The change of any thing into another substance, or into something of a different nature. For a long time, the transmutation of base metals into gold or silver was deemed practicable, but nature proved refractory, and the alchemists were frustrated.—2. In geom., the change or reduction of one figure or body into another of the same area or solidity, but of a different form; as of a triangle into a square.—3. The change of colours, as in the case of a decoction of the nephritic wood.—4. In the vegetable economy, the change of a plant into another form; as of wheat into chess, according to the popular opinion. [See CHESS.]

TRANSMUTA′TIONIST, n. One who believes in the transmutation of metals.

TRANSMUTE′, v. t. [L. transmuto; trans and muto, to change.] To change from one nature or substance into another. Water may be transmuted into ice, and ice into water; the juices of plants are transmuted into solid substances; but human skill has not been able to transmute lead or copper into gold.

> A holy conscience sublimates every thing; it transmutes the common affairs of life into acts of solemn worship to God. J. M. Mason.

> The caresses of parents and the blandishments of friends, transmute us into idols. Buckminster.

TRANSMUT′ED, pp. Changed into another substance or nature.

TRANSMUT′ER, n. One that transmutes.

TRANSMUT′ING, ppr. Changing or transforming into another nature or substance.

TRANSMUT′UAL, a. Reciprocally mutual.

TRANSNATA′TION,† n. Act of swimming over.

TRAN′SOM, n. [L. transenna, from trans, over, across.] 1. In ships, transoms are beams or timbers fixed across the stern-post of the ship, to strengthen the after-part, and give it the figure most suitable to the service for which she is calculated. Transoms are distinguished into the helm-post transom, which is at the head of the stern-post; wing transom, the next below, which Frame of Ship, inside of Stern.

1. Main transom. 2, 2. Half transoms. 3. Transom. 4, 4. Transom knees. 5. Stern post.

forms the lower part; and deck transom, that whereon all the lower deck planks are rebated. Transom knees, those crooked timbers which support the highest transoms of the ship's quarter.—2. In arch., a horizontal bar of stone or timber across a mullioned window, dividing it into stories; also, the cross-bar separating the door from the fanlight above it.—3. In gunnery, transoms are pieces of wood which join the cheeks of gun-carriages, whence the terms transom plates, transom bolts, &c.

TRAN'SOM-WIN'DOW, n. A window with a cross-piece.

TRANS'PADANE, a. [L. trans and Padus, the river Po.] Being beyond the river Po.

TRANSPĀRENCE, TRANSPĀRENCY, n. [See TRANSPARENT.] That state or property of a body by which it suffers rays of light to pass through it, so that objects can be distinctly seen through it; diaphaneity. This is a property of glass, water, and air, which, when clear, admit the free passage of light. This property is supposed to arise from the disposition of the particles which compose the transparent body. No substance, however, can be said to be perfectly transparent; that is, there is no substance which does not intercept some part of the light incident upon it, and the transparency of a substance, as water and glass, diminishes as its thickness or depth increases. On the other hand, all bodies possess transparency in some degree; the most dense metals, as gold, when rendered very thin, transmit light. Transparency is opposed to opaqueness or opacity.—2. A picture painted on semi-transparent materials, such as very thin cloth, silver, or tissue paper, or taffeta, and illuminated by light placed at the back, so that it may be exhibited at night.

TRANSPĀRENT, a. [Fr. id.; L. trans and pareo, to appear.] 1. Having the property of transmitting rays of light so that bodies can be distinctly seen through; pervious to light; diaphanous; pellucid; as, transparent glass; a transparent diamond; opposed to opaque.—2. Admitting the passage of light; open; porous; as, a transparent veil.—3. In painting, a term applied to those colours which are either light and aërial in their own nature, or become so by the delicate manner in which they are laid on by the painter. Rubens made his colours transparent by the use of varnish.

TRANSPĀRENTLY, adv. Clearly; so as to be seen through.

TRANSPĀRENTNESS, n. The quality of being transparent; transparency.

TRANSPĂSS,† v. t. [trans and pass.] To pass over.

TRANSPĂSS,† v. i. To pass by or away.

TRANSPASS'ABLE,† a. That may be crossed or passed over; as a stream, &c.

TRANSPICU'OUS, a. [L. trans and specio, to see.] Transparent; pervious to the sight.

> The wide transpicuous air. Milton.

TRANSPIĔRCE, v. t. [Fr. transpercer.] To pierce through; to penetrate; to permeate; to pass through.

> His forceful spear the sides transpierc'd. Dryden.

TRANSPIĔRCED, pp. Pierced through; penetrated.

TRANSPIĔRCING, ppr. Penetrating; passing through.

TRANSPI'RABLE, a. [Fr.; from transpire.] Capable of being emitted through pores.

TRANSPIRA'TION, n. [Fr.; from transpire.] The act or process of passing off through the excretories of the skin; cutaneous exhalation; as, the transpiration of obstructed fluids. —Pulmonary transpiration, the exhalation of watery vapour which is constantly going on from the blood circulating through the lungs. It may be made evident by breathing on a cold reflecting surface.—2. In bot., the exhalation of watery vapour from the surface of the leaves of plants. This exhalation consists of a great part of the water which served as the vehicle of the nutritious substances contained in the sap. Sometimes the water thus given out appears in the form of extremely small drops at the tip of the leaf, and especially at the extremities of the nerves.

TRANSPIRE, v. t. [Fr. transpirer; L. transpiro; trans and spiro.] To emit through the excretories of the skin; to send off in vapour.

TRANSPIRE, v. i. To be emitted through the excretories of the skin; to exhale; to pass off in insensible perspiration; as, fluids transpire through the human body.—2. To escape from secrecy; to become public. The proceedings of the council have not yet transpired.—3. To happen or come to pass.

TRANSPIRED, pp. Emitted through the excretories of the skin; exhaled. —2. Escaped from secrecy.

TRANSPIRING, ppr. Exhaling; passing off in insensible perspiration; becoming public.

TRANSPLACE, v. t. [trans and place.] To remove; to put in a new place.

> It was transplaced from the left side of the Vatican to a more eminent place. Wilkins.
> [Little used.]

TRANSPLANT', v. t. [Fr. transplanter; trans and plant, L. planto.] 1. To remove and plant in another place; as, to transplant trees.—2. To remove and settle or establish for residence in another place; as, to transplant inhabitants. Salmaneser transplanted the Cuthites to Samaria.—3. To remove.

TRANSPLANTA'TION, n. The act of transplanting; the removal of a plant or of a settled inhabitant to a different place for growth or residence. —2. Removal; conveyance from one to another. Formerly men believed in the transplantation of diseases.

TRANSPLANT'ED, pp. Removed and planted or settled in another place.

TRANSPLAN'TER, n. One who transplants.—2. A machine for transplanting trees.

TRANSPLANT'ING, ppr. Removing and planting or settling in another place.

TRANSPLANT'ING, n. The act of removing a plant or tree from one situation to another, in such a manner as not to interrupt or prevent its growth. The best seasons for transplanting are the winter, the end of autumn, or the beginning of spring, as plants at those seasons are generally in a dormant state.

TRANSPLEND'ENCY, n. [L. trans and splendens. See SPLENDOUR.] Supereminent splendour.

TRANSPLEND'ENT, a. Resplendent in the highest degree.

TRANSPLEND'ENTLY, adv. With eminent splendour.

TRANSPŌRT, v. t. [L. transporto; trans and porto, to carry.] 1. To carry or convey from one place to another, either by means of beasts or vehicles on land, or by ships in water, or by balloons in air; as, to transport the baggage of an army; to transport goods from one country to another; to transport troops over a river.—2. To carry into banishment, as a criminal. Criminals are transported as a punishment for their crimes, which often amounts to banishment.—3. To hurry or carry away by violence of passion.

> They laugh as if transported with some fit
> Of passion. Milton.

4. To ravish with pleasure; to bear away the soul in ecstacy; as, to be transported with joy.—5. To remove from one place to another, as a ship by means of hawsers and anchors.

TRANS'PŌRT, n. Transportation; carriage; conveyance.

> The Romans stipulated with the Carthaginians to furnish them with ships for transport and war. Arbuthnot.

2. A ship or vessel employed by government for carrying soldiers, warlike stores, or provisions from one place to another, or to convey convicts to the place of their destination.—3. Rapture; ecstacy. The news of victory was received with transports of joy.—4. A convict transported or sentenced to exile.

TRANSPŌRTABIL'ITY, n. State of being transportable.

TRANSPŌRTABLE, a. That may be transported.

TRANSPŌRTANCE,† n Conveyance.

TRANSPORTA'TION, n. The act of carrying or conveying from one place to another, either on beasts or on vehicles, by land or water, or in air. Goods in Asia are transported on camels; in Europe, either on beasts or on carriages or waggons, either along roads or railways. But transportation by water is the great means of commercial intercourse.—2. Banishment for felony; a statutable punishment for a great variety of offences. Almost all the felonies which were, before the 1st October, 1837, capital offences, are by the statutes passed I. Victoria, punishable by transportation for a period not exceeding 15 years, nor less than 10 years, or imprisonment for not exceeding three years.—3. Transmission; conveyance.—4. Transport; ecstacy. [Little used.]—5. Removal from one country to another; as, the transportation of plants.—Transportation of a church, in Scots law, is the erection of a parish church in a different part of the parish from that in which it formerly stood. The power of determining as to the transportation of churches is lodged in the court of session, as the commission of teinds, but the consent of three-fourths of the heritors, in point of valuation, is necessary to the removal, and any party having interest may oppose it.

TRANSPŌRTED, pp. Carried; conveyed; removed; ravished with delight.

TRANSPŌRTEDLY, adv. In a state of rapture.

TRANSPŌRTEDNESS, n. A state of rapture.

TRANSPORTER, n. One who transports or removes.

TRANSPORTING, ppr. Conveying or carrying from one place to another; removing; banishing for a crime.—2. a. Ravishing with delight; bearing away the soul in pleasure; ecstatic; as, transporting joy.

TRANSPORT'INGLY, adv. Ravishingly.

TRANSPORTMENT, n. Transportation. [Little used.]

TRANSPOSAL, n. (transpo'zal.) [from transpose.] The act of changing the places of things, and putting each in the place which was before occupied by the other.

TRANSPOSE, v. t. (transpo'ze.) [Fr. transposer; trans and poser, to put.] 1. To change the place or order of things by putting each in the place of the other; as, to transpose letters, words, or propositions.—2. To put out of place.—3. In alge., to bring any term of an equation over from one side to the other side. Thus, if $a + b = c$, and we make $a = c - b$, then b is said to be transposed.—4. In gram., to change the natural order of words.—5. In music, to change the key.

TRANSPOSE, v. a. In typography. [See TRANSPRINT.]

TRANSPOSED, pp. Being changed in place and one put in the place of the other.—2. In her., reversed, or turned contrary-wise from the usual or proper position; as, a pile transposed, or the like.

TRANSPOSING, ppr. Changing the place of things and putting each in the place of the other.—2. Bringing any term of an equation over from one side to the other side.—3. Changing the natural order of words.

TRANSPOSING, a. Having the quality of changeableness of place; as, the action of a transposing piano, whereby its keys can all be affected at once.

TRANSPOSI''TION, n. [Fr. from L. transpositio.] 1. A changing of the places of things and putting each in the place before occupied by the other; as, the transposition of words in a sentence.—2. The state of being reciprocally changed in place.—3. In alge., the bringing over of any term of an equation from one side to the other side. This is done by changing the sign of the term so transposed from plus to minus or from minus to plus, and the operation is in effect subtracting the term from both sides of the equation when its sign is plus, and adding it to both sides when its sign is minus. If $a+x=b+c$; then, by transposing a, we get $x=b+c-a$. If again $x-a=b+c$; then, by transposing $-a$, we get $x=b+c+a$. The object of transposition is to bring all the known terms of an equation to one side, and all those that are unknown to the other side, in order to determine the value of the unknown terms, with respect to those which are known.—4. In gram., a change of the natural order of words in a sentence. The Latin and Greek languages admit transposition without inconvenience, to a much greater extent than the English.—5. In music, a change in the composition, either in the transcript or the performance, by which the whole is removed into a higher or lower key or pitch. This is effected in a written piece of music by raising or lowering all the notes on the staves to the required degree, and altering the signature accordingly.

TRANSPOSI''TIONAL, a. Pertaining to transposition.

TRANSPOS'ITIVE, a. Made by transposing; consisting in transposition.

TRANSUBSTAN'TIATOR, n. One who maintains the popish doctrine of transubstantiation.

TRANSUDA'TION, n. [from transude.] The act or process of oozing through membranes, or of passing off through the pores of a substance; as, water, blood, or other fluid. Physiologists make a distinction between transudation and perspiration. The latter implies a function by which the perspired fluid is secreted from the blood; whereas by transudation the blood or other fluid merely oozes through unaltered.

TRANSU'DATORY, a. Passing by transudation.

TRANSUDE, v. i. [L. trans and sudo, to sweat.] To pass or ooze through the pores or interstices of texture, as water or other fluid; as, a liquid may transude through a membranous substance or texture, or through wood.

TRANSUDING, ppr. Passing or oozing through the pores of a substance, as water or other fluid.

TRANSUME, v. t. [L. transumo; trans and sumo, to take.] To take from one to another; to take a duplicate of; to copy or transcribe; as a writing. [Little used.]

TRANSUMPT',† n. A copy of a writing or exemplification of a record. An action of transumpt, in Scots law, is an action competent to any one having a partial interest in a writing, or immediate use for it, to support his titles or defences in other actions, directed against the custodier of the writing, calling upon him to exhibit it, in order that a copy or transumpt of it may be made and delivered to the pursuer.

TRANSUMP'TION, n. The act of taking from one place to another.—2. In logic, a syllogism by concession or agreement, used where a question proposed is transferred to another with this condition, that a proof of the latter should be admitted for a proof of the former. [Little used.]

TRANSUMP'TIVE, a. Taking from one to another.

TRANSVEC'TION, n. [L. transvectio.] The act of conveying or carrying over.

TRANSVERS'AL, a [Fr., from L. trans and versus.] Running or lying across; as, a transversal line; a transversal muscle.

TRANSVERS'AL, n. In geom., a name given to a line drawn across several others so as to cut them all; as, when a straight or curved line intersects the three sides of a triangle.

TRANSVERS'ALLY, adv. In a direction crosswise.

TRANSVERSE, a. (transvers'.) [L. transversus; trans and versus, verto.] 1. Lying or being across or in a cross direction; as, a transverse diameter or axis. Transverse lines are the diagonals of a square or parallelogram. Lines which intersect perpendiculars, are also called transverse.—2. In bot., a transverse partition, in a pericarp, is at right angles with the valves, as in a silique.—3. In anat., a term applied to muscles, vessels, &c., which lie in a direction across other parts; as, the transverse muscle of the abdomen; the transverse suture which runs across the face.—Transverse axis or diameter, in the conic sections, is the diameter which passes through the foci. In the ellipse, it is the longest diameter; in the hyperbola, it is the shortest; and in the parabola, it is, like all the other diameters, infinite in length.—Transverse strain, in mech., is the strain to which a beam is subjected when a force acts on it in a direction at right angles to its length, tending to bend it or break it across. A beam is more easily broken when subjected to a transverse strain, than when it is subjected to a longitudinal strain.

TRANSVERSE, n. That which crosses or lies in a cross direction; a transverse axis.

TRANSVERSE, v t (transvers'.) To overturn. [Little used.]

TRANSVERS'ED, pp. Overturned.

TRANSVERSELY, adv. (transvers'ly.) In a cross direction; as, to cut a thing transversely.

TRAV'ERSE, n. [supra.] Any thing laid or built across.

There is a traverse placed in the loft where she sitteth. Bacon.

2. Something that thwarts, crosses, or obstructs; a cross accident. He is satisfied he should have succeeded, had it not been for unlucky traverses not in his power.—3. In fort., a trench with a little parapet for protecting men on the flank; also, a wall raised across a work.—4. In navigation, the variation or alteration of a ship's course, occasioned by the shifting of the winds, currents, &c.; or it is a compound course consisting of several courses and distances. The reducing such courses and distances into an equivalent single course and distance, is called resolving a traverse. [See TRAVERSE-SAILING.] - 5. In arch., the transverse piece in a timber roof; also, a gallery or loft of communication in a church or other large building.—6. In law, a denial of what the opposite party has advanced in any stage of the pleadings. When the traverse or denial comes from the defendant, the issue is tendered in this manner, "and of this he puts himself on the country." When the traverse lies on the plaintiff, he prays "this may be inquired of by the country." The technical words introducing a traverse, are absque hoc, without this; that is, without this which follows.—7. A turning; a trick. —8. In her., a bearing resembling the chevron; sometimes termed a doublet.

Traverse.

—Traverse the escutcheon, signifies across it.

TRAV'ERSE, v. t. To cross; to lay in a cross direction.

TRAV'ERSE-BOARD, n. [traverse and board.] In a ship, a thin circular piece of board, marked with all the points of the compass, and having eight holes bored in each, and eight small pegs hanging from the centre of the board. It is hung up in the steerage, and used to record the different courses run by a ship during the period of a watch. This record is kept by putting a peg in that point of the compass whereon the ship has run each half hour.

TRAV'ERSED, pp. Crossed; thwarted; passed or travelled over; denied; opposed; made to bear, as a cannon on the point intended. In her., turned to the sinister side of the shield.

TRAV'ERSER, n. A term in law for one who traverses or opposes a plea.

TRAV'ERSE-SAILING, n. In navigation, the sailing on different courses, for short distances, in succession; or it is the method of reducing compound courses and distances into an equivalent single course and distance, which is effected by trigonometrical computation, or by the aid of a traverse-table.

TRAV'ERSE-TABLE, n. [traverse and table.] In navigation, a table containing the difference of latitude, and the departure made on each individual course and distance in a traverse, by means of which the difference of latitude and departure made upon the whole, as well as the equivalent single course and distance, may be readily determined. For facilitating the resolving of traverses, tables have been calculated for all units of distance run, from 1 to 300 miles or more, with every angle of the course which is a multiple of 10′, together with the corresponding differences of latitude and departure. Such a table is useful for many other purposes.

TRAV'ERSING, ppr. Crossing; passing over; thwarting; turning; denying.

TRAV'ERTIN, n. [It. travertino.] A white concretionary limestone, usually hard and semi-crystalline, deposited from the water of springs holding carbonate of lime in solution. TREADER, n. (tred'er.) One who treads; Is. xvi.
TREADING, ppr. (tred'ing.) Stepping; pressing with the foot; walking on.
TREAD'ING, n. Act of pressing with the foot.
TREADLE, TRED'DLE, n. The part of a loom or other machine which is moved by the tread or foot.—2. The albuminous cords which unite the yolk of the egg to the white.
TREAD'MILL, n. A mill worked by persons treading on steps fixed on the periphery of a horizontal wheel. It is used chiefly as a means of prison discipline, or for giving useful employment to persons imprisoned for crime.

Tread Mill.

TREAD'-WHEEL, n. A wheel similar in principle to an overshot waterwheel. It is usually about 5 feet diameter, and 16 or more feet long. On its exterior surface are a number of steps placed horizontally, somewhat resembling the float boards of an undershot water wheel. On these steps a number of prisoners are placed, and all mounting the first step together, make it to descend by their weight, when they mount the next higher step, which descends in the same manner, and so on, causing the wheel to turn round, by treading on the steps in succession. They are assisted and supported in this labour by a horizontal rail which they lay hold of. The rotatory motion of the wheel thus produced, may be applied as the moving force for grinding corn, or in turning any other machinery.
TREAGUE, n. (treeg.) [Goth. triggwa; It. tregua; Ice. trigd, a truce, a league.] A truce.
TREASON, n. (tree'zn.) [Fr. trahison; Norm. trahir, to draw in, to betray, to commit treason, Fr. trahir, L. traho. See DRAW and DRAG.] In law, an overt or open act of compassing or devising the death of the king. But the term includes numerous acts and circumstances, which constructively and remotely, as well as immediately, affect the safety of the king's person; such as the violation of females of the royal family, levying war against the king in his realm, adherence to the king's enemies, counterfeiting the king's seals, the offence of slaying the chancellor or the judges; also, writings which import such compassings, or devices, attempts, or intentions, if published or shown to third persons, or words of advice, or persuasion, importing deliberation and design. There are no accessories to treason; all are held to be principals. The punishment for treason is, that the offender be drawn on a hurdle to the place of execution, and there hanged; that his head should be cut off; and the body divided into four quarters; but the king by warrant may dispense with all the immaterial parts of the punishment. The party attainted for treason forfeits all lands and property, and his heirs cannot take by any descent through him. Formerly treason used to be styled high treason, in contradistinction to what was termed petty treason, which was the killing of a master by his servant, a husband by his wife, but every offence which formerly amounted to petty treason is now deemed to be murder only, and not treason. In the United States, treason is confined to the actual levying of war against the United States, or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort.
TREASONABLE, a. (tree'znable.) Pertaining to treason; consisting of treason; involving the crime of treason, or partaking of its guilt.

Most men's heads had been intoxicated with imaginations of plots and treasonable practices. Clarendon.

TREASONABLENESS, n. Quality of being treasonable.
TREASONABLY, adv. In a treasonable manner.
TREASONOUS, for Treasonable, is not in use.
TREASURE, n. (trezh'ur.) [Fr. tresor; Sp. and It. tesauro; L. thesaurus; Gr. θησαυρος.] 1. Wealth accumulated; riches hoarded; particularly, a stock or store of money in reserve. Henry VII. was frugal and penurious, and collected a great treasure of gold and silver.—2. A great quantity of any thing collected for future use.

We have treasures in the field, of wheat and of barley, and of oil and of honey; Jer. xli.

3. Something very much valued; Ps. cxxxv.

Ye shall be a peculiar treasure to me; Exod. xix.

4. Great abundance.

In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge; Col. ii.

TREASURE, v. t. (trezh'ur.) To hoard; to collect and reposit, either money or other things, for future use; to lay up; as, to treasure gold and silver; usually with up. Sinners are said to treasure up wrath against the day of wrath; Rom. ii.

TREASURE-CITY, n. (trezh'ur-city.) A city for stores and magazines; Exod. i.

TREASURED, pp. (trezh'ured.) Hoarded; laid up for future use.

TREASURE-HOUSE, n. (trezh'ur-house.) A house or building where treasures and stores are kept.

TREASURER, n. (trezh'urer.) One who has the care of a treasure or treasury; an officer who receives the public money arising from taxes and duties or other sources of revenue, takes charge of the same, and disburses it upon orders drawn by the proper authority. Incorporated companies and private societies have also their treasurers.—Lord high treasurer, formerly the third great officer of the crown, who had under his charge and government all the king's revenue, which is kept in the Exchequer; but at present the duties of the lord high treasurer are discharged by commissioners entitled lords of the treasury. [See TREASURY.]—Lord high treasurer of Scotland, formerly an officer whose duty it was to examine and pass the accounts of the sheriffs, and others concerned in levying the revenues of the kingdom, to receive resignations of lands, and other subjects, and to revise, compound, and pass signatures, gifts of tutory, &c. In 1663, the lord high treasurer was declared president of the Court of Exchequer. The treasurer of the household, in the absence of the lord-steward, has power with the controller and other officers of the Green-cloth, and the steward of the Marshalsea, to hear and determine treasons, felonies, and other crimes committed within the king's palace. The treasurer of the navy is an officer who receives money out of the Exchequer, by warrant of the lords of the treasury, and pays all charges of the navy, by warrant from the principal officers of the navy.

TREAS'URERSHIP, n. (trezh'urership.) The office of treasurer.

TREASURESS, n. (trezh'uress.) A female who has charge of a treasure.

TREASURE-TROVE, n. (trezh'ur-trove.) [treasure and Fr. trouvé, found.] In law., any money or coin, gold, silver, plate, or bullion found hidden in the earth or in any private place, the owner of which is not known. In this case, the treasure becomes vested in the king by virtue of his prerogative; but if the owner is known or is ascertained after the treasure is found, the owner and not the king is entitled to it. In former ages, when persons were in the practice of burying their money, and other treasures in the earth, on account of the insecurity of property, treasure-trove became an important branch of the revenue of this and of most other European states.

TREAS'URING, ppr. Hoarding; laying up for future use.

TREASURY, n. (trezh'ury.) A place or building in which stores of wealth are reposited; particularly, a place where the public revenues are deposited and kept, and where money is disbursed to defray the expenses of government.—2. A department of government, which has control over the management, collection, and expenditure of the public revenue. The duties of this department are at present performed by a board of five lords commissioners, instead of a lord high treasurer, as in former times. The chief of these commissioners, or first lord of the treasury, is generally the prime minister for the time being; the other four junior lords have usually seats in parliament, as have also the two joint secretaries of the treasury. The other subordinate officers are a number of clerks, a receiver of fees, a keeper of the papers, a solicitor, a chamber keeper, messengers, house-keepers, extra clerks and extra messengers. The departments immediately under the control of the treasury, are the boards of customs, of excise, of stamps and taxes, and the post-office, the various officers in which are to a great extent appointed by the lords of the treasury. The chancellor of the Exchequer has the especial management of the revenue and expenditure of the nation, and when the prime minister or first lord of the treasury is a peer, the former takes the lead of the ministerial party in the house of commons, in which the seats occupied by that party are called the treasury benches. When the first lord of the treasury is a commoner, the offices of the prime minister and chancellor of the Exchequer are sometimes united in the same person.—3. A building appropriated for keeping public money; John viii. Also for keeping accounts of public money.—4. The officer or officers of the treasury department. [See No. 2.]—5. A repository of abundance; Ps. cxxxv.

TREAT, v. t. [Fr. traiter; It. trattare; L. tracto; Sax. trahtian.] 1. To handle; to manage; to use. Subjects are usually faithful or treacherous, according as they are well or ill treated. To treat prisoners ill, is the characteristic of barbarians. Let the wife of your bosom be kindly treated.—2. To discourse on. This author treats various subjects of morality.—3. To handle in a particular manner, in writing or speaking; as, to treat a subject diffusely.—4. To entertain without expense to the guest; to give food or drink, as a compliment or expression of regard; as, to treat the whole company to a dinner, or to a glass of wine.—5.† To negotiate; to settle; as, to treat a peace.—6. To manage in the application of remedies; as, to treat a disease or a patient.—7. To subject to the action of; as to treat a substance with sulphuric acid.

TREAT, v. i. To discourse; to handle in writing or speaking; to make discussions. Cicero treats of the nature of the gods; he treats of old age and of duties.—2. To come to terms of accommodation.

Inform us, will the emp'ror treat? Swift.

3. To make gratuitous entertainment; to give food or drink as a compliment or expression of regard.—To treat with, to negotiate; to make and receive proposals for adjusting differences. Envoys were appointed to treat with France, but without success.

TREAT, n. An entertainment given as a compliment or expression of regard; as, a parting treat.—2. Something given for entertainment; as, a rich treat.—3. Emphatically, a rich entertainment.

TREATABLE,† a. Moderate; not violent.

The heats or the colds of seasons are less treatable than with us. Temple.

TREATABLY,† adv. Moderately.

TREATED, pp. Handled; managed; used; discoursed on; entertained.

TREATER, n. One that treats; one that handles or discourses on; one that entertains.

TREATING, ppr. or a. Handling; managing; using; discoursing on; entertaining.

TREATING, n. The act of one who treats.—2. Bribing with meat and drink; as, no candidate averse to treating, need canvass the borough of Eatanswill.

TREATISE, n. [L. tractatus.] A tract; a written composition on a particular subject, in which the principles of it are discussed or explained. A treatise is of an indefinite length; but it implies more form and method than an essay, and less fulness or copiousness than a system.

TREATISER,† n. One who writes a treatise.

TREATMENT, n. [Fr. traitement.] 1. Management; manipulation; manner of mixing or combining, of decomposing and the like; as, the treatment of substances in chemical experiments.—2. Usage; manner of using; entertainment; good or bad behaviour towards.

Accept such treatment as a swain affords. Pope.

3. Manner of applying remedies to cure; mode or course pursued to check and destroy; as, the treatment of a disease.—4. Manner of applying remedies to; as, the treatment of a patient.

TREATY, n. [Fr. traité; It. trattato] 1. Negotiation; act of treating for the adjustment of differences, or for forming an agreement; as, a treaty is on the carpet.

He cast by treaty and by trains
Her to persuade. Spenser.

2. An agreement, league, or contract between two or more nations or sovereigns, formally signed by commissioners properly authorized, and solemnly ratified by the several sovereigns or the supreme power of each state. Treaties are of various kinds, as, treaties for regulating commercial intercourse, treaties of alliance, offensive and defensive, treaties for hiring troops, treaties of peace, &c. In most monarchies, the power of making and ratifying treaties is vested in the sovereign; in republics, it is vested in the chief magistrate, senate, or executive council; in the United States of America it is vested in the president, by and with the consent of the senate; while in the Germanic confederation, the particular states have the right of making treaties of alliance and commerce not inconsistent with the fundamental laws of the confederation. The East India Company enjoys the right of making treaties under certain limitations; but in all cases treaties can only be made by the sovereign power in a state, or by parties upon whom the sovereign power has conferred that right. Hence, in order to enable a public minister or other diplomatic agent to conclude and sign a treaty, he must be furnished with full power by the sovereign authority, and the treaty concluded in this manner is binding on the state, in the same manner as if it had been concluded immediately by the sovereign power. In most constitutional governments it is necessary that the sanction of the legislative body be given to treaties of commerce, or those which impose taxes on the people, entered into by the executive.—3.† Entreaty.

TREATY-MAKING, a. Authorized to make or form treaties; as, a treaty-making power.

TREBLE, a. (trib'l.) [Fr. triple; L. triplex, triplus; tres, three, and plexus, fold.] 1. Threefold; triple; as, a lofty tower with treble walls.—2. In music, acute; sharp; as, a treble sound; a treble voice.—3. That plays the highest part or most acute sounds; that plays the treble; as, a treble violin, &c.

TREBLE, n. (trib'l.) In music, the melody or air of a composition; the part of a symphony or concerted piece whose sounds are highest or most acute. In vocal music this part is performed by boys or females, and in instrumental music by violins, hautboys, flutes, &c., adapted to it. The treble is divided into first or highest treble, and second or low treble. Half treble is a high counter-tenor, sometimes called mezzo soprano.

TREBLE, v. t. (trib'l.) [Fr. tripler.] To make thrice as much; to make threefold. Compound interest soon trebles a debt.

TREBLE, v. i. (trib'l.) To become threefold. A debt at compound interest soon trebles in amount.

TREB'LE-CROSS-STAFF, n. The pope's cross staff, formed of three crosses.

TREBLENESS, n. (trib'lness.) The state of being treble; as, the trebleness of tones.

TREBLET, TRIBLET, n. A steel cylinder used as a mandrel in the process of drawing metal tubes.

TREBLY, adv. (trib'ly.) In a threefold number or quantity; as, a good deed trebly recompensed.

TREB'UCHET, n. In archæol., a rude war engine something of the nature of Trebuchet, from an ancient carving in ivory, representing a knight preparing the machine for battering his fair opponents with roses.

a balista. It was principally used by besiegers, for casting stones and other missiles into the towns and castles they beleaguered. The receptacle at the lower portion of the machine being filled with the missiles intended to be thrown, the upper arm of the instrument, loaded with a heavy weight, was allowed to descend, which, owing to the unequal balance, it did with great velocity; and the large arm then swung in the air, and scattered its contents.

TRE'BUCKET, TREB'UCHET, n. A tumbrel or cucking-stool.

TRECK'SCHUYT, n. [D.] A covered boat, drawn by horses or cattle, and used for conveying goods and passengers on the Dutch and Flemish canals. Such boats are now less used, owing to the introduction of railways.

TRED'DLES, n. plur. Dung of sheep or of hares. [Provincial.]

TREE, n. [Sax. treo, treow; Dan. træ; Sw. trä, wood, and träd, a tree; Gr. δρυς: Slav. drevo; Sans. druh, or drus. Qu. W. dar, an oak; Sans. taru, a tree. It is not easy to ascertain the real original orthography; most probably it was as in the Swedish or Greek.] 1. A perennial plant having a woody trunk of varying size, from which spring a number of branches, having a structure similar to the trunk. Trees are thus distinguished from shrubs which have perennial stems, but have no trunk properly so called; and from herbs, whose stems live only a single year. It is difficult, however, to fix the exact limit between trees and shrubs. Trees, as to classification, may be either dicotyledonous or exogenous, monocotyledonous or endogenous, acotyledonous or acrogenous. [See these Terms.] Trees are of various kinds; as, nuciferous, or nut-bearing trees; bacciferous, or berry-bearing; coniferous, or cone-bearing, &c.; standard trees, dwarf trees, wall trees, &c. Some are forest-trees, and useful for timber or fuel; others are fruit-trees, and cultivated in gardens and orchards; others are used chiefly for shade and ornament.—2. Something resembling a tree, consisting of a stem or stalk and branches; as, a genealogical tree.—3. In ship-building, pieces of timber are called chess-trees, cross-trees, roof-trees, tressel-trees, &c.—4. In scrip., a cross.

Jesus, whom they slew and hanged on a tree; Acts x

5.† Wood.—Tree of Liberty, a tree planted by the people of a country or state, to commemorate the achievement of their liberty, or the obtaining of some great accession to their liberties. Thus the Americans planted trees of liberty to commemorate the establishment of their independence in 1789; the Parisians planted trees of liberty to commemorate the revolution of 1848.

TREE, v. t. To drive to a tree; to cause to ascend a tree. A dog trees a squirrel. [American.]

TREE'-FERNS, n. The name given to several species of ferns, which attain to the size of trees; as, the Alsophila vestita, Cibotium billardieri, Chnoophora excelsa, &c. They are found in tropical countries.

TREE'-FROG, TREE'-TOAD, n. [tree and frog or toad.] The popular name of a batrachian genus of reptiles, (Hyla), differing from proper frogs, in the extremities of their toes, each of which is expanded into a rounded viscous pellet, that enables them to adhere to the surface of bodies, and to climb trees, where they remain all summer, living upon insects. There are numerous species. They are found in North America.

TREE-GER'MANDER, n. A plant of the genus Teucrium; the T. scorodonia. [See GERMANDER.]

TREE'LESS, a. Destitute of trees.

TREE'-LOUSE, n. [tree and louse.] Plant louse, an insect of the genus Aphis. [See APHIS.]

TREE'MALLOW, n. A British plant of the genus Lavatera; the L. arborea. [See LAVATERA.]

TREE'-MOSS, n. A species of lichen.

TREEN,† a. Wooden; made of wood.

TREEN,† n. The old plural of Tree.

TREE'NAILS, TRE'NAILS, TREN'NELS, n. [tree and nail; commonly pronounced trunnel.] In mar. lan., long cylindrical wooden pins, employed to fasten the planks of a ship's side and bottom to the corresponding timbers. The same name is also given to cylindrical wooden pins used by riggers for levers and heavers. In railway engineering, treenails are wooden pins about 6 inches long, and 1¼ inch diameter, inserted into the holes of the stone blocks or sleepers to fasten the chair to.

TREE-OF-LIFE, n. The common name of the species of plants of the genus Thuja or Thuya. [See THUJA.]

TREE'-TOAD, n. [tree and toad.] [See TREE-FROG.]

TRE'FALLOW, v. t. To plough land a third time before sowing. Written, also, thrifallow, trifallow, and tryfallow.

TREFLÉE, a. [Fr.] In her., an epithet applied to a cross, the arms of which end in three semicircles, each representing the trefoil or three-leaved grass. Bends are sometimes borne treflée, that is, with trefoils issuing from the side.

Cross Treflée.

TRE'FOIL, n. [Fr. tréfle; L. trifolium; tres, three, and folium, leaf.] The common name for many species of Trifolium, a genus of plants including white clover, red clover, &c., so well known as fodder-plants. [See TRIFOLIUM.] Also, a plant of the genus medicago, the M. lupulina, or black medick nonesuch, cultivated for fodder. Bird's foot trefoil is the common name for several species of the genus Lotus. [See LOTUS.]—2. In arch., an ornament, consisting of three cusps, representing three-leaved clover.

Trefoils.

TREILLAGE, n. (trel'lage.) [Fr. from treillis, trellis.] In gardening, a sort of rail-work, consisting of light posts and rails for supporting espaliers, and sometimes for wall-trees.

TREIL'LE, TRIL'LISE, n. [Fr.] In her., a lattice.

TREL'LIS, n. [Fr. treillis, grated work.] In gardening, a structure or frame of cross-barred work, or lattice work, used like the treillage for supporting plants.—2. In arch., a reticulated framing or lattice work of wood or metal, for screens, doors, or windows. It is also written trellice.

TREL'LIS, v. a. To furnish with a trellis, lattice, or wooden frame.

TREL'LISED, a. Having a trellis or trellises.

TREMAN'DO, [It. trembling.] In music, one of the harmonic graces, which consists in a general shake of the whole chord, and is thus distinguished from tremolo, which consists in a reiteration of a single note of the chord.

TREMA'TODES, TREMATO'DEA, n. A family of parenchymatous entozoa, or intestinal worms, comprising those which are furnished underneath the body, or at its extremity, with organs resembling cupping-glasses, by which they adhere to the viscera. The species infest horses, sheep, birds, fishes, &c.

TREM'BLE, v.i. [Fr. trembler; L. tremo; Gr. τρέμω; It. tremare; Sp. tremer.]—1. To shake involuntarily; as, with fear, cold, or weakness; to quake; to quiver; to shiver; to shudder.

TREM'BLING, n. The act or state of shaking involuntarily; as, from fear, cold, or weakness.

TREM'BLINGLY, adv. So as to shake; with shivering or quaking.

> Tremblingly she stood.

TREM'BLING POPLAR, n. The aspen tree, Populus tremula, so called.

TREM'BLINGS, n. An inflammatory affection in sheep, caused by eating noxious vegetables.

TREMEL'LA, n. A genus of fungi, the species of which are known by their amorphous character, by having a soft gelatinous appearance, and looking like gummy exudations of the substances on which they grow. They are all found on the decaying branches, trunks, and stumps of trees. The most common species is T. mesenterica or yellow nostoc, which is edible.

TREMEN'DOUS, a. [L. tremendus, from tremo, to tremble.]—1. Such as may excite fear or terror; terrible; dreadful. Hence—2. Violent; such as may astonish by its force and violence; as, a tremendous wind; a tremendous shower; a tremendous shock or fall; a tremendous noise.

TREMEN'DOUSLY, adv. In a manner to terrify or astonish; with great violence.

TREMEN'DOUSNESS, n. The state or quality of being tremendous, terrible, or violent.

TREM'OLITE, n. A mineral, so called from Tremola, a valley in the Alps, where it was discovered. It is classed by Haüy, with hornblend or amphibole, and called amphibole grammatite. It is of three kinds, asbestous, common, and glassy tremolite; all of a fibrous or radiated structure, and of a pearly colour. Tremolite is a subspecies of straight-edged augite.

TRE'MOR, n. [L. from tremo.] An involuntary trembling; a shivering or shaking; a quivering or vibratory motion; as, the tremor of a person who is weak, infirm, or old, or labouring under some disorder.

> He fell into a universal tremor. Harvey.

TREM'ULOUS, a. [L. tremulus, from tremo, to tremble.] 1. Trembling; affected with fear or timidity; as, a tremulous Christian.—2. Shaking; shivering; quivering; as a tremulous limb; a tremulous motion of the hand or the lips; the tremulous leaf of the poplar.

TREM'ULOUSLY, adv. With quivering or trepidation.

TREM'ULOUSNESS, n. The state of trembling or quivering; as, the tremulousness of an aspen leaf.

TREN, n. A fish spear.

TRENCH, v. t. [Fr. trancher, to cut; It. trincea, a trench; trinciare, to cut; Sp. trincar, trinchear; Arm. troucha; W. trygu.]—1. To cut or dig, as a ditch, a channel for water, or a long hollow in the earth. [This is the appropriate sense of the word.]—2. In agriculture, to turn over and mix soil to the depth of two, three, or more spades or spits. —3. To fortify by cutting a ditch and raising a rampart or breast-work of earth thrown out of the ditch. [In this sense, entrench is more generally used.]—4. To furrow; to form with deep furrows by ploughing.—5. To cut a long gash.†

TRENCH, v. i. To encroach, with on or upon; as, to trench upon another's rights. [See ENTRENCH.]

TRENCH, n. A long narrow cut in the earth; a ditch; as, a trench for draining land.—2. In agriculture, a narrow shallow ditch, for conveying water out of main ditches to float land, where irrigation is necessary, as in meadows.— 3. In fort., a deep ditch cut for defence, or to interrupt the approach of an enemy. The wall or breast-work, formed by the earth thrown out of the ditch, is also called a trench, as also any raised work, formed with bavins, gabions, wool-packs, or other solid materials. Hence the phrases, to mount the trenches, to guard the trenches, to clear the trenches, &c.—To open the trenches, to begin to dig, or to form the lines of approach.

TRENCH'ANT, TRENCH'AND, a. [Fr. tranchant.] Cutting; sharp. [Little used.]

TRENCH' DRAINS. Drains cut parallel to a trench, one on each side of it. Their use is to carry away the water immediately after it has flowed over the panes, or those portions of meadow land which lie between the trench and trench drains.

TRENCH'ED, pp. Cut into long hollows or ditches; furrowed or dug deep.

TRENCH'ER, n. [Fr. tranchoir.] 1. A wooden plate, on which meat was formerly eaten at table. In various country places wooden trenchers are still so used.—2. The table.—3. Food; pleasures of the table.

> It would be no ordinary declension that would bring some men to place their summum bonum upon their trenchers. South.

TRENCH'ER CAP, n. The square cap worn by the collegians at Oxford and Cambridge.

TRENCH'ER-FLY, n. [trencher and fly.] One that haunts the tables of others; a parasite.

TREN'TAL, TREN'TALS, n. [Fr. trente, thirty; contracted from L. triginta, It. trenta.] An office for the dead in the Romish service, consisting of thirty masses rehearsed for thirty days successively after the party's death.

TREPAN', n. [Fr. trepan; It. trapano; Gr. τρύπανον, from τρυπάω, to bore; τρύπα, a hole; τρύω. Qu. L. tero, terebra.] In sur., a circular saw for sawing a circular portion of bone out of the skull. It resembles a wimble, and is worked in the same manner. [See TREPHINE.]

TREPAN', v. t. To perforate the skull and take out a piece; a surgical operation for relieving the brain from pressure or irritation.

TREPAN', a snare, and Trepan, to insnare, are from trap, and should be written trapan,—which see.

TRE'PANG, TRI'PANG, n. The sea-slug, a marine animal of the genus Holothuria, belonging to the order Radiata. It is found chiefly on coral reefs in the eastern seas, and is highly esteemed as an article of food in China, into which it is imported in large quantities. It is an unseemly looking animal, somewhat resembling the land-slug in shape, but having rows of tentaculiform suckers on its body, and a radiated mouth. The ordinary length is about a span, and the girth two or three inches, although some are found two feet in length, and seven or eight inches in circumference. When the trepang is taken, it is gutted, dipped for a short time in boiling water, then boiled in salt water for eight or ten hours, along with pieces of red mangrove bark, then dried and smoked over a wood fire, and this is all the preparation it receives. The fishery is carried on in numerous localities in the Indian ocean, the eastern Archipelago, and on the shores of Australia. The whole produce goes to China.

Trepang (Holothuria edulis).

TREPAN'NED, pp. Having the skull perforated.—2. Entrapped. See TRAPAN.

TREPAN'NER, n. One who trepans.

TREPAN'NING, ppr. Perforating the skull with a trepan.—2. Entrapping.

TREPAN'NING, n. The operation of making an opening in the skull, for relieving the brain from compression or irritation.—2. Insnaring.

TREPH'INE, n. [See TREPAN.] An improved form of the trepan, generally used by English surgeons instead of the trepan, which is used on the Continent. It consists of a cylindrical saw, with a handle placed transversely, like that of a gimlet, and has a sharp steel point, called the centre-pin, which may be fixed and removed at pleasure, and which stands in the centre of the circle formed by the saw, but projecting a little below the edge of the saw. The centre-pin is fixed in the skull, and forms an axis, round which the circular edge of the saw rotates, and as soon as the teeth of the saw have made a circular groove in which they can work steadily, the centre-pin is removed. The saw is made to cut through the bone, not by a series of complete rotations, such as are made by the trepan, but by rapid half rotations, alternately to the right and left, as in boring with an awl. The trephine is used especially in injuries of the head, and in cases resulting from injuries, for which the removal of a portion of the brain is necessary. The use of the trephine, however, is now much more rarely required than in former times, owing to improved modes of treating cases to which it was formerly applied, and the invention of simpler and more effective instruments.

TREPH'INE, v. t. To perforate with a trephine; to trepan.

TREPH'INED, pp. Trepanned.

TREP'ID,† a. [L. trepidus.] Trembling; quaking.

TREPIDA'TION, n. [L. trepidatio, from trepido, to tremble; Russ. trepeg, a trembling; trepeschu, to tremble.]—1. An involuntary trembling; a quaking or quivering, particularly from fear or terror; hence, a state of terror. The men were in great trepidation.—2. A trembling of the limbs, as in paralytic affections.—3. In the old astr., a libration of the eighth sphere, or a motion which the Ptolemaic system ascribes to the firmament, to account for the changes and motion of the axis of the world.—4. Hurry; confused haste.

TRES'AYLE, n. In Eng. law, a writ sued on ouster by abatement, on the death of a grandfather's grandfather.

TRES'PASS, v. i. [Norm. trespasser; tres, L. trans, beyond, and passer, to pass.]—1. Literally, to pass beyond; hence, primarily, to pass over the boundary line of another's land; to enter unlawfully upon the land of another. A man may trespass by walking over the ground of another, and the law gives a remedy for damages sustained.—2. To commit any offence, or to do any act that injures or annoys another; to violate any rule of rectitude, to the injury of another.

> If any man shall trespass against his neighbour, and an oath be laid upon him; 1 Kings viii.; see Luke xvii. 3, 4.

3. In a moral sense, to transgress voluntarily any divine law or command; to violate any known rule of duty.

> In the time of his disease did he trespass yet more; 2 Chron. xxviii.

> We have trespassed against our God; Ezra x.

4. To intrude; to go too far; to put to inconvenience by demand or importunity; as, to trespass upon the time or patience of another.

TRES'PASS, n. In law, strictly speaking, any transgression of the law not amounting to felony, or misprision of felony; but the term is generally used to signify any wrong done to the person, to the goods and chattels, or to the lands and tenements of any man. Any injuries or adverse contacts, committed against real property, that is, land or buildings, are, in the most ordinary sense of the word, trespasses; as entering another's house without permission, walking over the ground of another, or suffering any cattle to stray upon it, undermining, or even piling earth against a wall, or any detrimental act, or any practice which damages in the slightest degree the property, or interferes with the owner's or occupier's rights of possession. Trespass against the person may be by menace, assault, battery, or maiming. When an act is done which is in itself an immediate injury to another's person or property, it is called trespass vi et armis; such as assault and battery, or breaking and entering a house or close; also, where an act is not immediately injurious, but only by consequence and collaterally, it is termed special trespass, or trespass on the case. Actions which lie to redress the wrongs or injuries abovementioned are called actions of trespass.—2. Any injury or offence done to another.

> If ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses; Matt. vi.

3. Any voluntary transgression of the moral law; any violation of a known rule of duty; sin. Col. ii.

> You hath he quickened, who were dead in trespasses and sins; Eph. ii.

TRES'PASSER, n. One who commits a trespass; one who enters upon another's land, or violates his rights.—2. A transgressor of the moral law; an offender; a sinner.

TRES'PASSING, ppr. Entering another man's inclosure; injuring or annoying another; violating the divine law or moral duty.

TRES'PASS-OF'FERING, n. An offering, among the Israelites, for a trespass.

TRESS, n. [Fr. and Dan. tresse; Sw. tress, a lock or weft of hair; Dan. tresser, Sw. tressa, Russ. tresuyu, to weave, braid, or twist. The Sp. has trenza, and the Port. trança, a tress. The French may possibly be from the It. treccia, but probably it is from the North of Europe.] A knot or curl of hair; a ringlet.

> Fair tresses man's imperial race insnare. Pope.

TRESS'ED, a. Having tresses.—2. Curled; formed into wringlets.

TRES'SEL, TRES'TLE, TRUS'SEL, n. [Fr. tréteau, for tresteau; W. três, a trace, a chain, a stretch, labour; tresiaw, to labour, that is, to strain; trestyl, a strainer, a trestle. This root occurs in stress and distress.]—1. The frame of a table. [Qu. D. driestal, a three-legged stool.]—2. A movable form for supporting any thing.—3. In arch., a prop for the support of any thing which requires to be placed horizontally. It consists of three or four legs, attached to a horizontal piece, and frequently braced to give them strength and firmness. Tressels are much used for the support of scaffolding, in building, &c., and also by carpentors and joiners, for resting timber upon during the operations of ripping and cross-cutting, and for other purposes.—Trestle-trees, in a ship, are two strong bars of timber, fixed horizontally, and fore and aft, on the opposite sides of the lower mast-head, to support the frame of the top and the top-mast.

TRESS'URE, n. In her., a kind of border. The diminutive of the orle, and generally reckoned one-half of that ordinary. It passes round the field in the same shape and form as the escutcheon, whatever shape it may be, and is usually borne double and flory counter-flory.

Tressure

TRES'SURED, a. Bound with a tressure.

TRET, n. [probably from L. tritus, tero, to wear.] In com., an allowance to purchasers, for waste or refuse matter, or for dust or sand which may be mixed with commodities. It consists of a deduction of 4 lbs. for every 104 lbs. of suttle weight, or weight after the tare is deducted. It is now nearly discontinued by merchants, or else allowed in the price.

TRETH'INGS,† n. [W. trêth, a tax; trethu, to tax.] Taxes; imposts.

TREV'ET, n. [three-feet, tripod; Sax. thriefet; Fr. trépied.] A stool or other thing that is supported by three legs. [See TRIVET.]

TREY, n. [L. tres, Eng. three, Fr. trois.] A three at cards; a card of three spots.

TRI, a prefix in words of Greek and Latin origin, signifies three, from Gr. τρεις.

TRI'ABLE a. [from try.] That may be tried; that may be subjected to trial or test.—2. That may undergo a judicial examination; that may properly come under the cognizance of a court. A cause may be triable before one court, which is not triable in another. In England, testamentary causes are triable in the ecclesiastical courts.

TRI'ABLENESS, n. The state of being triable.

TRIACONTAHE'DRAL, a. [Gr. τριακοντα, thirty, and εδρα, side.] Having thirty sides. In min., bounded by thirty rhombs.

TRI'ACONTER, n. [Gr. τριακοντηρης.] In ancient Greece, a vessel of thirty oars.

TRI'AD, n. [L. trias, from tres, three.] The union of three; three united. In music, triad, or harmonic triad, is the common chord or harmony, and so named because it is formed of three radical sounds, a fundamental note or bass, its third, and its fifth.—Triads of the Welsh bards, poetical histories in which the facts recorded are thrown into a kind of triplets.

TRI'AL, n. [from try.] Any effort or exertion of strength for the purpose of ascertaining its effect, or what can be done. A man tries to lift a stone, and on trial finds he is not able. A team attempts to draw a load, and after unsuccessful trial, the attempt is relinquished.—2. Examination by a test; experiment; as in chemistry and metallurgy.—3. Experiment; act of examining by experience. In gardening and agriculture, we learn by trial what land will produce; and often repeated trials are necessary.—4. Experience; suffering that puts strength, patience, or faith to test; afflictions or temptations that exercise and prove the graces or virtues of men.

> Others had trial of cruel mockings and scourgings; Heb. xi.

5. In law, the examination of a cause in controversy between parties, before a proper tribunal. Trials are civil or criminal. Trial in civil causes, may be by certificate, by the record, or by a jury. By the laws of this country, trial by jury, in criminal cases, is held sacred. No criminal can be legally deprived of that privilege.—Trial by inspection, takes place where the judges personally examine and decide the question in dispute; but this practice has been long obsolete.—Trial at the bar, is one which resembles the ordinary cases of trials by jury, except that instead of its being presided over by a single judge, all the judges of the court in which the action is brought are in attendance. It is granted only in cases of great difficulty and importance. In ordinary cases it has long been superseded by trial at nisi prius. New trials in civil cases are granted, where the court, of which the record is, sees reason to be dissatisfied with a verdict, on the ground of a misdirection by the judge to the jury, a verdict against evidence, excessive damages, improper evidence, fresh evidence discovered after the verdict was given, &c. [See CERTIFICATE, JURY, RECORD.]—6. Temptation; test of virtue.

> Every station is exposed to some trials. Rogers.

7. State of being tried.

TRIAL'ITY, n. [from three.] Three united; state of being three. [Little used.]

TRI'ALOGUE, n. [Gr. τρεις, three, and λεγω, to speak.] Discourse by three speakers; a colloquy of three persons.

TRI'ANDER, n. [Gr. τρεις, three, and ανηρ, a male.] A monoclinous or hermaphrodite plant having three distinct and equal stamens. Triandria is the name given to the third class of plants in the sexual system of Linn. It comprises those plants which have hermaphrodite flowers, with three distinct stamens, as the crocus, the valerian, Triander, Common Valerian.

a, Floret enlarged. b, Section of a floret.

and almost all the grasses. It comprehends three orders, monogynia, digynia, and trigynia. Triandria is also the name of several orders in the Linnæan system, the plants of which, besides their classic characters, have three stamens.

TRIAN'DRIAN, } a. Having three dis-
TRIAN'DROUS, } tinct and equal stamens, in the same flower with a pistil or pistils.

TRI'ANGLE, n. [Fr. from L. triangulum; tres, tria, three, and angulus, a corner.] 1. In geom., a figure bounded by three lines, and containing three angles. The three angles of a plane triangle are equal to two right angles, or 180°, and its area is equal to half that of a rectangle or parallelogram of the same base and altitude. The triangle is the most important figure in geometry, and may be considered the element of all other figures. If the three lines or sides of a triangle are all right, it is a plane or rectilinear triangle; as, figs. 1, 2, 3, 4. If all the three sides are equal, it is an equilateral triangle; fig. 2. If two of the sides only are equal, it is an isosceles or equicrural triangle; fig. 3. If all the three sides are unequal, it is a scalene or scalenous triangle; fig. 4. If one of the angles is a right angle, the triangle is right-angled; as, fig. 1, having the right angle A. If one of the angles is obtuse, the triangle is called obtuse-angled or amblygonous; as fig. 4, having the obtuse angle B. If all the angles are acute, the triangle is acute-angled or oxygonous; figs. 2, 3. If the three lines of a triangle are all curves, the triangle is said to be curvilinear; fig. 5. If some of the sides are right and others curve, the triangle is said to be mixtilinear; fig. 6. If the sides are all arcs of great circles of the sphere, or arcs of the same circle, the triangle is said to be spherical; fig. 5.—2. An instrument of percussion in music, made of a rod of polished steel, bent into the form of a triangle, and open at one of its angles. It is sounded by being struck with a small steel rod.—3. In astron., one of the 48 ancient constellations, situated in the northern hemisphere, surrounded by Perseus, Andromeda, Aries, and Musca. Also the name of one of the new southern constellations, lying between Ara, Centaurus, and the South Pole.—4. In the army, three halberts stuck in the ground, and united at the top, to which soldiers are bound when flogged.

Triangle.

TRIAN'GLED, a. Having three angles; having the form of a triangle; formed into triangles.

TRIAN'GULAR, a. Having three angles; having the form of a triangle; relating to a triangle.—In bot., a triangular stem has three prominent longitudinal angles; a triangular leaf has three prominent angles, without any reference to their measurement or direction.—Triangular prism, a prism whose ends are equal, similar, and parallel triangles, its three sides being parallelograms.—Triangular pyramid, a pyramid whose base is a triangle, its sides consisting of three triangles which meet in a point called its vertex.—Triangular compasses, compasses having three legs, by means of which any triangle or any three points may be taken off at once. This instrument is useful in the construction of maps, charts, &c.—Triangular numbers, the series of figurate numbers, which consists of the successive sums of the terms of an arithmetical series, whose first term is 1, and the common difference 1. Thus, 1, 3, 6, 10, 15, 21, 28, &c., are triangular numbers. They are so called because the number of points expressed by any one of them may be arranged in the form of an equilateral triangle.

TRIANGULA'RITY, n. Quality of being triangular.

TRIAN'GULARLY, adv. After the form of a triangle.

TRIAN'GULATE, v. t. In surveying, to divide into angles, or triangular net-work, by mensuration.

TRIAN'GULATED, a. Having a triangular form.

TRIAN'GULATING, n. The operation of laying down a net-work of triangles in the trigonometrical survey of a country.

TRIANGULA'TION, n. The net-work of triangles with which the face of a country is covered in a trigonometrical survey.

TRIAN'THEMA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Portulaceæ. The flowers grow in threes in the axils of the leaves. The species inhabit the tropical parts of the old and new world, and in the subtropical parts of Africa. T. obcordata is employed by the natives of India as a pot herb.

TRIAR'CHEE, } a. In heraldry,
TRE'BLE ARCHED, } formed of three archings or having three arches.

TRI'ARCHY, n. [Gr. τρεις and αρχη.] Government by three persons.

TRIA'RIAN, a. [L. triarii.] Occupying the third post or place.

TRI'AS, n. In geol., a name sometimes given to the upper new red sandstone.

TRIAS'SIC, a. Pertaining to or composed of trias.

TRI'BAL, a. Belonging to a tribe.

TRIBE, n. [W. trev; Gael. treabh; Sax. thorpe, D. dorp, G. dorf; Sw. and Dan. torp, a hamlet or village; L. tribus. We have tribe from the last. In Welsh, the word signifies a dwelling place, homestead, hamlet, or town, as does the Sax. thorpe. The Sax. træf is a tent; Russ. derevni, an estate, a hamlet. From the sense of house, the word came to signify a family, a race of descendants from one progenitor, who originally settled round him and formed a village.] 1. A family, race, or series of generations, descending from the same progenitor, and kept distinct, as in the case of the twelve tribes of Israel, descended from the twelve sons of Jacob.—2. A division, class, or distinct portion of people, from whatever cause that distinction may have originated. The city of Athens was divided into ten tribes. Rome was originally divided into three tribes; afterward the people were distributed into thirty tribes, and afterward into thirty-five.—3. A number of things having certain characters or resemblances in common; as, a tribe of plants; a tribe of animals. Linnæus distributed the vegetable kingdom into three tribes, viz., monocotyledonous, dicotyledonous, and acotyledonous plants, and these he subdivided into gentes or nations. By recent naturalists, tribe has been used for a division of animals or vegetables, intermediate between order and genus. Cuvier divides his orders into families, and his families into tribes, including under the latter one or more genera. Leach, in his arrangement of insects, makes his tribes, on the contrary, the primary subdivisions of his orders, and his families subordinate to them, and immediately including the genera.—Tribes of plants, in gardening, are such as are related to each other by some natural affinity or resemblance; as, by their duration, the annual, biennial, and perennial tribes; by their roots, as the bulbous, tuberous, and fibrous-rooted tribes; by the loss or retention of their leaves, as the deciduous and evergreen tribes; by their fruits and seeds, as the leguminous, bacciferous, coniferous, nuciferous, and pomiferous tribes, &c. —4. A division; a number considered collectively.—5. A nation of savages; a body of rude people united under one leader or government; as, the tribes of the six nations; the Seneca tribe in America.—6. A number of persons of any character or profession; in contempt; as, the scribbling tribe.

TRIBE, v. t. To distribute into tribes or classes. [Not much used.]

TRIB'LET, } n. A goldsmith's tool
TRIB'OLET, } for making rings. [See TREBLE.]

TRIBOM'ETER, n. [Gr. τριβω, to rub, or wear, and μετρον, measure.] The name given by Musschenbroek and Coulomb to an apparatus for measuring the force of friction in rubbing surfaces.

TRI'BRACH, n. [Gr. τρεις, three, and βραχυς, short.] In ancient prosody, a poetic foot of three short syllables, as mĕlĭtŭs.

TRIBRAC'TEATE, a. Having three bracts.

TRIBULA'TION, n. [Fr. from L. tribulo, to thrash, to beat.] Severe affliction; distresses of life; vexations. In scrip., it often denotes the troubles and distresses which proceed from persecution.

> When tribulation or persecution ariseth because of the word, he is offended; Matt. xiii.

> In the world ye shall have tribulation; John xvi.

TRI'BULUS, n. Caltrops, a genus of plants, nat. order Rutaceæ. The fruit is armed with prickles. The species are found in the South of Europe, and in the tropical and subtropical parts of the world. T. terrestris, and T. cistoides, are said to possess aperient properties.

TRIBU'NAL, n. [L. tribunal, from tribunus, a tribune, who administered justice.] 1. Properly, the seat of a judge; the bench on which a judge and his associates sit for administering justice.—2. More generally, a court of justice; as, the house of lords is the highest tribunal in the kingdom.

TRIB'UNARY, a. [from tribune.] Pertaining to tribunes.

TRIB'UNATE, n. Tribuneship,—which see.

TRIB'UNE, n. [Fr. tribun; L. tribunus, from tribus, tribe; Sp. and It. tribuno.] 1. In ancient Rome, an officer or magistrate chosen by the people, to protect them from the oppression of the patricians or nobles, and to defend their liberties against any attempts that might be made upon them by the senate and consuls. These magistrates were at first two, but their number was increased ultimately to ten. There were also military tribunes, officers of the army, each of whom commanded a division or legion. In the year of Rome 731, the senate transferred the authority of the tribunes to Augustus and his successors. There were also other officers called tribunes; as, tribunes of the treasury, of the horse, of the making of arms, &c.—2. A bench or elevated place, from which speeches were delivered.—3. In France, a pulpit or elevated place in the chamber of deputies, where a speaker stands to address the assembly.

TRIB'UNESHIP, } n. The office of a
TRIB'UNATE, } tribune.

TRIBUNI''CIAN, } a. Pertaining to TRIBUNI''TIAL, } tribunes; as, tribunician power or authority.—2. Suiting a tribune.

TRIBUNI''TIOUS, a. Pertaining to tribunes. [Little used.]

TRIB'UTARILY, adv. In a tributary manner.

TRIB'UTARINESS, n. The state of being tributary. [Not authorized.]

TRIB'UTARY, a. [from tribute.] Paying tribute to another, either from compulsion, as an acknowledgment of submission, or to secure protection, or for the purpose of purchasing peace. Many states of Hindostan are tributary to the British East India Company.—2. Subject; subordinate.

> He, to grace his tributary gods. Milton.

3. Paid in tribute.

> No flatt'ry tunes these tributary lays. Concanen.

4. Yielding supplies of any thing. The Ohio has many large tributary streams; and is itself tributary to the Mississippi.

TRIB'UTARY, n. One that pays tribute or a stated sum to a conquering power, for the purpose of securing peace and protection, or as an acknowledgment of submission, or for the purchase of security. In geography, an affluent; a stream which falls into another stream. The Aar is a tributary of the Rhine.

TRIB'UTE, n. [Fr. tribut; L. tributum, from tribuo, to give, bestow, or divide.] 1. An annual or stated sum of money or other valuable thing, paid by one prince or nation to another, either as an acknowledgment of submission, or as the price of peace and protection, or by virtue of some treaty. The Romans made all their conquered countries pay tribute, as do the Turks at this day; and in some countries the tribute is paid in children.—2. A personal contribution; as, a tribute of respect.—3. Something given or contributed.

TRIB'UTE, v. t. To pay as tribute.

TRIB'UTED, pp. Paid as tribute.

TRIB'UTE-MONEY, n. Money paid as tribute.

TRIB'UTING, ppr. Paying as tribute.

TRI'CA, n. In bot., the shield or reproductive organ of a lichen.

TRICAP'SULAR, a. [L. tres, three, and capsula, a little chest.] In bot., three-capsuled; having three capsules to each flower.

TRICE, v. t. To haul or tie up by means of a small rope. [See TRISK.]

TRICE, n. [Fr. trois, three.] A very short time; an instant; a moment; or before one can say or tell three.

> If they get never so great spoil at any time, they waste the same in a trice. Spenser.

> A man shall make his fortune in a trice. Young.

TRICENNA'RIOUS, a. Tricennial; belonging to the term of thirty years.

TRICEN'NIAL, a Denoting thirty, or what pertains to that number.

TRICEN'TENARY, n. or a. A period or space of three hundred years.

TRI'CEPS, a. [L. from tres, three; and caput, head.] Three-headed. In anat., a term applied to muscles, which arise by three heads; as, the triceps extensor cubiti, the use of which is to extend the forearm.

TRI'CHAS, n. A genus of birds of the order Sylviadæ.

TRICH'ECHUS, n. [Gr. θριξ, hair, and ιχθυς, fish.] A genus of marine mammals, formerly including the sea-cows, (T. manatus); but now restricted to the walrus (T. rosmarus).

TRICHI'ASIS, n. [Gr. from θριξ, hair.] A disease of the eyelashes, in which one or more of them are turned inwards so as to be in contact with the ball of the eye, and produce irritation.

TRICHIL'IA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Meliaceæ. The species inhabit the tropical parts of America, and a few are found in Africa and New Holland. They form trees or shrubs, with axillary panicles of white flowers. Several of them are possessed of active properties, as T. emetica, or the emetic nut, which is found in the mountains of Yemen; T. cathartica, used in Brazil as a cure for fevers, &c. T. moschata is the musk-wood of Jamaica.

TRICHIU'RUS, n. [Gr. θριξ, and ουρα, a tail.] A genus of Acanthopterygious fishes, belonging to the family Tænioides, Cuv. They are called in English hair-tails, from the elongated hair-like filament that terminates the tail. They resemble beautiful silver ribbons. T.

Silvery Hair-tail (Trichiurus lepturus).

lepturus, or silvery hair-tail, has been found on the British coast.

TRICHODERMA'CEÆ, n. A tribe of fungous plants, the type of which is the genus Trichoderma.

TRICHO'MANES, n. A genus of ferns, belonging to the suborder Hymenophyllaceæ. T. speciosum is a British species, found near Bingley, Yorkshire, and at Wicklow, Killarney, and Youghal, in Ireland. It is a rare and beautiful fern.

TRICHONE'MA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Irideæ. T. columnæ is a British species, found in sandy places in Guernsey and Jersey. It is a small bulbous plant, with pale-bluish purple and yellow flowers.

TRICHOP'TERANS, n. [Gr. θρίξ, and πτερον, a wing.] An order of insects, with four hairy membranous wings. It comprises the case-worm flies.

TRI'CHORD, n. In music, an instrument with three cords or strings.

TRICHOSAN'THIS, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Cucurbitaceæ. The species are trailing or climbing plants found in the hot and moist parts of Asia; a few are found in the West Indies. Many of them are edible, and are known by the name of snake gourds, from their long and often sinuous fruit. T. dioica is cultivated in India, and is called by the natives pulwul. The unripe fruit and tender tops are much eaten both by Europeans and natives in Bengal, in stews and curries.

TRICHOSPER'MI, n. A tribe of fungous plants, including the puff-balls, devil's snuff-boxes, &c.

TRICHOT'OMOUS, a. [See TRICHOTOMY.] Divided into three parts, or divided by threes; as, a trichotomous stem.

TRICHOT'OMY, n. [Gr. τριχα, thrice, and τεμνω, to cut or divide.] Division into three parts.

TRICK, n. [D. trek, a pull or drawing, a trick; trekken, to draw, to drag; bedriegen, to cheat; driegen, to tack or baste; G. triegen, to deceive; trug, betrug, fraud, trick; Dan. trekke, a trick; trekker, to draw, to entice; Fr. tricher, to cheat; It. treccare, to cheat; trecca, a huckster; treccia, a lock of hair, from folding, involving, Gr. θριξ: Sp. trica, a quibble; L. tricor, to play tricks, to trifle, to baffle. We see the same root in the Low L. intrico, to fold, and in intrigue. Trick is from drawing, that is, a drawing aside, or a folding, interweaving, implication.] 1. An artifice or stratagem for the purpose of deception; a fraudful contrivance for an evil purpose, or an underhand scheme to impose upon the world; a cheat or cheating. We hear of tricks, in bargains, and tricks of state.

He comes to me for counsel, and I show him a trick. South.

2. A dextrous artifice.

On one nice trick depends the gen'ral fate. Pope.

3. Vicious practice; as, the tricks of youth.—4. The sly artifice or legerdemain of a juggler; as, tricks with cards. —5. A parcel of cards falling to the winner at one turn or one round of play.—6. An unexpected event.

Some trick not worth an egg. Shak.

[Unusual.]

7. A particular practice, habit, or manner; as, he has a trick of drumming with his fingers, or a trick of frowning.—8. In nautical lan., the time spent at the helm by a steersman.

TRICK, v. t. To deceive; to impose on; to defraud; to cheat; as, to trick another in the sale of a horse.

TRICK, v. t. [W. treciaw, to furnish or harness, to trick out; trec, an implement, harness, gear, from rhêg, a breaking forth, properly a throwing or extending. This may be a varied application of the foregoing word.] To dress; to decorate; to set off; to adorn fantastically.

Trick her off in air. Pope.

It is often followed by up, off, or out.

People are lavish in tricking up their children in fine clothes, yet starve their minds. Locke.

2. To draw heraldic devices with pen and ink.

TRICK, v. i. To live by deception and fraud.

TRICKED, pp. Cheated; deceived; dressed.

TRICK'ER, } n. One who tricks; a
TRICK'STER, } deceiver; a cheat.

TRICK'ER, n. A trigger. [See TRIGGER.]

TRICK'ERY, n. The art of dressing up; artifice; stratagem.

TRICK'ING, ppr. Deceiving; cheating; defrauding.—2. Dressing; decorating.

TRICK'ING, n. Deceit; dress; ornament.

TRICK'ISH, a. Artful in making bargains; given to deception and cheating; knavish.

TRICK'ISHLY, adv. Artfully; knavishly.

TRICK'ISHNESS, n. The state of being trickish, knavish, or deceitful.

TRICK'LASITE, n. Another name for Fahlunite,—which see.

TRICK'LE, v. i. [allied perhaps to Gr. τρεχω, to run, and a diminutive.] To flow in a small gentle stream; to run down in drops; as, tears trickle down the cheek; water trickles from the eaves.

Fast beside there trickled softly down
A gentle stream. Spenser.

TRICK'LING, ppr. Flowing down in a small gentle stream.

TRICK'LING, n. The act of flowing in a small gentle stream or in drops.

He wakened by the trickling of his blood Wiseman.

TRICK'MENT†, n. Decoration.

TRICK'STER, n. One who practises tricks.

TRICK'SY, a. [from trick.] Pretty; dainty, neat, brisk, lively, merry. [Not much used.]

The fool hath planted in his memory
An army of good words; and I do know
A many fools that stand in better place,
Garnish'd like him, and for a tricksy word
Defy the matter. Shak. Merch of Venice.

TRICK'-TRACK, } n. A game at TRIC'TRACK, } tables; a kind of backgammon, played both with men and pegs, and more complicated. It is also written Tick tack.

TRIC'KY, a. Trickish; practising tricks.

TRI'CLINATE, a. [Gr. τρεις, threefold, and κλινω, to incline.] In min., a term applied to crystals in which the three axes are all obliquely inclined to each other; as, in the oblique rhomboidal prism.

TRICLIN'IARY, a. [L. triclinaris, from triclinium, a couch to recline on at dinner.] Pertaining to a couch for dining, or to the ancient mode of reclining at table.

TRICLIN'IUM, n. [L. from tres, three, and clino, to incline.] In ancient arch., a room in which meals were taken, furnished with three couches, which occupied three sides of the dinner table, the fourth side being left open for the free ingress and egress of servants. On these couches, which also received the name of triclinium, the guests reclined at dinner or supper.

TRICOC'CÆ, n. [Gr τρεις, and κοκκος, a kernel or berry.] The name given by Linnæus to one of the nat. orders of plants in the system he sketched out. It contained those plants which have a single three-cornered capsule with three cells, each containing a single seed, such as Euphorbia, Cambogia, Sterculia, &c. In Jussieu's system, as adopted and amended by Decandolle and Lindley, this nat. order is called Euphorbiaceæ. Bartling, however, still makes use of the name Tricoccæ to designate a group of families, among which are Euphorbiaceæ, Rhamnaceæ, Celastraceæ, &c.

TRICOC'COUS, a. [See TRICOCCÆ.] A tricoccous or three-grained capsule is one which is swelling out in three protuberances, internally divided into three cells, with one seed in each; as in Euphorbia.

TRI'COLOR, } n. [Fr. tricolore, of TRI'COLOUR, } three colours.] The banner of various nations, supposed to be peculiarly emblematic of liberty. The French tricolor, counting from the staff, is composed of three stripes, respectively coloured blue, white, red; the Belgian, black, yellow, red; the Dutch, counting from the top, red, white, blue.

TRI'COLOURED, a. Having three colours.

TRICORNIG'EROUS, a. [L. tres and cornu.] Having three horns.

TRICOR'PORAL, } a. [L. tricorpor;
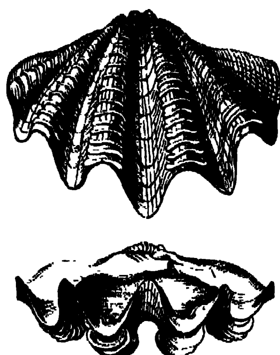
TRICOR'PORATE, } tres and corpus.] Having three bodies. In her., tricorporate is a term applied when the bodies of three beasts are represented issuing from the dexter, sinister, and base points of the escutcheon, and meeting, conjoined to one head, in the centre point.



Tricorporate.

TRICUS'PID, a. Having three points. —Tricuspid valve, in anat., the valve situated between the auricle and ventricle, on the right side of the heart. It is so named from its shape.

TRICUS'PIDATE, a. [L. tres, three, and cuspis, a point.] In bot., three-pointed; ending in three-points; as, a tricuspidate stamen.

TRIDAC'NA, n. A genus of subtransverse inequilateral, equivalve marine molluscs, belonging to Lamarck's family of Tridacnacea, and found both recent and fossil. The shells of this genus are of a delicate white colour, tinged with buff, and remarkably handsome. One of the species, T.

Giant Tridacna (T. gigas).

gigas, attains a remarkable size, measuring from two to three feet across, and sometimes weighing five hundred pounds.

TRIDAC'TYLOUS, a. [Gr. τρεις, and δακτυλος, a toe.] Having three toes.

TRIDE, a. Among hunters, short and ready; fleet; as, a tride pace.

TRI'DENT, n. [Fr. from L. tridens; tres, three, and dens, tooth.] 1. Any instrument of the form of a fork with three prongs.—2. In myth., a kind of sceptre or spear with three prongs, which the fables of antiquity put into the hands of Neptune, the deity of the ocean.—3. A name given to a kind of parabola, by which Des Cartes constructed equations of six dimensions.

TRI'DENT, } a. Having three teeth
TRI'DENTED, } or prongs.

TRIDENT'ATE, a. [L. tres and dens, tooth.] Having three teeth.

TRIDENT'INE, a. [L. Tridentum, Trent.] Pertaining to Trent, or to the celebrated council held in that city.

TRIDIAPA'SON, n. [tri and diapason.] In music, a triple octave or twenty-second.

TRI'DING. See TRITHING.

TRIDODECAHE'DRAL, a. [Gr. τρεις, three, and dodecahedral.] In crystallography, presenting three ranges of faces, one above another, each containing twelve faces.

TRID'UAN, a. [L. triduum; tres and dies, day.] Lasting three days, or happening every third day. [Little used.]

TRIEN'NIAL, a. [Fr. triennal; L. triennis, triennium; tres, three, and annus, year.] 1. Continuing three years; as, triennial parliaments.—2. Happening every three years; as, triennial elections. Triennial elections and parliaments were established in England in 1695; but these were discontinued in 1717, and septennial elections and parliaments were adopted, which still continue.

TRIEN'NIALLY, adv. Once in three years.

TRI'ENS, n. [L.] A small Roman copper coin, equal to one-third of the as.

TRIENTA'LIS, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Primulaceæ; class and order Heptandria-monogynia, Linn. The only British species is T. europæa, European chick-weed winter green. It is rare in England, but abundant in many parts of the Highlands of Scotland, and is chiefly remarkable for being the only native heptander.

TRI'ER, n. [from try.] One who tries; one who makes experiments; one who examines any thing by a test or standard.—2. One who tries judicially; a judge who tries a person or cause.—3. One appointed to decide whether a challenge to a juror is just. [See TRIOR.]—4. A test; that which tries or approves.

TRI'ERARCH, n. [Gr. τριηρης, a trireme, and αρχος, a chief.] In ancient Greece, the commander of a trireme; also, a commissioner, who was obliged to build ships and furnish them at his own expense.

TRI'ERARCHY, n. The office or duty of a trierarch.

TRIETER'ICAL, a. [L. trietericus; tres, three, and Gr. ετος, year.] Triennial; kept or occurring once in three years. [Little used.]

TRIFA'CIAL, a. [L. tres, three, and facies, a face.] The trifacial nerve, in anat., is the fifth nerve, so called from its division into three great branches, and distribution to the face.

TRIFAL'LOW, v. t. [L. tres, three, and fallow.] To plough land the third time before sowing.

TRIFAL'LOWED, pp. Ploughed the third time before sowing.

TRIFAL'LOWING, ppr. Ploughing the third time before sowing.

TRIFA'RIOUS, a. Arranged in three rows; threefold.

TRIF'ID, a. [L. trifidus; tres, three, and findo, to divide.] In bot., divided half way into three parts by linear sinuses with strait margins; three-cleft.

TRIFIS'TULARY, a. [L. tres and fistula, a pipe.] Having three pipes.

TRI'FLE, n. [It coincides with trivial, —which see.] 1. A thing of very little value or importance; a word applicable to any thing and every thing of this character.

With such poor trifles playing. Drayton.
Moments make the year, and trifles, life. Young.
Trifles light as air
Are to the jealous confirmations strong. Shak.

2. A dish composed of alternate layers of sweetmeats and cake, with syllabub. —3. A cake.

TRI'FLE, v. i. To act or talk without seriousness, gravity, weight, or dignity; to act or talk with levity.

They trifle, and they beat the air about nothing which toucheth us. Hooker.

2. To indulge in light amusements.—To trifle with, to mock; to play the fool with; to treat without respect or seriousness.—To trifle with, or to trifle away, to spend in vanity; to waste to no good purpose; as, to trifle with time, or to trifle away time; to trifle with advantages.

TRI'FLE,† v. t. To make of no importance.

TRI'FLER, n. One who trifles or acts with levity.

TRI'FLING, ppr. or a. Acting or talking with levity, or without seriousness or being in earnest.—2. a. Being of small value or importance; trivial; as, a trifling debt; a trifling affair.

TRI'FLING, n. Employment about things of no importance.

TRI'FLINGLY, adv. In a trifling manner; with levity; without seriousness or dignity.

TRI'FLINGNESS, n. Levity of manners; lightness.—2. Smallness of value; emptiness; vanity.

TRIFLO'ROUS, a. [L. tres, three, and flos, floris, flower.] Three-flowered; bearing three flowers; as, a triflorous peduncle.

TRIFO'LIATE, a. [L. tres, three, and folium, leaf.] Having three leaves.

TRIFO'LIOLATE, a. Having three folioles.

TRIFO'LIUM, n. [L. from tres, three, and folium, a leaf.] Trefoil, a most extensive genus of plants, nat. order Leguminosæ, papilionaceous tribe, and curvembryose division. It is so named from its leaves possessing three segments. The species, which are very numerous, are principally inhabitants of temperate climates, and are found in all quarters of the world. They are all more or less pasture or fodder plants; a few of them are particularly valuable to the farmer, and their introduction into agriculture, under the name of clover, has greatly advanced the profits of farming. The most important species are T. pretense, common purple trefoil, or red clover; T. repens, white trefoil, white or Dutch clover; T. incarnatum, flesh-coloured trefoil, or scarlet clover; T. arvense, hare's foot trefoil; T. maritimum, seaside or teazel-headed trefoil; T. alexandrinum, Alexandrian trefoil or clover; T. medium, meadow trefoil, marl clover, or cow grass; T. procumbens, hop trefoil or yellow clover; T. filiforme, lesser yellow trefoil. Several of these are British plants, as are also the following:—T. officinale, common melilot; T. ornithopodioides, bird's-foot trefoil; T. suffocatum, suffocated trefoil; T. subterraneum, subterraneous trefoil; T. ochroleucum, sulphur-coloured trefoil; T. stellatum, starry-headed trefoil; T. scabrum, hard-knotted trefoil; T glomeratum, smooth round-headed trefoil; T. striatum, soft-knotted trefoil; T. fragiferum, strawberry-headed trefoil; T. resupinatum, reversed trefoil.

TRI'FOLY, n. Sweet trefoil. [See TREFOIL.]

TRIFO'RIUM, n. [L.] In arch., a gallery above the arches of the nave of a church, generally in the form of an arcade. In many churches there is also a similar gallery in the choir. Galleries of the same kind existed in several of the ancient Basilica. The name, which is of modern invention, is very inappropriate, as the triple opening which it implies is far from being a general characteristic of the triforium.

TRI'FORM, a. [L. triformis; tres and forma.] Having a triple form or shape; as, the triform countenance of the moon.

TRIFORM'ITY, n. The state of being triform.

TRIFUR'CATED, a. Having three branches or forks.

TRIG,† v. t. [W. trigaw. See TRIGGER.] To fill; to stuff.—2. To stop; as a wheel.

TRIG,† a. Full; trim; neat.

TRIG, n. A stone, wedge of wood, or something else laid under a wheel or a barrel, to prevent its rolling.

TRIG'AMOUS, a. [See TRIGAMY.] In bot., having three sorts of flowers, in the same head, male, female, and hermaphrodite.

TRIG'AMY, n. [Gr. τρεις, three, and γαμος, marriage.] State of being married three times; or the state of having three husbands or three wives at the same time.

TRIGEM'INI, n. plur. [L. tres, three, and geminus, double; threefold.] In anat., the fifth pair of nerves; which arise from the crura of the cerebellum, and are divided, within the cranium, into three branches, viz., the orbital, and the superior and inferior maxillary.

TRIG'GER, n. [W. trigaw, to stop; Dan. trekker, to draw; trykker, to press or pinch; or trygger, to make sure; trug, Sw. trygg, safe, secure; trycka, to press. This is the Eng. true, or from the same root.] 1. That which stops or catches; a catch to hold the wheel of a carriage on a declivity.—2. The catch of a musket or pistol; the part which, being pulled, looses the lock for striking fire.

TRIGIN'TALS, n. [L. triginta.] Trentals; the number of thirty masses to be said for the dead.

TRIG'LA, n. A genus of acanthopterygious fishes, popularly known as gurnards. [See GURNARD.]

TRIGLO'CHIN, n. Arrow-grass, a genus of plants; class Hexandria, order Trigynia, Linn.; nat. order Juncaginaceæ. The species are found in marshes, sides of rivers, ditches, and wet meadows. T. palustre, marsh arrow-grass, and T. maritimum, sea arrow-grass, are British plants. The leaves of the former, when bruised, give out a fetid smell.

TRIG'LYPH, n. [Gr. τρεις, three, and γλυφη, sculpture.] An ornament in the frieze of the Doric column, repeated at equal intervals. Each triglyph consists of two entire gutters or channels, cut to a right angle, called glyphs, and separated by three interstices, called femora.

TRIGLYPH'IC, } a. Consisting of TRIGLYPH'ICAL, } or pertaining to triglyphs.—2. Containing three sets of characters or sculptures.

TRIG'ON, n. [Gr. τρεις, three, and γωνια, angle.] 1. A triangle; a term used in astrology; also, trine, an aspect of two planets distant 120 degrees from each other.—2. A kind of triangular lyre or harp, used among the ancients.

TRIG'ONAL, } a. Triangular; having TRIG'ONOUS, } three angles or corners.—2. In bot., having three prominent longitudinal angles; as, a style or ovary.

TRIGONEL'LA, n. A genus of plants; nat. order Leguminosæ, papilionaceous tribe. The species are strong scented herbs with trifoliate leaves. T. fœnum græcum, the common fenugreek, is a native of the South of Europe. Its seeds were formerly used in medicine, and are still used by grooms and farmers, as a medicine for horses. In some parts of the south of Germany, this plant is cultivated as fodder for horses and sheep. T. esculenta, is a native of some parts of the Indies, where its legumes are eaten by the natives as food.

TRIGO'NIA, n. A genus of conchiferous molluscs, belonging to the family Ostracea. The trigonia is a triangular, or suborbicular, equivalve, transverse bivalve. The species are found both recent and fossil. The former have been discovered near Australia only, in sandy mud. They have been termed Trigonia margaritacea, or pearly trigon, from their pearly lustre.

TRIGONOMET'RIC, a. Pertaining to trigonometry. [See TRIGONOMETRICAL.]

TRIGONOMET'RICAL, a. Pertaining to trigonometry; performed by or according to the rules of trigonometry. Trigonometrical lines, lines which are employed in solving the different cases of plane and spherical trigonometry; as, radius, sines, tangents, secants, cosines, cotangents, cosecants, &c. These lines have certain relations to each other, and numbers representing them, or the logarithms of such numbers, are formed into tables, for facilitating calculations in trigonometry. — Trigonometrical curves, a name given to certain curves, which have such equations as $y = \sin x$, $y = \cos x$, $y = a \cos x + b \cos 2x$, &c. These curves may be constructed from the fundamental properties of the sine, cosine, &c. — Trigonometrical series, infinite series which are of the form $a \sin x + b \sin 2x + c \sin 3x$, &c., and $a \cos x + b \cos 2x + c \cos 3x$, &c. —Trigonometrical survey, a term which may be applied to any survey of a country, which is carried on from a single base, by the computation of observed angular distances; but the term is usually confined to measurements on a large scale, embracing a considerable extent of country, and requiring a combination of astronomical and geodetical operations. A trigonometrical survey may be undertaken either to ascertain the exact situation of the different points of a country relatively to each other, and to the equator and meridians of the terrestrial globe, for the purpose of constructing an accurate map; or to determine the dimensions and form of the earth, by ascertaining the curvature of a given portion of its surface, or by measuring an arc of the meridian. The most minute accuracy and the most perfect instruments, are required in all the practical parts of such operations; and it becomes necessary to have regard to the curvature of the earth's surface, the effects of temperature, refraction, altitude above the level of the sea, and a multitude of circumstances, which are not taken into account in ordinary surveying. In conducting a trigonometrical survey of a country, signals, such as spires, towers, poles, erected on elevated situations, or other objects, are assumed at as great a distance as will admit of distinct and accurate observations, with telescopes of considerable power attached to the instruments used in measuring the angles. In this way the country will be divided into a series of primary triangles; and if any side of any one of these be measured, the remaining sides of all of them may be computed by trigonometry. By means exactly similar, each of these triangles is resolved into a number of others called secondary triangles; and thus the positions of towns and other remarkable objects are determined. The length of the base or line measured, which is an arc of a great circle, must be determined with extreme accuracy, as an error in measuring it would affect the entire survey. For checking the measurements and the computations, it is proper to measure some other line at a considerable distance from the first; as the comparison of its measured and computed lengths will be a test of the accuracy of the intermediate operations. Such a line is called a base of verification. The measurement of a base is one of the principal difficulties in the survey, chiefly on account of the inequalities of the earth's surface, and the variations in the length of the measuring instrument, arising from the change of temperature. The base is assumed on as flat a portion of country as can be obtained, and the chain or other measuring instrument is constructed with extreme care.

TRIGONOMET'RICALLY, adv. According to the rules or principles of trigonometry.

TRIGONOM'ETRY, n. [Gr. τριγωνον, a triangle, and μετρεω, to measure.] According to the primitive meaning of the term, the measuring of triangles, or the science of determining the sides and angles of triangles, by means of certain parts which are given; but in its modern acceptance it includes all theorems and formulæ relative to angles and circular arcs, and the lines connected with them, these lines being expressed by numbers or ratios. In fact, the principles of trigonometry are of very general application, furnishing means of investigation in almost every branch of mathematics. Trigonometry, in relation to its practical utility, may be regarded as the most important of all the applications of mathematics, especially in relation to astronomy, navigation, and surveying. Trigonometry is of two kinds, plane and spherical, the former treating of triangles described on a plane; and the latter, of those described on the surface of a sphere. In every triangle there are six things which may be considered, viz., the three sides and the three angles, and the main object of the theoretical part of trigonometry is to deduce rules, by which, when some of these are given, the others may be found by computation, such computations being facilitated by tables of sines, tangents, &c. In plane trigonometry any three of the six parts of a triangle being given, (except the three angles,) the other parts may be determined; but in spherical trigonometry this exception has no place, for any three of the six parts being given, the rest may thence be determined, the sides being measured or estimated by degrees, minutes, &c., as well as the angles. Both plane and spherical trigonometry is divided into right-angled and oblique-angled.

TRIGRAMMAT'IC, or TRIGRAM'MIC, a. [Gr. τρεις, three, and γραμμα, a letter.] Consisting of three letters, or three sets of letters.

TRI'GRAPH, n. [Gr. τρεις, and γραφη.] A name given to three letters having one sound; as eau in beau.

TRI'GYN, n. [Gr. τρεις, three, and γυνη, a female.] In bot., a plant having three styles. Trigynia is the name of an order of plants in the Linnæan system, distinguished by the flowers having three styles or pistils; as, in the bladder nut.

TRIGYN'IAN, or TRI'GYNOUS, a. Having three styles.

TRIHE'DRAL, a. [See TRIHEDRON.] Having three equal sides.

TRIHE'DRON, n. [Gr. τρεις, three, and εδρα, side.] A figure having three equal sides.

TRI'HILATE, a. [L. trihilatus.] Having three hila or scars; applied to seeds.

TRIJ'UGATE, } a. [L. tres, three, and TRIJ'UGOUS, } jugum, yoke.] In bot., having three pairs of leaflets. A trijugous leaf is a pinnate leaf with three pairs of leaflets.

TRILAT'ERAL, a. [Fr. from L. tres, three, and latus, side.] Having three sides; as a triangle.

TRILAT'ERALLY, adv. With three sides.

TRILAT'ERALNESS, n. Quality of having three sides.

TRILET'TO, n. [It.] In music, a short trill.

TRILIN'GUAL, TRILIN'GUAR, a. [L. tres and lingua.] Consisting of three languages.

TRILIT'ERAL, a. [L. tres, three, and litera, letter.] Consisting of three letters; as, a triliteral root or word.

TRILIT'ERAL, n. A word consisting of three letters.

TRIL'ITHON, n. [Gr. τρεις, three, and λιθος, a stone.] Three stones placed together like door posts and a lintel.

TRILL, n. [It. trillo; Dan. trille; G. triller; W. treilliaw, to turn, to roll. But the latter may be contracted from treiglaw, to turn; traill, traigyl, a turn or roll, from the root of draw, drag. Trill coincides with thirl and drill; D. drillen. Qu. reel.] A quaver; a shake of the voice in singing, or of the sound of an instrument. [See SHAKE.]

TRILL, v. t. [It. trillare.] To utter with a quavering or tremulousness of voice; to shake.

The sober-suited songstress trills her lay. Thomson.

TRILL, v. i. To flow in a small stream, or in drops rapidly succeeding each other; to trickle.

And now and then an ample tear trill'd down
Her delicate cheek. Shak.

2. To shake or quaver; to play in tremulous vibrations of sound.

To judge of trilling notes and tripping feet. Dryden.

TRILL'ED, pp. Shaken; uttered with rapid vibrations.

TRILL'ING, ppr. Uttering with a quavering or shake.

TRILLION, n. (tril'yun.) [a word formed arbitrarily of three, or Gr. τρεις, and million.] The product of a million involved to the third power, or the product of a million multiplied by a million, and that product multiplied by a million; the product of the square of a million multiplied by a million. Thus 1,000,000 × 1,000,000 = 1,000,000,000,000, and this product multiplied by a million = 1,000,000,000,000,000,000. According to the French notation, the number expressed by a unit, with twelve cyphers annexed, or 1,000,000,000,000.

TRIL'LO, n. [It.] In music, a trill, which consists of a rapid alternate transition from the one to the other of two contiguous sounds of the musical scale; but it has various modifications and names.

TRI'LOBATE, a. [L. tres and lobus.] Having three lobes.

TRI'LOBITE, n. [Gr. τρεις, three, and λοβος, a lobe.] An extinct and widely distributed family of crustacea nearly allied to the phyllopoda. They are found in the earliest fossiliferous strata, and comprehend those species in which the body is divided into three lobes, which run parallel to its axis. Trilobites are supposed to have moved by swimming in an inverted position, belly up, immediately beneath the surface of the water. When attacked, they could roll themselves into a ball. They fed on small water animals, and inhabited gregariously and in vast numbers the shallow water near coasts.

Trilobites.

1. Paradoxides bohemicus. 2. Phacops latifrons.

TRILOC'ULAR, a. [L. tres, and locus, a cell.] In bot., three-celled; having three cells for seeds; as, a trilocular pericarp.

TRIL'OGY, n. [Gr. τρεις and λογος.] A series of three dramas, which bear a mutual relation to each other, and form but parts of one historical and poetical picture. Shakspeare's Henry VI. is an example.

TRILU'MINAR, TRILU'MINOUS, a. [Lat. tres and lumen, light.] Having three lights.

TRIM, a. [Sax. trum, firm, stable, strong, secure; tryman, getrymian, to make firm, to strengthen, to prepare, to order or dispose, to exhort, persuade, or animate. The primary sense is to set, to strain, or to make straight.] Firm; compact; tight; snug; being in good order. We say of a ship, she is trim, or trim-built; every thing about the man is trim. We say of a person, he is trim, when his body is well shaped and firm; and we say, his dress is trim, when it sits closely to his body and appears tight and snug, and of posture we say, a man or a soldier is trim, when he stands erect. It is particularly applicable to soldiers, and in Saxon, truma is a troop or body of soldiers.

TRIM, v. t. [Sax. trumian, trymian, to make firm or strong, to strengthen, to prepare, to put in order.] 1. In a general sense, to make right, that is, to put in due order for any purpose.

The hermit trimm'd his little fire. Goldsmith.

2. To dress; to put the body in a proper state.

I was trimm'd in Julia's gown. Shak.

3. To decorate; to invest or embellish with extra ornaments; as, to trim a gown with lace.—4. To clip, as the hair of the head; also, to shave; that is, to put in due order.—5. Tripe de Roche (Gyrophora muhlenbergii). b, One of the spores magnified.

constituting an article of food extensively used by the Canadian hunters in the arctic regions of North America. It is furnished by various species of Gyrophora, all belonging to a distinct tribe of the liverworts or lichens, now constituting the genus Umbilicaria.

TRIPE-MAN, n. A man who sells tripe.

TRIPEN'NATE, } a. [L. tres and penna
TRIPIN'NATE, } or pinna.] In bot., a tripinnate leaf is a species of supra-decompound leaf, when a petiole has bipinnate leaves ranged on either side.

TRIPER'SONAL, a. [L. tres and persona.] Consisting of three persons.

TRIPER'SONALIST, n. A name applied, or misapplied, to a believer in the trinity; a trinitarian.

TRIPERSONAL'ITY, n. The state of existing in three persons in one Godhead.

TRIPET'ALOID, a. [Gr. τρεις, φυλλον, and ειδος, resemblance.] In bot., appearing as if furnished with three petals; as a tripetaloid corolla.

TRIPET'ALOUS, a. [Gr. τρεις, three, and πεταλον, leaf.] In bot., three-petaled; having three petals or flower leaves.

TRIP'-HAMMER, n. A large hammer used in forges.

TRIPHANE, n. Haüy's name for the mineral called Spodumene by Jameson. [See SPODUMENE.]

TRIPHA'SIA, n. A genus of plants; nat. order Aurantiaceæ. The species are found in India, Cochin-China, and China. They are thorny shrubs, with trifoliate leaves. The fruit of T. trifoliata, which is both preserved and Triphasia trifoliata.

eaten as a fruit, has an acid taste; and the plant is sometimes cultivated in gardens on account of the sweet-scented white flowers and orange berries.

TRIPH'THONG, n. [Gr. τρεις, three, and φθογγη, sound.] A coalition of three vowels in one compound sound, or in one syllable, as in adieu, eye.

TRIPHTHON'GAL, a. Pertaining to a triphthong; consisting of a triphthong.

TRIPH'YLLOUS, a. [Gr. τρεις, three, and φυλλον, leaf.] In bot., three-leaved; having three leaves.

TRIPIN'NATE, a. Threefold pinnate

TRIP'LE, a. [Fr. from L. triplex, triplus; tres and plico, to fold.] 1. Threefold; consisting of three united; as, a triple knot; a triple tie.

By thy triple shape as thou art seen.
Dryden.

2. Treble; three times repeated. [See TREBLE.]—Triple time, in music, is that in which each bar is divided into three measures or equal parts, as three minims, three crotchets, three quavers, &c.—Triple salts, the name formerly given to chemical compounds, consisting of one acid and two different bases; or of two acids and one base, but such salts are now more properly designated double salts, most of them consisting of the same acid and two different bases; as Rochelle salts, which are composed of soda, potassa, and tartaric acid.—Triple alliance, in diplomatic language, a contract entered into by a formal and solemn treaty between three different powers, either for defensive or offensive purposes.

TRIP'LE, v. t. To treble; to make threefold or thrice as much or as many. [Usually written treble.]

TRIP'LE-CROWN, n. Dominion over three realms; as, Edward the First had pretensions to the triple-crown; namely, to being king of England, Scotland, and France.—2. The papal crown, or tiara. [See TIARA.]

TRIP'LE-CROWNED, a. Having three crowns.

TRIP'LED, pp. Made threefold.

TRIP'LE-HEADED, a. Having three heads.

TRIP'LET, n. [from triple.] Three of a kind, or three united.—2. In poetry, three verses rhyming together; as,

Waller was smooth, but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestic march and energy divine.
Pope.

3. In music, triplets are notes grouped together by threes; as, in jigs. In common time, where three of the quavers are intended to be equal in duration to a crotchet, the figure 3 is sometimes placed over them.—4. In microscopes, an eye piece, which, when used, triples the power of the instrument; one that doubles the power being termed a doublet.

TRIP'LICATE, a. [L. triplicatus, triplico; tres and plico, to fold.] Made thrice as much; threefold.—Triplicate ratio, is the ratio which the cubes of two quantities bear to one another, compared with the ratio which the quantities themselves bear to each other: Thus the ratio of a^3 to b^3 is triplicate of the ratio of a to b. Similar solids are to each other in the triplicate ratio of their homologous sides or like linear dimensions.

TRIP'LICATE, n. A third paper or thing, corresponding to two others of the same kind.

TRIP'LICATE-TER'NATE, a. In bot., thrice ternate. The same as triternate,—which see.

TRIPLICA'TION, n. The act of trebling or making threefold, or adding three together.—2. In the civil law, the same as sur-rejoinder in common law.

TRIPLIC'ITY, n. [Fr. triplicité; from L. triplex.] Trebleness; the state of being threefold.—2. In astrol., the division of the signs, according to the number of the elements, each division consisting of three signs.

TRIP'LING, n. Making threefold.

TRIP'LY, adv. In a threefold manner.

TRIP'LY-RIBBED, a. [triple and rib.] In bot., having a pair of large ribs branching off from the main one above the base, as in the leaves of many species of sunflower.

TRIP'-MADAM, n. A plant.

TRI'POD, n. [L. tripus, tripodis; Gr. τριπους: τρεις, three, and πους, foot.] A bench, stool, or seat supported by three legs, on which the priest and sibyls in ancient times were placed to render oracles.—2. A bowl or cup for containing fluids, supported on a three-footed pedestal. In such a tripod the wine and water for the banquets of the ancients were very frequently mixed. Tripods were most frequently made of metal, but were sometimes of marble, and they appear to have been as much employed for ornament as for use.—3. Any article of furniture resting upon three feet, as a table, chair, &c.

Antique Tripod.

TRIP'ODIAN, n. An ancient stringed instrument.

TRIP'ODY, n. [Gr. τρεις, and πους.] A series of three feet.

TRIP'OLI, n. In mineral., a mineral originally brought from Tripoli, used in polishing metals, marble, glass, &c. It occurs massive, with a coarse dull earthy fracture; it is of a yellowish grey, or white colour, is meagre, and rough to the touch, and yields readily to the nail. It has a fine hard grain, but is not compact. It imbibes water, which softens it, but it does not mix with the water. It consists chiefly of silica, with small portions of alumina and oxide of iron, but the varieties of tripoli vary greatly in composition, and appear to be composed of silicified animalcules. Tripoli is found in France, Italy, and Germany, as well as in Tripoli. Rottenstone appears to be a variety of tripoli.

TRIP'OLINE, a. Pertaining to tripoli.

TRIPOL'ITAN, n. A native of Tripoli. —2. a. Relating or belonging to Tripoli.

TRIP'OLY, n. Tripoli,—which see.

TRI'POS, n. plur. Triposes. [Gr. τριπους, a tripod.] At the university of Cambridge, the name given to one who prepares what is termed a tripos paper. A tripos paper, also called a tripos, is a printed list of the successful candidates for mathematical honours, accompanied by a piece in Latin verse. There are two of these papers, designed to commemorate the two tripos days, or days of examination. The first contains the names of the wranglers, and senior optimes, and the second the names of the junior optimes. The word tripos is supposed to refer to the three-legged stool, formerly used at the examinations for these honours.

TRIP'PANT. See TRIPPING.

TRIP'PED, pp. [from trip.] Supplanted.

TRIP'PER, n. One who trips or supplants; one that walks nimbly.

TRIP'PING, ppr. or a. Supplanting; stumbling; falling: stepping nimbly.—2. a. Quick; nimble.—3. In her., tripping, or trippant, is a term used to express a buck, antelope, hart, hind, &c., when represented with the right foot lifted up, and the other three feet, as it were, upon the ground; as if the animals were trotting. —Counter-trippant, is when two animals are borne trippant contrary ways, as if passing each other out of the field.

Tripping.

TRIP'PING, n. The act of tripping.—2. A light dance.—3. The loosing of an anchor from the ground by its cable or buoy-rope.—Tripping line, a small rope serving to unrig the lower top-gallant yard-arm, when in the act of lowering it down upon deck.

TRIP'PINGLY, adv. Nimbly; with a light nimble quick step; with agility.

Sing and dance it trippingly. Shak.

Speak the speech trippingly on the tongue. Shak.

TRIP'SIS, n. [Gr. τρῖψις, friction, the act of rubbing, from τρίβω, to rub.] The process of rubbing and percussing the whole surface of the body, and, at the same time, flexing and extending the limbs, and racking the joints, in connection with the use of the hot bath, which is common in Egypt, Turkey, Greece, and Russia, in modern times, and which was practised by the ancients. It is used in India without the bath. In modern Greek, it is called tripsimon. It is also called shampooing.

TRIP'TOTE, n. [Gr. τρεῖς, three, and πτῶσις, case.] In gram., a name having three cases only.

TRIPU'DIARY, a. [L. tripudium.] Pertaining to dancing; performed by dancing.

TRIPU'DIATE, v. i. [L. tripudio.] To dance.

TRIPUDIA'TION, n. [L. tripudio, to dance.] Act of dancing.

TRIPYR'AMID, n. A kind of spar composed of three-sided pyramids.

TRIQUE'TROUS, a. [L. triquetrus, from triquetra, a triangle.] Three-sided; having three plane sides.—Triquetrous leaf, a leaf having three longitudinal edges, as in Mesembryanthemum deltoides.

TRIRA'DIATED, a. [L. tres and radius.] Having three rays.

TRI'REME, n. [L. triremis; tres and remus.] A galley or vessel with three benches or ranks of oars on a side.

TRIRHOMBOID'AL, a. [tri and rhomboidal.] Having the form of three rhombs.

TRISACRAMENTA'RIAN, n. [L. tres, three, and sacrament.] One of a religious sect who admit of three sacraments and no more.

TRISAG'ION, n. [Gr. τρεῖς, three, and ἅγιος, holy.] In the Greek church, an invocation of the Deity, in which the word holy is repeated three times. This invocation takes its origin from Isa. vi. 3.

TRISE, v. t. [W. treisiaw, to seize.] In seamen's lan., to haul and tie up by means of a small rope or line, called a trising-line.

TRISECT', v. t. [L. tres, three, and seco, to cut.] To cut or divide into three equal parts.

TRISECT'ED, pp. Divided into three equal parts.

TRISECT'ING, ppr. Dividing into three equal parts.

TRISEC'TION, n. [L. tres and sectio, a cutting.] The division of a thing into three parts; particularly in geometry, the division of an angle into three equal parts. The trisection of an angle, geometrically, was a problem of great celebrity among the Greek mathematicians, and in point of difficulty it is upon a footing with the duplication of the cube, and the quadrature of the circle. The indefinite trisection of an angle cannot be accomplished by plane geometry, or by the line and circle, but it may be effected by means of the conic sections, and some other curves, as the conchoid, quadratrix, &c., the method employed by the ancient geometers. In modern analysis, there is no more difficulty of trisecting an angle than in finding a cube root.

TRISEP'ALOUS, a. In bot., having three sepals, or small bracts of a calyx.

TRISE'TUM, n. A genus of grasses separated from the Avena of Linn. It consists of T. flavescens, golden oat, or yellow oat grass; and T. pubescens, downy oat grass. Both are natives of Great Britain, the former is common, especially in rich pastures, and sheep are very fond of it.

TRIS'MUS, n. [Gr. τρίζω, to gnash.] Lockjaw; a species of tetanus, affecting the under jaw with spastic rigidity. There are two kinds of trismus, one attacking infants during the two first weeks from their birth, and the other attacking persons of all ages, and arising from cold or a wound. [See TETANUS.]

TRISOCTAHE'DRON, n. [Gr. τρίς, three times, ὀκτώ, eight, and ἕδρα, face.] A solid bounded by twenty-four equal faces, three corresponding to each face of an octahedron.

TRIS'PAST, TRISPAS'TON, n. [Gr. τρεῖς and σπάω, to draw.] In mech., a term used by some old writers for a machine with three pulleys for raising great weights.

TRISPERM'OUS, a. [Gr. τρεῖς, three, and σπέρμα, seed.] Three-seeded; containing three seeds; as, a trispermous capsule.

TRIST, for Tryst,—which see.

TRIST, TRIST'FUL, †a. [L. tristis, sad.] Sad; sorrowful; gloomy.

TRIST'FULLY, adv. Sadly.

TRISTI'TIATE,† v. t. [L. tristitia.] To make sad.

TRISULC',† n. [L. trisulcus.] Something having three furrows.

TRISULC'ATE, a. Having three furrows.

TRISYLLAB'IC, TRISYLLAB'ICAL, a. [from trisyllable.] Pertaining to a trisyllable; consisting of three syllables; as, a trisyllabic word or root.

TRISYL'LABLE, n. [L. tres, three, and syllaba, syllable.] A word consisting of three syllables.

TRITE, a. [L. tritus, from tero, to wear.] Worn out; common; used till so common as to have lost its novelty and interest; as, a trite remark; a trite subject.

TRITELY, adv. In a common manner.

TRITENESS, n. Commonness; staleness; a state of being worn out; as, the triteness of an observation or a subject.

TRITERN'ATE, a. [L. tres, three, and ternate.] Three times ternate. A petiole, which separates into three, and is again divided at each point into three, and on each of these nine points bears three leaflets.

TRI'THEISM, n. [Fr. tritheisme; Gr τρεῖς, three, and θεός, God.] The opinion that the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, are three beings, or Gods.

TRI'THEIST, n. One who believes that there are three distinct Gods in the Godhead, that is, three distinct substances, essences, or hypostases.

TRITHEIST'IC, a. Pertaining to tritheism.

TRITHE'ITE, n. A tritheist.

TRITHING, n. [from three.] One of the divisions of the county of York in England, which is divided into three parts. It is now called Riding.

TRIT'ICAL,† a. [from trite.] Trite; common.

TRIT'ICALNESS,† n. Triteness.

TRIT'ICUM, n. A genus of grasses yielding various kinds of wheat. The species are divided into two groups, the cerealia, yielding edible fruits, and the agropyra, which are merely grasses. Of the former group, the most important species are T. vulgare, or common wheat; T. turgidum, turgid, cone, or English wheat; T. durum, true beard wheat; T. polonicum, Polish wheat; T. spelta, spelt wheat; T. dicoccum, two-grained or rice wheat; and T. monococcum, one-grained wheat. To each of these belong several varieties of the agropyra, or wheat-grasses. Some are known as troublesome weeds, especially T. repens, creeping wheat-grass, couch-grass, or spear-grass, a native of Britain. The following are also British plants: T. junceum, sea wheat-grass, or rush-grass; T. caninum, fibrous-rooted wheat-grass, or dog's wheat; T. cristatum, or crested wheat-grass; and T. loliaceum, dwarf sea wheat-grass. [See WHEAT.]

TRI'TON, n. In myth., a fabled sea demi-god, supposed to be the son and trumpeter of Neptune. We find, however, a number of Tritons spoken of in ancient mythology, who were half man, half fish, and upon whom the Nereids rode.—2. A genus of siphonobranchiate molluscs, comprehending the marine trumpet, or triton-shell.—3. According to Laurent and others, a genus of Batrachian reptiles, or aquatic salamanders, comprehending numerous species.—4. A bird of the West Indies, famous for its notes.

TRI'TONE, n. [L. tres and tonus.] In music, a dissonant interval, called also a superfluous fourth. It consists of three tones between the extremes, or of two major and one minor tone, or of two tones and two semitones.

TRITO'NIA, n. A genus of marine, naked, gastropodous molluscs, many of which are found on the coasts of England, France, and other European countries.

TRITOX'IDE, n. [Gr. τρίτος, third, and oxide.] In chem., a non-acid compound of one equivalent of a base, with three equivalents of oxygen.

TRIT'URABLE, a. [See TRITURATE.] Capable of being reduced to a fine powder by pounding, rubbing, or grinding.

TRIT'URATE, v. t. [L. trituro, from tritus, tero, to wear.] To rub or grind to a very fine powder, and properly to a finer powder than that made by pulverization.

TRIT'URATED, pp. Reduced to a very fine powder.

TRIT'URATING, ppr. Grinding or reducing to a very fine powder.

TRITURA'TION, n. The act of reducing to a fine powder by grinding; levigation.

TRI'TURE,† n. A rubbing or grinding.

TRITU'RIUM, n. A vessel for separating liquors of different densities.

TRI'UMPH, n. [Fr. triomphe; It. trionfo; L. triumphus; Gr. θρίαμβος.] 1. Among the ancient Romans, a pompous ceremony performed in honour of a victorious general, and the highest military honour which he could obtain. It was granted by the senate only to a dictator, consul, or prætor, and after a decisive victory, or the complete subjugation of a province. In a Roman triumph, the general to whom this honour was awarded, entered the city of Rome in a chariot drawn by four horses, crowned with laurel, and having a sceptre in one hand, and a branch of laurel in the other. He was preceded by the senate and magistrates, musicians, the spoils, the captives in fetters, &c., and followed by his army on foot, in marching order. The procession advanced in this order along the via sacra to the capitol, where the general sacrificed a bull to Jupiter, and deposited his wreath in the lap of the god. Banquets and other entertainments concluded the solemnity, which was generally brought to a close in one day, though in later times it sometimes lasted for three days. During the time of the empire, the emperor himself was the only person that could claim a triumph. The ovation was an honour inferior to a triumph, and less imposing in its ceremonies.—2. State of being victorious.

> Hercules from Spain
> Arriv'd in triumph, from Geryon slain. Dryden.

3. Victory; conquest.

> The vain coquets the trifling triumphs boast. Logan.

4. Joy or exultation for success.

> Great triumph and rejoicing was in heav'n. Milton.

5. A card that takes all others; now written trump,—which see.

TRI'UMPH, v. i. To celebrate victory with pomp; to rejoice for victory.

> How long shall the wicked triumph? Ps. xciv.

2. To obtain victory.

> There fix thy faith, and triumph o'er the world. Rowe.
> Attir'd with stars, we shall for ever sit > Triumphing over death. Milton.

3. To insult upon an advantage gained.

> Let not my enemies triumph over me; Ps. xxv.
> Sorrow on all the pack of you
> That triumph thus upon my misery. Shak.

4. To be prosperous, to flourish.

> Where commerce triumph'd on the favouring gales. Trumbull.

To triumph over, to succeed in overcoming; to surmount; as, to triumph over all obstacles.

TRIUMPH'AL, a. [Fr. from L. triumphalis.] Pertaining to triumph; used in a triumph; as, a triumphal crown or car; a triumphal arch. A triumphal arch is a grand portico, or archway, erected at the entrance of a city, or in some public situation, in commemoration of some great victory or remarkable event, or in honour of some victorious general. The Romans were the first people who erected triumphal arches. At first they were extremely plain and simple, but afterwards the style became enriched, and the whole was at length loaded with a profusion of every sort of ornament. Latterly, they were a rectangular mass penetrated by three arches, a central one, and two smaller side ones; as, the arches of Constantine, Septimius Severus, &c. In cases where they served as gates, they were usually constructed with two archways, one for carriages passing into the city, and the other for carriages passing out of it. Many beautiful structures, in imitation of the ancient triumphal arches, have been erected in modern times. In modern times, a temporary kind of triumphal arch is frequently, on festive occasions, formed of festoons of green branches, flowers, &c.—Triumphal column, among the Romans, an insulated column erected in commemoration of a conqueror, to whom had been decreed the honours of a triumph; as, the columns of Trajan and Antonine.—Triumphal crown, a crown usually awarded by the Romans to their victorious generals. It was formed of laurel.

TRIUMPH'AL, n. A token of victory.

TRIUMPH'ANT, a. [L. triumphans.] 1. Celebrating victory; as, a triumphant chariot.—2. Rejoicing as for victory.

> Successful beyond hope to lead you forth
> Triumphant out of this infernal pit. Milton.

3. Victorious; graced with conquest.

> So shall it be in the church triumphant. Perkins.
> Athena, war's triumphant maid. Pope.

4. Celebrating victory; expressing joy for success; as, a triumphant song.

TRIUMPH'ANTLY, adv. In a triumphant manner; with the joy and exultation that proceeds from victory or success.

> Through arm'd ranks triumphantly she drives. Glanville.

2. Victoriously; with success.

> Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin. Shak.

3. With insolent exultation.

TRI'UMPHER, n. One who triumphs or rejoices for victory; one who vanquishes.—2. One who was honoured with a triumph in Rome.

TRI'UMPHING, ppr. Celebrating victory with pomp; vanquishing; rejoicing for victory; insulting on an advantage

TRI'UMVIR, n. [L. tres, three, and vir, man.] One of three men united in office. The triumvirs, L. triumviri, of Rome, were three men who jointly obtained the sovereign power in Rome. The first of these were Cæsar, Crassus, and Pompey.

TRIUM'VIRATE, n. A coalition of three men; particularly, the union of three men who obtained the government of the Roman empire.—2. Government by three men in coalition.

TRIUM'VIRY,† n. Triumvirate.

TRI'UNE, n. [L. tres, and unus.] Three in one; an epithet applied to God, to express the unity of the Godhead in a trinity of persons.

TRIU'NITY, n. Trinity.

TRIVALV'ULAR, a. Three-valved; having three valves.

TRIV'ANT, n. A truant.

TRIVERB'IAL, a. [L. triverbium.] Triverbial days, in the Roman calendar, were juridical or court days, days allowed to the prætor for hearing causes; called also dies fasti. There were only twenty-eight in the year.

TRIV'ET, n. A three-legged stool. [See TREVET.]—2. A movable part of a kitchen range whereon to place vessels for boiling, or to receive something placed before the fire.

TRIV'ET-TA'BLE,† n. A table supported by three feet.

TRIV'IAL, a. [Fr. from L. trivialis; probably from the Gr. τρίβω, L. tero, trivi, to wear, or from trivium, a highway.] 1. Trifling; of little worth or importance; inconsiderable; as, a trivial subject; a trivial affair.—2. Worthless; vulgar.—Trivial name, in nat. hist., the name for the species, which, added to the generic name, forms the complete denomination of the plant; the specific name. Thus in Lathyrus aphaca, Lathyrus is the generic name, and aphaca the trivial or specific name, and the two combined form the complete denomination of the plant. Linnæus at first applied the phrase specific name to the essential character of the species, now called the specific definition or difference; but it is now applied solely to the trivial name.

TRIVIAL'ITY,† n. Trivialness.

TRIV'IALLY, adv. Commonly; vulgarly.—2. Lightly; inconsiderably; in a trifling degree.

TRIV'IALNESS, n. Commonness.—2. Lightness; unimportance.

TRI'VIUM, n. [L.] In the schools of the middle ages, the name given to the first three liberal arts, grammar, rhetoric, and logic; the other four, arithmetic, music, geometry, and astronomy, being termed quadrivium.

TRI'-WEEK'LY, a. Happening, performed, or appearing thrice a week; as, a tri-weekly newspaper. [A convenient, but not legitimately formed word.]

TRŌAT, v. i. To cry, as a buck in rutting time.

TROAT, n. The cry of a buck in rutting time.

TRO'CAR, TRO'CHAR, n. [Fr. un trois quart, expressive of its triangular point.] A surgical instrument for tapping dropsical persons and the like.

TROCHA'IC, TROCHA'ICAL, a. [See TROCHEE.] In poetry, consisting of trochees; as, trochaic measure or verse. The trochaic verse was a kind of verse used by the Greek and Latin poets, especially by the tragedians and comedians. The most common form of this verse is that which is composed of a perfect dimeter, followed by a dimeter wanting the last half foot.

TROCHAN'TER, n. [Gr. τροχαντήρ.] In anat., the trochanters are two processes of the thigh-bone, called major and minor, the major on the outside, and the minor on the inside.

TRO'CHE, n. [Gr. τροχός, a wheel.] A form of medicine in a circular cake or tablet, or a stiff paste cut into proper portions and dried. It is made by mixing the medicine with sugar and mucilage, and is intended to be gradually dissolved in the mouth and slowly swallowed, as a demulcent.

TRO'CHEE, n. [L. trochæus; Gr. τροχαῖος, from τρέχω.] In verse, a foot of two syllables, the first long, and the second short.

TROCH'IDÆ, n. [L. trochus, a top, and the name of one of the genera.] A family of testaceous turbinated gastropods.

TRO'ЄHIL. See TROCHILUS.

TROЄHIL'IЄ, a. Having power to draw out or turn round.

TROЄHIL'IЄS, n. [Gr. τροχιλια, from τροχω: L. trochilus.] The science of rotary motion.

TROЄHI'LIDÆ, n. [from trochus.] The family of humming birds.

TRO'ЄHILUS, n. [L. trochilus; Gr. τροχιλος, from τρεχω, to run.] 1. A genus of birds, consisting of those small birds which are known by the name of hum birds, humming birds, or honey suckers. [See HUM BIRD.]—2. In arch., an annular moulding whose section is concave; more commonly called a Scotia, —which see.

TRO'ЄHINGS, n. The small branches on the top of a deer's head.

TRO'ЄHISK, n. [Gr. τροχισκος.] A kind of tablet or lozenge. [See TROCHE.]

TRO'CHITE, n. [L. trochus; Gr. τρεχω, to run.] 1. In nat. hist., a kind of figured fossil stone resembling parts of plants, called St. Cuthbert's beads. These stones are usually of a brownish colour; they break like spar, and are easily dissolved in vinegar. Their figure is generally cylindrical, sometimes a little tapering. Two, three, or more of these joined, constitute an entrochus.—2. Fossil remains of the shells called trochus.

TROCH'LEA, n. [L., a pulley, from Gr. τρεχω, to run.] A pulley-like cartilage, through which the tendon of the trochleary muscle passes.

TROCH'LEARY, a. [from L. trochlea.] Pertaining to the trochlea; as, the trochleary muscle, the superior oblique muscle of the eye; the trochleary nerve, the pathetic nerve, which goes to that muscle.

TRO'CHOID, n [Gr. τροχος, L. trochus, from τρεχω, to run, and ειδος.] In geom., a curve generated by the motion of a wheel; the cycloid.

TROCHO'IDAL, a. Pertaining to a trochoid; partaking of the nature of a trochoid; as, trochoidal curves. The epicycloid, the involute of the circle, the spiral of Archimedes, &c., are called trochoidal curves.

TROЄHO'METER, n. [Gr.] An instrument for computing the revolutions of a carriage wheel.

TRO'ЄHUS, n. [Gr. τροχος.] A genus of conical, spiral gastropods. Most of these animals have three filaments on each edge of the mantle, or at least some appendages to the sides of the feet. The genus belongs to the Pectinibranchiate gastropods of Cuvier.

TROD, pret. of Tread.

TROD, }
TROD'DEN, } pp. of Tread.

Jerusalem shall be trodden down by the Gentiles; Luke xxi.

TRODE, old pret. of Tread.

TRODE,† n. Tread; footing; path.

TROG'LODYTE, n. [Gr. τρωγλη, a cavern, and δυω, to enter.] The Troglodytes were a people of Ethiopia, represented by the ancients as living in caves. There are many fabulous accounts respecting the Troglodytes, but the remains of their subterraneous dwellings, still to be seen, attest their existence, especially along the banks of the Nile in Upper Egypt, and Nubia. There were also Troglodytes in parts of Syria and Arabia.—2. Troglodytes is the name of a genus of insessorial birds. Troglodytes europæus, is known by the name of kitty wren.

TRO'GON, or ЄU'RUЄUI, n. A genus of scansorial birds, and type of the family Trogonidæ. The trogons are found plentifully in the Indian Archipelago, and in the tropical regions of America. They are solitary birds, jealous of their freedom, and frequenting the interior of the thickest forests.

Trogon pavoninus.

They feed on insects, and their flight is lively, short, vertical, and undulating. There are numerous species, all of them possessing most brilliantly coloured plumage, only second in splendour to the humming birds. The T. pavoninus, or peacock trogon, was celebrated in the mythology of the ancient Mexicans.

TROGO'NIDÆ, n. A family of perching birds, remarkable for the beauty of their plumage, and typically represented by the curucuis, or trogons.

TRŌLL, v. t. [G. trollen; W. troliaw, to troll, to roll; troelli, to turn, wheel, or whirl; troell, a wheel, a reel; trol, a roller. It is probably formed on roll.] To move in a circular direction; to roll; to move volubly; to utter volubly; to draw on; to turn; to drive about.

Troll about the bridal bowl. B. Jonson.

2. To allure, in allusion to the practice of fishing with a baited trolling line.

TRŌLL, v. i. To go round; to move or run round; to roll; to run about; as, to troll in a coach and six.—2. Among anglers, to fish, as for pikes, with a rod whose line runs on a wheel or pulley.

TRŌLL, n. A kind of reel, over which a line (called a trolling line) of great length is rolled, used for fishing for pikes.

TRŌLLED, pp. Rolled; turned about.

TRŌLL'ER, n. One who trolls.

TRŌLLING, ppr. or a. Rolling; turning; driving about; fishing with a rod and reel.

TROL'LIUS, n. Globe-flower, a genus of plants. [See GLOBE-FLOWER.]

TROL'LOP, n. [G. trolle; from troll, strolling.] A stroller; a loiterer; a woman loosely dressed; a slattern.

TROLLOPEE',† n. Formerly, a loose dress for females.

TROL'LOPISH, a. Filthy; dirty; slovenly dressed.

TROL'MYDAMES, n. [Fr. trou-madame.] The game of nine holes.

TROM'BONE, n. [It.] A deep-toned instrument of the trumpet kind, consisting of three tubes; the first, to which the mouth-piece is attached, and the third, which terminates in a bell-shaped orifice, are placed side by side; the middle tube is doubled, and slides into the other two like the tube of a telescope. By the slide of the tube, every sound in the diatonic and chromatic scales being within its compass, is obtained in perfect tune, and thus the trombone surpasses every other instrument, in admitting, like the violin or the voice, the introduction of the slide. The trombone is of three kinds, the alto, the tenor, and the base; and in orchestral music, these are generally used together, forming a complete harmony in themselves.

TROMP, n. [See Trumpet.] A blowing machine formed of a hollow tree, used in furnaces.

TROMP'IL, n. An aperture in a tromp.

TRO'NA, n. A sesquicarbonate of soda, which occurs native on the banks of the lakes of soda, in the province of Sukena, in Africa.

TRON'AGE, n. Formerly, a toll or duty paid for weighing wool.

TRONA'TOR, n. An officer in London, whose business was to weigh wool.

TRON'CO, n. [L. truncus.] A term in Italian music, directing a note or sound to be cut short, or just uttered and then discontinued.

TRONE, n. A provincial word in some parts of England for a small drain.

TRONE,† n. A throne.

TRONE, }
TRONES, } n. A kind of steelyard or beam used in former times for weighing wool.

TRŌNE WEIGHT, n. An ancient Scottish weight used for many home productions, as wool, cheese, butter, &c. In this weight the pound varied in different counties, from 21 oz. to 28 oz. avoirdupois. Trone weight is now illegal, but is still occasionally used in some rural districts, in weighing wool, butter, &c.

TROOP, n. [Fr. troupe; It. truppa; Dan. and D. trop; G. trupp. The Gaelic trapan, a bunch or cluster, is probably the same word. The sense is a crowd, or a moving crowd.]—1 A collection of people; a company; a number; a multitude. Gen. xlix.; 2 Sam. xxiii.; Hos vii.

That which should accompany old age,
As honour, love, obedience, troops of friends,
I must not look to have. Shak.

2. A body of soldiers. But applied to infantry, it is now used in the plural, troops, and this word signifies soldiers in general, whether more or less numerous, including infantry, cavalry, and artillery. We apply the word to a company, a regiment, or an army. The captain ordered his troops to halt; the colonel commanded his troops to wheel and take a position on the flank; the general ordered his troops to attack; the troops of France amounted to 400,000 men.—3. Troop, in the singular, a small body or company of cavalry, light horse, or dragoons, commanded by a captain.—4. A company of stage-players.

TROOP, v. i. To collect in numbers.

Armies at the call of trumpet,
Troop to their standard. Milton.

2. To march in a body.

I do not, as an enemy to peace,
Troop in the throngs of military men.
Shak.

3. To march in haste or in company.

TROOP'ER, n. A private or soldier in a body of cavalry; a horse soldier.

TROOP'ING, ppr. Moving together in a crowd; marching in a body.

TROOPS, n. pl. Soldiers in general; an army.

Has Norval seen the troops? Home.

TROOS'ITE, n. A mineral containing manganese.

TROPÆOLE'Æ, n. A suborder of plants in the nat. order Balsaminaceæ, according to Lindley's arrangement. The genera belonging to this order, are Tropæolum, Magallana, and Chymocarpus, all natives of South America.

TROPÆ'OLUM, n. Indian cress, a genus of handsome trailing or climbing plants, nat. order Balsaminaceæ. The species are all inhabitants of South America. Some of them have pungent fruits, which are used as condiments, and others have obtained a place in our collections on account of their handsome and various-coloured flowers. All of them have obtained the common name of Nasturtium. The principal species are T. minus, small Indian cress, introduced into this country at an early period. The fruit is pickled, and eaten as capers, and the leaves may be eaten as a salad. T. majus, great Indian cress, the fruit of which is also made into a pickle. Of this plant there is a beautiful double variety much cultivated in gardens and greenhouses. T. tricolorum, tricolor Indian cress, the most showy and handsome of the species.

TROPE, n [L. tropus; Gr. τρόπος, from τρέπω, to turn; W. trova, a turn, a tropic; trovâu, to turn.] In rhet., a change in the signification of a word, from a primary to a derivative sense; a word or expression used in a different sense from that which it properly signifies; or a word changed from its original signification to another, for the sake of giving life or emphasis to an idea; as, when we call a stupid fellow an ass, or a shrewd man a fox. Tropes are chiefly of four kinds, metaphor, metonymy, synecdoche, and irony; but to these may be added, allegory, prosopopœia, autonomasia, and perhaps some others. Some authors make figures the genus, of which trope is a species; others make them different things, defining trope to be a change of sense, and figure to be any ornament, except what becomes so by such change.

TRO'PHI, n. plur. [Gr. τροφός, one who feeds.] In entom., the parts of the mouth employed in manducation or deglutition. They include the labrum, labium, maxillæ, mandibulæ, lingua, and pharynx.

TRO'PHIED, a. [from trophy.] Adorned with trophies.

The trophied arches, storied halls invade. Pope.

TROPHO'NIAN, a. Pertaining to the Grecian architect Trophonius, or his cave, or his architecture.—In the Grecian myth., Trophonius was a celebrated architect, the son of Erginus, king of Orchomenos, in Bœotia. He built Apollo's temple at Delphi. He is also said to have had a wonderful cave at Lebadea, whence he gave oracles, and this cave became one of the most celebrated oracles of Greece. From this circumstance, Trophonius was honoured as a god.

TRO'PHOSPERM, n. [Gr. τροφός, one who feeds, a nurse, and σπέρμα, seed.] In bot., that part of the ovary from which the ovules arise. It is most commonly called placenta, sometimes spermaphore, and sometimes receptacle of the seeds.

TRO'PHY, n. [L. tropæum; Gr. τρόπαιον: Fr. trophée; Sp. and It. trofeo.] 1. Among the ancients, a monument or memorial in commemoration of some victory. It consisted of some of the arms and other spoils of the vanquished enemy, hung upon the trunk of a tree, or a stone pillar, by the victorious army, either on the field of battle, or in the capital of the conquered nation. The custom of erecting trophies was most general among the Greeks, but it passed at length to the Romans. The Roman trophies, however, were usually constructed of more solid and durable materials than the Greek, such as towers, columns, &c. It was the practice, also, to have representations of trophies carved in stone, in bronze, and other solid substances. Many representations of trophies are to be found upon ancient medals, coins, &c.—2. Any thing taken and preserved as a memorial of victory, as arms, flags, standards, and the like, taken from an enemy.

Around the posts hung helmets, darts and spears,
And captive chariots, axes, shields and bars,
And broken beaks of ships, the trophies of their wars. Dryden.

3. In arch., an ornament representing the stem of a tree, charged or encompassed with arms and military weapons, offensive and defensive.—4. Something that is evidence of victory; memorial of conquest. Present every hearer to Christ as a trophy of grace.

TRO'PHY-MONEY, n. A duty formerly paid in England annually by house-keepers, toward providing harness, drums, colours, &c., for the militia.

TROP'IC, n. [Fr. tropique; L. tropicus; from the Gr. τροπή, a turning; τρέπω, to turn.]—1. In astron., the tropics, or tropical circles, are two parallels of declination, whose distances from the equator are each equal to the obliquity of the ecliptic, or twenty-three degrees and a half nearly. The northern one passes through the point Cancer, and is thence called the tropic of Cancer, and the southern one, which passes through the point Capricorn, is called the tropic of Capricorn. The sun's annual path in the heavens is bounded by these two circles, and they are called tropics, because when the sun, in his journey northward or southward, reaches either of them, he, as it were, turns back, and travels in an opposite direction in regard to north and south. [See ECLIPTIC SOLSTICE.]—2. In geography, the tropics are two parallels of latitude, each at the same distance from the terrestrial equator as the celestial tropics are from the celestial equator. The one north of the equator is called the tropic of Cancer, and that south of the equator the tropic of Capricorn. Over these circles the sun is vertical when his declination is greatest, and they include that portion of the globe which is called the torrid zone.

TROP'ICAL, TROP'IC, a. Pertaining to the tropics; being within the tropics; as, tropical climates; tropical regions; tropical latitudes; tropical heat; tropical winds.—2. Incident to the tropics; as, tropical diseases.—3. [from trope.] Figurative; rhetorically changed from its proper or original sense.

The foundation of all parables is some analogy or similitude between the tropical or allusive part of the parable, and the thing intended by it. South.

Tropical writing or hieroglyphic, is such as represents a thing by qualities which resemble it. [See HIEROGLYPHIC.]

TROP'ICALLY, adv. In a tropical or figurative manner.

TROP'ICAL YEAR, n. The period occupied by the sun in passing from one tropic, or one equinox, to the other. On account of the precession of the equinoxes, it is 20 m. 20 s. shorter than the sidereal year.

TROP'IC-BIRD, n. The Phaeton of Linn., a genus of palmipede birds peculiar to tropical regions. There are only two species, the P. æthereus, and P. phœnicurus. They are distinguished by the two long slender tail-feathers, which have obtained for them the French name of paille-en queue.

Tropic Bird (Phaeton phœnicurus).

The wings are long and the feet slender; their flight is swift and graceful. They are to be seen disporting in the air far at sea, and when they perceive a ship they never fail to sail round it. They generally return every evening to land, to roost in the midst of the rocks. Their food appears to consist entirely of fish.

TROP'ICS. See TROPIC.

TRO'PIST, n. [from trope.] One who explains the Scriptures by tropes and figures of speech; one who deals in tropes.

TROPOLOG'ICAL, a. [See TROPOLOGY.] Varied by tropes; changed from the original import of the words.

TROPOLOG'ICALLY, adv. In a tropological manner.

TROPOLOG'IZE, v. t. To change a word from its original meaning; to use as a trope. [Not authorized.]

TROPOL'OGY, n. [Gr. τρόπος, trope, and λόγος, discourse.] A rhetorical mode of speech, including tropes, or change from the original import of the word.

TROSS'ERS,† n. Trowsers. [See TROWSERS.]

TROT, v. i. [Fr. trotter; G. trotten, to trot, to tread; It. trottare; allied probably to tread and to strut.]—1. To move faster than in walking, as a horse, or other quadruped, by lifting one fore foot and the hind foot of the opposite side at the same time.—2. To walk or move fast; or to run.

He that rises late must trot all day, and will scarcely overtake his business at night. Franklin.

TROT, n. The pace of a horse or other quadruped, when he lifts one fore foot and the hind foot of the opposite side at the same time. This pace is the same as that of a walk, but more rapid. The trot is often a jolting hard motion, but in some horses it is as easy as the amble or pace, and has a more stately appearance. — 2. An old woman; in contempt. — 3. In a ludicrous sense, a quick sort of pace with a hobbling motion.

TROTH, n. [Sax. treothe; the old orthography of truth. See TRUTH.]—1.† Belief; faith; fidelity; as, to plight one's troth.—2.† Truth; verity; veracity; as, in troth; by my troth.

TROTH'LESS,† a. Faithless; treacherous.

TROTH'-PLIGHT,† v. t. To betroth or affiance.

TROTH'-PLIGHT,† a. Betrothed; espoused; affianced.

TROTH'-PLIGHT, n. The act of betrothing or plighting faith.

TROTH'-PLIGHTED, a. Having fidelity pledged.

TROT'TER, n. A beast that trots, or that usually trots.—2. A sheep's foot.

TROT'TING, ppr. Moving with a trot; walking fast, or running.

TROUBADOUR, n. [from Fr. trouver, to find.] Literally a finder or inventor, a name given to a poet in Provence in France. The troubadours were considered the inventors of a species of provençal poetry, characterized by an almost entire devotion to the subject of romantic gallantry, and generally very complicated in regard to its metre and rhymes. They flourished from the 11th to the latter end of the 13th century, their principal residence being the South of France, but they also lived in Catalonia, Arragon, and the North of Italy. The most renowned among the troubadours were knights who cultivated music and poetry as an honourable accomplishment.

TROUBLE, v. t. (trub'l.) Fr. troubler; It. turbare; Sp. and Port. turbar; L. turbo; Gaelic, treabhlaim, which seems to be connected with treabham, to plough, that is, to turn or to stir, W. torva, L. turba, a crowd, and perhaps trova, a turn; Gr. τρέπω. The primary sense is to turn or to stir, to whirl about, as in L. turbo, turbinis, a whirlwind. Hence the sense of agitation, disturbance.] 1. To agitate; to disturb; to put into confused motion.

TRUCK, n. Permutation; exchange of commodities; barter.—2. A small wooden wheel not bound with iron; a cylinder.—3. In ships, the small wooden cap at the extremity of a flag-staff, or of a topmast, generally furnished with two or more small pulleys, and used to reeve the halliards. Also, a small circular piece of wood, having a hole bored through it for a rope to run through; as, the trucks of the shrouds.—4. In gunnery, trucks are circular pieces of wood like wheels, fixed on an axle-tree, for moving ordnance.—5. In railways, a kind of platform running upon wheels and used for the conveyance of ordinary stage-coaches and carriages, which are placed upon it.—6. A small wheel carriage, or a species of barrow with two wheels, to be moved by hand. Trucks of this description are made in a great variety of forms, to adapt them to their peculiar objects, such as the moving of sacks, bags, casks, cases, lead, iron, copper, stone, &c., in warehouses, granaries, &c.—Truck, or trucks, is also the name given to a kind of low carriage for conveying goods, stones, &c., on common roads.

TRUCK'LING, ppr. Yielding obsequiously to the will of another.

TRUCK'-MAN, n. A truck driver.

TRUCK'-SYSTEM, n. The practice of paying the wages of workmen in goods instead of money. This practice prevailed, particularly in the mining and manufacturing districts. The masters established warehouses or shops, and the workmen in their employment either got their wages accounted for to them by supplies of goods from such depôts, without receiving any money, or they got the money on a tacit or express understanding that they were to resort to the warehouses or shops of their masters for such necessaries as they required. The ostensible design of this system was to supply the workmen and their families with provisions, clothing of good quality, &c., at the cheapest rate, and thus to leave them but little money for the purposes of drinking and idleness. The truck system, however, was liable to great abuses. It gave rise to unfair dealing, and a species of tyranny; the workmen had often to pay exorbitant prices for their goods, and from the great facility afforded to them of procuring liberal supplies of goods in anticipation of wages, they were led into debt. These, and other evils incident to the truck system, induced the legislature to put a stop to it by an act passed in 1831.

TRU'CULENCE, n. [L. truculentia, from trux, fierce, savage.] 1. Savageness of manners; ferociousness.—2. Terribleness of countenance.

TRUESERVICE, TRUESERVICE-TREE, n. A plant of the genus Pyrus, the P. domestica. [See Pyrus.]

TRUF'FLE, n. [Fr. truffe; Sp. trufa, deceit, imposition, and truffles; and if this vegetable is named from its growth under ground, it accords with It. truffare, to deceive.] A subterraneous vegetable production, of the genus Tuber, the T. cibarium. It is a kind of mushroom, of a fleshy fungous structure and roundish figure, without any visible root; of a dark colour, approaching to black, and studded over with tubercles. It grows abundantly in some parts of England; also in Italy, the South of France, and several other countries. It is much esteemed and sought after as an ingredient in certain high seasoned dishes. Several other species of the genus Tuber are called truffles. The T. moschatum is called the musk-scented truffle. There being no appearance above ground to indicate the existence of the truffle, which lies concealed some inches under the surface of the clayey sandy soil, dogs are trained to discover these productions by the scent. As soon as the dog finds one, he barks and scrapes, and the truffle hunter follows and digs up the object of his pursuit.

Truffle (Tuber cibarium).

TRUF'FLE-WORM, n. A worm found in truffles, the larva of a fly, a species of Leiodes.

TRUF'FLED, a. Furnished, cooked, or stuffed with truffles; as, a truffled turkey is a favourite French dish.

TRUG, n. A hod for mortar. This is our trough and tray; the original pronunciation being retained in some parts of England. The word was also used formerly for a measure of wheat, as much as was carried in a trough; three trugs making two bushels.

TRUMP'ET, n. [It. tromba, trombetta; Fr. trompette; Gaelic, trompa, trompaid; G. trompete; Dan. trompette; Arm. trompett. The radical letters and the origin are not ascertained.] 1. A wind instrument of music of the highest antiquity, used chiefly in war and military exercises. It consists of a folded tube, generally of brass, but sometimes of silver, with a large bell-shaped aperture at one end for the emission of the sound, and a mouth piece at the other, adapted for blowing into the instrument with the mouth. The natural scale of the trumpet is limited, but by means of slides and keys, the number of notes may be greatly increased. It is the loudest of all portable wind instruments, and from its exciting effect, is well adapted for military music. It is used also for giving signals, and accompanies flags of truce, heralds, &c.

> The trumpet's loud clangor
> Excites us to arms. Dryden.

Speaking trumpet, an instrument for increasing the intensity of articulate sounds, and transmitting them to considerable distances in a particular direction. It is constructed of various forms, but usually consists of a tin or copper tube from six to twelve or more feet long, of such a form that its diameter becomes greater towards the extremity furthest from the mouth. The mouth piece is made large enough to admit both lips. Philosophers are not agreed as to the best form of the speaking trumpet, as the theory of the instrument is attended with considerable difficulty. The sound which the trumpet conveys in one direction is supposed to be increased not so much from its being prevented from spreading in all directions, as by repeated reflections of the sound from the sides of the trumpet. The speaking trumpet is chiefly used at sea.—Ear trumpet. [See among the compounds of Ear.]—Trumpet marine, an old musical stringed instrument. It was played with a bow, and the sounds were stopped by the fingers gently touching the string, so as to produce the harmonics of the string in the same manner as is practised on the violin.—Feast of trumpets, a feast among the Jews, which was held on the first and second days of the month Tisri, which was the commencement of the Jewish civil year. It derived its name from the blowing of trumpets in the temple with more than usual solemnity.—2. In the military style, a trumpeter.

> He wisely desired that a trumpet might be first sent for a pass. Clarendon.

3. One who praises or propagates praise, or is the instrument of propagating it. A great politician was pleased to be the trumpet of his praises.

TRUMP'ET, v. t. To publish by sound of trumpet; also, to proclaim; as, to trumpet good tidings.

> They did nothing but publish and trumpet all the reproaches they could devise against the Irish. Bacon.

2. To sound the praises of.

TRUMP'ET-CALL, n. A call at the sound of the trumpet.

TRUN'DLE-HEAD, n. The wheel that turns a mill-stone.

TRUN'DLE-TAIL, n. A round tail; a dog so called from his tail.

TRUN'DLING, ppr. Rolling, as a thing on little wheels.

TRUNK, n. [Fr. tronc; It. troncone; Sp. tronco; L. truncus, from trunco, to cut off. The primitive Celtic word of this family is in Fr. trancher, It. trinciare, Sp. trincar, trinchar. The n is not radical, for in Arm. the word is troucha, W. tryçu.] 1. The woody stem of trees, such as the oak, ash, and elm; that part of a plant which, springing immediately from the root, ascends in a vertical position above the surface of the soil, and constitutes the principal bulk of the individual. It is peculiar to dicotyledonous plants, and may be described as of an elongated conical form, its diameter being greatest at the base, and gradually becoming less to the top, where it sends out branches whose structure is similar to that of the trunk. In shrubs, properly speaking, that part which is between the root and the branches is called the stem; shrubs having no trunk in the strict sense of the term.—2. The body of an animal without the limbs.—3. The main body of any thing; as, the trunk of a vein or of an artery, as distinct from the branches.—4. The snout or proboscis of an elephant; the limb or instrument with which he feeds himself.—5.† The proboscis of an insect, by means of which it sucks the blood of animals or the juices of vegetables.—6. In entom., that segment of the body of an insect, which is between the head and abdomen, and which bears the organs of motion.—7. In arch., the shaft of a column; that part between the base and capital. Also, a vessel open at each end for the discharge of water, rain, &c. The term is sometimes used to signify the dado or body of a pedestal.—8. A long tube through which pellets of clay are blown.—9. A box or chest covered with skin for containing clothes, &c.—10. A covered sluice; also a water course made of planks, and generally to conduct the water from the race to the water wheel.—Fire-trunks, in fire ships, wooden funnels fixed under the shrouds to convey or lead the flames to the masts and rigging.

TRUNK,† v. t. To lop off, to curtail; to truncate.

TRUNK'ED,† pp. Cut off; curtailed.—2. a. Having a trunk.—3. In her., an epithet applied to a tree which is borne couped of all its branches, and separated from its roots. Also, when the main stem of a tree is borne of a different tincture from the branches, it is said to be trunked.

TRUNK'-FISH, n. A sea-fish; the ostracion.

TRUNK'-HOSE, n. [trunk and hose.] In costume, a kind of short wide breeches gathered in above the knees, or immediately under them, and distinguished according to their peculiar cut as French, Gallic or Venetian. This garment prevailed during the reign of Henry VIII, Elizabeth and James I.

TRUNK'-MAKER, n. One who makes trunks; as, "many a dull book, else unseen, comes partially to light in the linings of the trunk-maker's works."

TRUN'NION, n. [Fr. trognon.] The trunnions of a piece of ordnance, are two knobs which project from the opposite sides of a piece, whether gun, mortar, or howitzer, and serve to support it on the cheeks of the carriage. Trunnions are also employed in a similar manner in vibrating steam-engines, and in a variety of other machines.

TRUN'NION-PLATE, n. The trunnion-plates are two plates in travelling carriages, mortars, and howitzers, which cover the upper parts of the side-pieces, and go under the trunnions.

TRUN'NION-RING, n. A ring on a cannon next before the trunnions.

TRU'SION, n. (tru'zhon.) [L. trudo.] The act of pushing or thrusting.

TRUSS, n. [Fr. trousse; Dan. trosse, a cord or rope; Sw. tross; W. trwsa, a truss, a packet. See TROWSERS.] 1. In a general sense, a bundle; as, a truss of hay or straw. A truss of hay is 56 pounds or half a hundred-weight, and 36 trusses make a load. A truss of straw is of different weights in different places.—2. In sur., a bandage or apparatus used in cases of hernia, to keep up the reduced parts and hinder further protrusion, and for other purposes.—3. Among botanists, a truss or bunch is a tuft of flowers formed at the top of the main stalk or stem of certain plants.—4. In carpentry, a combination of timbers, of iron, or of timbers and iron work so arranged as to constitute an unyielding frame. It is so named because it is trussed or tied together. The simplest exemplar of a truss is the principal or main couple of a roof, in which a, a, the tie beam, is suspended in the middle by the king post, b, to the apex of the angle formed by the meeting of the rafters c, c. The feet of the rafters being tied together by the beam a, and being thus incapable of yielding in the direction of their length, their apex becomes a fixed point, to which the beam a is trussed or tied up, to prevent its sagging, and to prevent the rafters from sagging there are inserted the struts d,d. It is obvious that the office of the beam a,a, and of the king post b, could be perfectly fulfilled by a string, as they both serve as ties. There are other forms of truss suited to different purposes, but the conditions are the same in all, viz., the establishing of fixed points to which the tie beam is trussed. Thus, in fig. 2, two points a,a, are substituted for the single one, and two suspending posts are required. These are called queen-posts, and the truss is called a queen-post truss.—5. In navigation, a machine to pull a lower yard close to its mast, and retain it firmly in that position. Trusses are also short pieces of carved work, fitted under the taffrail, in the same manner as the terms. They are chiefly used in small ships. [See TROUSE.]

Truss (fig. 2).

TRUSS, v. t. To bind or pack close.—

You might have trussed him and all his apparel into an eelskin. Shak

2. To skewer; to make fast.—To truss up, to strain; to make close or tight.

What in most English writers useth to be loose and untight, in this author, is well grounded, finely framed and strongly trussed up together Spenser

TRUSS'ED, pp. Packed or bound closely.—Trussed beam, a compound beam composed of two beams secured together side by side with a truss generally of iron between them.—Trussed roof, a roof in which the principal rafters and tie beam are framed together so as to form a truss.—Trussed partition, a partition the timbers of which are framed together in the manner of a truss.—Trussed or well trussed, an epithet for a horse when his thighs are large, and proportioned to the roundness of the croup.

Trussed Beams.
1 Elevation. 2. Plan. 3. Elevation. 4. Plan.

TRUSS'ING, ppr. Packing or binding closely.

TRUSS'ING, n. In arch., the timbers &c., which form a truss.—2. In falconry, the act of a hawk when she seizes her prey and soars aloft with it into the air.—Trussing of hay or straw, in agriculture, is the operation of binding it in bundles for more convenient deportation.

TRUST, n. [Dan. tröst, consolation; tröster, to comfort, that is, to strengthen; miströster, to distrust, to discourage; Sw. tröst, confidence, trust, consolation; trösta, to console; misströsta, to distrust, to despair. The Saxon has trywsian, to trust, to obligate. Qu. Gr. Θαρσω.] 1. Confidence; a reliance or resting of the mind on the integrity, veracity, justice, friendship, or other sound principle of another person.

He that putteth his trust in the Lord shall be safe; Prov. xxix.

My misfortunes may be of use to credulous maids, never to put too much trust in deceitful men. Swift.

2. He or that which is the ground of confidence.

O Lord God, thou art my trust from my youth; Ps. lxxi.

3. Charge received in confidence

Reward them well, if they observe their trust. Denham.

4. That which is committed to one's care. Never violate a sacred trust.—5. Confident opinion of any event.

His trust was with th' Eternal to be deem'd Equal in strength. Milton

6. Credit given without examination; as, to take opinions on trust.—7. Credit on promise of payment, actual or implied; as, to take or purchase goods on trust.—8. Something committed to a person's care for use or management, and for which an account must be rendered. Every man's talents and advantages are a trust committed to him by his Maker, and for the use or employment of which he is accountable.—9. Confidence; special reliance on supposed honesty.—10. State of him to whom something is intrusted.

I serve him truly, that will put me in trust. Shak.

11. Care; management; 1 Tim. vi.—12. In law, any equitable right or interest, as distinguished from a legal one, and supposed to be founded in the confidence placed by one party in another; an estate, devised or granted in confidence that the devisee or grantee shall convey it, or dispose of the profits, at the will of another; an estate held for the use of another. Trusts are divided into simple and special; a simple trust is where property is simply vested in one person for the benefit of another, the terms of the trust not being specified, but left to the construction of law. A special trust is where property is vested in a trustee for purposes particularly pointed out, and where consequently the trustee is bound to the active performance of certain duties. Special trusts are farther subdivided into ministerial and discretionary, the former requiring for their performance only the ordinary qualities of a rational agent; the latter requiring more or less of judgment and discretion. Trusts may be created by the voluntary act of a party, or by the operation of law. [See USES.] In Scots law, the term trust bears the same general signification as in English law, but in regard to the modes of constituting trusts, and the forms and technicalities connected therewith, the laws of the two kingdoms differ materially. For example, by the law of Scotland, a trust affecting heritage must be constituted by a formal disposition of the truster, called a trust-deed, and completed by sasine of the heritage; whereas by the law of England, trusts of a like kind are not required to be declared or created by writing, but only manifested and proved by writing, and the law is satisfied if the trust be manifested by any subsequent acknowledgment on the part of the trustee, however informal or indirect, as by a letter under his hand, his answer in Chancery, or by a recital in a deed, &c., and though the writing itself must be signed, the terms of the trust may be collected from a paper not signed, provided it can be clearly connected with the signed writing.

TRUST, v. t. To place confidence in; to rely on. We cannot trust those who have deceived us.

He that trusts every one without reserve, will at last be deceived. Rambler.

2. To believe; to credit.

Trust me, you look well. Shak.

3. To commit to the care of, in confidence. Trust your Maker with yourself and all your concerns.—4. To venture confidently.

Fool'd by thee, to trust thee from my side. Milton.

5. To give credit to; to sell to upon credit, or in confidence of future payment. The merchants and manufacturers trust their customers annually with goods to the value of millions.

It is happier to be sometimes cheated, than not to trust. Rambler.

TRUST, v. i. To be confident of something present or future.

I trust to come to you, and speak face to face; 2 John xii.

We trust we have a good conscience; Heb. xiii.

2. To be credulous; to be won to confidence.

Well, you may fear too far...
Safer than trust too far. Shak.

To trust in, to confide in; to place confidence in; to rely on; a use frequent in the scriptures.

Trust in the Lord, and do good; Ps. xxxvii.

They shall be greatly ashamed that trust in graven images; Is. xlii.

To trust to, to depend on; to have confidence in; to rely on.

The men of Israel...trusted to the liers in wait; Judges xx.

TRUST'-DEED, n. In Scots law, a deed or disposition which conveys property not for the behoof of the disponee, but for other purposes pointed out in the deed, as a deed by a debtor conveying property to a person as trustee for payment of his debts. A trust-deed is completed by delivery of the movables, and by sasine in the heritage.

TRUST'ED, pp. Confided in; relied on; depended on; applied to persons.—2. Sold on credit; as goods or property.—3. Delivered in confidence to the care of another; as, letters or goods trusted to a carrier or bailee.

TRUSTEE′, n. A person who holds lands or tenements, or other property, upon the trust or confidence that he will apply the same for the benefit of those who are entitled, according to an expressed intention, either by the parties themselves or by the deed, will, settlement, or arrangement of another.

TRUSTEE′SHIP, n. The office or functions of a trustee; the state of being placed in the hands of a trustee.

TRUST′ER, n. One who trusts or gives credit.—2. In Scots law, one who grants a trust-deed.

TRUST ESTATE, n. An estate under the management of a trustee or trustees.

TRUST′INGLY, adv. With trust or implicit confidence.

TRUST′LESS, a. Not worthy of trust; unfaithful.

TRUST′LESSNESS, n. Unworthiness of trust.

TRUST′WORTHINESS, n. Quality of being trustworthy.

TRUST′WORTHY, a. Worthy of trust or confidence.

TRUST′Y, a. That may be safely trusted; that justly deserves confidence; fit to be confided in; as, a trusty servant.—2. That will not fail; strong; firm; as, a trusty sword.

TRUTH, n. [Sax. treowth, truth, and troth; G. treue; D. getrouwheid, fidelity, from trouw, trust, faith, fidelity, whence trouwen, to marry.] 1. Conformity to fact or reality; exact accordance with that which is, or has been, or shall be. The truth of history constitutes its whole value. We rely on the truth of the scriptural prophecies.

My mouth shall speak truth; Prov. viii.

Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth; John xvii.

2. True state of facts or things. The duty of a court of justice is to discover the truth. Witnesses are sworn to declare the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.—3. Conformity of words to thoughts, which is called moral truth.

Shall truth fail to keep her word? Milton.

4. Veracity; purity from falsehood; practice of speaking truth; habitual disposition to speak truth; as when we say, a man is a man of truth.—5. Correct opinion.—6. Fidelity; constancy.

The thoughts of past pleasure and truth,
The best of all blessings below. Song.

7. Honesty; virtue.

It must appear
That malice bears down truth. Shak.

8. Exactness; conformity to rule.

Ploughs, to go true, depend much on the truth of the iron work. Mortimer.

9. Real fact or just principle; real state of things. There are innumerable truths with which we are not acquainted.—10. Sincerity.

God is a spirit, and they that worship him must worship in spirit and in truth; John iv.

11. In the fine arts, a faithful adherence to the models of nature; verisimilitude.—12. The truth of God is his veracity and faithfulness; Ps. lxxi. Or his revealed will.

I have walked in thy truth; Ps. xxvi.

13. Jesus Christ is called the truth; John xiv.—14. It is sometimes used by way of concession.

She said, Truth, Lord; yet the dogs eat of the crumbs; Matt. xv.

That is, it is a truth; what you have said, I admit to be true. According to Dr. Reid, the truths that fall within the compass of human knowledge, whether they be self-evident or deduced from those that are self-evident, may be reduced to two classes, namely, necessary and immutable truths, and contingent and mutable truths. A necessary truth is one that depends not upon the will and power of any being; it is immutably true, and its contrary impossible. A contingent truth is one which depends upon some effect of will and power, which had a beginning and may have an end. Of the first class are the axioms in mathematics, and all the conclusions drawn from them; that is, the whole body of the science of mathematics. Some first principles, also, belonging to other sciences, are necessary truths; such as the following:—That every proposition must either be true or false; that the qualities which we perceive by our senses must have a subject, which we call body; and that the thoughts we are conscious of must have a subject, which we call mind; and that, whatever begins to exist, must have a cause which produced it. To the second class of truths, viz., those that are contingent, belong the truths of natural philosophy, which depend upon the will of the Maker of the world, and also the principles from which they are deduced. In short, all those truths that express matters of fact or real existences, depending upon the will and power of the Supreme Being, are contingent, with exception of his own existence and nature, which is a necessary truth.—First truths, first or fundamental principles; intuitive articles of belief, which form the foundation of all reasoning.—In truth, in reality; in fact.—Of a truth, in reality; certainly.—To do truth, is to practice what God commands; John iii.

TRUTHFUL, a. Conformable to truth; true in the highest degree.

TRUTHFULLY, adv. In a truthful manner.

TRUTHFULNESS, n. The state of being true, or the truth.

TRUTHLESS, a. Wanting truth; wanting reality.—2. Faithless.

TRUTHLESSNESS, n. The state of being truthless.

TRUTH-SPEAKING, a. Uttering truth.

TRUTH-TELLER, n. One who tells the truth.

TRUTINA′TION,† n. [L. trutina, a balance; trutinor, to weigh.] The act of weighing.

TRUTTA′CEOUS, a. [from L. trutta, trout.] Pertaining to the trout; as, fish of the truttaceous kind.

TRY, v. i. [This word is from the root of Dan. trekker, to draw, or trykker, Sw. trycka, to press, to urge; trachta, to seek or strive to obtain; D. tragten, to endeavour; Dan. tragter, id. The primary sense of all these words is to strain, to use effort, to stretch forward.] To exert strength; to endeavour; to make an effort; to attempt. Try to learn; try to lift a weight. The horses tried to draw the load. [These phrases give the true sense.]

TRY, v. t. To examine; to make experiment on; to prove by experiment.

Come, try upon yourselves what you have seen me. Shak.

2. To experience; to have knowledge by experience of.

Or try the Lybian heat, or Scythian cold. Dryden.

Let us try advent'rous work Milton.

7. To purify; to assay; to refine; as, silver seven times tried.—8. To search carefully into; Ps. xi.—9. To use as means; as, to try remedies for a disease.—10. To strain; as, to try the eyes; the literal sense of the word.—11. In arch., to plane a piece of stuff by the rule and square only.—To try on, to put on a garment to see if it fits the person.—To try tallow, &c., is to melt and separate it from the membranes.—To try out, to pursue efforts till a decision is obtained.

TRY,† n. A trial; experiment.—Try on, an attempt at imposition. [Trivial.]

TRY′GON, n. [Gr. τρυγών, a sort of fish.] The name of a genus of fishes, to which the sting-ray belongs.

TRY′ING, ppr. or a. Exerting strength; attempting.—2. Examining by searching or comparison with a test; proving; using; straining, &c.—3. a. Adapted to try, or put to severe trial.

TRY′ING, n. In marine lan., the letting a ship lie in the trough or hollow of the sea in the midst of a storm, with only her main or mizzen sail, or under bare poles, with the helm lashed-a-lee.—Trying plane, among joiners, a plane used after the jack-plane, for taking off a shaving the whole length of the stuff, which operation is called trying up. [See PLANE.]

TRY′-SAIL, n. In nautical lan., a fore and aft sail, set with a boom and gaff, and hoisting on a lower mast or on a small mast abaft that mast, called a trysail-mast. Trysail is also the name given to a sail set on a fore and aft rigged vessel, if two-masted, on the main-mast, hoisted by a gaff, but having no boom at its lower edge; this is used only in bad weather, as a storm trysail.

TRYST, n. An appointment to meet; an appointed meeting; a market; a rendezvous. [Scotch.]

TRYST, v. t. To engage a person to meet one at a given time and place. As a verb intransitive, to agree to meet at any particular time or place. [Scotch.]

TSCHET′WERT, CHET′WERT, n. A grain measure of Russia, equal to 0·7218 imp. quarter, or three-fourths of a quarter nearly.

TUB, n. [D. tobbe; G. zuber; Gael. tubag.] 1. An open wooden vessel formed with staves, heading, and hoops; used for various domestic purposes, as for washing, for making cheese, &c.—2.† A state of salivation; so called because the patient was formerly sweated in a tub.—3. A certain quantity; as, a tub of tea, which is 60 pounds; a tub of camphor, from 56 to 80 pounds; a tub of vermilion, from 300 to 400 pounds. [Local]—4. A wooden vessel in which vegetables are planted, for the sake of being movable and set in a house in cold weather. —5. A small cask.—6 Cant name for a pulpit; as, Henley's gilt tub.

TUB, v. t. To plant or set in a tub.

TUB'BER, n. In Cornwall, a mining instrument, called in other places a beele. The man who uses this tool is called tubber-man or beele-man.

TUB'BING, ppr. Setting in a tub.

TUB'BY, a. [from tub.] Having a sound like that of an empty tub when struck: wanting elasticity of sound. Applied to musical stringed instruments, as the violin.

TUBE, n. [Fr. tube; L. tubus.] 1. A pipe; a siphon; a canal or conduit; a hollow cylinder, either of wood, metal, or glass, used for the conveyance of fluids, and for various other purposes. Tubes may be straight or bent into various forms, and although they are generally understood to be hollow cylinders, the cylindrical form is not essential.—2. A vessel of animal bodies or plants, which conveys a fluid or other substance; as, the eustachian and fallopian tubes in anatomy, the sap-tubes in plants.—3. In bot., the narrow hollow part of a monopetalous corolla, by which it is fixed to the receptacle.—4. In artillery, an instrument of tin, used in quick firing.—5. In astron., a telescope, or more properly, that part of it into which the lenses are fitted, and by which they are directed and used.

TUBE, v. t. To furnish with a tube; as, to tube a well.

TUBED, pp. Furnished with a tube.

TUBEFORM, a. In the form of a tube.

TU'BER, n. In bot., a knob in roots; an underground fleshy stem, often considered as a modification of the root. It may be defined as an oblong or roundish body, of annual duration, composed chiefly of cellular tissue, with a great quantity of amylaceous matter, intended for the development of the stems or branches which are to spring from it, and of which the rudiments, in the form of buds, are irregularly distributed over its surface. Examples are seen in the potato and arrow-root. The organ named the lobe or pseudo-tuber, in which there is only a single bud, is nearly allied to the tuber proper. Tubers are distinguished, according to their forms, into didymous, that is, of an oblong form, and in pairs, digitate, fasciculate, globular, oblong, and palmate. [See these terms.]—2. A genus of fungi. [See TRUFFLE.]—3. In sur., a knot or swelling in any part.

TUBERATED, a. In her., gibbous; knotted or swelled out, as the middle part of the serpent in the cut.

Tuberated.

TU'BERCLE, n. [Fr. tubercule; from L. tuberculum, from tuber, a bunch.] 1. A pimple; a swelling or tumour on animal bodies. In cutaneous diseases, it is a small hard superficial tumour, circumscribed, and permanent, or suppurating partially. —2. In pathol., a peculiar morbid production, which occurs in various textures of the body in connection with scrofula. It occurs in isolated roundish masses, or infiltrated in the texture of organs. The matter which forms tubercles is unorganized, of a dull whitish, yellow, or yellowish-gray colour, opaque, and varying in form and consistence, according to the stage of development of the tubercle, and the texture of the part in which it is formed. Tubercles are formed in the lungs in pulmonary consumption.—Tubercle of Lower, an eminence in the right auricle of the heart, where the two venæ cavæ meet; so named from Lower, who first described it.—3. A little knob, like a pimple, on plants; a little knob or rough point on the leaves of some lichens, supposed to be the fructification.

TU'BERCLED, a. Having tubercles.

TUBER'CULA QUADRIGEM'INA, n. plur. [L.] In anat., the name given to four white oval tubercles of the brain, two of which are situated on each side, at the posterior part of the third ventricle and over the aqueduct of Sylvius.

TUBER'CULAR, } a. Full of knobs
TUBER'CULOUS, } or pimples.—2. Affected with tubercles.

TUBER'CULATE, } a. Having small
TUBER'CULATED, } knobs or pimples, as a plant.

TUBERIF'EROUS, a. Producing or bearing tubers.—A tuberiferous root is a fibrous root, to which are attached fleshy or amylaceous knobs or tubers, as in the potato.

TU'BEROSE, n. [L. tuberosa.] 1. Tuberous; having knobs or tubers.—2. An odoriferous plant, with a tuberous root, the Polianthes tuberosa. [See POLIANTHES.]

TU'BEROUS, a. [from L. tuber, a bunch.] Knobbed. In bot., consisting of roundish fleshy bodies, or tubers, connected into a bunch by intervening threads; as, the roots of potatoes.

TUB'-FISH, n. [tub and fish.] A local name for the sapphirine gurnard, Trigla hirundo.

TUBICINEL'LA, n. [L. tubicen, a trumpeter.] A genus of multivalve tubular shells, not spiral, placed by Lamarck among the sessile cirripedes. They are found imbedded in the blubber of whales.

TUBI'COLÆ, } n. [L. tubus, a tube,
TUBI'COLES, } and colo, to inhabit, live, or dwell in.] An order of Annelids, comprehending those which live in calcareous tubes, and likewise such as live in tubes formed of agglutinated grains of sand, fragments of shells, and particles of mud. The order comprises the genera Serpula, Sabella, Terebella, Amphitrite, and Syphostoma.

TUBICOLA'RIÆ, n. Lamarck's name for a genus of Infusoria, of the order Rotifera. The species secrete themselves in little tubes, which they construct of foreign particles, but which do not form any part of their body.

TUBICO'LIDÆ, n. Lamarck's name for a family of Conchifers, including such as are borers, burrowing in stone, wood, and even in thick shells, although some live in the sand. It comprises the genera Aspergillum, Clavagella, Fistulana, Septaria, Teredina, and Teredo.

TUBI'CORN, n. [L. tubus and cornu. In zool., one of a family of ruminant animals, having horns composed of a horny axis, covered with a horny sheath.

TUBIF'ERA, } n. [L. tubus, a pipe or
TU'BIFERS, } tube, and fero, to bear.] Lamarck's name for an order of Polyparia, comprising such as are united upon a common substance, fixed at its base, and whose surface is wholly or partially covered with retractile hollow tubes.

TU'BIFORM, a. Having the form of a tube; tubular.

TUBING, ppr. Furnishing with a tube.

TUBING, n. A length of tube; a series of tubes; as, leather tubing, metal tubing, &c.

TUBIPORÆ'A, } n. [tube and pore.]
TUBIPO'RIDÆ, } A family of Zoophytes, comprehending those which are provided with internal ovaries, and eight pinnated tentacula, and contained in elongated cylindrical cells, which are calcareous, or coriaceous, and attached by their base. The species are known by the name of organ-pipe coral.

TU'BIPORE, n. [tube and pore.] The English name of a genus of Zoophytes, (Tubipora,) organ-pipe coral.

TU'BIPORITES, n. Fossil species of Tubipora, often found in marbles and pebbles.

TUB'-MAN, n. In the exchequer, a barrister so called.

TU'BULAR, a. [from L. tubus.] Having the form of a tube or pipe; consisting of a pipe: fistular; as, a tubular snout. —Tubular leaf, one that is cylindrical and hollow, as in the onion.—Tubular corolla, a monopetalous corolla, which is narrow and elongated.

TUBULA'RIA, n. A genus of Corallines, belonging to the class Polypifora. It consists of simple or branched tubes of a horny substance, each tube containing a polype. The species are both fresh-water and marine.

TULIP, n. [Fr. tulipe; L. tulipa; G. tulpe; Dan. tulipan; Pers. tolehan.] The English name of a genus of plants (Tulipa), class Hexandria, order Monogynia, Linn.; nat. order Liliaceæ. The species are herbaceous plants, developed from a bulb, inhabiting the warmer parts of Europe and Asia Minor, and are much cultivated for the beauty of the flowers. About thirty species have been described, of which the most noted is the common garden tulip, T. gesneriana, a native of the Levant, and introduced into England about 1577. Upwards of 600 varieties of this plant have been enumerated by British florists, and these varieties have been divided into four families, viz., bizarres, byblœmens, roses, and selfs. Several other species are cultivated. The wild tulip (T. sylvestris), is a native of Britain, and grows in chalk pits and quarries. It has yellow flowers, and blooms in April and May.

TU'LIPIST, n. A cultivator of tulips.

TULIPOMA'NIA, } n. A violent pas-
TU'LIPMANY, } sion for the TU'LIPMADNESS, } cultivation or acquisition of tulips. This species of mania was displayed by the Dutch in the 17th century, and rose to such a height that the Dutch government found it necessary to interfere; but the ardent love of the tulip still exists among the Dutch floriculturists.

TU'LIP-TREE, n. An American tree bearing flowers resembling the tulip, the Liriodendron tulipifera. It is one of the most magnificent of the forest trees in the temperate parts of North America. Throughout the States it is generally known by the name of poplar, white wood, or canoe wood. It attains a height of from 80 to 100 feet, the Flower of Tulip-tree (Liriodendron tulipifera).

trunk being from 18 inches to 3 feet in diameter. The wood is light, compact, and fine-grained, and is employed for various useful purposes; such as the interior work of houses, coach-pannels, door-pannels, wainscots, mouldings of chimney-pieces, bedsteads, trunks, &c. The Indians of the Middle and Western States prefer this tree for their canoes, which are made of a single trunk. The bark, especially of the roots, has an aromatic smell and bitter taste, and has been used in medicine as a tonic and febrifuge. In this country the tulip tree is cultivated as an ornamental tree. [See LIRIODENDRON.]

TULLE, n. [Fr.] A kind of thin net fabric used in female head-dresses, collars, &c.

TUMID'ITY, n. A swelled state.

TU'MIDLY, adv. In a swelling form.

TU'MIDNESS, n. A swelling or swelled state.

TU'MITE, n. A mineral. [See THUMMERSTONE.]

TU'MOUR, n. [L. from tumeo, to swell.] 1. In sur., a swelling; a morbid enlargement of any part of the body. This is a word of very comprehensive signification, and it is very difficult to define exactly the diseases commonly classed under the name of tumours. According to some, a tumour is the morbid enlargement of a particular part, without being caused by inflammation, a swelling which arises from inflammation being termed tumefaction. According to others, a tumour is any swelling which arises from the growth of distinct superfluous parts or substances, which did not make any part of the original structure of the body, or from a morbid increase in the bulk of other parts, which naturally and always existed in the human frame. The term tumour is limited, by Abernethy, to such swellings as arise from new productions, and includes only the sarcomatous and encysted tumours. An encysted tumour is one which is formed in a membrane called a cyst, connected with the surrounding parts by the neighbouring cellular substance. There are also fatty tumours, called lipomatus or adipose (adipose sarcoma), formed by an accumulation of fat in a limited extent of the cellular substance. Another division of tumours, considered as morbid parasitic growths, is into malignant and innocent. A malignant tumour is one which, after being removed by operation, is likely to recur in the same or some other part, while an innocent tumour is one which is not likely to recur after being removed by operation. Those tumours which are termed tuberculous, medullary, and cancerous, belong to the former class; and those termed the common vascular, the adipose, and the pancreatic, to the latter.—2. Affected pomp; bombast in language; swelling words or expressions; false magnificence or sublimity. [Little used.]

TU'MOURED, a. Distended; swelled.

TU'MOUROUS, a. Swelling; protuberant.—2. Vainly pompous; bombastic; as language or style. [Little used.]

TUMP, n. [infra.] A little hillock.

TUMP, v. t. [W. twmp, a round mass, a hillock; L. tumulus. See TOMB.] In gardening, to form a mass of earth or a hillock round a plant; as, to tump teasel.

TUMP'ED, pp. Surrounded with a hillock of earth.

TUMP'ING, ppr. Raising a mass of earth round a plant.

TU'MULAR, a. [L. tumulus, a heap.] Consisting in a heap, formed or being in a heap or hillock.

TU'MULATE,† v. i. To swell.

TUMULOS'ITY, n [infra.] Hilliness.

TU'MULOUS, TU'MULOSE, a [L. tumulosus.] Full of hills.

TU'MULT, n. [L. tumultus, a derivative from tumeo, to swell.] 1. The commotion, disturbance, or agitation of a multitude, usually accompanied with great noise, uproar, and confusion of voices.

What meaneth the noise of this tumult? 1 Sam iv.

Till in loud tumult all the Greeks arose Pope.

2. Violent commotion or agitation, with confusion of sounds; as, the tumult of the elements.—3. Agitation; high excitement; irregular or confused motion; as, the tumult of the spirits or passions.—4. Bustle; stir.

TU'MULT, v. i. To make a tumult; to be in great commotion.

TU'MULTER,† n. A tumult raiser.

TUMULT'UARILY, adv. [from tumultuary.] In a tumultuary or disorderly manner.

TUMULT'UARINESS, n. Disorderly or tumultuous conduct; turbulence; disposition to tumult.

TUMULT'UARY, a. [Fr. tumultuaire; from L. tumultus.] 1. Disorderly; promiscuous; confused; as, a tumultuary conflict.—2. Restless; agitated; unquiet.

Men who live without religion, live always in a tumultuary and restless state. Atterbury.

TUMULT'UATE,† v. i. [L. tumultuo.] To make a tumult.

TUMULTUA'TION, n. Commotion; irregular or disorderly movement; as, the tumultuation of the parts of a fluid.

TUMULT'UOUS, a. [Fr. tumultueux.] 1. Conducted with tumult; disorderly; as, a tumultuous conflict; a tumultuous retreat.—2. Greatly agitated; irregular; noisy; confused; as, a tumultuous assembly or meeting.—3. Agitated; disturbed; as, a tumultuous breast.—4. Turbulent; violent; as, a tumultuous speech.—5. Full of tumult and disorder: as, a tumultuous state or city.

TUMULT'UOUSLY, adv. In a disorderly manner; with turbulence; by a disorderly multitude.

TUMULT'UOUSNESS, n The state of being tumultuous; disorder; commotion.

TU'MULUS, n. [L.] A barrow, or artificial mound of earth. Tumuli, or barrows, are of various sizes and forms, and are in many parts of the globe. They are of great antiquity, and are generally supposed to be tombs, or sepulchral monuments raised to perpetuate the memory of persons of distinction, or of warriors slain in battle. In the most ancient tumuli, bodies are found deposited within a stone receptacle, with the head towards the north. The bones which have been discovered within those tumuli which have been opened, are generally accompanied by utensils, weapons, &c. In some tumuli urns only have been found; in others, both bodies and urns, and in some the bones of animals. The tumuli found in this country are supposed to be of British construction. Those found in Roman camps appear to have been intended to serve for land marks, or some military purpose. [See BARROW.]

TUN, n. [Sax. tunna, a cask; Fr. tonne, tonneau; Ir. tonna; Arm. tonnell; G. tonne; D. ton; W. tynell, a barrel or tun. This word seems to be from the root of L. teneo, to hold, Gr. τείνω, to stretch, W. tyn, stretched, strained, tight, tyndu, to strain, to tighten; and this seems also to be the Sax. tun, a town, for this word signifies also a garden, evidently from inclosing, and a class, from collecting or holding.] 1. In a general sense, a large cask; an oblong vessel bulging in the middle, like a pipe or puncheon, and girt with hoops, and used for stowing several kinds of merchandise for convenience of carriage; as brandy, oil, sugar, skins, &c.—2. A certain measure for liquids, as for wine, oil, &c.—3. A quantity of wine, consisting of two pipes or four hogsheads, or 252 gallons. In different countries, the tun differs in quantity. —4. In com. [See TON.]—5. A certain weight by which the burden of a ship is estimated, but in this signification the word is usually written ton,—which see.—6. A certain quantity of timber, consisting of forty solid feet, if round, or fifty-four fe t, if square.—7. Proverbially, a large quantity.—8. In burlesque, a drunkard.—9. At the end of names, tun, ton, or don, signifies town, village, or hill.

TUN, v. t. To put into casks.

TU'NABLE, a. [from tune.] Harmonious; musical.

And tunable as sylvan pipe or song. Milton.

2. That may be put in tune.

TU'NABLENESS, n. Harmony; melodiousness.

TU'NABLY, adv. Harmoniously; musically.

TUN'-BELLIED, a. [tun and belly.] Having a large, protuberant belly.

TUN'-DISH,† n. [tun and dish.] A funnel.

TUNE, n. [Fr. ton; It. tuono; D. toon; W. ton; Ir. tona; L. tonus. It is a different spelling of tone,—which see.] 1. A short air or melody; a series of musical notes in some particular measure, and consisting of a single series, for one voice or instrument, the effect of which is melody; or a union of two or more series or parts to be sung or played in concert, the effect of which is harmony. Thus we say, a merry tune, a lively tune, a grave tune, a psalm tune, a martial tune.—2. Sound; note. —3. Harmony; order; concert of parts.

A continual parliament I thought would but keep the commonweal in tune. K. Charles.

4. Correct intonation in singing or playing; the state of giving the proper sounds; as when we say, a harpsichord is in tune; that is, when the several chords are of that tension, that each gives its proper sound, and the sounds of all are at due intervals, both of tones and semitones.—5. Proper state for use or application; right disposition; fit temper or humour. The mind is not in tune for mirth.

A child will learn three times as fast when he is in tune, as he will when he is dragged to his task. Locke.

6. Among phrenologists, one of the perceptive faculties. Its organ is situated above the external angle of the orbit of the eye, as high as the middle of the forehead, on each side of the temporal ridge. This faculty gives the perception of melody.

TUNE, v. t. To put into a state adapted to produce the proper sounds; as, to tune a forte-piano; to tune a violin.

Tune your harps. Dryden.

2. To sing with melody or harmony.

Fountains, and ye that warble as ye flow,
Melodious murmurs, warbling tune his praise. Milton.

So we say of birds, they tune their notes or lays.—3. To put into a state proper for any purpose, or adapted to produce a particular effect. [Little used.]

TUNE, v. i. To form one sound to another.

While tuning to the waters' fall.
The small birds sang to her. Drayton.

2. To utter inarticulate harmony with the voice.

TUNED, pp. Uttered melodiously or harmoniously; put in order to produce the proper sounds.

TUNEFUL, a. Harmonious; melodious; musical; as, tuneful notes; tuneful birds.

TUNEFULLY, a. Harmoniously; musically.

TUNELESS, a. Unmusical; unharmonious.—2. Not employed in making music; as, a tuneless harp.

TUNER, n. One who tunes.—2. One whose occupation is to tune musical instruments.

TUNG'STATE, n. A salt formed of tungstic acid and a base; as, tungstate of lime.

TUNG'STEN, n. [Sw. and Dan. tung, heavy, and sten, stone, heavy stone, or ponderous ore, so named from the density of its ores.] 1. A metal discovered by D'Elhuyart in 1781. It has a greyish white colour, and considerable lustre. It is brittle, nearly as hard as steel, and less fusible than manganese. Its specific gravity is 17·4. When heated to redness in the open air, it takes fire, and is converted into tungstic acid, and it undergoes the same change by the action of nitric acid. Digested with a concentrated solution of pure potash, it is dissolved with disengagement of hydrogen gas, and tungstate of potash is generated. The ores of this metal are the native tungstate of lime, and the tungstate of iron and manganese, which latter is also known by the name of Wolfram, and the same name is also given to the metal. Tungsten may be procured in the metallic state, by exposing tungstic acid to the action of charcoal or dry hydrogen gas at a red heat, but an exceedingly intense heat is required for fusing the metal. With oxygen, tungsten forms two compounds, the dark brown oxide, and the yellow acid of tungsten. With chlorine gas it forms two chlorides, a bichloride, and a terchloride. Both are red, volatile, and crystallizable compounds, subliming in beautiful crystals. —2. An obsolete name for the native tungstate of lime.

TUNGSTEN'IC,† a. Pertaining to or procured from tungsten.

TUNG'STIC ACID, n. An acid composed of one equivalent of the metal tungsten, and three equivalents of oxygen. It is obtained by heating the brown oxide of tungsten to redness in open vessels, and it may also be obtained from the native tungstate of lime, and from Wolfram. It is a yellow powder, insoluble in water. With bases it forms crystallizable salts. When exposed to the action of hydrogen gas at a temperature of 500° or 600°, it becomes of a fine deep blue, and is converted into the blue oxide of tungsten, which is regarded as a tungstate of tungsten.

TUNG'STO SULPHURETS. Compounds of tungsten and sulphur. They have no peculiar interest.

TU'NIC, n. [Fr. tunique; L. tunica. See TOWN and TUN.] 1. A garment worn by the Romans of both sexes under the toga, and next to the skin. It was a kind of vest, generally of wool, of a white colour, and, as worn by men, came down a little below the knees before, and to the middle of the legs behind. It was fastened by a girdle or belt about the waist, to keep it tight when they went abroad, the girdle also serving as a purse, in which they kept their money. The tunic was at first worn without sleeves, but afterwards sleeves came to be used with fringes at the hands. The senators had a broad stripe of purple (called latus clavus) sewed on the breast of their tunic, and the equites had a narrow stripe (called angustus clavus) on the breast. Hence the terms laticlavii and angusticlavii, applied to persons of these orders. The tunic worn by women had sleeves, and reached down to the feet.—2. In the Roman catholic church, a long under garment worn by the officiating clergy.—3. A garment worn under the coat of mail.—4. In anat., a membrane that covers or composes some part or organ; as, the tunics or coats of the eye; the tunics of the stomach, or the membranous and muscular layers which compose it. —5. A natural covering; an integument; as, the tunic of a seed.

TU'NICARIES, TUNICA'TA, n. [from tunic.] An order of acephalous molluscs, comprehending those which have a soft covering, consisting of an organized envelope, provided with two orifices, the one branchial, and the other anal. These animals are found either solitary, or in groups, fixed or floating, and sometimes joined together in a common mass.

TU'NICATED, a. In bot., covered with a tunic, or membranes; coated. A tunicated bulb, is one composed of numerous concentric coats, as an onion.

TU'NICLE, n. [from tunic.] A natural covering; an integument.

TŪNING, ppr. Uttering harmoniously or melodiously; putting in due order for making the proper sounds.

TŪNING, n. The art or operation of adjusting the various sounds of a musical instrument, so that they may be all at due intervals, and the scale of the instrument brought into as correct a state as possible. In tuning an instrument, the first point is to fix upon some one note as a leading note, and then by the pitch of it to determine the relative sounds of all the rest.—2. The art or operation of adjusting two or more musical instruments, so as to bring them into agreement with each other, as two or more violins, a violin and violoncello, &c. Horns, fifes, flutes, &c., have a permanent relative scale, and only change their pitch by change of temperature. [See TEMPERAMENT.]

TŪNING-FORK, n. A steel instrument consisting of two prongs and a handle; used for tuning instruments, for regulating their pitch, and also the pitch of voices. There are two kinds of tuning forks in use; one of which sounds C major, and the other A minor. The first is used in tuning piano-fortes, and the second in orchestras, for the violins, &c.

TŪNING-HAMMER, n. An instrument used by piano-forte tuners, to twist round the iron pegs to which the wires are fastened at one end, or to fix these pegs into their holes, by hammering them on the ends.

TUNI'SIAN, n. A native of Tunis.—a. Relating to Tunis.

TUNK'ERS, n. [G. tunken, to dip.] In America, a religious sect resembling English baptists. This sect was founded by Conrad Peysel, a German, in 1724. They reside chiefly in Pennsylvania, and in baptism practise trine immersion, that is, dipping three times in the water. Every brother is allowed to speak in the congregation, and their best speaker is usually ordained to be their preacher. They are also called dunkers and tumblers.

TUN'NAGE. See TONNAGE.

TUN'NEL, n. [Fr. tonnelle.] An old name for a funnel.—2. The opening of a chimney for the passage of smoke; called generally a funnel.—3. In engineering, an arched subterranean passage cut through a hill, a rock, an eminence, or under a river or town, to carry a canal, a road, railway, &c., in an advantageous course. In the construction of canals and railways, tunnels are frequently had recourse to, in order to obtain the requisite level, and save the expense of open cutting, and for various other local causes.—4. An arched drain or sewer.

TUN'NEL, v. t. To form like a tunnel; as, to tunnel fibrous plants into nests. —2. To catch in a net called a tunnel-net.—3. To form with net work.—4. To make an opening or way for passage, through a hill, or mountain, or under a river.

TUN'NY, n. [It. tonno; Fr. thon; G. thunfisch; L. thynnus.] A fish of the genus Thynnus, the T. vulgaris of Tunny (Thynnus vulgaris).

Cuv., belonging to the family Scomberoides, or mackerel tribe. This fish is an object of considerable importance to many of the nations bordering on the Mediterranean, and when salted and dried, serves the inhabitants of most catholic countries with the fast day's meat. The tunnies, like the mackerel, appear in great shoals or banks, and their approach is perceived by the fishermen at a considerable distance, from the noise which accompanies their rapid movements. The tunny attains to a large size, weighing sometimes a thousand pounds. The flesh somewhat resembles veal, is delicate, and has been in request from time immemorial. The tunny is abundant in the seas of the south of Europe, and it has occasionally been found in the British seas.

TURBINA'TION, n. The act of spinning or whirling, as a top.

TUR'BINE, n. A species of hydraulic engine, employed to a considerable extent in modern times, as a prime mover for machinery. It is considered to be preferable to ordinary water wheels, in situations where the height of the fall is great and the quantity of water not very considerable. The annexed cut represents an example of a turbine, or horizontal water-wheel. The water is introduced into a close cast-iron vessel a, by the pipe b, connecting it with the reservoir. Here, by virtue of its pressure, it tends to escape by any aperture which may be presented; but the only apertures consist of a series of curved float boards f f, fixed to a horizontal plate g, mounted upon a central axis h, which passes upwards through a tube connecting the upper and lower covers, c and d, of the vessel a. Another series of curved plates e e, is fixed to the upper surface of the disc d, to give a determinate direction to the water before flowing out at the float boards, and the curves of these various parts are so adjusted as to render the reactive force of the water available to the utmost extent in producing a circular motion. The machinery to be impelled is connected with the axis h.

TURBINEL'LA, n. [from Turbo.] A genus of molluscs, belonging to the family Siphonostomata. The species inhabit the Indian Ocean.

TURBIN'IDÆ, n [See Turbo.] A family of gastropodous molluscs, of which the genus Turbo, Linn. is the type.

TUR'BO, n. [L. a whirling or turning round; a top.] A Linnæan genus of gastropodous molluscs, belonging to the order Phytophaga, and family Turbinidæ. It comprises all those species which have a completely and regularly turbinated shell and a perfectly round aperture. The animal resembles a limax or slug. The periwinkle is an example. In the arrangement of Cuvier the genus Turbo is placed in his order of Pectinibranchiate gastropods, family Trochoida, and he subdivides it into the following groups:—Delphinula, Pleurotoma, Turritella, Scalaria, Cyclostoma, and Valvata.

TUR'BOT, n. [Fr.] A well known and highly esteemed fish of the genus Rhombus, Cuv. (R. maximus); family Pleuronectidæ, order Malacopterygii, and section Subbrachiales. Next to the halibut, the turbot is the largest of the Pleuronectidæ found on the British coast, and is the most highly esteemed for the table. It is of a short and broad form, and rather deeper than many of the flat fishes. There is a considerable fishery of turbot on the coasts of Durham and Yorkshire, but a large portion of the turbot produced in the English market is taken on or near the various sand banks between the line of our eastern shore and the coast of Holland. In Scotland, the turbot is called the Rawn Fleuk, and Bennock Fleuk.

To exercise the art or trade of a turner; to operate upon wood, metal, &c., by means of a turning lathe.—To turn about, to move the face to another quarter.—To turn away, to deviate.—2. To depart from; to forsake.—To turn in, to bend inward.—2. To enter for lodgings or entertainment; Gen. xix.—3. To go to bed.—To turn off, to be diverted; to deviate from a course. The road turns off to the left.—To turn on or upon, to reply or retort.—2. To depend on.— To turn out, to move from its place, as a bone.—2. To bend outward; to project.—3. To rise from bed; also, to come abroad.—To turn over, to turn from side to side; to roll; to tumble.—2. To change sides or parties.—To turn to, to be directed as, the needle turns to the magnetic pole.—To turn under, to bend or be folded downward.—To turn up, to bend or be doubled upward.

TURN, n. The act of turning; movement or motion in a circular direction; whether horizontally, vertically, or otherwise; a revolution; as, the turn of a wheel.—2. A winding; a meandering course; a bend or bending; as, the turn of a river.—3. A walk to and fro.

I will take a turn in your garden. Dryden.

4. Change; alteration; vicissitude; as, the turns and varieties of passions.

Too well the turns of mortal chance I know. Pope.

5. Successive course.

Nobleness and bounty...which virtues had their turns in the king's nature. Bacon.

6. Manner of proceeding; change of direction. This affair may take a different turn from that which we expect.—7. Chance; hap; opportunity.

Every one has a fair turn to be as great as he pleases. Collier.

8. Occasion; incidental opportunity.

An old dog falling from his speed, was loaded at every turn with blows and reproaches. L'Estrange.

9. Time at which, by successive vicissitudes, any thing is to be had or done. They take each other's turn.

His turn will come to laugh at you again. Denham.

10. Action of kindness or malice.

Thanks are half lost when good turns are delay'd. Fairfax.

Some malicious natures place their delight in doing ill turns. L'Estrange.

11. Reigning inclination or course. Religion is not to be adapted to the turn and fashion of the age.—12. A step off the ladder at the gallows.—13. Convenience; occasion; purpose; exigence; as, this will not serve his turn.—14. Form; cast; shape; manner; in a literal or figurative sense; as, the turn of thought; a man of a sprightly turn in conversation.

The turn of his thoughts and expression is unharmonious. Dryden.

Female virtues are of a domestic turn. Addison.

The Roman poets, in their description of a beautiful man, often mention the turn of his neck and arms. Addison.

15. Manner of arranging words in a sentence.—16. Change; new position of things. Some evil happens at every turn of affairs.—17. Change of direction; as, the turn of the tide from flood to ebb.—18. One round of a rope or cord.—19. In mining, a pit sunk in some part of a drift.—20. In music, a grace marked thus ∾. It is formed of appoggiaturas, consisting of the note on which the turn is made, the note above, and the semitone below: If the turn is written thus, it is performed as below:—

21. Turn or tourn, in law. [See TOURN.]

—By turns, one after another; alternately. They assist each other by turns.—2. At intervals.

They feel by turns the bitter change. Milton.

To take turns, to take each other's place alternately.

TURN'-BENCH, n. [turn and bench.] A kind of iron lathe.

TURN'CAP, n. A chimney top which turns round with the wind.

TURN'-COAT, n. [turn and coat.] One who forsakes his party or principles.

TURN'ED, pp. Moved in a circle; changed; formed by means of a turning lathe.

TURN'ER, n. One whose occupation is to form things with a lathe; one who turns.—2. A variety of pigeon.

TURN'ERA, n. A genus of plants, the type of the nat. order Turneraceæ. The species are found in South America and the West India Islands. They are mostly small plants, with inconspicuous flowers, generally of a yellow colour, and are frequently cultivated in gardens.

TURNERA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of polypetalous exogenous plants, nearly allied to Loasaceæ and Passifloraceæ. This order has only two genera, Turnera and Piriqueta; all the species are herbaceous plants, natives of South America and the West Indies.

TURN'ERITE, n. A rare mineral occurring in small crystals of a yellowish brown colour, externally brilliant and translucent. The primary form is an oblique rhombic prism; fracture conchoidal; lustre vitreous. It occurs at Mount Sorel in France, and consists chiefly of alumina, lime, and magnesia, with a little iron, and a minute portion of silica.

TURN'ER'S-YELLOW, n. An oxichloride of lead employed as a yellow pigment. It is also called cassel yellow, and patent yellow.

TURN'ERY, n. The art of forming into a cylindrical shape by the lathe.—2. Things made by a turner or in the lathe.

TURN'-FILE, n. An instrument used by comb-makers in sharpening a kind of tool called a float.

TURN'ING, ppr. Moving in a circle; changing; winding.

TURN'ING, n. A winding; a bending course; flexure; meander.—2. Deviation from the way or proper course. —3. The art or operation of giving circular and other forms to bodies, as wood, metal, bone, ivory, &c., by making them revolve in various manners in a machine called a lathe, and applying cutting instruments so as to produce the form required; or by making the cutting instrument revolve when the substance to be operated upon is fixed. The art of turning is of immense importance to the practical mechanic, and in the whole range of manufactures, whether of articles of necessity, utility, ornament, or luxury, there is no art so generally applied. At the same time, there is probably no art in the range of mechanical operation susceptible of greater accuracy, and there is none which has so much contributed to the improvement of machinery. The lathe is a most wonderful contrivance, especially when we take into account all the improvements it has undergone, from its simplest and most ancient form in the potter's wheel, to that adaptation of varied and complex mechanism, by which, not merely circular turning of the most beautiful and accurate description, but exquisite figure-work, and complicated geometrical designs, depending upon eccentric and cycloidal movements, are produced. In ordinary turning, the body operated upon is made to revolve on a stationary straight line, as an axis, and a cutting tool applied to its surface in such a way, as, in the circumvolutions of the object, to cut off those parts which lie farthest from the axis, and make the outside of the substance concentric with the axis. In this case any section of the work made at right angles to its axis will be of a circular figure; but there are methods of turning several other curves in a variety of ways. Lathes are made in a great variety of forms, and put in motion by different means. They are called centre lathes, when the work is supported at both ends; mandrel, spindle, or chuck-lathes, when the work is fixed only at one end. There are also pole lathes, and turn-bench lathes, which resemble each other; foot-lathes, which are moved by the foot; bar-lathes, &c. Lathes for great works are moved by horses and water-wheels, but more generally by steam-engines. The largest columns, the most ponderous artillery, the minutest pivots of watch-work, wheel-work, rotatory machines, vessels, &c., are executed by means of the lathe.

TURN'INGNESS,† n. Quality of turning; tergiversation; subterfuge.

TURN'ING-PIECE, n. In arch., a board having a circular edge for turning a thin brick arch upon.

TURN'ING-POINT, n. The point on which a thing turns; that which decides a matter.

TUR'NIP, n. [a compound of tur, round, and Sax. nepe, L. napus, a turnip.] The common name of the Brassica rapa, a cruciferous plant much cultivated both in the field and in the garden, on account of its bulbous esculent root. In its wild state, it is a native of Great Britain, found in the borders of fields and waste places; but by cultivation the size of the plant, especially of the tuber or underground stem, is greatly increased. There are many varieties of the turnip cultivated for the table, and also in the fields. Those grown by farmers may be arranged as whites and yellows. The Swedish turnip is the Brassica campestris rutabaga. The young leaves and buds of the turnip are gathered and eaten under the name of turnip tops; the tubers consist of a large mass of soft cellular tissue, in which starch and sugar are deposited. Their great importance as food for cattle is well known, and turnips and clover are the two main pillars of the best courses of British husbandry. Oil is produced from the seeds of several varieties of the turnip.

TUR'NIP-FLY, n. A small coleopterous insect of the genus Haltica, the H. nemorum, very destructive to young turnips.

TURN'KEY, n. A person who has charge of the keys of a prison for opening and fastening the doors.

TURN'OUT, n. [turn and out.] The act of coming forth; a quitting of employment.—2. The place in a railway where trucks and carriages turn out of the way. Applied also to an equipage. —3. In colloquial style, a multitude of persons, who have come out on some public occasion; as, to see a spectacle, to witness a performance at the theatre, attend a public meeting, &c.

TURN'-OVER, n. A kind of apple pie or tart, in a semicircular form.—2. An apprentice transferred from one master to another, to complete his term of apprenticeship. [Both colloquial.]—3. A piece of white linen formerly worn by cavalry over their stocks.—Turn-over-table, a table whose top is so fitted to the supporting block or pedestal that it can be turned up at pleasure; and thus, when out of use, it may be placed against the wall of the apartment, so as to occupy less space. [Familiar.]

TURN'PIKE, n. [turn and pike.] Strictly, a frame consisting of two bars crossing each other at right angles, and turning on a post or pin, placed on a road or footpath, to hinder the passage of beasts, but admitting a person to pass between the arms.—2. A gate set across a road, watched by an officer appointed for the purpose, in order to stop carriages, carts, waggons, &c., and sometimes travellors, till toll is paid for keeping the road in repair. It is generally called a toll-bar or toll-gate. —3. A turnpike road.—4. In military affairs, a beam filled with spikes to obstruct passage.

TURN'PIKE, v. t. To form, as a road, in the manner of a turnpike road; to throw the path of a road into a rounded form.

TURN'PIKE, } TURN'PIKE-STAIR, } n. A round staircase, attached to, but built outside of a house. [Scotch.]

TURN'PIKED, pp. Formed in the manner of a turnpike-road.

TURN'PIKE-MAN, n. A tollman.

TURN'PIKE-ROAD, n. A road on which turnpikes or tollgates are established by law, and which are made and kept in repair by the toll collected from carriages, waggons, cattle, &c., which travel on them. Turnpike roads are placed by Act of Parliament under the management of trustees or commissioners, who are invested with certain powers for the construction, management, and repair of such roads.

TURN'PIKE-TRUST, n. The individuals in whom the care and revenue of turnpike roads are vested; or the business connected therewith.

TURN'-PLATE. See TURN-TABLE.

TURN'-SERVING, n. [turn and serve.] The act or practice of serving one's turn or promoting private interest.

TURN'SICK, a. [turn and sick.] Giddy; vertiginous.

TURN'SICK, n. A disease of sheep.

TURN'SOLE, } TURN'SOL, } n. [turn and L. sol, the sun.] A plant of the genus Heliotropium, so named because its flower is supposed to turn toward the sun. [See HELIOTROPE.]—2. A blue pigment obtained from the lichen Rocella, (Rocella tinctoria), also called archil.

TURN'SPIT, n. [turn and spit.] A person who turns a spit.

His lordship is his majesty's turnspit. Burke.

2. A variety of the dog, allied to the terriers, so called from having formerly been employed to turn a wheel on which depended the spit for roasting meat in the kitchen.

TURN'STILE, n. [turn and stile.] A turnpike in a footpath.

TURN'STONE, n. [turn and stone.] A bird, called the sea-dotterel, of the genus Strepsilas, the S. collaris, (Tringa morinella, Linn.,) a little larger than an English blackbird. This bird takes its name from its practice of turning up small stones in search of insects.

Turnstone (Strepsilas collaris).

TURN'-TABLE, } TURN'-PLATE, } n. In railways, a circular platform of iron and wood, placed on a level with the tracks, and mounted on friction wheels, so as to turn on its centre with great facility. Turn-tables are used for transferring single carriages from one track to another. They are placed in pairs, one upon each track, and if A and B be supposed to represent two tracks parallel to each other, and C a turn-table connected with the track A, and D another connected with the track B, then a carriage to be transferred from A to B is rolled on the turn-table C, and this, with the carriage on it, is turned a quarter round. The carriage is then rolled on the table D, which being turned a quarter round, puts the carriage in a right position for running on the track B.

TUR'PENTINE, n. [L. terebinthina; Sp. and It. trementina; G. terpentin.] An oleo-resinous substance, flowing naturally or by incision from several species of trees, as from the pine, larch, fir, pistacia, &c. Common turpentine is obtained from the Pinus sylvestris, and some other species of Pinus. All the turpentines dissolve in pure alcohol, and by distillation yield oils, which are termed spirits of turpentine. Oil or spirits of turpentine is used in medicine externally as an excellent rubefacient, and counter-irritant, and internally as a vermifuge. It is also much used in the arts for dissolving resins and oils in making varnishes. [See TEREBINTH.]

TUR'PENTINE-TREE, n. The name given to some species of trees of the genus Pistacia, which yield turpentine, as the P. terebinthus, the Venetian turpentine tree, P. atlantica, the Mount Atlas Mastich or turpentine tree, &c. The P. terebinthus produces not only its proper fruit, but a kind of horny substance which grows on the surface of its leaves. This is an excrescence, the effect of the puncture of an insect, and is produced in the same manner as the galls of other plants.

Turpentine tree (Pistacia terebinthus).

TUR'PETH, n. [L. turpetum; Gr. τουρπιτ.] The name of the root of Convolvulus turpetum, a plant of Ceylon, Malabar, and New Holland, which has a cathartic power. It is sometimes called vegetable turpeth, to distinguish it from mineral turpeth.

TUR'PETH-MIN'ERAL, n. The name formerly given to a subsulphate of the binoxide of mercury, a salt composed of two equivalents of the protoxide of mercury, and one equivalent of sulphuric acid. It acts as a powerful emetic, but it is not now used internally. It is a very useful errhine in cases of headache, amaurosis, &c.

TURP'IS CAUSA. [L.] An immoral consideration. [A Scots law term.]

TURP'ITUDE, n. [Fr. from L. turpitudo, from turpis, foul, base.] 1. Inherent baseness or vileness of principle in the human heart; extreme depravity. —2. Baseness or vileness of words or actions; shameful wickedness.

TURQUOISE. See TURKOIS.

TURRÆ'A, n. A genus of plants; nat. order Meliaceæ. Many of the species are highly ornamental trees or shrubs, inhabiting the interior of the Cape of Good Hope, Madagascar, the Mauritius, and the Eastern parts of India.

TUR'REL, n. A tool used by coopers.

TUR'RET, n. [L. turris.] 1. A little tower.—2. In arch., a small tower, often crowning the angle of a wall, &c. Turrets are of two kinds, such as rise immediately from the ground, as stair-case turrets, and such as are formed on the upper part of a building by being carried up higher than the rest, as bartizan turrets.

And lift her turrets nearer to the sky. Pope.

3. In the art of war, movable turrets, used formerly by the Romans, were buildings of a square form, consisting of ten or even twenty stories, and sometimes one hundred and twenty cubits high, moved on wheels. They were employed in approaches to a fortified place, for carrying soldiers, engines, ladders, casting-bridges, and other necessaries.

TUR'RETED, a. Formed like a tower; as, a turreted lamp.—2. Furnished with turrets.

TURRIC'ULATED, a. Resembling a turret; having the form of a turret; as a turriculated shell.

TUR'RILITES, n. [L. turris, a tower, and Gr. λιθος, a stone.] A genus of testaceous Polythalamacea, occurring in a fossil state in the cretaceous formations. The shell is spiral, turreted, chambered; the turns are contiguous, and all visible; the chambers are divided by sinuous septa, pierced by a siphuncle in their discs. The mouth is round. The turrilites are nearly related to the ammonites. There are several British species, found in the chalk and green-sand formations.

TURRITEL'LA, n. A genus of turriculated, elongated marine univalves, belonging to the family Turbinacea, both recent and fossil. The species are commonly known by the name of screw-shells.

TURRI'TIS, n. Tower-mustard, a genus of plants. [See TOWER-MUSTARD.]

TUR'TLE, n. [Sax. id; Fr. tourterelle; L. turtur; Gaelic, turtuir; It. tortora, tortola, tortorella.] 1. A gallinaceous fowl of the genus Turtur, the T. communis, (Columba turtur, Linn.,) called also the turtle dove, and turtle pigeon. It is a wild species, frequenting the thickest parts of the woods, and its note is plaintive and tender. Turtle doves are found throughout the temperate parts of Europe and Asia, and also in many of the South Sea Islands. They are only summer visitors in Britain, arriving about the end of April, or the beginning of May, and leaving about the end of August. The turtle dove is celebrated for the constancy of its affection, and few birds have been more sung by poets, or more appealed to by lovers. — 3. The sea-tortoise. The turtles or sea-tortoises constitute a family of Chelonians, (Thalassians or Thalassites). They are distinguished from all the other families by the comparatively depressed carapace, and the long and broad paddles, the anterior of which are very much prolonged when compared with the posterior ones. They are found in all the seas of warm climates. The most important species is the green turtle, (Testudo mydas Linn., Chelonia mydas of modern naturalists), so much prized as a luxury

Green Turtle (Chelonia mydas).

at the tables of the rich. It is found from six to seven feet long, and weighing from 700 to 800 pounds. Its flesh is highly esteemed, and furnishes a Logger-head Turtle (Chelonia caretta).

wholesome and palatable supply of food to the mariner in every latitude of the torrid zone. The logger-head turtle (Chelonia caretta), yields an oil, which is used for lamps, and for dressing leather. The hawk's bill turtle, Chelonia imbricata, yields the finest kind of tortoise-shell. [See TORTOISE.]

TUR'TLE-DÖVE, n. A species of the genus Turtur. [See TURTLE.]

TURT'LER, n. One who catches turtles.

TUR'TLE-SHELL, n. [turtle and shell.] A shell, a beautiful species of Murex; also, tortoise-shell.

TUR'TLE-SOUP, n. A rich soup, the chief ingredient of which is turtle-meat. The meat used for mock-turtle soup is that of calf's head.

TUS'CAN, a. Pertaining to Tuscany in Italy.—Tuscan order, one of the five orders of architecture, according to Vitruvius and Palladio. It admits of no ornaments, and the columns are Tuscan Capital.

never fluted. It differs so little, however, from the Doric, that it is now regarded as being only a variety of the latter. [See DORIC.]

TUS'CAN, n. An inhabitant of Tuscany. —2. In ancient arch., the Tuscan order.

TUSH, an exclamation, indicating check, rebuke, or contempt, and equivalent to pshaw! be silent! Tush, tush, never tell me such a story as that.

TUSH, n. [Sax. tux.] A tooth.

TUSK, n. [Sax. tux.] The long pointed tooth of certain rapacious, carnivorous, or fighting animals; as, the tusks of the boar.—2. In carpentry, a bevel shoulder made above a tenon to give additional strength to it.—3. In zool., a kind of fish. [See TORSK.]

TUSK,† v.i. To gnash the teeth, as a boar.

TUSK'ED, } a. Furnished with tusks;
TUSK'Y, } as, the tusky boar. Tusked or tushed, in her., is an epithet applied to boars, tigers, or elephants, when their tusks are borne of a different tincture from that of the body.

TUS'SAC GRASS, n. A grass found in Tussac grass (Dactylis cæspitosa).

the Falkland islands, and called Dactylis cæspitosa, which grows in tufts or tussucks. It thrives on peat lands within the influence of the sea spray, and is recommended for the peat and unproductive soil of the Hebrides of Scotland. It has succeeded well in the island of Lewis. The grass is excellent herbage, and is relished by cattle.

TUSSILA'GO, n. Colt's foot, a genus of broad-leaved plants; nat. order Compositæ. The species are natives of Europe and America. T. farfara, common colt's foot, is a native of Britain. [See COLT'S FOOT.]

TUS'SIS, [L.] In med., a cough.

TUS'SLE, n. A struggle; a conflict. [Vulgar.] [See TOUSE.]

TUS'SUCK, TUS'SOCK, n. A clump, tuft, or minute hillock of growing grass. [Scotch.]

TUT, an exclamation, used for checking or rebuking. It is synonymous with tush.

TUT, n. An imperial ensign of a golden globe with a cross on it.—Tut bargain, among miners, a bargain by the lump. [Qu. L. totus.]

TUTE'LA, n. [L.] In law, guardianship; tutelage.

TU'TELAGE, n. [from L. tutela, protection, from tueor, to defend.] 1. Guardianship; protection; applied to the person protecting; as, the king's right of seignory and tutelage.—2. State of being under a guardian.

TU'TELAR, TU'TELARY, a. [L. tutelaris, supra.] Having the guardianship or charge of protecting a person or a thing; guardian; protecting; as, tutelary genii; tutelary goddesses.

TU'TENAG, n. The Indian name of zinc. Sometimes the word is used to denote a metallic compound brought from China, called Chinese copper or white copper, consisting of copper, zinc, nickel and iron. It is employed by the Chinese in the manufacture of the gong. It resembles silver in appearance, is malleable, susceptible of a very fine polish, and does not readily tarnish. Specific gravity 8·43.

TUTENAGUE. See TUTENAG.

TU'TOR, n. [L. from tueor, to defend; Fr. tuteur.] 1. In the civil law, a guardian; one who is chosen to look to the persons and estates of children left by their fathers and mothers in their minority. In Scots law, a tutor is either a tutor-nominate, a tutor-at-law, or a tutor-dative. A tutor-nominate is one nominated in a testament, &c., by the father of the child or children to be placed under guardianship. A father may nominate any number of tutors. A tutor-at-law is one who acquires his right by the mere disposition of law, in cases where there is no tutor-nominate, or where the tutor-nominate is dead, or cannot act, or has not accepted. A tutor-dative is one named by the sovereign, on the failure both of tutors-nominate, and tutors-at-law.—2. One who has the care of instructing another in various branches or in any branch of human learning. Some gentlemen employ a tutor to teach in their families, others to attend a son in his travels.—3. In the English universities, a member of some college or hall, who has the charge of hearing the lessons of the students, and otherwise instructing them in the sciences and other branches of learning. In the American colleges, tutors are graduates selected by the trustees, for the instruction of undergraduates of the three first years. They are usually officers of the institution, who have a share, with the president and professors, in the government of the students.

TU'TOR, v. t. To teach; to instruct.—2. To treat with authority or severity.—3. To correct.

TU'TORAGE, n. In the civil law, guardianship; the charge of a pupil and his estate. In France, tutorage does not expire till the pupil is twenty-five years of age.—2. The authority or solemnity of a tutor. [Little used.]

TU'TORED, pp. Instructed; corrected; disciplined.

TU'TORESS, n. A female tutor; an instructress; a governess.

TUTO'RIAL, a. Belonging to or exercised by a tutor or instructor.

TU'TORING, ppr. Teaching; directing; correcting.

TU'TORING, n. The act of instructing; education.

TU'TORSHIP, n. The office of a tutor.

TUT'ORY, n. Tutorage; instruction.

TU'TRIX, n. A female guardian.

TUT'SAN, n. A plant, park-leaves, of the genus Hypericum, the H. androsæmum. [See HYPERICUM.]

TUT'TI, n. [L. toti.] In Italian music, a direction for all to play in full concert.

TUT'TY, n. [It. tuzia; Low L. tutia.] 1. An argillaceous ore of zinc, found in Persia, formed on cylindrical moulds into tubular pieces, like the bark of a tree. It is said to be made of a glutinous, argillaceous earth, like clay, which is put into pots, moistened and baked.—2. An impure oxide of zinc, collected from the chimneys of the smelting furnaces.

TUYERE', TUE'-IRON, [Fr. tuyere.] The nozzle of the blast pipe in a smelting furnace or smith's forge. It is also written tweer.

TUZ,† n. [Qu. touse.] A lock or tuft of hair.

TWAD'DLE, v. i. [Sax. twæde, double.] To prate much in a weak and silly manner, like one whose faculties are decayed.—2.† To be guilty of duplicity.

TWAD'DLE, n. Empty, silly talk; insignificant discourse.

TWAD'DLER, n. One who prates in a weak and silly manner.

TWAD'DLING, n. Silly, empty talk.

TWAIN, a. or n. [Sax. twegen; Sw. tvenne; Dan. tvende, for tvegende. Whether two is contracted from tweg, is not apparent, but we see in the Danish tvende, the first syllable of twenty; twen-tig, two tens.] Two.

> When old winter splits the rocks in twain. —Dryden.

[Nearly obsolete in common discourse, but used in poetry and burlesque.]

TWAITE, n. A fish, the twaite shad, Losa finita.—2. In old writers, wood grubbed up and converted into arable land. [Local.]

TWANG, v. i. [D. dwang, Dan. tvang, G. zwang, force, compulsion; G. zwängen, zwingen, D. dwingen, Sw. tvinga, Dan. tvinger, to constrain.] To sound with a quick sharp noise; to make the sound of a string which is stretched and suddenly pulled; as, the twanging bows.

TWANG, v. t. To make to sound, as by pulling a tense string and letting it go suddenly.

> Sound the tough horn, and twang the quivering string. —Pope.

TWANG, n. A sharp quick sound; as, the twang of a bowstring; a twang of the nose.—2. An affected modulation of the voice; a kind of nasal sound.

> He has a twang in his discourse. —Arbuthnot.

TWANG'ING, ppr. Making a sharp sound.—2. a. Contemptibly noisy.

TWAN'GLE, v. i. To twang.

TWAN'GLING,† a. Twanging; noisy.

TWANK, a corruption of Twang.

TWAN'KAY, n. A sort of green tea.

'TWAS, a contraction of It was.

TWAT'TLE, v. i. [G. schwatzen, with a different prefix. See TWITTER.] To prate; to talk much and idly; to gabble; to chatter; as a twattling gossip.

TWAT'TLE, v. t. To pet; to make much of. [Local.]

TWAT'TLER, n. One who twattles.

TWAT'TLING, ppr. or a. Prating; gabbling; chattering.

TWAT'TLING, n. The act of prating; idle talk.

TWAY,† for Twain, two.

TWAY-BLADE, TWY-BLADE, n. [tway and blade.] A plant, Listera ovata, growing in Britain. [See LISTERA.]

TWEAG, TWEAK, v. t. [Sax. twiccian, to twitch; G. zwicken; D. zwikken. It is radically the same word as twitch, and of the same signification.] To twitch; to pinch and pull with a sudden jerk; as, to tweag or tweak the nose.

TWEAG, TWEAGUE, †n Distress; a pinching condition.

TWEAK. See TWEAG.

TWEE'DLE, v. t. To handle lightly; used of awkward fiddling. [Qu.]—2. To wheedle; to coax. Tweedledum and tweedledee are two ludicrous compounds of this word, used by Swift, both signifying a musician in contempt.

> Strange all this difference should be,
> 'Twixt tweedledum and tweedledee. —Swift.

TWEEL, v. t. To weave cloth in a particular manner; to twill,—which see.

TWEER, n. [Fr tuyere.] In a smelting furnace, or smith's forge, the point of the blast-pipe. It is sometimes written twier, or tuyere.

TWEE'ZER-CASE, n. A case for carrying tweezers.

TWEE'ZERS, n. [This seems to be formed on the root of vise, an instrument for pinching.] Nippers; small pinchers used to pluck out hairs.

TWI'LIGHT, n. [Sax. tweon-leoht, doubtful light, from tweon, tweogan, to doubt, from twegen, two.] 1. The faint light which is reflected upon the earth after sunset and before sunrise; crepuscular light. It is occasioned by the reflection of the sun's light from the atmosphere, and begins or ends when the sun is at a certain depression below the horizon, which depression must depend upon the state of the atmosphere for the time being. The morning twilight is said to begin, and the evening twilight to end, on a medium, in our latitudes, when the sun is 18° below the horizon; but it is impossible to fix the limit with any precision. In latitudes remote from the equator, the twilight is of much longer duration than at and near the equator. —2. Dubious or uncertain view; as, the twilight of probability.

TWI'LIGHT, a. Obscure; imperfectly illuminated; shaded.

O'er the twilight groves and dusky caves. Pope.

2. Seen or done by twilight.

TWILL, v. t. To weave in such a manner as to produce a kind of diagonal ribbed appearance upon the surface of the cloth.

TWILL, n. A variety of textile fabric very extensively employed. In the twill the weft-threads do not pass over and under the warp-threads in regular succession, as in common plain weaving, but pass over one and under two, over one and under three, or over one and under eight or ten, according to the kind of twill. The effect of this is to produce the appearance of parallel diagonal lines or ribs over the whole surface of the cloth; but the regularity of the parallel lines is broken in various ways in what is termed fanciful tweeling.

TWIL'LED, pp. or a. Woven in such a manner as to present the appearance of diagonal ribs on the surface; as, twilled cloth.

TWILT, n. A quilt. [Local.]

TWIN, n. [Sax. twinan, to twine; from two.] 1. One of two young produced at a birth by an animal that ordinarily brings but one; used mostly in the plural, twins; applied to the young of beasts, as well as to human beings.—2. The twins, pl.; a sign of the zodiac; Gemini.—3. One very much resembling another.

TWIN, a. Noting one of two born at a birth; as, a twin brother or sister.—2. Very much resembling.—3. In bot., swelling out into two protuberances, as an anther or germ.

TWIN, v. i. To be born at the same birth.—2. To bring two at once.—3. To be paired; to be suited. [This verb is little used.]

TWIN,† v. t. To separate into two parts.

TWIN'-BORN, a. [twin and born.] Born at the same birth.

TWIN'-BROTHER, n. One of two brothers who are twins.

TWINE, v. t. [Sax. twinan; D. twynen; Sw. tvinna; Dan. tvinder; from two.] 1. To twist; to wind, as one thread or cord around another, or as any flexible substance around another body; as, fine twined linen; Exod. xxxix.—2. To unite closely; to cling to; to embrace. —3. To gird; to wrap closely about.

Let wreaths of triumph now my temples twine. Pope.

TWINE, v. i. To unite closely or by interposition of parts.

TWINK. See TWINKLE.

TWINK'LE, v. i. [Sax. twinclian; most probably formed from wink, with the prefix eth, ed, or oth, like twit.]—1. To sparkle; to flash at intervals; to shine with a tremulous intermitted light, or with a broken quivering light. The fixed stars twinkle; the planets do not.

These stars do not twinkle, when viewed through telescopes that have large apertures. Newton.

2. To open and shut the eye by turns; as, the twinkling owl.—3. To play irregularly; as, her eyes will twinkle.

TWINK'LE, } n. A sparkling; a
TWINK'LING, } shining with intermitted tremulous light; as, the twinkling of the fixed stars. This twinkling arises from the unequal refraction of light, in consequence of inequalities and undulations in the atmosphere.—2. A motion of the eye.—3. A moment; an instant; the time of a wink.

In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump—the dead shall be raised incorruptible; 1 Cor. xv.

TWINK'LING, ppr. Sparkling.

TWIN'-LIKENESS, n. Near resemblance; a resemblance as close as that which is observed between twins.

TWIN'LING, n. [from twin.] A twin lamb.

TWIN'NED, a. [from twin.] Produced at one birth, like twins; united.

TWIN'NER, n. [from twin.] A breeder of twins.

TWIN'TER, n. [two and winter.] A beast two winters old. [Local.]

TWIRE,† v. i. To take short flights; to flutter; to quiver; to twitter.

TWIRE,† n. A twisted thread or filament.

TWIRL, v. t. (twurl.) [D. dwarlen; G. querlen; formed on whirl. The German coincides with our vulgar quirl.] To move or turn round with rapidity; to whirl round.

TWIT, v. t. [Sax. othwitan, edwitan, ætwitan, to reproach, to upbraid; a compound of ad, æth, or oth, and witan. The latter verb signifies to know, Eng. to wit, and also to impute, to ascribe, to prescribe, or appoint, also to reproach; and with ge, a different prefix, gewitan, to depart. The original verb then signifies to set, send, or throw. We have in this word decisive evidence that the first letter t is a prefix, the remains of æth or oth, a word that probably coincides with the L. ad, to; and hence we may fairly infer that other words in which t precedes w, are also compound. That some of them are so, appears evident from other circumstances.] To reproach; to upbraid; as, for some previous act. He twitted his friend of falsehood.

> With this these scoffers twitted the Christians. Tillotson.

> Æsop minds men of their errors, without twitting them for what is amiss. L'Estrange.

In some systems of philosophy, types are the primary forms which are conceived to exist in the mind of the Creator, and which determine the character of all individual existence.—9. In numismatics, the impression on a coin or medal of any image or figure whatever.—10.† A stamp or mark.

TYPE, v. t. To prefigure; to represent by a model or symbol beforehand. [Little used.]

TYPE-FOUNDING, n. The art or practice of manufacturing metallic movable types, used by printers. The type or pattern of each letter is first cut with great care and precision, on a steel punch. By striking this punch into a piece of copper, a matrix for the face of the type is formed. The matrix is then placed in a mould, of which it forms the bottom, and into this mould is poured the type-metal in the requisite state of fluidity. The mould forms the body of the type, and consists of two halves, so that every letter which is cast may be easily loosened, and removed from it. A single type consists of three parts; the shank, or body of the letter, the beard, or that part between the shoulder of the shank and the face, and the face or shape of the letter from which the impression is to be taken. The place where types are made is called a type-foundery.

TYPE-METAL, n. An alloy of lead, antimony, and tin, used in making types. The usual proportion is one part of antimony to three of lead; but the proportions vary for different sorts of types.

TY'PHA, n. A genus of plants, the species of which are known by the name of cat's tail, or reed mace. [See REED-MACE.]

TYPHA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of monocotyledonous plants, characterized by their calyx being three-sepaled, and half-glumaceous, or a mere bundle of long hairs, long lax filaments, clavate anthers, solitary pendulous ovules, and peculiar habit. The order includes two genera, Typha and Sparganium, the species of which are abundant in the northern parts of the world. They are herbaceous plants, growing in marshes and ditches.

TYPHE'AN, } a. Pertaining to Ty-
TYPHŒ'AN, } phœus, the fabled giant with a hundred heads.

TY'PHIS, n. A genus of testaceous molluscs, of which the type is the murex tubifer.

TY'PHLOPS, n. [from Gr. τυφλος, blind.] A genus of reptiles, placed by Cuvier among the ophidians or serpents, and so named because the eye resembles a point hardly visible through the skin. They are small serpents, with small imbricated scales, a projecting muzzle furnished with plates, and a long forked tongue. They resemble, at first sight, earth-worms, and are found in the hot portions of both continents.

TY'PHOID, a. [typhus, and Gr. ειδος, form.] Resembling typhus; weak; low; as, a typhoid fever.

TYPHOMA'NIA, n. [Gr. τυφος, stupor, and μανια, madness.] The low muttering delirium which accompanies typhoid fevers

TY'PHON, n. The evil genius of Egyptian mythology, represented with a human form, having the head of a quadruped.

TY'PHON, TYPHOON', n. [Gr. τυφων.] A furious whirling wind; a hurricane in the eastern or Chinese seas; a whirlwind moving forward with irresistible impetuosity.

TY'PHOUS, a. Relating to typhus.

TY'PHUS, n. [Gr. τυφω, to render stupid, to burn with a smothered fire, and with more smoke than flame; hence τυφος, stupor or coma.] A genus of simple continuous fevers, essentially attended with a greater or less degree of atony or exhaustion, throughout their whole course, and from beginning to end. A preternaturally weak pulse always attends all these fevers. They are liable to be attended with coma in some of their stages. Typhus is contagious or infectious, and often epidemic, but is most prone to attack debilitated persons, and is aided in its progress by want of cleanliness, good food, and fresh air. There are two kinds of typhus, the malignant and the mild. The latter is the low nervous or typhoid fever of this country, which has a slow and insidious origin, and lasts from fourteen to twenty-eight days.

TYP'IC, TYP'ICAL, a. Emblematic; figurative; representing something future by a form, model, or resemblance. Abraham's offering of his only son Isaac was typical of the sacrifice of Christ. The brazen serpent was typical of the cross.—Typic fever is one that is regular in its attacks; opposed to erratic fever.

TYP'ICALLY, adv. In a typical manner; by way of image, symbol, or resemblance.

TYP'ICALNESS, n. The state of being typical.

TYPIFICA'TION, n. Act of typifying.

TYP'IFIED, pp. Represented by symbol or emblem.

TYP'IFIER, n. One who typifies.

TYP'IFY, v. t. To represent by an image, form, model, or resemblance. The washing of baptism typifies the cleansing of the soul from sin by the blood of Christ. Our Saviour was typified by the goat that was slain.

TYP'IFYING, ppr. Representing by model or emblem.

TYP'OCOSMY, n. [Gr. τυπος and κοσμος.] A representation of the world. [Not much used.]

TYPOG'RAPHER, n. [See TYPOGRAPHY.] A printer.

TYPOGRAPH'IC, TYPOGRAPH'ICAL, a. Pertaining to printing: as, the typographic art; typographical errors.—2. Emblematic.

TYPOGRAPH'ICALLY, adv. By means of types; after the manner of printers.—2. Emblematically; figuratively.

TYPOG'RAPHY, n. [Gr. τυπος, type, and γραφω, to write.] 1. The art of printing, or the operation of impressing letters and words on forms of types.—2. Emblematical or hieroglyphic representation.

TYP'OLITE, n. [Gr. τυπος, form, and λιθος, stone.] In nat. hist., an old name for a stone or fossil which has on it impressions or figures of plants and animals.

TYPOL'OGY, n. [Gr. τυπος, form, and λογος.] The doctrine of types; a discourse on types.

TY'RAN,† n. A tyrant.

TYR'ANNESS, n. [from tyrant.] A female tyrant.

TYRAN'NIC, TYRAN'NICAL, a. [Fr. tyrannique; Gr. τυραννικος.] Pertaining to a tyrant; suiting a tyrant; arbitrary; unjustly severe in government; imperious; despotic; cruel; as, a tyrannical prince; a tyrannical master; tyrannical government or power.

Our sects a more tyrannic power assume. Roscommon.

Th' oppressor rul'd tyrannic where he durst Pope.

TYRAN'NICALLY, adv. With unjust exercise of power; arbitrarily; oppressively.

TYRAN'NICALNESS, n. Tyrannical disposition or practice.

TYRAN'NICIDAL, a. Relating to tyrannicide.

TYRAN'NICIDE, n. [L. tyrannus, tyrant, and cædo, to kill.] 1. The act of killing a tyrant.—2. One who kills a tyrant.

TYRANNI'NÆ, n. Swainson's name for a sub-family of shrikes, otherwise called tyrant shrikes. They are found in America only. [See SHRIKE.]

TYR'ANNING,† ppr. or a. Acting as a tyrant.

TYR'ANNIZE, v. i. [Fr. tyranniser.] To act the tyrant; to exercise arbitrary power; to rule with unjust and oppressive severity; to exercise power over others not permitted by law or required by justice, or with a severity not necessary to the ends of justice and government. A prince will often tyrannize over his subjects; republican legislatures sometimes tyrannize over their fellow citizens; masters sometimes tyrannize over their servants or apprentices. A husband may not tyrannize over his wife and children.

TYR'ANNIZED, pp. Ruled with oppressive severity.

TYR'ANNIZING, ppr. Exercising arbitrary power; ruling with unjust severity.

TYR'ANNOUS, a. Tyrannical; arbitrary; unjustly severe; despotic.

TYR'ANNOUSLY, adv. Tyrannically; with despotic power or authority.

TYR'ANNY, n. [Fr. tyrannie; from tyran.] 1. Arbitrary or despotic exercise of power; the exercise of power over subjects and others with a rigour not authorized by law or justice, or not requisite for the purposes of government. Hence tyranny is often synonymous with cruelty and oppression.—2. Cruel government or discipline; as, the tyranny of a master.—3. Unresisted and cruel power.—4. Absolute monarchy cruelly administered.—5. Severity; rigour; inclemency.

The tyranny o' th' open night. Shak.

TY'RANT, n. [L. tyrannus; Gr. τυραννος. The Welsh has teyrn, a king or sovereign, which Owen says is compounded of te, [that spreads,] and gyrn, imperious, supreme, from gyr, a driving. The Gaelic has tiarna and tighearna, a lord, prince, or ruler, from tigh, a house; indicating that the word originally signified the master of a family merely, or the head of a clan. There is some uncertainty as to the real origin of the word. It originally signified merely a chief, prince, king, or monarch possessing absolute power, but the abuse of the office has altered the import of the word.] 1. A monarch or other ruler or master, who uses power to oppress his subjects; a person who exercises unlawful authority, or lawful authority in an unlawful manner; one who by taxation, injustice, or cruel punishment, or the demand of unreasonable services, imposes burdens and hardships on those under his control, which law and humanity do not authorize, or which the purposes of government do not require.—2. A despotic ruler; a cruel master; an oppressor.

Love, to a yielding heart is a king, to a resisting heart is a tyrant. Sidney.

TYRE, n. A preparation of milk and rice, used by the East Indians.

TYRE. See TIRE.

TYR'IAN, n. A native of Tyre.

TYR'IAN, a. Pertaining to the ancient Tyre.—2. Being of a purple colour.

TY'RO, n. A beginner in learning; a novitiate; one who is employed in learning the rudiments of any branch of study.—2. A person who has an imperfect knowledge of a subject.

TY'ROLESE, a. Belonging or relating to the Tyrol; as, a Tyrolese air.—2. n. A native of the Tyrol.

TYTHE. See TITHE.

TYTHING. See TITHING.

TZAR, n. The emperor of Russia. [See CZAR.]

TZARI'NA, n. The empress of Russia. [See CZARINA.]

U.

U IS the twenty-first letter and the fifth vowel in the English Alphabet. Its true primary sound in Anglo-Saxon, was the sound which it still retains in most of the languages of Europe; that of oo in cool, tool, answering to the French ou, in tour. This sound was changed, probably under the Norman kings, by the attempt made to introduce the Norman French language into common use. However this fact may be, the first, or long and proper sound of u, in English, is now not perfectly simple, and it cannot be strictly called a vowel. The sound seems to be nearly that of eu, shortened and blended. This sound, however, is not precisely that of eu or yu, except in a few words, as in unite, union, uniform; the sound does not begin with the distinct sound of e, nor end in the distinct sound of oo, unless when prolonged. It cannot be well expressed in letters. This sound is heard in annuity, numerate, mute, dispute, duke, opportunity, infusion. Some modern writers make a distinction between the sound of u, when it follows r, as in rude, truth, and its sound when it follows other letters, as in mute, duke; making the former sound equivalent to oo; rood, trooth; and the latter a diphthong equivalent to eu or yu. The difference, very nice indeed, between the sound of u in mute, and in rude, is owing entirely to the articulation which precedes that letter. For example, when a labial, as m or p, precedes u, we enter on its sound with the lips closed, and in opening them to the position required for uttering u, there is almost necessarily a slight sound of e formed before we arrive at the proper sound of u. When r precedes u, the mouth is open before the sound of u is commenced [See INTRODUCTION, p. lii.] In some words, as in bull, full, pull, the sound of u is that of the Italian u, the French ou, but shortened. This is a vowel. U has another short sound, as in tun, run, sun, turn, rub. This also is a vowel. U and V were long used indiscriminately, the one for the other, but since the beginning of the 16th century they have been separated, U being considered as a vowel, and V a consonant. In abbreviations, U. S. stand for United States; ult. for ultimo, in the last month being understood. As a Latin abbreviation, U. C. stand for Urbe condita, the city having been built, that is Rome: thus U. C. 400 signifies 400 years after the building of Rome.

U'BEROUS, a. [L. uber.] Fruitful; copious. [Little used.]

U'BERTY, n. [L. ubertas, from uber, fruitful or copious.] Abundance; fruitfulness. [Little used.]

UBICA'TION, UBI'ETY, n. [L. ubi, where.] The state of being in a place; local relation. [Not much used.]

U'BIQUISTS, UBIQ'UITISTS, UBIQUITA'RIANS, n. [L. ubique, everywhere, in every place.] In eccles. hist., names given to a sect of Lutherans who sprung up in Germany about the year 1560. Their distinguishing tenet was that the body of Christ is omnipresent, or in every place at the same time; and, hence, that he is corporeally present in the Eucharist.

UBIQ'UITARINESS, n. Existence every where. [Little used.]

UBIQ'UITARY, a. [L. ubique, from ubi, where.] Existing every where, or in all places.

UBIQ'UITARY, n. [supra.] One that exists every where.—2. One who maintains that the body of Christ is present every where. [See UBIQUISTS.]

UBIQ'UITOUS, a. Existing or being every where.

UBIQ'UITY, n. [L. ubique, every where.] Existence in all places or every where at the same time; omnipresence. The ubiquity of God is not disputed by those who admit his existence.

U'BI SU'PRA. [L.] In the place above mentioned; noting reference to some passage or page before named.

U'DAL, n. A freehold in the Shetland isles.

U'DALLER, n. A freeholder in the Shetland isles.

UD'DER, n. [Sax. uder; G. euter; D. uyer; Gr. οὖθαρ.] The breast of a female; but the word is applied chiefly or wholly to the glandular organ, or bag of cows, and other quadrupeds, in which the milk is secreted and retained for the nourishment of their young.

UD'DERED, a. Furnished with udders.

UDOM'ETER, n. [Gr. ὕδωρ, water, and μέτρον, measure.] A rain-gauge,—which see.

UG'LILY, adv. In an ugly manner; with deformity.

UG'LINESS, n. [from ugly.] Total want of beauty; deformity of person; as, old age and ugliness.—2. Turpitude of mind; moral depravity; loathsomeness.

> Their dull ribaldry must be offensive to any one who does not, for the sake of the sin, pardon the ugliness of its circumstances.
> South.

UG'LY, a. [W. hag, a cut or gash; hagyr, ugly, rough. See HACK.] Deformed; offensive to the sight; contrary to beauty; hateful; as, an ugly person; an ugly face.

> O, I have pass'd a miserable night,
> So full of ugly sights, of ghastly dreams.
> Shak.
>
> Fellow, begone; I cannot bear thy sight;
> This news hath made thee a most ugly man
> Shak.

UKASE, n. In Russia, a proclamation or imperial order published.

U'LANS, n. Militia among the Tartars.

UL'CER, n. [Fr. ulcere; It. ulcera; L. ulcus; Gr. ἕλκος.] A sore; a solution of continuity in any of the soft parts of the body, either open to the surface or to some natural cavity, and attended with a secretion of pus or some kind of discharge. Ulcers are of various kinds, as simple, fistulous, gangrenous, scorbutic, cancerous, inveterate, scrofulous, &c. They are also divided into local and constitutional, and into simple and specific.

UL'CERATE, v. i. To be formed into an ulcer; to become ulcerous.

UL'CERATE, v. t. [Fr. ulcerer; L. ulcero.] To affect with an ulcer or with ulcers.

UL'CERATED, pp. Affected with ulcers; as, ulcerated sore throat.

UL'CERATING, ppr. Turning to an ulcer; generating ulcers.

ULCERA'TION, n. [Fr. from L. ulceratio.] 1. The process of forming into an ulcer; or the process of becoming ulcerous.—2. An ulcer; a morbid sore that discharges pus or other fluid.

UL'CERED, a. Having become an ulcer.

UL'CEROUS, a. Having the nature or character of an ulcer; discharging purulent or other matter.—2. Affected with an ulcer or with ulcers.

UL'CEROUSLY, adv. In an ulcerous manner.

UL'CEROUSNESS, n. The state of being ulcerous.

UL'CUSLE, ULCUS'CULE, n. [L. ulcusculum, from ulcus.] A little ulcer.

ULE TREE, n. In bot. a Mexican tree, a species of Castilloa, C. elastica, from which caoutchouc is obtained, called by the Mexicans ule.

U'LEX, n. Furze, a genus of plants. [See FURZE.]

ULIG'INOUS, a. [L. uliginosus, from uligo, oozines.] Muddy; oozy; slimy.

UL'LAGE, n. In com., the wantage of casks of liquor, or what a cask wants of being full.

ULMA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of incomplete exogens, of which the genus Ulmus, or elm, is the type. It is nearly related to Urticaceæ, from which it differs only in having a two-celled fruit, and hermaphrodite flowers. It consists of trees or shrubs, which have scabrous, alternate, simple, deciduous leaves and stipules. The genera included in it are, Planera, Abelicea, Ulmus, Celtis, Sponia, Mertensia. The species are natives of the north of Asia, the mountains of India, China, North America, and Europe, in the latter of which countries they form valuable timber trees.

UL'MIC ACID, UL'MINE, n. [L. ulmus, an elm.] A vegetable acid, exuding spontaneously from the elm, the chestnut, the oak, and various other trees. It is a dark brown, and nearly black, solid, insipid, inodorous, and very sparingly soluble in water and alcohol. It constitutes the essential ingredient of peat, &c. It appears to constitute what is usually called vegetable manure. It has also been called humus, humine, geine, humic acid, and geic acid. [See HUMUS.]

UL'MUS, n. The elm, a genus of plants, the type of the nat. order Ulmaceæ. All the species are trees, some of them attaining a great size and age; four are natives of Britain. The U. campestris, the common English or small-leaved elm, is extensively employed for forming avenues, and is planted as an ornamental tree in parks, and around mansions. Its wood is used for axle-trees, mill-wheels, chairs, coffins, &c., and also in ship-building. [See ELM.]

UL'NA, n. [L.] In anat., the cubit; the larger of the two bones of the fore-arm, reaching from the elbow to the wrist. Its upper extremity forms the point of the elbow. Its chief use seems to be to support and regulate the motions of the radius, the other bone of the fore-arm.

UL'NAGE. See ALNAGE, AUNAGE.

UL'NAR, a. [L. ulna.] Pertaining to the ulna or cubit; as, the ulnar nerve.

ULODEN'DRON, n. [Gr. οὐλος and δένδρον.] A genus of trees now extinct, and found only in a fossil state in the coal formations.

ULTE'RIOR, a. [L. comparative.] Further; as, ulterior demands; ulterior propositions. What ulterior measures will be adopted is uncertain.—2. In geography, being or situated beyond or on the further side of any line or boundary; opposed to citerior, or hither.

UL'TIMA RATIO. [L.] The last reason or argument.

UL'TIMA RATIO REGUM. [L.] The last reason of kings is war, force of arms.

UL'TIMATE, a. [L. ultimus, furthest.] 1. Furthest; most remote; extreme. We have not yet arrived at the ultimate point of progression.—2. Final; being that to which all the rest is directed, as to the main object. The ultimate end of our actions should be the glory of God, or the display of his exalted excellence. The ultimate end and aim of men is to be happy, and to attain to this end, we must yield that obedience which will honour the law and character of God.—3. Last in a train of consequences; intended in the last resort.

> Many actions apt to procure fame, are not conducive to this our ultimate happiness.
> Addison.

4. Last; terminating; being at the furthest point.—5. The last into which a substance can be resolved; constituent. —Ultimate analysis, in chem., is the resolution of a substance into its absolute elements; opposed to proximate analysis, or the resolution of a substance into its secondary elements. Thus, when the analysis consists only in determining the simpler constituents of a compound, it is proximate, as when carbonate of potash is separated into carbonic acid and potash; but when the operation is extended, and the carbonic acid is resolved into carbon and oxygen, and the potash into potassium and oxygen, the analysis is ultimate; for neither carbon, oxygen, nor potassium is resolvable into two or more kinds of matter; they are therefore to be considered as ultimate elements, or constituents. The terms ultimate analysis, and ultimate elements, are most generally used in reference to organic products. In inorganic analysis, the proximate elements are the substances generally sought, and the elementary composition of these being already known, the ultimate elements of which the substance analyzed is composed are also ascertained.—Prime and ultimate ratios. [See under RATIO.]

UL'TIMATELY, adv. Finally; at last; in the end or last consequence. Afflictions often tend to correct immoral habits, and ultimately prove blessings.

ULTIMA'TUM, n. plur. Ultimata. [L.] In diplomacy, the final propositions, conditions, or terms offered as the basis of a treaty; the most favourable terms that a negotiator can offer, and the rejection of which usually puts an end to negotiation.—2. Any final proposition or condition.

UL'TIME,† a. Ultimate.

ULTIM'ITY,† n. The last stage or consequence.

UL'TIMO, n. [L. ultimo mense.] The month which preceded the present; last month; as distinguished from the current or present month, and all others. It is usually contracted to ult.; as, parliament met on the 12th ult.

UL'TIMUS HÆRES, [L.] In law, the last heir. Thus, in cases of intestate succession, failing relations of every kind, the succession devolves on the crown as ultimus hæres.

UL'TION, n. [L. ultio.] Revenge. [Little used.]

UL'TRA. [L.] Beyond. In politics, a prefix used to denote those members of a party who carry the opinions of their party to excess; as, ultra tories; ultra radicals; ultra liberals. In 1793, those persons were called ultra revolutionists who demanded much more than the constitution then adopted allowed. The word is sometimes used as a noun, to denote a person who advocates extreme measures in politics.

UL'TRAISM, n. The principles of men who advocate extreme measures, as a radical reform, &c.

UL'TRAIST, n. One who pushes a principle or measure to extremes.

ULTRAMARI'NE, a. [L. ultra, beyond, and marinus, marine.] Situated or being beyond the sea.

ULTRAMARI'NE, n. [supra.] A beautiful and durable sky-blue; a colour formed of the mineral called lapis lazuli. This substance is much valued by painters, on account of the beauty and permanence of its colour, both for oil and water painting. According to Gmelin of Tubingen, sulphuret of sodium is the colouring principle of lapis lazuli, to which the colour of ultramarine is owing. He has succeeded in preparing artificial ultramarine by heating sulphuret of sodium with a mixture of silicic acid and alumina. Artificial ultramarine thus prepared is sold in Paris at a moderate price. The finer specimens are quite equal to the native ultramarine, and much less expensive.—2. Azure-stone.—Ultramarine ashes, an inferior sort of a pigment which is the residuum of lapis lazuli, after the ultramarine has been extracted. Their appearance is that of the ultramarine, a little tinged with red, and diluted with white.

ULTRAMON'TANE, a. [Fr. from L. ultra and montanus, from mons, mountain.] Being beyond the mountain. Thus France, with regard to Italy, is an ultramontane country.

Poussin is the only ultramontane painter whom the Italians seem to envy. Cyc.

2. Of or belonging to the Italian or ultra popish party in the church of Rome; as, ultramontane opinions.

ULTRAMON'TANE, n. A foreigner; one who resides beyond the mountain.

ULTRAMONT'ANISM, n. The doctrines of ultramontanists.—2. The endeavours of the Roman curia, to extend the papal authority, and destroy the consequence of the national churches, such as the Gallican church. It is the endeavour to render the catholic churches of the various countries more subservient to the pope than is compatible with the laws of the various countries, with the rights of the bishops and sovereigns, with the independence and intellectual freedom of each country, and with various elements of catholicism itself. The Jesuits are most strenuous upholders of ultramontanism.

ULTRAMONT'ANIST, n. One of the ultramontane party; a promoter of ultramontanism.

ULTRAMUN'DANE, a. [L. ultra and mundus, world.] Being beyond the world, or beyond the limits of our system.

ULTRO'NEOUS,† a. [L. ultra, of one's own accord.] Spontaneous; voluntary. — Ultroneous witness, in Scots law, is a witness who offers his testimony without being regularly cited.

UL'ULATE, v. i. [L. ululo, to howl.] To howl, as a dog or wolf.

ULULA'TION, n. A howling, as of the wolf or dog.

UL'VA, n. Green laver, a genus of cryptogamic plants, nat. order Algæ, tribe Ulvaceæ. The plants of this order are distinguished by having a membranaceous frond of a green colour, with its reproductive granules arranged in fours. Seven species are British, three growing in the sea, one in fresh water, and three in damp places on the land. U. latissima, broad green laver, and U. lactuca, lettuce green laver, are edible.

ULVA'CEÆ, n. A tribe of cryptogamic plants, nat. order Algæ. It includes plants which are found in the sea, in fresh water, or on the damp ground. They are generally of an herbaceous green or fine purple colour, and have a thin, tender, membranaceous, reticulated structure, rarely gelatinous; the reproductive organs consist of roundish, mostly quaternate, granules or minute opercular grains, which are embedded in the delicate membrane of the plant. The tribe includes about ten genera, of which five are British, viz. Porphyra, Ulva, Tetraspora, Enteromorpha, and Bangia. [See PORPHYRA, and ULVA, the most important genera.]

UM'BEL, } UMBEL'LA, } n. [L. umbella, a screen, or fan.] In bot., a particular mode of inflorescence or flowering, which consists of a number of flower-stalks or rays, nearly equal in length, spreading from a common centre, their summits forming a level, convex, or even globose surface, more rarely a concave one, as in the carrot.

Umbel of Hemlock.

It is simple or compound. A simple umbel is when only a single flower is seated on each pedicel; as, in Eryngium, Butomus umbellatus, &c. When the primary pedicels have other smaller pedicels, which form of themselves a smaller umbel; as in Heracleum, Fœniculum, Daucus, &c., the umbel is said to be compound, and the smaller umbels are called umbellules. The whole assemblage of the umbels is called the universal umbel, and the secondary umbels or umbellules are called partial umbels. Umbel is sometimes called a rundel, from its roundness.

UM'BELLAR, } UM'BELLAL, } a. Pertaining to an umbel; having the form of an umbel.

UM'BELLATE, } UM'BELLATED, } a. Bearing umbels; consisting of an umbel growing on an umbel; as, umbellate plants or flowers.

UM'BELLET, n. A little or partial umbel.

UMBEL'LIFER, n. [L. umbella and fero.] In bot., a plant producing an umbel.

UMBELLIF'ERÆ, n. An extensive and important nat. order of plants, distinguished by the possession of five stamens and two stigmas, and by the flowers being always seated on umbels. The plants of this order are natives chiefly of the northern parts of the northern hemisphere, inhabiting groves, thickets, plains, marshes, and waste places. They are herbs, seldom shrubs, with fistular furrowed stems. The leaves are in most cases divided; they are alternate, and all of them embrace or clasp the stem by a sheathing petiole. The flowers are white, pink, yellow, or blue, and are seated on umbels which are either simple or compound. The fruit consists of two carpels united by a common axis. The seed is pendulous, and contains a large quantity of albumen in proportion to the size of the embryo. The genera are very numerous, and the species extremely so, and difficult to recognize. Some are poisonous, as hemlock, fool's parsley, and others; others are esculents, as celery, carrots, and parsnips; many yield aromatics, as caraway, coriander, dill, anise; a few secrete a fœtid gum-resin, much used in medicine, as assafœtida, galbanum, gum-ammoniacum, opponpanax, and sagapenum.

UMBELLIF'EROUS, a. [L. umbella and fero, to bear.] Producing the inflorescence called an umbel; bearing umbels; as, umbelliferous plants.

UM'BELLULE, n. A partial umbel. [See UMBEL.]

UM'BER, n. In mineral., an ore of iron, of a brown, yellowish, or blackish-brown colour, so called from Ombria in Italy, where it was first obtained. It is used as a brown pigment, and to make varnish dry quickly. A specimen from Cyprus afforded, of a hundred parts, 48 parts of oxide of iron, 20 of oxide of manganese, the remainder silex, alumin and water. The same name is given to a variety of peat or brown coal, also used as a pigment. Large beds of it are worked near Cologne, and it is said to be largely used in the adulteration of snuff.

UM'BER, n. A fish of the salmon family, called the grayling, or Thymallus vulgaris, a fresh water fish of a fine taste.

UM'BER, v. t. To colour with umber; to shade or darken.

UM'BERED, a. [L. umbra, a shade.] 1. Shaded; clouded.—2. [from umber.] Painted with umber.

UMBIL'IC, n. [infra.] The navel; the centre.

UMBIL'IC, UMBIL'ICAL, a. [L. umbilicus, the navel.] Pertaining to the navel; as, umbilical vessels; umbilical region.—Umbilical points, in math., the same as foci.—Umbilical vessels, in vegetables, are the small vessels which pass from the heart of the seed into the side seed lobes, and are supposed to imbibe the saccharine, farinaceous, or oily matter which is to support the new vegetable in its germination and infant growth.—Umbilical cord, the navel-string; a cord-like substance of an intestinal form, about half a yard in length, that proceeds from the navel of the fœtus to the centre of the placenta. UM'PIRESHIP, n. The office of an umpire.

UN, a prefix or inseparable preposition, Sax. un or on, usually un, G. un, D. on, Sans. an, is the same word as the L. in. It is a particle of negation or of privation, giving to words to which it is prefixed a negative or privative signification. In adjectives it is interpretable by not, in nouns by the want or absence of; and in verbs and their passive participles it almost uniformly signifies the reversing or annulling of the action or state expressed by the verb. Un and In were formerly in many words, and in some still are used indiscriminately; but Un has, in numerous instances, more especially in words of Latin origin, given place to In. Un admits of no change of n into l, m, or r, as in does, in illuminate, im- mense, irresolute. It is prefixed generally to adjectives and participles, and almost at pleasure; but this liberty may be carried too far. As the compounds formed with un are so common and so well known, the composition is not noticed under the several words. For the etymologies, see the simple words.

UN'DULATINGLY, adv. In the form of waves.

UNDULA'TION, n. [from undulate.] A waving motion or vibration.—Undulations, in physics, are vibrations resembling waves, propagated in succession through some fluid medium by impulses communicated to the medium; as, the undulations of water or air; the undulations of sound. The undulations of a fluid are propagated in concentric circles. [See SOUND, WAVE.]—2. In med., a particular uneasy sensation of an undulatory motion in the heart.—3. In music, a rattling or jarring of sounds, as when discordant notes are sounded together. It is called also beat.—4. In sur., a certain motion of the matter of an abscess when pressed, which indicates its fitness for opening.

UN'DULATORY, a. [from undulate.] Moving in the manner of waves; or resembling the motion of waves, which successively rise or swell and fall. We speak of the undulatory motion of water, of air, or other fluid, and this undulatory motion of air is supposed to be the cause of sounds. This is sometimes called vibratory; but undulatory seems to be most correct.—Undulatory theory, in optics, the hypothesis, according to which the phenomena of light are explained by the supposed vibrations or undulations of an ethereal medium, set in motion by the luminous body. This theory is opposed to the theory of emanations, or, as it is sometimes called, the emission theory, or material theory, according to which light is a material fluid of extreme subtilty. According to the former theory, the universe is filled with an ether or medium of great elasticity and rarity, which transmits light in the same manner as air transmits sound, and the impression is conveyed from the luminous body to the eye by successive undulations of this medium, occasioned by the luminous body; according to the latter theory, the luminous body constantly throws off material particles in every direction, which proceed in straight lines, and these particles falling upon the eye produce vision. Neither the undulatory nor material theory can be said to be satisfactorily established; but it would seem that every phenomenon which can be brought under the latter, can also, with equal facility, be explained by the former; while there are some known effects, as the phenomena of inflexion, in strict accordance with the former, which cannot, without great difficulty, and the introduction of gratuitous suppositions, be accounted for by the latter. Hence the undulatory theory has been more generally adopted in the investigations of modern philosophers.

UNINFORM'ING, a. Not furnishing information; uninstructive.
UNINGE'NIOUS, a. Not ingenious; dull.
UNINGE'NIOUSLY, adv. Without ingenuity.
UNINGEN'UOUS, a. Not ingenuous; not frank or candid; disingenuous.
UNINGEN'UOUSLY, adv. Not ingenuously.
UNINGEN'UOUSNESS, n. Want of ingenuousness.
UNINHAB'ITABLE, a. Not inhabitable; that in which men cannot live; unfit to be the residence of men.
UNINHAB'ITABLENESS, n. The state of being uninhabitable.
UNINHAB'ITED, a. Not inhabited by men; having no inhabitants.
UNINI''TIATE, UNINI''TIATED, } a. Not initiated.
UNIN'JURED, a. Not injured; not hurt; suffering no harm.
UNINJU'RIOUS, a. Not injurious.
UNINQUIRING, a. Not inquiring or disposed to inquire.
UNINQUIS'ITIVE, a. (s as z.) Not inquisitive; not curious to search and inquire.
UNINSCRIBED, a. Not inscribed; having no inscription.
UNINSPIRED, a. Not having received any supernatural instruction or illumination.
UNINSPIR'ITED, a. Not inspirited.
UNIN'STITUTED, a. Not instituted.
UNINSTRUCT'ED, a. Not instructed or taught; not educated. — 2. Not directed by superior authority; not furnished with instructions.
UNINSTRUCT'ING, a. Not instructing.
UNINSTRUCT'IVE, a. Not instructive; not conferring improvement.
UNINSTRUCT'IVELY, adv. Not instructively.
UNIN'SULATED, a. Not insulated; not being separated or detached from every thing else.
UNINSULT'ED, a. Not insulted.
UNINSURED, a. [See SURE.] Not insured; not assured against loss.
UNINTELLECT'UAL, a. Not intellectual.
UNINTELLECT'UALLY, adv. Not intellectually.
UNINTEL'LIGENT, a. Not having reason or consciousness; not possessing understanding.—2. Not knowing; not skilful; dull.
UNINTEL'LIGENTLY, adv. Not intelligently.
UNINTELLIGIBIL'ITY, n. The quality of being not intelligible.
UNINTEL'LIGIBLE, a. Not intelligible; that cannot be understood.
UNINTEL'LIGIBLENESS, n. State of being unintelligible.
UNINTEL'LIGIBLY, adv. In a manner not to be understood.
UNINTEND'ED, a. Not intended; not designed.
UNINTEN'TIONAL, a. Not intentional; not designed; done or happening without design.
UNINTEN'TIONALLY, adv. Without design or purpose.
UNIN'TERESTED, a. Not interested; not having any interest or property in; having nothing at stake; as, to be uninterested in any business or calamity. —2. Not having the mind or the passions engaged; as, to be uninterested in a discourse or narration.
UNIN'TERESTING, a. Not capable of exciting an interest, or of engaging the mind or passions; as, an uninteresting story or poem.
UNIN'TERESTINGLY, adv. So as not to excite interest.
UNINTERMIS'SION, n. Defect or failure of intermission.
UNINTERMIT'TED, a. Not intermitted; not interrupted; not suspended for a time; continued.
UNINTERMIT'TEDLY, adv. Without being intermitted.
UNINTERMIT'TING, a. Not intermitting; not ceasing for a time; continuing.
UNINTERMIT'TINGLY, adv. Without cessation; continually.
UNINTERMIX'ED, a. Not intermixed; not mingled.

UNINVENT'IVELY, adv. Not inventively.
UNINVEST'ED, a. Not invested; not clothed.—2. Not converted into some species of property less fleeting than money; as, money uninvested.
UNINVES'TIGABLE, a. That cannot be investigated or searched out.
UNINVES'TIGATED, a. Not investigated.
UNINVES'TIGATIVE, a. Not adapted or given to investigation.
UNINVID'IOUS, a. Not invidious.
UNINVITED, a. Not invited; not requested; not solicited.
UNINVITING, a. Not inviting.
UNINVOKED, a. Not invoked.
U'NIO, n. [L. a pearl.] A genus of fresh-water bivalve shells, belonging to the family Mytilacea, Cuvier, commonly called fresh-water muscles. Numerous species, remarkable for size or form, inhabit the rivers and lakes of the United States.
U'NION, n. [Fr. union; It. unione; L. unio, to unite, from unus, one.] 1. The act of joining two or more things into one, and thus forming a compound body or a mixture; or the junction or coalition of things thus united. Union differs from connection, as it implies the bodies to be in contact, without an intervening body; whereas things may be connected by the intervention of a third body, as by a cord or chain.

One kingdom, joy and union without end. Milton.

2. Concord; agreement and conjunction of mind, will, affections, or interest. Happy is the family where perfect union subsists between all its members. —3. The junction or united existence of spirit and matter; as, the union of soul and body.—4. Among painters, a symmetry and agreement between the several parts of a painting.—5. In arch., harmony between the colours in the materials of a building.—6. In ecclesiastical affairs, the combining or consolidating of two or more churches into one. This cannot be done without the consent of the bishop, the patron, and the incumbent. Union is by accession, when the united benefice becomes an accessory of the principal; by confusion, where the two titles are suppressed, and a new one created, including both; and by equality, where the two titles subsist, but are equal and independent.—7. States united. Thus the United States of America are sometimes called the Union.—8.† A pearl. [L. unio.]—Union flag, in the navy, one of the three ensigns or standards in which the crosses of St. George, St. Andrew, and St. Patrick are blended, to denote the union of the three kingdoms. This flag is appropriated to the admiral of the fleet, who is the first naval officer under the lord high admiral.—Union jack. [See JACK.] In the flag of the United States, a square portion at the upper left hand corner, in which the stars are united on a blue ground; denoting the union of the States.—Union, or Act of union, the act by which Scotland was united to England, or by which the two kingdoms were incorporated into one, in 1707.—Legislative union, the union of Great Britain and Ireland, in 1800.—Union by the first intention, in sur., the process by which the opposite surfaces of recent wounds, when they are kept in contact with each other, grow together and unite without suppuration; the result of a wonderful self-healing power in living bodies.—Charter of union, or clause of union. In Scots law, where lands lie discontiguous, but are held by the same tenure, under the same superior, and derived from the same author, the sovereign by a crown charter may unite them into one tenantry. The object of this charter or clause of union, is to dispense with the necessity of taking separate infeftments, and to declare that one sasine shall be sufficient to carry the whole discontiguous subjects.—Union cloth, cloth made of two kinds of materials, as cotton and wool, cotton and silk.
U'NIONIST, n. One who promotes or advocates union.—2. One who is joined with others to maintain strikes; as, a trades' unionist.
UNIP'AROUS, a. [L. unus, one, and pario, to bear.] Producing one at a birth.
U'NIPED, n. or a. Having only one foot.
UNIPELTA'TA, n. [L. unus, and pelta, a buckler.] A family of stomapodous crustaceans, in which the shell consists of a single shield, of an elongated quadrilateral form. It consists of but a single genus, the squilla of Fabricius.
UNIPER'SONAL, a. Having but one person.
UNIPER'SONALIST, n. One who believes there is a single person in the deity.
UNIQUE, a. (yuneek'.) [Fr.] Sole; unequalled; single in its kind or excellence.

UNIQUELY, adv. In a unique manner.

UNIRA'DIATED, a. Having one ray.

UNIRRA'DIATED, a. Not irradiated.

UNIR'RITATED, a. Not irritated; not fretted.—2. Not provoked or angered.

UNIR'RITATING, a. Not irritating or fretting.—2. Not provoking.—3. Not exciting.

UNIR'RITATINGLY, adv. So as not to irritate.

UNISER'IATE, a. Having a single line or series.

UNISER'IATELY, adv. In a single line or series

UNISEX'UAL, a. In bot., having one sex only.

U'NISON, n. [L. unus, one, and sonus, sound.] 1. In music, an accordance or coincidence of sounds proceeding from an equality in the number of vibrations made in a given time by a sonorous body. If two chords of the same matter have equal length, thickness, and tension, they are said to be in unison, and their sounds will be in unison. Sounds of very different qualities and force may be in unison; as, the sound of a bell may be in unison with a sound of a flute. Unison then consists in sameness of degree, or similarity in respect to gravity or acuteness, and is applicable to any sound, whether of instruments or of the human organs, &c.—2. A single unvaried note.—In unison, in agreement; in harmony.

U'NISON, a. Sounding alone.

Sounds intermix'd with voice,
Choral or unison. Anon.

UNIS'ONANCE, n. Accordance of sounds.

What constitutes unisonance is the equality of the number of vibrations of sonorous bodies, in two equal times. Cyc.

UNIS'ONANT, a. Being in unison; having the same degree of gravity or acuteness.

UNIS'ONOUS, a. Being in unison.

U'NIT, n. [L. unus, one; unitas, unity.] 1. One; a word which denotes a single thing or person.—2. In arith., the least whole number, or one, represented by the figure 1. Every other number is an assemblage of units. This definition is applicable to fractions as well as to whole numbers. Thus, the fraction $\frac{7}{10}$ is an assemblage of seven units, each of which is one-tenth of the integer.

Units are the integral parts of any large number. Watts.

3. In math., any known determinate quantity, by the constant repetition of which, any other quantity of the same kind is measured; or it is the name given to that magnitude, which is to be considered or reckoned as one, when other magnitudes of the same kind are to be measured. It is not itself one, but is the magnitude which one or 1 shall stand for in calculation: it is a length, or a surface, or a solid, or a weight, or a time, as the case may be, while 1 is only a numerical symbol. This symbol 1 represents the abstract conception of singleness, as distinguished from multitude, and is the unit of abstract arithmetic: but all concrete quantities must have units of their own kind.—Measuring unit, in mensuration, a certain dimension or magnitude, assumed as a standard by which other dimensions or magnitudes of the same kind are to be measured. Thus, in mensuration of surfaces, the measuring unit is a square inch, a square foot, a square yard, &c., and the area or superficies of any figure is estimated by the number of squares of this kind that are contained in it. In solids, the measuring unit is a cubical inch, a cubical foot, a cubical yard, &c., and the content or solidity of any figure is estimated by the number of cubes of this kind which it contains. In like manner, in lineal measure, the measuring unit is an inch, a foot, a yard, &c.—Unit of time, in theoretical mech., one second, and all motion is measured by the space which is, or would be, passed over in this time; hence the velocity of a body signifies the space which it passes over in one second, and where one body is said to have a greater or a less velocity than another, it is meant that a greater or less space is passed over by it in one second.—Unit of force or of weight, in theoretical mech., a certain force or weight assumed as a standard, by which other forces or weights, or their effects, may be estimated. This unit may be an ounce, a pound, a hundredweight, &c. [See UNITY.]

UNITABLE, a. Capable of being united.

UNITA'RIAN, n. [L. unitus, unus.] The Unitarians are a sect of religionists who confine the glory and attribute of divinity to the one only great and supreme God, and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. The Unitarians are opposed to the Trinitarians, or those who conceive of one God in three persons, characters, or relations, each of which they regard as the proper object of religious worship. The Unitarian Christian believes the Father to be the only true God, and Jesus, his messenger, to be the Christ. This is the leading fundamental principle, which constitutes the true and complete definition of the term Unitarian; under which are consequently included all those who, receiving the divine authority or commission of Jesus Christ, believe him to be a dependent creature, deriving his existence from the Father, and therefore the fit object of all the veneration, submission, and obedience which can be offered to a creature, but not of religious worship, properly so called. Agreeing in this great and leading principle, Unitarians differ in their opinions as to the origin, nature, and dignity of Jesus Christ. One division of them has received the name of Arians, another that of Socinians.

UNITA'RIAN, a. Pertaining to Unitarians.

UNITA'RIANISM, n. The doctrines of Unitarians, who deny the divinity of Christ.

UNITA'RIANIZE, v. t. and i. To conform to Unitarianism.

UNITE, v. t. [L. unio, unitus; Fr. and Sp. unir; It. unire.] 1. To put together or join two or more things, which make one compound or mixture. Thus we unite the parts of a building to make one structure. The kingdoms of England, Scotland, and Ireland united, form one empire. So we unite spirit and water and other liquors. We unite strands to make a rope. The states of North America united, form one nation.—2. To join; to connect in a near relation or alliance; as, to unite families by marriage; to unite nations by treaty.—3. To make to agree or be uniform; as, to unite a kingdom in one form of worship; to unite men in opinions.—4. To cause to adhere; as, to unite bricks or stones by cement.—5. To join in interest or fellowship; Gen. xlix.—6. To tie; to splice; as, to unite two cords or ropes.—7. To join in affection; to make near; as, to unite hearts in love. [Unite is followed by to or with. To unite to, is to join; Gen. xlix. 6. To unite with, is to associate; but the distinction is not always obvious or important.]—To unite the heart, to cause all its powers and affections to join with order and delight in the same objects; Ps. lxxxvi.

UNITE, v. i. To join in an act; to concur; to act in concert. All parties united in petitioning for a repeal of the law.—2. To coalesce; to be cemented or consolidated; to combine; as, bodies unite by attraction or affinity.—3. To grow together, as the parts of a wound.

The spur of a young cock grafted into the comb, will unite and grow. Duhamel.

4. To coalesce, as sounds.—5. To be mixed. Oil and water will not unite.

UNI'TED, pp. Joined; made to agree; cemented; mixed; attached by growth.—United flowers, are such as have the stamens and pistils in the same flower.—United brethren, a religious community commonly called Moravians, from their original country, Moravia, where they sprung up on the first opening of the Reformation. Generally speaking, they adhere to the confession of Augsburg, considering it as founded on the Scriptures, which are the only rule of their faith and practice. The Moravians are remarkable for a meek, quiet, and child-like spirit, and for their earnest and unremitted labours in attempting to convert the heathen.

UNI'TEDLY, adv. With union or joint efforts.

UNI'TER, n. The person or thing that unites.

UNI'TING, ppr. Joining; causing to agree; consolidating; coalescing; growing together.

UNI''TION,† n. Junction; act of uniting.

U'NITIVE,† a. Having the power of uniting.

U'NIT JÄR, n. In electrical experiments, a small insulated Leyden jar, placed between the electrical machine and a larger jar or battery. On working the machine, the small jar will make repeated discharges, and these will pass into the larger jar or battery. Hence the use of this jar is to announce the number of such discharges, from which an estimate may be formed of the amount of electricity which passes into the larger jar or battery.

U'NITY, n. [L. unitas.] 1. The state of being one; oneness. Unity may consist of a simple substance or existing being, as the soul; but usually it consists in a close junction of particles or parts, constituting a body detached from other bodies. Unity is a thing undivided itself, but separate from every other thing.—2. Concord; conjunction; as, a unity of proofs.—3. Agreement; uniformity; as, unity of doctrine; unity of worship in a church.—4. In Christian theol., oneness of sentiment, affection, or behaviour.

How good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity? Ps. cxxxiii.

5. In math., the abstract expression for any unit whatsoever. The terms unit and unity are often used synonymously, but in general, the number 1 is unity when it is not applied to any particular object; and a unit, when it is so applied. [See UNIT, No. 3.]—6. In poetry, the principle by which a uniform tenor of story and propriety of representation is preserved. In the Greek drama, the three unities required were those of action, of time, and of place; in other words, that there should be but one main plot; that the time supposed should not exceed twenty-four hours, and that the place of the action before the spectators should be one and the same throughout the piece. In the epic poem, the great and almost only unity is that of action.—7. In music, such a combination of parts as to constitute a whole, or a kind of symmetry of style and character.—8. In all the arts, the correspondence of the various parts of a work, so that they may form one harmonious whole. Unity is indispensable in every work of art.—9. In law, the properties of a joint estate are derived from its unity, which is fourfold; unity of interest, unity of title, unity of time, and unity of possession; in other words, joint-tenants have one and the same interest, accruing by one and the same conveyance, commencing at the same time, and held by one and the same undivided possession.—10. In law, unity of possession is a joint possession of two rights by several titles, as when a man has a lease of land upon a certain rent, and afterward buys the fee simple. This is a unity of possession, by which the lease is extinguished.—Unity of faith, is an equal belief of the same truths of God, and possession of the grace of faith in like form and degree. —Unity of spirit, is the oneness which subsists between Christ and his saints, by which the same spirit dwells in both, and both have the same disposition and aims; and it is the oneness of Christians among themselves, united under the same head, having the same spirit dwelling in them, and possessing the same graces, faith, love, hope, &c.

U'NIVALVE, a. [L. unus, one and valvæ.] Having one valve only, as a shell or pericarp.

U'NIVALVE, n. A shell having one valve only. The univalves form one of the three divisions into which shells were divided by Linnæus, the other two divisions being bivalves and multivalves. In this arrangement the generic characters reside in the shell and not in the structure of the inhabiting animal. Modern naturalists have adopted a much more scientific system of arrangement in regard to testaceous or molluscous animals. Lamarck divides the bivalves into five orders, viz., Heteropoda, Cephalopoda, Trachelipoda, Gasteropoda, and Pteropoda. Univalves are far more numerous than either multivalves or bivalves, both in genera and species.

U'NIVALVED, a. Having only one valve.

UNIVALV'ULAR, a. Having one valve only; as, a univalvular pericarp or shell.

UNIVERS'AL, a. [L. universalis; unus and versor.] 1. All; extending to or comprehending the whole number, quantity, or space; as, universal ruin; universal good; universal benevolence.

> The universal cause,
> Acts not by partial, but by general laws. Pope.

2. Total; whole.

> From harmony, from heav'nly harmony,
> This universal frame began. Dryden.

3. Comprising all the particulars; as, universal kinds.—4. In bot., a universal umbel, is a primary or general umbel; the first or largest set of rays in a compound umbel; opposed to partial. A universal involucre is not unfrequently placed at the foot of a universal umbel.—Universal dial, is a dial by which the hour may be found by the sun in any part of the world, or under any elevation of the pole.—Universal successor, in Scots law, an heir who succeeds to the whole of the heritage of a person who dies intestate. —Universal joint. [See JOINT.]—Universal proposition, one in which the subject is taken in its widest extent, and the predicate applies to every thing which the subject can denote. Thus, "all men are mortal," is a universal proposition, and also, "no man is perfect." A universal proposition is opposed to a particular proposition, or one which makes such an assertion or denial of some of the things spoken of, as implies that others are left unspoken of: Thus, "some men are born in England," and "some animals cannot live in this climate," are particular propositions. [See the Noun.]

UNIVERS'AL, n. [See the Adjective.] In logic, a universal is complex or incomplex. A complex universal, is either a universal proposition, as "every whole is greater than its parts," or whatever raises a manifold conception in the mind, as the definition of a reasonable animal. An incomplex universal, is what produces one conception only in the mind, and is a simple thing respecting many; as human nature, which relates to every individual in which it is found.—2.† The whole; the general system of the universe.—Universals, the name given by the schoolmen to general notions or ideas, especially those of genera and species.

UNIVERS'ALISM, n. In theol., the doctrine or belief that all men will be saved or made happy in a future life.

UNIVERS'ALIST, n. One who holds the doctrine that all men will be saved, in opposition to the doctrine of eternal punishment. The universalists maintain that Christ died for all, and hence that all shall finally be brought to a participation of the benefits of his death, in their restoration to holiness and happiness. The name universalists is sometimes applied to the Arminians, in consequence of the universality which they ascribe to the operation of divine grace, and their opposition to the doctrine of particular election.

UNIVERSAL'ITY, n. The state of extending to the whole; as, the universality of a proposition; the universality of sin; the universality of the deluge.

UNIVERS'ALIZE, v. t. To make universal.

UNIVERS'ALIZED, pp. Rendered universal.

UNIVERS'ALIZING, ppr. Rendering universal.

UNIVERS'ALLY, adv. With extension to the whole; in a manner to comprehend all; without exception. Air is a fluid universally diffused. God's laws are universally binding on his creatures.

UNIVERS'ALNESS, n. Universality.

Note.—Universal and its derivatives are used in common discourse for general. This kind of universality is by the schoolmen called moral, as admitting of some exceptions, in distinction from metaphysical, which precludes all exceptions.

U'NIVERSE, n. [Fr. univers; L. universum.] The general system of things; the collective name of heaven and earth, and all that belongs to them; the whole system of created things; the τὸ πᾶν of the Greeks, and the mundus of the Latins.

UNIVERS'ITY, n. [L. universitas, the whole of any thing as contrasted with its parts; a community, association, corporation, company, &c.] In the modern sense of the term, an establishment or corporation for the purposes of instruction in all or some of the most important divisions of science and literature, and having the power of conferring certain honorary dignities, termed degrees. The term university, like many other terms of extensive application, has undergone various modifications of meaning, till its origin and primary use seem to have been utterly forgotten. In its proper and original meaning, it denotes the whole members of an incorporated body of persons, teaching and learning one or more departments of knowledge. In the technical language of the civil law, the word universitas was used to signify a plurality of persons, associated for a continued purpose, and may be rendered by society, company, corporation. In the middle ages, the term was used in reference to seminaries of learning, to denote either the whole body of teachers and learners, or the whole body of learners, with corporate rights and under bye-laws of their own, divided either by faculty or by country, or both together; its meaning being determined by the words with which it was connected. At a later period, the expression universitas literarum was used to indicate that all the most important branches of science were to be taught in these establishments; but although it is true that most of the modern universities embrace the whole circle of learning, as contained in the four faculties of the arts, theology, law, and physic, this was not the case in the 12th century, when the term universities was first applied to academical institutions. The university of Paris, as well as Oxford and Cambridge, existed at first only in the faculty of arts, and Salerno and Montpellier contained the single faculty of medicine. Some, forming their notion of the word university merely from the English universities, suppose that it necessarily means a collection and union of colleges; that it is a great corporation embodying in one the smaller and subordinate collegiate bodies; but this is not correct, for many universities exist in which there are no colleges. This is the case with most of the German universities, and in the Scottish universities there are no foundations which bear any resemblance to the English colleges; and, besides, the universities of Oxford and Cambridge existed before a single college was endowed. The oldest of the European universities were those of Paris and Bologna, and these formed the models on which the other universities, which subsequently sprung up in various parts of Europe, were established.

UNIV'OCAL, n. A word having only one signification or meaning; a synonyme.

UNIV'OCAL, a. [L. unus, one, and vox, word.] 1. Having one meaning only. A univocal word is opposed to an equivocal, which has two or more significations.—2. Having unison of sounds; as the octave in music and its replicates.—3. Certain; regular; pursuing always one tenor. [Little used.]

UNIV'OCALLY, adv. In one term; in one sense.

How is sin univocally distinguished into venial and mortal, if the venial be not sin? Hale.

2. In one tenor. [Little used.]

UNIVOCA'TION, n. Agreement of name and meaning.

UNJAR'RING, a. Not discordant.

UNJAUN'DICED, a. Not jaundiced.

UNJEALOUS, a. (unjel'lous.) Not jealous or mistrusting.

UNJOIN', v. t. To separate; to disjoin.

UNJOIN'ED, a. Not joined.

UNJOINT', v. t. To disjoint.

UNJOINT'ED, pp. Disjointed; separated.—2. a. Having no joint or articulation; as, an unjointed stem.

UNJOY'FUL, a. Not joyful; sad.

UNJOY'FULLY, adv. Not joyfully.

UNJOY'OUS, a. Not joyous; not gay or cheerful.

UNJOY'OUSLY, adv. Not joyously.

UNJUDG'ED, a. Not judged; not judicially determined.

UNJUST', a. Not just; acting contrary to the standard of right established by the divine law; not equitable; as, an unjust man.—2. Contrary to justice and right; wrongful; as, an unjust sentence; an unjust demand; an unjust accusation.

UNJUST'IFIABLE, a. Not justifiable; that cannot be proved to be right; not to be vindicated or defended; as, an unjustifiable motive or action.

UNJUST'IFIABLENESS, n. The quality of not being justifiable.

UNJUST'IFIABLY, adv. In a manner that cannot be justified or vindicated.

UNJUST'IFIED, a. Not justified or vindicated.—2. Not pardoned.

UNJUST'LY, adv. In an unjust manner; wrongfully.

UNK'ED,† } UNK'ID,† } for Uncouth, odd; strange.

UNKEM'MED, } UNKEMPT', } a. Uncombed; unpolished. [Obsolete, except in poetry]

UNKEN'NEL, v. t. To drive from his hole; as, to unkennel a fox.—2. To rouse from secrecy or retreat.—3. To release from a kennel.

UNKEN'NELLED, pp. Driven or let loose from confinement, as a fox or dog.

UNKENT',† a. [un and ken, to know.] Unknown.

UNKEPT', a. Not kept; not retained; not preserved.—2. Not observed; not obeyed; as a command.

UNKER'CHIEFED, a. Having no kerchief.

UNKERN'ELLED, a. Destitute of a kernel.

UNKETH,† a. Uncouth; strange.

UNKILL'ED, a. Not killed; still in being.

UNKIND, a. Not kind; not benevolent; not favourable; not obliging.—2. Unnatural.

UNKIN'DLED, a. Not kindled.

U'PAS, U'PAS TREE, n. A tree common in the forests of Java, and of some of the neighbouring islands. It is a species of the genus Antiaris, the A. toxicaria, nat. order Urticaceæ.

Upas tree (Antiaris toxicaria).

Many fabulous stories were formerly propagated respecting this tree. It was said to be a large tree growing in Java, in the midst of a desert, caused by its own pestiferous qualities; its exhalations were said to cause death to all animals which approached the tree, and the juice which flowed from its stem was said to be the most deadly of poisons. To approach the tree for the purpose of wounding the stem and obtaining the juice, was stated to be so dangerous, that none but criminals under sentence of death could be found to undertake the task. The truth is, that the upas is a tree which yields a poisonous secretion, and nothing more. The poison is called upas antiar, or bohun upas. The active principle in this secretion has been termed Antiarine,—which see. Upas tieute, a name of the strychnos tieute, which is a very poisonous species of the genus Strychnos, and yields the greatest quantity of Strychnia.

3. Honest; just; adhering to rectitude in all social intercourse; not deviating from correct moral principles; as, an upright man; Job i.—4. Conformable to moral rectitude.

Conscience rewards upright conduct with pleasure. J. M Mason.

UP'RIGHT, n. In arch., a representation or draught of the front of a building; called also an elevation, or orthography. [Little used.]—2. Something standing erect or perpendicular.—3. Among carpenters, a principal piece of timber placed vertically, and serving to support rafters.

UPRIGHT'EOUSLY, adv. justly.

UP'RIGHT-HEARTED, a. Having an upright heart.

UP'RIGHTLY, adv. In a direction perpendicular to the plane of the horizon; in an erect position.—2. Honestly; with strict observance of rectitude; as, to live uprightly.

He that walketh uprightly, walketh surely; Prov. x.

UP'RIGHTNESS, n. Perpendicular erection.—2. Honesty; integrity in principle or practice; conformity to rectitude and justice in social dealings.

The truly upright man is inflexible in his uprightness. Atterbury.

UPRISE, v. i. (s as z.) pret. Uprose; pp. Uprisen. To rise from bed or from a seat.

Uprose the virgin with the morning light. Pope.

2. To ascend above the horizon.

Uprose the sun. Cowley.

3.† To ascend, as a hill.

UP'RISE,† n. A rising; appearance above the horizon.

UPRISING, ppr. Rising; ascending.

UPRISING, n. The act of rising.

Thou knowest my down-sitting and mine uprising; Ps. cxxxix.

UP'ROAR, n. [D. oproer; G. aufruhr; auf, up, and rühren, to stir, to beat, D. roeren, Sw. röra, upror. It is sometimes accented on the second syllable.] Great tumult; violent disturbance and noise; bustle and clamour.

The Jews who believed not...set all the city in an uproar; Acts xvii.
Horror thus prevailed,
And wild uproar. Philips.

UPROAR,† v. t. To throw into confusion.

UPROARIOUS, a. Making a great noise and tumult.

UPROARIOUSLY, adv. With great noise and tumult.

UPROLL, v. t. [up and roll.] To roll up.

UPROLLED, pp. Rolled up.

UPROOT', v. t. [up and root.] To root up; to tear up by the roots, as, to uproot the hills or trees.

UPROOT'ED, pp. Torn up by the roots.

UPROUSE, v. t. (uprouz'.) [up and rouse.] To rouse from sleep; to awake.

UPROUS'ED, pp. Roused from sleep.

UPROUS'ING, ppr. Rousing from sleep.

UPRUN', v. t. To run, ascend, or mount up.

UPS AND DOWNS, n. pl. Vicissitudes; as, there are usually many ups and downs in an adventurer's life. [Colloq.]

UPSEND', v. t. To send, cast, or throw up.

UPSET', v. t. [up and set.] To overturn; to overthrow; to overset; as a carriage.

UPSET', n. An overturn; an overthrow, as of a carriage. [Trivial.]

UPSET'-PRICE, n. In Scots law, the price at which any subject, as lands, tenements, goods, &c., is exposed to sale by auction. In such a case, the person who offers the upset price, if there be no other offerers, becomes the purchaser.

UPSETT'ING, a. Assuming; conceited. [Scotch.]

UPSETT'ING, n. The act of overturning.

UP'SHOT, n. [up and shot.] Final issue; conclusion; end; as, the upshot of the matter.

Here is the upshot and result of all. Burnet.

UP'SIDE, n. The upper side; the upper part.

UPSIDE DOWN. The upper part undermost. As a phrase, this denotes in confusion; in complete disorder.

UPSNATCH'ING, a. Snatching up; seizing.

UPSOAR, v. i. To soar aloft; to mount up.

UPSPEAR, v. i. To shoot upwards like a spear.

UPSPEARING, a. Rising up as a spear.

UPSPRING',† v. i. To spring up.

UPSPRING',† n. An upstart; a man suddenly exalted.

UPSTAND',† v. i. To be erected.

UPSTART', v. i. [up and start.] To start or spring up suddenly.

UP'START, n. One that suddenly rises from low life to wealth, power, or honour.—2. Something that springs up suddenly.

UP'START, n. A term applied by masons to the stone jamb of a door or window, when it is formed of a single stone set on its end, and not built in courses; and, generally, to any long stone set on end in a structure.

UP'START, a. Suddenly raised.

UPSTAY, v. t. [up and stay.] To sustain; to support.

UPSTAYING, ppr. Supporting.

UPSWARM′,† v. t. [See SWARM.] To raise in a swarm.

UPSWELL′, v. i. To swell; to rise up.

UPTAKE,† v. t. [up and take.] To take into the hand.—2. Perceptive power; as, he is quick in the uptake. [Familiar, and local.]

UPTEAR, v. t. [up and tear.] To tear up.

UPTHROW, v. t. To throw up; to elevate.

UPTRACE, v. t. To trace up; to investigate.

UPTRAIN,† v. t. [up and train.] To train up; to educate.

UPTURN′, v. t. [up and turn.] To turn up; to throw up; as, to upturn the ground in ploughing.

U′PUPA, n. The hoopoe, a genus of insessorial or perching birds, distinguished by an ornament on the head, formed of a double range of long feathers, which they can erect at will. U. epops, or common hoopoe, is supposed to be an inhabitant of the whole of

Hoopoe (Upupa epops.)

North Africa. In summer it migrates as far north as Denmark, Sweden, and Russia; and southward, in continental Europe, it is found in Germany, Holland, France, Spain, and Italy. It is generally found in the British Islands in autumn.

UPUP′IDÆ, n. A family of insessorial or perching birds, of which the genus Upupa is the type. Besides the hoopoes, it comprises the genera promerops and epimachus, Cuv.

UPWAFTED, a. Sustained; borne up; carried aloft.

UP′WARD, a. [up and ward, Sax. weard, L. versus.] Directed to a higher place; as, with upward eye; with upward speed.

UP′WARD,† n. The top.

UP′WARD, UP′WARDS, adv. Toward a higher place; opposed to downwards.

> Upward I lift my eye. Watts.

2. Toward heaven and God.

> Looking inward, we are struck dumb; looking upward, we speak and prevail. Hooker.

3. With respect to the higher part.

> Upward man,
> Downward fish. Milton.

4. More than, indefinitely. Upwards of ten years have elapsed; upwards of a hundred men were present.—5. Toward the source. Trace the stream upwards.

> And trace the muses upward to their spring. Pope.

UPWHIRL, v. i. (upwhurl′.) [up and whirl.] To rise upward in a whirl; to whirl upward.

UPWHIRL′, v. t. To raise upward in a whirling direction.

UPWIND, v. t. [up and wind.] To wind up.

U′RACHUS, n. [Gr. οὐραχος, from οὐρον, urine.] In anat., the ligamentous cord that arises from the base of the urinary bladder, which it runs along, and terminates in the umbilical cord.

URAL′IAN, a. Relating to the river Ural, or the Ural mountains, in Russia.

U′RAMILE, n. A new chemical compound discovered by Wöhler and Liebig. It is a product of the decomposition of thionuric acid, and is obtained either in the form of a crystalline powder, or in dendritic or feathery crystallizations, of a very beautiful aspect. It dissolves in ammonia and potash, and the solution absorbs oxygen, becoming purple, and depositing green crystals of murexide, or of potassium-murexide. Uramile may be considered as uric acid, in which the urea is replaced by 1 equivalent of ammonia, and 2 of water.

URAMIL′IC ACID, n. An acid obtained by Wöhler and Liebig, by evaporating acid thionurate of ammonia, or uramile, with dilute sulphuric acid. It appeared to those chemists as fine four-sided prisms, or silky needles, very soluble in water; but it has not again been obtained, and its existence is still doubtful.

URAN-GLIM′MER, n. An ore of uranium; uran-mica; chalcolite.

URAN′IA, n. In Grecian myth., the muse of astronomy. She is generally represented with a crown of stars, in a garment spotted with stars, and holding in her left hand a celestial globe or a lyre. Urania is likewise the name of the heavenly Venus, or of pure intellectual love. One of the Oceanides, or sea-nymphs, was also called Urania. —2. In bot., a genus of plants; nat. order Musaceæ. It has but one species, the U. speciosa, a native of Madagascar, with flowers similar to the Bananas, and leaves arranged in a fan-shape. The seeds are said to constitute a wholesome food. It may be ranked among the most splendid of our hot-house plants.

Urania, from an antique statue.

URAN′IC ACID, n. Peroxide of uranium.

U′RANITE, n. An ore or phosphate of uranium, called also uran-glimmer and uran-mica. Streak paler than the colour; colour emerald-green, grass-green, leek-green, golden-yellow, and lemon-yellow; transparent or subtranslucent. It contains phosphoric acid, oxide of uranium, lime, silica, oxide of iron, with small quantities of magnesia, oxide of manganese and barytes, but it appears essentially to consist of the phosphates of uranium and lime. It occurs crystallized in rectangular prisms, in imperfect octahedrons, &c. Its structure is lamellar, and it yields to the knife. Uranite is found in veins of granite near Autun and Limoges, in France, and also in several parts of Saxony. A green variety, called chalcolite and uran-mica, is found in Cornwall. Its colour is owing to the presence of phosphate of copper instead of phosphate of lime.

URANIT′IC, a. Pertaining to uranite, or resembling it.

URA′NIUM, n. A metal discovered by Klaproth, in 1789, who named it after the planet Uranus, the discovery of which had occurred some years before. It was obtained from the mineral called pechblende, which consists of protoxide of uranium, and oxide of iron. It also occurs in the form of peroxide in uranite and uran-mica. Uranium appears to be of a crystalline texture, with a metallic lustre, and of a reddish-brown colour. It suffers no change from exposure to the air at common temperatures, but when heated in open vessels it absorbs oxygen, and is reconverted into the protoxide. The properties of this metal, however, are as yet known imperfectly, and, from recent researches, it would appear that what was supposed to be the metal is an oxidised body, acting, according to Péligot, the part of a metal; while, according to others, it is the protoxide of the true metal. The oxide of uranium, or what was formerly regarded as metallic uranium, is used for giving a fine black in painting on porcelain, and the peroxide and all its compounds have rich and permanent yellow colours.

U′RAN-MI′CA, n. Green uranite, or chalcolite. [See URANITE.]

U′RAN-O′CHRE, n. A yellow earthy incrustation, supposed to be the oxide of uranium, combined with carbonic acid, or a carbonate of uranium. It is also termed uran-bloom and uraconise. It occurs in silver-veins in Bohemia, forming a coating on pechblende. The same name is also applied to pechblende.

URANOGRAPH′ICAL, a. Pertaining to uranography; as, uranographical problems.

URANOG′RAPHY, n. [Gr. οὐρανος, heaven, and γραφω, to describe.] Literally, a description of the heavens. That branch of astronomy which consists in the determination of the relative situations of the heavenly bodies, and the construction of maps and globes which shall truly represent their mutual configurations, as well as of catalogues which shall preserve a precise numerical record of each.

URANOL′OGY, n. [Gr. οὐρανος, heaven, and λογος, discourse.] A discourse or treatise on the heavens.

URANOS′COPUS, n. Star-gazer, a genus of acanthopterygious fishes of the percoid family. They are very nearly related to the weavers of the British seas. One or two species inhabit the Mediterranean. The head is nearly cubical, and the eyes are placed in the flat summit, so that they look upwards. The mouth is turned up in a similar manner.

URANOS'COPY, n. [Gr. οὐρανός, heaven, and σκοπέω, to view.] Contemplation of the heavenly bodies.

U'RANUS, n. [Gr. οὐρανός, heaven.] In myth., a divinity, the first king of the Atlantic nation, and the father of Saturn.—2. In astron., one of the primary planets, discovered by Sir William Herschel in 1781. It was the remotest known planet belonging to our system, until the discovery of the planet Neptune in 1846. It presents the appearance of a small round uniformly illuminated disc, without rings, belts, or discernible spots. To the naked eye it appears like a star of the sixth magnitude, its apparent diameter being about four seconds. Its real diameter is 35,000 miles, so that its bulk is about eighty times that of the earth. It completes its revolution round the sun in nearly 84 of our years, moving in its orbit at the rate of 15,000 miles in an hour. Its distance from the sun is 1800 millions of miles. Sir W. Herschel discovered six satellites about the planet Uranus. The existence of two of these has been clearly made out, but many have doubted the existence of the remaining four, as no one besides Herschel himself has ever been able to see one of them, except Mr. Lamont, of the observatory of Munich, who saw the the sixth satellite in 1837. The orbits of the satellites of Uranus (at least of those two whose existence is certain), are nearly at right angles to the plane of the ecliptic, and their motions are retrograde, or from east to west, instead of from west to east, as is the case with every other planet and satellite. The name Uranus was given to this planet in allusion to the ancient mythology, according to which Uranus was the father of Saturn, as Saturn was of Jupiter, and Jupiter of Mars. It was also named Herschel in honour of the discoverer, and the Georgium Sidus, in honour of the reigning king, George III.; but the name Uranus is now universally recognised.

URA'O, n. Another name for Trona,—which see.

U'RATE, n. A compound of uric acid and a base; as, urate of potash, urate of soda, urate of ammonia, &c. [See URIC ACID.]

UR'BAN, a. [L. urbanus, from urbs, a city.] Civil; courteous in manners; polite.—2. Of or belonging to a town or city; as, urban population; urban districts.—Urban servitudes, in Scots law, a species of predial servitudes, so named from their being connected with edifices. Of this kind is the obligation on a tenement which is under another to bear its weight; also stillicide, light, prospect, &c. [See SERVITUDE.]

URBANE, n. [See ABOVE.] Civil; courteous; polite; elegant in manners.

URBAN'ITY, n. [Fr. urbanité; L. urbanitas, from urbs, a city.] 1. That civility or courtesy of manners which is acquired by associating with well bred people; politeness; polished manners.—2. Facetiousness.

UR'BANIZE, v. t. To render civil and courteous; to polish.

UR'CEOLA, n. A genus of plants; nat. order Apocynaceæ. The plants of this genus inhabit the Malayan peninsula. The most important species is the U. elastica, or caoutchouc-vine. From wounds made in the bark of this plant, there oozes out a milky fluid, which, on exposure to the open air, separates into an elastic coagulum and Urceola elastica.

a watery fluid. This coagulum is found to resemble Indian rubber, and to possess all its properties.

URCEOLA'RIA, n. A genus of crustaceous lichens. There are six British species, generally found on rocks, and stones, and walls. Of these the U. scruposa and U. cinerea are used for dyeing. U. esculenta is a native of Tartary, and is used as an article of diet.

UR'CEOLATE, a. [L. urceolus, urceus, a pitcher.] In bot., shaped like a pitcher; swelling out like a pitcher, as respects the body, and contracted at the orifice; as a calyx or corol.

UR'CHIN, n. [Arm. heureuchin; L. erinaceus.] 1. A name given to the hedgehog. The name of sea-urchin has been given to the Echinus.—2. A name of slight anger given to a child; as, the little urchin cried.

URDÉE, } a. In her., a cross urdée is UR'DY, } one in which the extremities are drawn to a sharp point, instead of being cut straight.

URE, n. Use; practice. [Obsolete, but retained in inure.]

U'REA, n. A remarkable compound which exists in large proportion in healthy urine, and is extracted from it by the action of oxalic acid, or nitric acid. It is also prepared artificially and more easily from cyanate of ammonia. In its solid and pure state, urea crystallizes in four-sided prisms resembling nitre in appearance, and also in their taste, which is saline and cooling, exactly like that of nitre. It is soluble both in water and alcohol, and, when heated, it melts, gives off much ammonia, and finally solidifies, being in a great measure converted into ammonia and cyanuric acid. It belongs to the class of organic bases, forming crystallizable compounds with several acids, such as nitric, oxalic, and acetic acids. It consists of 2 atoms of carbon, 4 of hydrogen, 2 of nitrogen, and 2 of oxygen.

URE'DO, n. [L. uro, to burn.] A genus of microscopical fungi, which are very injurious to plants. The diseases called smut, brand, burnt ear, rust, &c., are caused by their ravages. Their presence is known by the burnt appearance of the part they infest.—2. In med., an itching or burning sensation of the skin, which accompanies many diseases.

URE'NA, n. A genus of plants; nat. order Malvaceæ. The species consist of small shrubs, indigenous in India, China, Mauritius, South America, and the West Indies. They abound in strong flax-like fibres, which are well fitted for conversion into cordage.

URE'TER, } n. [Gr. οὐρητήρ, from οὐρέω.
U'RETER, } See URINE.] The excretory duct of the kidney, a tube conveying the urine from the kidney to the bladder. There are two ureters, one on each side.

URETERI'TIS, n. Inflammation of the ureter.

U'RETHANE, n. [urea and ether.] A compound formed by the action of ammonia on chlorocarbonic ether. It is a colourless pearly crystalline mass, like spermaceti. It is very soluble in water and alcohol, and yields large crystals. It may be considered as formed of 2 equivalents of carbonic ether, and 1 equivalent of urea.

URE'THRA, n. [Gr. οὐρήθρα, from οὐρέω. See URINE.] The canal by which the urine is conducted from the bladder and discharged.

URE'THRAL, a. Pertaining to the urethra.

URETHRI'TIS, n. An inflammation in the urethra.

URETHY'LANE, n. A compound formed by the action of ammonia on oxychlorocarbonate of oxide of methule. It is a deliquescent crystallizable mass, corresponding to urethane.

URGE, v. t. [L. urgeo. This belongs probably to the family of Gr. εἴργω, and L. arceo.] 1. To press; to push; to drive; to impel; to apply force to, in almost any manner.

And great Achilles urge the Trojan fate. Dryden.

2. To press the mind or will; to press by motives, arguments, persuasion, or importunity.

My brother
Did urge me in his act. Shak.

3. To provoke; to exasperate.

Urge not my father's anger. Shak.

4. To follow close; to impel.

Heir urges heir, like wave impelling wave. Pope.

5. To labour vehemently; to press with eagerness.

Through the thick deserts headlong urg'd his flight. Pope.

6. To press; as, to urge an argument; to urge a petition; to urge the necessity of a case.—7. To importune; to solicit earnestly. He urged his son to withdraw.—8. To apply forcibly; as, to urge an ore with intense heat.

URGE, v. i. To press forward; as, he strives to urge upward.

URG'ED, pp. Pressed; impelled; importuned.

URG'ENCY, n. Pressure; importunity; earnest solicitation; as, the urgency of a request.—2. Pressure of necessity; as, the urgency of want or distress; the urgency of the occasion.

URG'ENT, a. Pressing with importunity; Exod. xii.—2. Pressing with necessity; violent; vehement; as, an urgent case or occasion.

URG'ENTLY, adv With pressing importunity; violently; vehemently; forcibly.

URG'ER, n. One who urges; one who importunes.

URGE-WONDER, n. A sort of grain.

URG'ING, ppr. Pressing; driving; impelling.—2. a. Pressing with solicitations; importunate.

U'RIC ACID, n. [Gr. οὖρον, urine.] An acid discovered by Scheele, and sometimes called lithic acid. It occurs in small quantity in the healthy urine of man and quadrupeds, and in much larger quantity in the urine of birds. The semi-fluid urine of birds and serpents is principally composed of urate of ammonia, and guano, which is the decomposed excrement of aquatic birds, contains a large quantity of urate of ammonia. Uric acid occurs in combination with soda or ammonia in those gouty concretions, commonly called chalk-stones, and it constitutes the principal proportion of the calculi, deposited in the human bladder, and of the red gravel or sand which is voided in certain morbid states of the urine. It is best obtained from the excrement of the boa constrictor. It crystallizes in fine scales of a brilliant white colour, and silky lustre; it is inodorous and insipid, heavier than water, and nearly insoluble in it when cold, and only slightly dissolved by it when hot; the solution reddens litmus paper, but feebly. Nitric acid dissolves uric acid, and also sulphuric acid, when concentrated. When it is dissolved in nitric acid, the solution contains alloxan, alloxantine, parabanic acid, and ammonia, and when evaporated, and treated with ammonia in excess, it acquires a purple red colour, a test by which uric acid may be recognised. It consists of 10 equivalents of carbon, 4 of nitrogen, 4 of hydrogen, and 6 of oxygen. It may be regarded as a compound of urile or cyanoxalic acid with urea. The saline compounds of uric acid are called urates, the most important of which are the urates of potash, soda, and ammonia.

U'RILE, U'RYLE, n. A radical supposed to exist in the compounds of uric acid, and to be formed of the elements of cyanogen, and those of carbonic oxide. It is also called cyanoxalic acid.

U'RIM, n. [Heb. אוּרִים, urim.] The Urim and Thummim, among the Israelites, signify lights and perfections. These were a kind of ornament belonging to the habit of the high priest, in virtue of which he gave oracular answers to the people; but what they were has not been satisfactorily ascertained.

U'RINAL, n. [Fr. urinal; L. urinalis, from urina, urine.] 1. A bottle in which urine is kept for inspection.—2. A vessel for containing urine.

URI'NANT, ppr. [L. urino, to duck or dive under water.] In her., a term applicable to the dolphin or other fish when borne with the head downwards, and the tail erect, exactly in a contrary position to what is termed haurient.

U'RINARY, a. [from urine.] Pertaining to urine; as, the urinary bladder; urinary calculi; urinary abscesses.—Urinary calculi, or concretions in the bladder or kidneys, consist chiefly of uric acid.—Urinary organs, the kidneys, the ureters, the bladder, and the urethra.

U'RINARY, URINA'RIUM, n. In agriculture, a reservoir or place for the reception of urine, &c., for manure.

U'RINARY, URINOIR', a. [Fr urinoir.] A sheltered convenience, for men's needs, set up near streets, &c., in towns; a public urinal.

U'RINATIVE, a. Provoking urine.

URINA'TOR, n. [L. from urino, to dive.] A diver; one who plunges and sinks in water in search of something, as for pearls.

U'RINE, n. [L. urina; Gr. οὖρον, from οὐρέω: G. harn, harnen.] An animal fluid or liquor secreted by the kidneys, whence it is conveyed into the bladder by the ureters, and through the urethra discharged. In its natural state it is acid, transparent, of a pale amber or straw-colour, a brackish taste, a peculiar odour, and of a specific gravity varying from 1·012 to 1·030. The character of the urine, however, is apt to be altered by a variety of circumstances, and from the variety of the substances extracted from the body through the medium of the kidneys, the urinary system may be regarded as the emunctory of the entire animal economy, in which we meet with every principle and constituent that analysis has discovered, forming the solids and fluids of the body. A knowledge of the urine in health, and of the variations to which it is subject in disease, is of the utmost importance to the medical practitioner, as the different appearances of this fluid indicate not merely the state of the urinary system, but the changes which have taken place in other parts of the animal economy. According to Berzelius, 1000 parts of healthy urine contain:—water, 933 parts; urea, 30·1; uric acid, 1; free lactic acid, lactate of ammonia, and animal matters not separable from them, 17·14; mucus of the bladder, 0·32; sulphates of potash and soda, 6·87; phosphates of soda and ammonia, 4·59; muriate of soda, 4·45; muriate of ammonia, 1·50; earthy phosphates, with a trace of fluate of lime, 1; silex, 0·03. In addition to these ingredients, urine occasionally contains a variety of other substances, as sugar bile, albumen, fibrin, fat, blood, &c. No liquor in the human body is so variable, in respect to quantity or quality, as the urine. It varies even in its healthy state in respect to age, drink, food, medicines, the time of the year, the muscular motion of the body, and the affections of the mind.

U'RINE, U'RINATE, v. i. [supra.] To discharge urine.

URINO'METER, n. [L. urina, and Gr. μέτρον, measure.] An instrument for ascertaining the specific gravity of urine. It is constructed upon the principle of the common hydrometer.

U'RINOUS, U'RINOSE, a. Pertaining to urine, or partaking of its qualities.

U'RITHS, n. The flexible rods bound around hedges. [Provincial.]

URN, n. [L. urna.] 1. A kind of vase of a roundish form, but swelling in the middle like the common pitcher. It is now seldom used but in the way of ornament over chimney pieces, in buffets, &c.—2. A vessel for water; a vessel employed to keep water boiling at the tea table, commonly called a tea-urn.—3. A vessel in which the ashes of the dead were formerly kept.—4. A Roman measure for liquids, containing about three gallons and a half, wine measure.—5. In bot., the hollow vessel in which the spores or false seeds of mosses are lodged.

URN,† v. t. To enclose in an urn.

URN-SHAPED, a. Having the shape of an urn.

UROS'COPY, n. [Gr. οὖρον and σκοπέω.] The judgment of diseases by inspection of the urine.

UR'RY, n. A sort of blue or black clay, lying near a vein of coal.

UR'SA, n. [L.] A bear. Ursa major, the great bear, one of the most conspicuous of the northern constellations, situated near the pole. It is remarkable from its well known seven stars, by two of which, called the pointers, the pole star is always readily found. These seven stars are popularly called the waggon, Charles's wain, and sometimes the plough. Ursa minor, the little bear; the constellation which contains the north pole, or the visible star which is nearest to the northern pole of the heavens. This constellation has seven stars placed together in a manner very much resembling those in ursa major, the pole-star being placed in the corner of the triangle which is farthest from the quadrangle.

UR'SIDÆ, n. A family of plantigrade carnivorous animals, comprising the true bears, the badger, the racoon, and the wolverene, or glutton.

UR'SIFORM, a. [L. ursa, bear, and form.] In the shape of a bear.

UR'SINE, a. [L. ursinus.] Pertaining to or resembling a bear.

UR'SULINE, a. Denoting an order of nuns who observe the rule of St. Austin; so called from their institutress, St. Ursula. They devote themselves to the succour of poverty and sickness, and the education of the young. Used also as a noun.

UR'SUS, [L.] The bear; a genus of plantigrade carnivorous mammals, found in various parts of the world. Various species are known, as the U. arctos, the brown European bear; U. Americanus, the North American black bear; U. ferox, the grisly bear; U. maritimus, the polar bear; U. thibetanus, the Thibet bear; U. malayanus, the Malayan bear; U. labiatus, the thick-lipped bear of the East Indies, &c. [See BEAR.]

URTI'CA, n. A genus of plants known under the common name of nettle. The effects of the venomous sting of the common nettles are well known. They are, however, not to be compared with those of some Indian species, as U. heterophylla, Crenulata, and Stimulans. The most important species is U. tenacissima, which abounds in ligneous fibre, and may be converted into very strong cordage. [See NETTLE.]

URTICA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of incomplete dicotyledons, consisting of trees, shrubs, and herbs, yielding, in some instances, a milky juice. They are widely dispersed over every part of the world. The species are very numerous, many of them being mere weeds, whilst others are large trees yielding useful and delicious fruits. To this order belong the nettles, the poisonous upas tree, the fig, the banyan, hop, mulberry, the bread-fruit, the cow tree, &c.

URTICA'RIA, n. [L. urtica, a nettle.] In med., the nettle rash; uredo.

URTICA'TION, n. [L. urtica, a nettle.] The whipping of a benumbed or paralytic limb with nettles, in order to restore its feeling.

U'RUS, n. [L. urus.] 1. The wild bull.—2. In nat. hist., the trivial or specific name of the species of Bos or Taurus to which the common bull, or ox and cow, are considered to belong. In its wild state it formerly inhabited the central parts of Europe, and was a perfectly wild, savage, and untameable animal. According to ancient accounts, it was an animal of great size, with large, spreading, and acute horns. Some naturalists consider what they call the Bos Scoticus, or wild bull of Scotland, still preserved in a few parks, as belonging to this genus, but this animal is evidently a variety of the domestic ox.

UR'VANT, UR'VED, In her., turned or bowed upwards.

U. S., U. S. A. An abbreviation of the words United States of America.

US, pron. objective case of We.

Give us this day our daily bread. Lord's Prayer.

U'SABLE, a. (s as z.) That may be used.

U'SAGE, n. (s as z.) [Fr. from user, to use. See USE.] 1. Treatment; an action or series of actions performed by one person toward another, or which directly affect him; as, good usage; ill usage; hard usage. Gentle usage will often effect what harsh usage will not. The elephant may be governed by mild usage.—2. Use, or long continued use; custom; practice. Uninterrupted usage for a long time, or immemorial usage constitutes prescription. Custom is a local usage; prescription is a personal usage. Usage, however, differs both from custom and prescription; no man may claim a rent, common, or other inheritance by usage, though he may by prescription. [See PRESCRIPTION.] In language, usage is the foundation of all rules.

Of things once received and confirmed by use, long usage is a law sufficient. Hooker.

3 † Manners; behaviour.

U'SAGER,† n. (s as z.) [Fr.] One who has the use of any thing in trust for another.

U'SANCE, n. (s as z.) [Fr.] Use; proper employment.—2. Usury; interest paid for money.—3. In com., a determinate time fixed for the payment of bills of exchange, reckoned either from the day of their date, or the day of their acceptance. It is thus called because this time is settled by usage, or the custom of places on which the bills are drawn. In France, the usance for bills drawn from Spain and Portugal is sixty days. At London, the usance for bills drawn from Holland, Germany, or France, is one month. The usance is very different in different countries and cities. Double, treble, and half usance, are terms implying corresponding alterations on the usual period.

USE, n. [L. usus; It. uso: Fr. us, plur.] 1. The act of handling or employing in any manner, and for any purpose, but especially for a profitable purpose; as, the use of a pen in writing; the use of books in study; the use of a spade in digging. Use is of two kinds; that which employs a thing without destroying it or its form, as the use of a book or of a farm; or it is the employment of a thing which destroys or wastes it, as the use of bread for provision; the use of water for turning a mill.—2. Employment; application of any thing to a purpose, good or bad. It is our duty to make a faithful use of our opportunities and advantages for improvement.

Books can never teach the use of books. Bacon.

3. Usefulness; utility; advantage; production of benefit. The value of a thing is to be estimated by its use. His friendship has been of use to me.

'Tis use alone that sanctifies expense. Pope.

4. Need of employment, or occasion to employ. I have no further use for this book.—5. Power of receiving advantage. [Unusual.]—6. Continued practice or employment.

Sweetness, truth, and every grace,
Which time and use are wont to teach. Waller.

7. Custom; common occurrence.

O Cesar, these things are beyond all use. [Unusual.] Shak.

8. Interest; the premium paid for the possession and employment of borrowed money.—9. In law, the benefit or profit of lands and tenements. Use imports a trust and confidence reposed in a man for the holding of lands. He to whose use or benefit the trust is intended, shall enjoy the profits. All modern conveyances are directly or indirectly founded on the doctrine of uses and trusts, which has been deemed the most intricate part of the property law of England. Uses and trusts, being acts of confidence reposed, are cognizable in equity, when coupled with the performance of any act tending to the benefit of the party for whose enjoyment the use or trust was created. Uses, as a term, is applied to lands of inheritance, and the party to whose use they are conveyed has the absolute possession; as if land is conveyed to A, to the use of B, B has by law the possession vested in him; but if land be conveyed to A, to the use of B in trust, to permit C to enjoy and receive the profits of the land, B has the legal, C the equitable estate; the law transferring the use into possession, or as is the more common mode, land is conveyed to A, to the use of A, in trust for B and his heirs, or to permit B to occupy, &c. Uses only apply to land of inheritance; no use can subsist of leaseholds.—Statute of uses, the Stat. 27 Henry VIII. cap. 10, which transfers uses into possession, or which unites the use and possession.—Cestuy que use, in law, the person who has the use of lands and tenements.—Executed use, one to which the statute applies by annexing it to the legal ownership.—Springing use, one limited to arise on a future event, where no preceding use is limited.—Future or contingent use, one limited to a person not ascertained, or upon an uncertain event, but without derogation of an use previously limited.—Resulting use, is one which, being limited by the deed, expires or cannot vest, and results or returns to him who raised it, after such expiration.—Secondary or shifting use, is that which, though executed, may change from one to another by circumstances.—In use, in employment; as, the book is now in use.—2. In customary practice or observance. Such words, rites, and ceremonies, have long been in use.

USE, v. t. (s as z.) [Fr. user; It. usare; L. utor, usus; Gr. ἔθω.] 1. To employ; to handle, hold, occupy, or move for some purpose; as, to use a plough; to use a chair; to use a book; to use time. Most men use the right hand with more convenience than the left, and hence its name, right.—2. To waste, consume or exhaust by employment; as, to use flour for food; to use beer for drink; to use water for irrigation, or for turning the wheel of a mill.—3. To accustom; to habituate; to render familiar by practice; as, men used to cold and hunger; soldiers used to hardships and danger.—4. To treat; as, to use one well or ill; to use people with kindness and civility; to use a beast with cruelty.

Cato has us'd me ill. Addison.

5. To practice customarily.

Use hospitality one to another; 1 Pet. iv.

To use one's self, to behave.

USE, v. i. (s as z.) To be accustomed; to practice customarily.

They use to place him that shall be their captain on a stone. Spenser.

2. To be wont.

Fears used to be represented in an imaginary fashion. Bacon.

3. To frequent; to inhabit.

Where never foot did use. Spenser.

USED, pp. (s as z.) Employed; occupied; treated.

USEFUL, a. Producing or having power to produce good; beneficial; profitable; helpful toward advancing any purpose; as, vessels and instruments useful in a family; books useful for improvement; useful knowledge; useful arts.

USEFULLY, adv. In such a manner as to produce or advance some end; as, instruments or time usefully employed.

USEFULNESS, n. Conduciveness to some end, properly to some valuable end; as, the usefulness of canal navigation; the usefulness of machinery in manufactures

USELESS, a. Having no use; unserviceable; producing no good end; answering no valuable purpose; not advancing the end proposed; as, a useless garment; useless pity.

USELESSLY, adv. In a useless manner; without profit or advantage.

USELESSNESS, n. Unserviceableness; unfitness for any valuable purpose, or for the purpose intended; as, the uselessness of pleasure.

USER, n. (s as z.) One who uses, treats, or occupies

USH'ER, n. [Fr. huissier, a door-keeper, from huis, It. uscio, a door.] 1. Properly, an officer or servant who has the care of the door of a court, hall, chamber, or the like; hence, an officer whose business is to introduce strangers or to walk before a person of rank. In the king's household there are four gentlemen-ushers of the privy chamber. There is also an usher of the exchequer, who attends the barons, sheriffs, juries, &c.—Gentlemen usher of the black rod, the eldest of the gentlemen ushers who are daily waiters at court. During the sessions of parliament, he attends the house of peers. His badge is a black rod, with a lion in gold at the top. This rod has the authority of a mace; and to the custody of this officer all peers subjected to question for any crime are first committed. He also bears the rod before the sovereign at the feast of St. George and other solemnities.—2. An under-teacher or assistant to a schoolmaster or principal teacher, so denominated, probably, because he is entrusted with the junior classes, and introduces them to the higher branches of learning.

USH'ER, v. t. To introduce, as a forerunner or harbinger; to forerun.

The stars that usher evening, rose. Milton.

The Examiner was ushered into the world by a letter, setting forth the great genius of the author. Addison.

USH'ERANCE,† n. Introduction.
USH'ERDOM, n. The functions or power of ushers. [Trivial.]
USH'ERED, pp. Introduced.
USH'ERING, ppr. Introducing, as a forerunner.
USH'ERSHIP, n. Office of an usher.
US'KY,†n.[From Usquebaugh.]Whisky.
US'NEA, n. [Ar. achneh, a general name for lichens] A genus of plants, nat. order Lichens. The species are branched and filiform in their structure, and U. florida, hirta, and plicata, yield a substance called usnine or usnic acid, which acts a conspicuous part by its metamorphoses and combinations in the alterations of colour of many lichens.
US'NINE, US'NIC ACID, n. A substance yielded by lichens, of the genus Usnea, Parmelia Lecidea, &c. [See USNEA.]
USQUEBAUGH', n. [Ir. uisge, water, and bagh, life.] A compound distilled spirit, made in greatest perfection at Drogheda in Ireland. The term usquebaugh is applied technically to a strong compound spirit, consisting of an infusion of brandy, liquorice, raisins, cinnamon, nutmeg, aniseed, citron, thyme, rosemary, sugar candy, and other ingredients. It is chiefly taken as a dram. From this word, by contraction, we have whisky.
USTILA'GO, n. A genus of fungi; smut
US'TION, n [Fr. ustion; L. ustio, from uro, ustus, to burn.] The act of burning; the state of being burnt.
USTO'RIOUS, a. [supra.] Having the quality of burning.
USTULA'TION, n [L ustulatus.] 1. The act of burning or searing.—2. In metallurgy, ustulation is the operation of expelling one substance from another by heat, as sulphur and arsenic from ores, in a muffle.—3. In pharmacy, an old term for the roasting or drying of moist substances so as to prepare them for pulverizing; also, the burning of wine.
U'SUAL, a. (s as z.) [Fr. usuel; from use] Customary; common; frequent; such as occurs in ordinary practice, or in the ordinary course of events Earthquakes are not usual in this country.

> Consultation with oracles was formerly a thing very usual. Hooker.

U'SUALLY, adv. (s as z.) Commonly; customarily; ordinarily. Men usually find some excuse for their vices. It is usually as cold in North America in the fortieth degree of latitude, as it is in the west of Europe in the fiftieth.
U'SUALNESS, n (s as z.) Commonness; frequency.
USUCAP'TION, n. [L. usus, use, and capio, to take.] In the civil law, the same as prescription in the common law; the acquisition of the title or right to property by the uninterrupted and undisputed possession of it for a certain term prescribed by law.
U'SUFRUCT, n. [L. usus, use, and fructus, fruit.] The temporary use and enjoyment of lands or tenements; or the right of receiving the fruits and profits of lands or other thing, without having the right to alienate or change the property.
USUFRUCT'UARY, n A person who has the use and enjoyment of property for a time, without having the title or property.
U'SURE,† v. i. (s as z.) To practice usury.
U'SURER, n. (s as z.) [See USURY.] Formerly, a person who lent money and took interest for it.—2. In present usage, one who lends money at a rate of interest beyond that established by law.
USU'RIOUS, a. (s as z.) Practising usury; taking exorbitant interest for the use of money; as, a usurious person.—2. Partaking of usury; containing usury; as, a usurious contract, which by statute is void
USU'RIOUSLY, adv. In a usurious manner.
USU'RIOUSNESS, n. The state or quality of being usurious.
USURP', v. t. (s as z.) [Fr usurper; L. usurpo.] To seize and hold in possession by force or without right; as, to usurp a throne; to usurp the prerogatives of the crown; to usurp power. To usurp the right of a patron, is to oust or dispossess him.

> Vice sometimes usurps the place of virtue. Denham.

[Usurp is not applied to common dispossession of private property]
USURPA'TION, n [supra.] The act of seizing or occupying and enjoying the property of another, without right; as, the usurpation of a throne; the usurpation of the supreme power. Usurpation, in a peculiar sense, denotes the absolute ouster and dispossession of the patron of a church, by presenting a clerk to a vacant benefice, who is thereupon admitted and instituted.
USURP'ATORY, a. Usurping; marked by usurpation.
USURP'ED, pp. Seized or occupied and enjoyed by violence, or without right.

USURP'INGLY, adv. By usurpation; without just right or claim.
U'SURY, n. (s as z.) [Fr. usure; L. usura, from utor, to use.] 1. Formerly, interest; or a premium paid or stipulated to be paid for the use of money. [Usury formerly denoted any legal interest, but in this sense, the word is no longer in use.]—2. In present usage, illegal interest; a premium or compensation paid or stipulated to be paid for the use of money borrowed or retained, beyond the rate of interest established by law. In this country, the legal interest was fixed by the Act 12 Ann, at 5 per cent., and all contracts made for the payment of any principal to be lent on usury above this rate were to be held utterly void. Usurious bargains, or rather loans morally usurious, are often protected by lending the money upon contingency, as annuities, or making the repayment to depend upon certain lives being in existence at a particular time. The usury laws have been relaxed by several recent statutes, and bills of exchange not having more than 12 months to run, and contracts for loans or forbearance of money above 10 pounds are no longer affected by those laws. But 5 per cent. remains the legal interest recoverable on all contracts unless otherwise specified.—3.† The practice of taking interest.
U'SUS LOQUEN'DI, [L.] The usual mode of speaking; the usage or custom of speech.
UT, the first note in Guido's musical scale, now usually superseded by Do.

UTILITA'RIAN, a. Consisting in or pertaining to utility; pertaining to utilitarianism.
UTILITA'RIAN, n. One who holds the doctrine of utilitarianism.
UTILITA'RIANISM, n. The doctrine that the greatest happiness of the greatest number should be the end and aim of all social and political institutions. This doctrine was propounded and inculcated by the celebrated Jeremy Bentham. The utilitarians, for the most part, confine the proposed utility so as to restrict it to that which is useful for the material and economical well being of the multitude.—2. The term has also been applied to the doctrine of Hume, that utility is the sole standard of moral conduct; or that every thing is right which appears to be useful; irrespective of the declarations of scripture.—3. The term has also sometimes been applied to the doctrine that virtue is founded in utility.
UTIL'ITY, n. [Fr. utilité; L. utilitas, from utor, to use.] Usefulness; production of good; profitableness to some valuable end; as, the utility of manures upon land; the utility of the sciences; the utility of medicines.

UT'TERMOST, n. The most that can be; the greatest power, degree, or effort; that beyond which nothing is. The uttermost we can do is to be patient.—To the uttermost, in the most extensive degree; fully; Heb. vii.

U'VA UR'SI, n. The arctostaphylus uva ursi, (arbutus uva ursi, Linn.) called also red bear-berry, bear's whortleberry; nat. order, Ericaceæ. It is a native of Britain, and grows in dry heaths. The whole plant is highly astringent, and the leaves have been employed in cases of stone and of mucous discharges from the bladder. The berries are eaten in the Highlands of Scotland.

U'VEA, n. [L. uva, an unripe grape.] The black pigment on the back part of the iris; so called by the ancients, because in beasts, which the ancients chiefly dissected, it resembles an unripe grape.

U'VEOUS, a. [L. uva, a grape.] Resembling a grape or a bunch of grapes.—2. Pertaining to the uvea, or black pigment on the back part of the iris.

U'VULA, n. [L.] The small conical fleshy substance which projects from the middle of the soft palate, and hangs over the root of the tongue. It is composed of the common integuments of the mouth, and a small muscle resembling a worm, by the contraction of which the uvula is elevated. It serves to fill up the gap which remains between the arches of the palate.

U'VULA SPOON, n. A surgical instrument like a spoon, to be held just under the uvula, for the purpose of conveying any substance into the cavity behind.

UXO'RIOUS, a. [L. uxorius, from uxor, wife.] Submissively fond of a wife.

UXO'RIOUSLY, adv. With fond or servile submission to a wife.

UXO'RIOUSNESS, n. Connubial dotage; foolish fondness for a wife.

U'ZEMA, n. A linear measure in the Birman empire; it is about twelve statute miles.

V.

V IS the twenty-second letter of the English Alphabet, and a labial articulation, formed by the junction of the upper teeth with the lower lip, as in pronouncing av, ev, ov, vain. It is not a close articulation, but one that admits of some sound. It is nearly allied to f, being formed by the same organs; but v is vocal, and f is aspirate, and this constitutes the principal difference between them. V and u were formerly the same letter, derived no doubt from the Oriental vau or waw, but they have now as distinct uses as any two letters in the alphabet, and are therefore to be considered as different letters. The Roman letter v was probably pronounced as w, a supposition which would explain the fact that in the alphabet of that language one character is employed for both u and v. V has one sound only, as in vary, vote, lavish.—As a numeral, V stands for 5. With a dash over it, in old books, V̄, it stands for 5000. V. R., among the Romans, stood for uti rogas, as you desire; V. C. for vir consularis; V. G. for verbi gratia; V. L. for videlicet. In modern abbreviations, V. stands for vide, see; also for verb, or verse; viz. for videlicet, that is to say, namely. In music for instruments, V. stands for violin; V. V., for violins. V. S. for volta subito, turn over quickly. In her., V. is used to express vert or green, in the tricking or drawing of arms with a pen and ink.

VA. [It.] In music, a term employed as a direction to proceed; as, va crescendo, go on increasing.

VA'CANCE, VA'CANCIES, } n. [Fr. vacances.] Midsummer holidays, in a public school. [Scotch.]

VA'CANCY, n. [L. vacans, from vaco, to be empty; Fr. vacance; Sp. vacancia; W. gwag; Heb. בקק, bakak, to empty.] 1. Empty space; vacuity. [In this sense, vacuity is now generally used.]—2. Chasm; void space between bodies or objects; as, a vacancy between two beams or boards in a building; a vacancy between two buildings; a vacancy between words in a writing.—3. The state of being destitute of an incumbent; want of the regular officer to officiate in a place. Hence also it signifies the office, post, or benefice which is destitute of an incumbent; as, a vacancy in a parish; vacancies in the treasury or war office. There is no vacancy on the bench of the supreme court.—4. Time of leisure; freedom from employment; intermission of business.

> Those little vacancies from toils are sweet.
> Dryden.

5. Listlessness; emptiness of thought.—6. A place or office not occupied, or destitute of a person to fill it; as, a vacancy in a school.

VA'CANT, a. [Fr.; from L. vacans.] 1 Empty; not filled; void of every substance except air; as, a vacant space between houses; vacant room.—2. Empty; exhausted of air; as, a vacant receiver.—3. Free; unincumbered; unengaged with business or care.

Philosophy is the interest of those only who are vacant from the affairs of the world. More.

4. Not filled or occupied with an incumbent or possessor; as, a vacant throne; a vacant parish.—5. Being unoccupied with business; as, vacant hours; vacant moments.—6. Empty of thought; thoughtless; not occupied with study or reflection; as, a vacant mind.—7. Indicating want of thought or of intelligence.

The duke had a pleasant and vacant face. Wotton.

8. In law, abandoned; having no heir; as. vacant effects or goods.

VA'CATE, v. t. To annul; to make void; to make of no authority or validity; as, to vacate a commission; to vacate a charter.

The necessity of observing the Jewish sabbath was vacated by the apostolical institution of the Lord's day. Nelson.

2. To make vacant; to quit possession and leave destitute. It was resolved by parliament that James had vacated the throne of England.—3. To defeat; to put an end to.

He vacates my revenge. [Unusual.] Dryden.

VA'CATED, pp. Annulled; made void; made vacant.

VA'CATING, ppr. Making void; making vacant.

VACA'TION, n. [Fr. from L vacatio.] 1. The act of making void, vacant, or of no validity; as, the vacation of a charter.—2. Intermission of judicial proceedings; the space of time between the end of one term and the beginning of the next; non-term.—3. The intermission of the regular studies and exercises of a university, a college, or other seminary, when the students have a recess.—4. Intermission of a stated employment.—5. The time when a see or other spiritual dignity is vacant.

During the vacation of a bishoprick, the dean and chapter are guardians of the spiritualities. Cyc.

6 Leisure; freedom from trouble or perplexity. [Now little used.]

VAC'CARY, } VAC'CHARY, } n. [L. vacca, a cow.] An old word signifying a cow house, dairy house, or a cow pasture.

VACCINA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of monopetalous exogens, consisting of shrubby plants, with aqueous juices, round or angled stems and branches, alternate simple leaves, with a solitary or racemose inflorescence, the flowers regular and united; the fruit is a berry, four or five-celled, few or many seeded. The species are natives of North America, where they are abundant; in Europe they occur sparingly, but they are not uncommon on high land in the Sandwich Islands. The properties of the order closely resemble those of Ericaceæ. The bark and leaves of many of the species are astringent, slightly tonic, and stimulating. The berries of many are eaten under the names of cranberry, bilberry, whortleberry, &c. Several species are elegant garden shrubs; as those belonging to the genus Gaylussacia.

VAC'CINATE, v. t. [L. vacca, a cow.] To inoculate with the cow-pox, or a virus taken from cows, called vaccine matter. Cow-pox is small pox, modified by affecting a cow.

VAC'CINATED, pp. Inoculated with the cow-pox.

VAC'CINATING, ppr. Inoculating with the cow-pox.

VAC'CINATION, n. The act, art, or practice of inoculating persons with the cow-pox, for the purpose of securing them from the contagion of small-pox. Dr. Jenner was the first who showed that the cow-pox could be propagated by inoculation, and that the inoculated disease acted as a preservative against the attacks of small-pox. It has been found that vaccination, in a great majority of instances, confers a complete and permanent security against small-pox, and that in those cases where the small-pox does occur after vaccination, it is generally divested of its formidable characters, and constitutes a comparatively mild disease. [See COW-POX.]

VAC'CINATOR, } VAC'CINIST, } n. One who inoculates with the cow-pox.

VAC'CINE, a. [L. vaccinus, from vacca, a cow.] Pertaining to cows; derived from cows; as, the vaccine disease or cow-pox.

VACCIN'IUM, n. A genus of plants belonging to the nat. order Vaccinaceæ, of which it is the type. The species, of which about 50 have been described, are shrubs, producing berries which are generally eatable, and are known by the common names of bilberries, whortleberries, blueberries, &c. The following are natives of Britain: V. myrtillus, the common bilberry or blaeberry; V. uliginosum, great bilberry, or bog whortleberry; V. vitis-idæa, red whortleberry or cow-berry; V. oxycoccos, marsh whortleberry or cranberry, the berries of which made into tarts are much esteemed. V. stamineum, green-wooded whortleberry; V. corymbosum, naked flowering whortleberry; and V. frondosum, blunt-leaved whortleberry, are natives of America.

VACH'ERY, n. [Fr. vache, a cow.] A pen or inclosure for cows.

VAC'ILLANCY, n. [L. vacillans, from vacillo, to waver, Eng. to waggle, from the root of wag,—which see.] A state of wavering; fluctuation; inconstancy.

VAC'ILLANT, a. [supra.] Wavering; fluctuating; unsteady.

VAC'ILLATE, v. i. [L. vacillo; G. wackeln; Eng. to waggle, a diminutive of wag. See WAG.] 1. To waver; to move one way and the other; to reel or stagger.—2. To fluctuate in mind or opinion; to waver; to be unsteady or inconstant.

VAC'ILLATING, ppr. Wavering; reeling; fluctuating.—2. a. Unsteady; inclined to fluctuate.

VAC'ILLATINGLY, adv. Unsteadily.

VACILLA'TION, n. [Fr. from L. vacillatio.] 1. A wavering; a moving one way and the other; a reeling or staggering.—2. Fluctuation of mind; unsteadiness; change from one object to another.

VAC'UATE, v. t. To make empty; to evacuate.

VACUA'TION, n. [L. vacuo.] The act of emptying. [Little used.] [See EVACUATION.]

VAC'UIST, n. [from vacuum.] One who holds to the doctrine of a vacuum in nature: opposed to a plenist.

VACU'ITY, n. [L. vacuitas, from vacuus.] 1. Emptiness; a state of being unfilled.

Hunger is such a state of vacuity as to require a fresh supply. Arbuthnot.

2. Space unfilled or unoccupied, or occupied with an invisible fluid only.

A vacuity is interspersed among the particles of matter. Bentley.

3. Emptiness; void.

God only can fill every vacuity of the soul. Rogers.

4. Inanity; emptiness: want of reality.—5. Vacuum,—which see.

VAC'UOUS, a. Empty; unfilled; void.

VAC'UOUSNESS, n. The state of being empty.

VAC'UUM, n. [L.] Space empty or devoid of all matter or body. Whether there is such a thing as an absolute vacuum in nature, is a question which has been much controverted. The existence of a vacuum was maintained by the Pythagoreans, Epicureans, and Atomists; but it was denied by the Peripatetics, who asserted that 'nature abhors a vacuum.' Descartes also denied the possibility of a vacuum, maintaining that the essence of matter consists in extension. Some philosophers have supposed that all space beyond the atmosphere of the earth and other planets, is filled with an ethereal fluid, far more fine and subtle than air. This latter opinion receives some countenance from recent observations. It has been all but proved that a comet undergoes precisely the same sort of changes in its mean motion, which would be produced if the body moved in a medium which offered a small resistance to its motion. The undulatory theory of light which is now pretty generally received, also furnishes an argument against the existence of a vacuum, for according to this theory the whole of the celestial spaces are filled with a medium of great elasticity. The term vacuum, is generally used to denote the interior of a close vessel, from which the atmospheric air, and every other gas have been extracted. Thus, in experiments with the air pump, the interior of the glass receiver, after the air has been extracted by the machine, is termed a vacuum. In this case, however, the vacuum is not perfect, for from the very nature of the machine, some air must always remain in the receiver, however long the exhausting process may be continued. The most perfect vacuum which can be produced artificially is the torricellian vacuum, or the space above the mercury in the barometer tube, but even here the vacuum is not absolutely perfect, for although the air may be entirely excluded from the space above the mercury, there is always an atmosphere of the vapour of mercury.—In vacuo, in a vacuum.

VADE,† v. i. [L. vado.] To vanish; to pass away.

VA'DE ME'CUM, n. [L. go with me.] A book or other thing that a person carries with him as a constant companion; a manual or book of entertainment.

VA'DIUM, n. [from L. vas, vadis, a surety, bail.] In Scots law, a wad or pledge.

VA'FROUS, a. [L. vafer.] Crafty; cunning.

VAG'ABOND, a. [L. vagabundus, from vagor, to wander; from the root of wag.] 1. Wandering; moving from place to place without any settled habitation; as, a vagabond exile.—2. Wandering; floating about without any certain direction; driven to and fro.

Like to a vagabond flag upon the stream. Shak.

VAG'ABOND, n. [supra.] A vagrant; one who wanders from town to town or place to place, illegally, having no certain dwelling, or not abiding in it, and usually without the means of honest livelihood. By the law, vagabonds are liable to be taken up and punished. [See VAGRANT.]

VAG'ABONDAĠE, VAG'ABONDISM, VAG'ABONDRY, n. A state of wandering about in idleness.

VAG'ABONDIZE, v. t. To wander about in idleness.

VAGA'RIOUS, a. Having vagaries; whimsical; capricious. [Colloquial.]

VAGA'RY, n. plur. Vagaries. [Lat vagus, wandering.] A wandering of the thoughts; a wild freak; a whim; a whimsical purpose.

They chang'd their minds,
Flew off, and into strange vagaries fell. Milton.

VAGA'RY,† v. i. To gad; to range.

VA'ĠIENT,† a. [L. vagiens.] Crying like a child.

VAĠ'INA, n. [L. a sheath.] In anat., the canal leading from the external orifice to the uterus or womb.—2. In bot., the sheath formed by the convolution of a flat petiole round a stem, as in grasses.

VAĠ'INAL, a. [L. vagina, a sheath. See WAIN.] 1. Pertaining to a sheath, or resembling a sheath; as, a vaginal membrane.—2. In anat., pertaining to the vagina.

VAĠ'INANT, a. [L. vagina.] In bot., sheathing; as, a vaginant leaf, one investing the stem or branch by its base, which has the form of a tube.

VAĠ'INATE, VAĠ'INATED, a. In bot., sheathed; invested by the tubular base of the leaf; as a stem.

VAĠINOPEN'NOUS, a. [L. vagina and penna.] Sheath-winged; having the wings covered with a hard case or sheath, as some insects.

VA'GOUS, a. [L. vagus; Fr. vague.] Wandering; unsettled. [Little used.]

VA'GRANCY, n. [from vagrant.] A state of wandering without a settled home; the life and condition of wandering beggars, rogues, vagabonds, fortune-tellers and other impostors, reputed thieves, persons breaking out of legal confinement, &c.—2. In law, the name given to a very miscellaneous class of offences against public, police, and order. [See VAGRANT.]

VA'GRANT, a. [L. vagor.] 1. Wandering from place to place without any settled habitation; as, a vagrant beggar.—2. Wandering; unsettled; moving without any certain direction.

That beauteous Emma vagrant courses took. Prior.

VA'GRANT, n. [Norm. vagarant.] An idle wanderer; a vagabond; one who strolls from place to place; a sturdy beggar; one who has no settled habitation, or who does not abide in it.

Vagrants and outlaws shall offend thy view. Prior.

In law, the word vagrant has a much more extended meaning than that assigned to it in ordinary language, and in its application the notion of wandering is almost lost. By the law vagrants are divided into three classes. 1. Idle and disorderly persons; 2. Rogues and vagabonds; 3. Incorrigible rogues. Under the first class are included, every person who refuses or neglects to maintain himself and family, he being able to do so; paupers returning without certificate to parishes from which they have been legally removed; pedlars without license, beggars, common prostitutes, &c. Under the second class, are included every person committing any offence which would constitute him an idle or disorderly person, and who has been once already convicted, fortune tellers, and other impostors; persons guilty of indecent exhibitions; persons collecting alms or money under false pretences; wanderers who have no visible means of subsistence, and cannot give a good account of themselves; persons playing at games of chance in public places; reputed thieves; persons having in their possession housebreaking implements or offensive weapons with intent to use them. Under the third class are included persons guilty of the last class of offences, having been already convicted; persons breaking out of legal confinement; every person apprehended as a rogue and vagabond, and violently resisting any constable or other peace officer, so apprehending him. For all these offences the punishment is imprisonment or hard labour for a longer or shorter period, according to the nature of the particular offence. In Scotland, the laws against vagrants, as beggars, fortune tellers, jugglers, minstrels, &c., are of a much less stringent nature, and such persons are seldom apprehended or punished, unless where police regulations are enforced, or where they are entering a parish in the face of an advertised prohibition, or where they are committing or in the notour habit of committing petty delinquencies.

VAG'RANTLY, adv. In a wandering unsettled manner.

VAG'RANTNESS, n. Vagrancy; the state of a vagrant.

VĀGUE, a. (vāg.) [Fr. from L. vagus, wandering.] 1. Wandering; vagrant; vagabond; as, vague villains. [In this literal sense, not used.]—2. Unsettled; unfixed; undetermined; indefinite. VALEN'TIA, n. A stuff made of worsted, cotton, and silk, used for waistcoats.

VAL'ENTINE, n. A sweetheart or choice made on Valentine's day.—2. A letter sent by one young person to another on Valentine's day.

VAL'ENTINE'S DAY, n. The 14th of February, observed as a festival in the Romish church, in honour of St. Valentine. It was a very old notion, alluded to by Shakspeare, that on this day birds begin to couple. Hence, perhaps, arose the custom of sending on this day letters containing professions of love and affection.

VALENTIN'IANS, n. A sect of heretics who sprung up in the second century, and were so named from Valentinus their founder. They were only a branch of the Gnostics, who realized or personified the Platonic ideas concerning the Deity, whom they called Pleroma or Plenitude.

VAL'ERATE, n. A salt formed by the union of valerianic acid with a base; as, the valerate of oxide of ethule.

VALE'RIAN, } n. A genus of plants,
VALERIA'NA, } the type of the nat. order Valerianaceæ. The species, which are numerous, are shrubs, or undershrubs, with very variable leaves, and mostly reddish-white corymbose flowers. Twelve species are European, and four are British. These plants are found in abundance in many districts, both of the old and new world. V. officinalis, the official or great wild valerian, is a native of Europe, and grows abundantly by the sides of rivers, and in ditches, and moist woods, in Great Britain. The root, which is the official part, has a very strong smell, which is dependent on a volatile oil. Cats and rats are very fond of it, and rat-catchers employ it to decoy rats. It is used in medicine in the form of infusion, decoction, or tincture, as a nervous stimulant and antispasmodic. For a figure of this plant, see Triander. V. rubra, or red valerian, is occasionally found wild in Britain, and is cultivated in gardens as well as many other species, on account of its elegant flowers. V. phu is the garden valerian, and V. discoroidis the ancient Greek valerian.

VALERIANA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of monopetalous exogens, composed of annual or perennial herbs or undershrubs, inhabiting temperate climates or elevated positions, both in the old and new world. These plants are most nearly related to Dipsaceæ, from which they are distinguished by their looser inflorescence, sensible properties, want of albumen, and the absence of an involucellum. The principal genera are Valeriana, Valerianella (the Fedia of Adamson), and Nardostachys, or spikenard. The name valerian is given to Polemium cœruleum.

VALERIANEL'LA, n. A genus of plants; nat. order Valerianaceæ. The species of this genus have been described by Smith, Hooker, and others, under the Adansonian genus Fedia; but Decandolle, Lindley, and other systematic botanists, retain valerianella, which is a diminutive of valeriana, and restrict the genus Fedia to a single species, the F. cornucopia. Four species of valerianella are British. V. olitoria, common corn-salad, or lamb's lettuce, is an annual plant, found abundantly in corn fields and cultivated ground in Great Britain. In France and Germany it is much eaten as a salad, and is frequently cultivated for that purpose in this country. The other British species may be eaten as salads.

VALERIA'NIC ACID, n. An acid produced by the action of caustic potash on hydrated oxide of amule, or oil of potato spirit. It is also extracted from the root of Valeriana officinalis; hence the name. Valerianic acid is a limpid oily fluid, of a disagreeable and peculiar smell. With bases it forms soluble salts, which have a sweet taste. It consists of 10 atoms carbon, 9 hydrogen, and 3 oxygen.

VAL'EROLE, n. An oil contained in the essence of valerian. It is isomeric with metacetone.

VAL'ET, n. [Fr.; formerly written varlet, vadlet, valect, vallet, &c.] 1. A waiting servant; a servant who attends on a gentleman's person. Valets or varlets, were originally the sons of knights, and afterwards, those of the nobility before they attained the age of chivalry. [See VARLET.]—2. In the manège, a kind of goad or stick armed with a point of iron.

VAL'ET DE CHAMBRE. [Fr.] A body servant, or personal attendant.

Be thou valiant for me, and fight the Lord's battles; 1 Sam. xviii.

3. Performed with valour; bravely conducted; heroic; as, a valiant action or achievement; a valiant combat.

VAL'IANTLY, adv. Stoutly; vigorously; with personal strength.—2. Courageously; bravely; heroically.

VAL'IANTNESS, n. Stoutness; strength.—2. Most generally, valour; bravery; intrepidity in danger.

Achimetes, having won the top of the walls, by the valiantness of the defendants was forced to retire. Knolles.

VAL'ID, a. [Fr. valide; L. validus, from valeo, to be strong. The primary sense of the root is to strain or stretch.]—1. Having sufficient strength or force; founded in truth; sound; just; good; that can be supported; not weak or defective; as, a valid reason; a valid argument; a valid objection.—2. Having legal strength or force; efficacious; executed with the proper formalities; that cannot be rightfully overthrown or set aside; supportable by law or right; as, a valid deed; a valid covenant; a valid instrument of any kind; a valid claim or title; a valid marriage.—3.† Strong; powerful; in a literal sense; as, valid arms.

VAL'IDATE, v. t. To make valid.

VALIDA'TION, n. The act of giving validity to.

VALID'ITY, n. [Fr. validité; from valid.] 1. Strength or force to convince; justness; soundness; as, the validity of an argument or proof; the validity of an objection.—2. Legal strength or force; that quality of a thing which renders it supportable in law or equity; as, the validity of a will; the validity of a grant; the validity of a claim or of a title. Certain forms and solemnities are usually requisite to give validity to contracts and conveyances of rights.—3.† Value.

VAL'IDLY, adv. In a valid manner; in such a manner or degree as to make firm or to convince.

VAL'IDNESS, n. Validity,—which see.

VAL'INCH, n. A tube for drawing liquors from a cask by the bung hole.

VALISE, n. [Fr.] A small leather bag or case, opening on the side, for containing the clothes, &c., of a traveller.

VALLAN'CY, n. [from valance.] A large wig that shades the face.

VAL'LAR CROWN, } n. [L. corona
VAL'LARY, } vallaris.] In antiquity a golden crown with a kind of palisadoes fixed against the rim or circle. Among the Romans it was given by the general of an army to him who first mounted the rampart, or entered the camp of the enemy.

Vallar Crown.

VALLA'TION, n. [L. vallatus, from vallum, a wall.] A rampart or entrenchment.

VAL'LATORY, a. Fencing; enclosing, as by a rampart.

VAL'LEY, n. plur. Valleys. [Fr. vallée; L. vallis. See VALE.] 1. A hollow or low tract of land between hills or mountains.—2. A low extended plain, usually alluvial, penetrated or washed by a river. The valley of the Connecticut is remarkable for its fertility and beauty.

Ye mountains, sink; ye val'eys, rise;
Prepare the Lord his way. Watts.

3. In arch., the internal angle formed by the meeting of the two inclined sides of a roof. The rafter which supports the valley is called the valley rafter or valley piece, and the board fixed upon it for the leaden gutter to lie upon, is termed the valley board. By old writers, valley rafters were termed sleepers.

VALLISNE'RIA, n. A genus of aquatic plants, nat. order Hydrocharaceæ. Several species are recorded as growing in Europe, New Holland, and America. They are plants growing at the bottom of the water, and yet the male and female flowers are separated, and the mode by which they are brought together affords a singular instance of adaptation, and is exceedingly interesting in a physiological point of view.

Vallisneria spiralis.

V. spiralis grows in Italy, in ditches near Pisa, and in the Rhone. V alternifolia is one of the plants used in India, under the name of janji, for supplying water mechanically to sugar in the process of refining it.

VAL'LUM, n. [L.] A trench or wall. Among the Romans, the rampart with which they enclosed their camps. It consisted of two parts, the agger, or mound of earth, and the sudes, or palisadoes, that were driven into the ground to secure and strengthen it.

VALO'NIA, n. A modern Greek name, adopted in commerce for a species of acorn exported from the Morea and Levant, for the use of tanners, as the husk or cup contains abundance of tannin. The oak which produces this acorn is the Quercus Ægilops, or great prickly cupped oak. The acorns are sold from £12 to £15 a ton.

Quercus Ægilops, producing Valonia.

VALOREM, AD in com., according to the value; as, an ad valorem duty.

VAL'OROUS, a. Brave; courageous; stout; intrepid; as, a valorous knight.

VAL'OROUSLY, adv In a brave manner; heroically.

VAL'OUR, n. [L. valor; Fr valeur; from L. valeo, to be strong; to be worth.] Strength of mind in regard to danger; that quality which enables a man to encounter danger with firmness; personal bravery; courage; intrepidity; prowess.

When valour preys on reason,
It eats the sword it fights with. Shak.
For contemplation, he and valour form'd.
Milton.

VAL'UABLE, a. [Fr. valable; from value.] 1. Having value or worth; having some good qualities which are useful and esteemed; precious; as, a valuable horse; valuable land; a valuable house.—2. Worthy; estimable; deserving esteem; as, a valuable friend; a valuable companion.

VAL'UABLENESS, n. Preciousness; worth.

VAL'UABLES, n. pl Things of value; choice articles of personal property; precious merchandise of small bulk.

VALUA'TION, n. [from value.] The act of estimating the value or worth; the act of setting a price; as, the just valuation of civil and religious privileges.—2. Appraisement; as, a valuation of lands for the purpose of taxation.—3. Value set upon a thing; estimated worth.

So slight a valuation. Shak.

VAL'UATOR, n. One who sets a value; an appraiser.

VALUE, n. (val'u.) [Fr. valoir, valu; from L. valor, from valeo, to be worth; It. valore; Sp. valor.] 1. Worth; that property or those properties of a thing which render it useful or estimable; or the degree of that property or of such properties. The real value of a thing is its utility, its power or capacity of procuring or producing good. Hence, the real or intrinsic value of iron is far greater than that of gold. But there is, in many things, an estimated value, depending on opinion or fashion, such as the value of precious stones. The value of land depends on its fertility, or on its vicinity to a market, or on both.—2. Price; the rate of worth set upon a commodity, or the amount for which a thing is sold. We say, the value of a thing is what it will bring in market.—3. In political economy, the quantity of labour, or of the product of labour, which will exchange for a given quantity of labour, or of some other product thereof. It is the labour of man alone which in ordinary circumstances creates value, and becomes the real measure of the exchangeable value of all commodities. It is necessary here to distinguish utility from value, or, as Adam Smith expresses the distinction, "value in use" from "value in exchange." The former may be defined, the power or capacity of an article to satisfy our wants or gratify our desires, while the value in exchange is that which will be received as an equivalent for something else which it has taken some labour to produce or obtain. What all may enjoy alike without labour may indeed be most useful and necessary, but cannot be an object of exchange, and therefore is destitute of value. Water is indispensable to existence, and has therefore a very high degree of utility or of value in use; but as it can generally be obtained in large quantities without much labour or exertion, it has, in most places, but a very low value in exchange. Gold, on the contrary, is of comparatively little utility; but as it exists only in limited quantities, and requires a great deal of labour on its production, it has a comparatively high exchangeable value, and may be exchanged or bartered for a proportionally large quantity of most other things. The real value of a commodity depends solely upon the quantity of labour necessary for its production, and the exchangeable value never varies materially either above or below the real value; hence it follows that the price paid for labour does not affect the exchangeable value of articles produced under similar circumstances. Every reduction in the quantity of labour required to produce a commodity diminishes its real value, and hence its value in exchange; and, upon the same principles, every increase in the quantity of labour, directly or indirectly applied, adds to the value of a commodity.—4. Worth; applied to persons.

Ye are all physicians of no value; Job xiii.
Ye are of more value than many sparrows; Matt. x.

5. High rate.

Cæsar is well acquainted with your virtue,
And therefore sets this value on your life.
Addison.

6 Importance; efficacy in producing effects; as, considerations of no value.

Before events shall have decided on the value of the measures. Marshall.

7. Import; precise signification; as, the value of a word or phrase.

VALUE, v. t. (val'u.) To estimate the worth of; to rate at a certain price; to appraise; as, to value lands or goods.—2. To rate at a high price; to have in high esteem; as, a valued poem or picture. A man is apt to value his own performances at too high a rate; he is even disposed to value himself for his humility.—3. To esteem; to hold in respect and estimation; as, to value one for his works or virtues.—4. To take account of.

The mind doth value every moment
Bacon.

5 To reckon or estimate with respect to number or power.

The queen is valu'd thirty thousand strong.
Shak.

6. To consider with respect to importance.

The king must take it ill,
So slightly valu'd in his messenger. Shak.

Neither of them valued their promises according to the rules of honour or integrity. Clarendon.

7. To raise to estimation.

Some value themselves to their country by jealousies to the crown.† Temple.

8 † To be worth.

VAL'UED, pp. Estimated at a certain rate; appraised; esteemed.—Valued policy, in Scots law, in marine insurance, is a policy in which a specified value is put on the ship, goods, or effects insured. In the case of total loss or abandonment, the amount in a valued policy is considered the adjustment of the value as between the parties, but it cannot be made a shield for fraud. [See OPEN POLICY under OPEN.]

VAL'UELESS, a. Being of no value; having no worth.

VAL'UER, n. One who values; an appraiser; one who holds in esteem.

VAL'UING, ppr. Setting a price on; estimating the worth of; esteeming.

VALVA'TA, n. A genus of Gastropods belonging to the family Peristomata. They are small fresh water univalves, and occur both recent and fossil. Several species are British.

VALV'ATE, a. [See VALVE.] Having or resembling a valve; consisting of valves.

VALVE, n. (valv.) [L. valvæ, folding doors; coinciding with volvo.] 1. A folding door.

Swift through the valves the visionary fair
Repass'd. Pope.

2. In mech., a kind of movable lid, or cover adapted to the orifice of a tube, or passage into a vessel, for the purpose of regulating the admission or escape of a fluid, such as water, gas, or steam. Some valves are self-acting, that is, they are so contrived as to open in the required direction, by the pressure of the fluid upon their surface, and immediately to shut and prevent the return of the fluid when the direction of its pressure changes. Others are actuated by independent external agency. Examples of the former kind are presented in the valves of pumps, and in the safety-valves of steam boilers, and of the latter, in the slide-valves appended to the cylinder of a steam engine for the purpose of regulating the admission and escape of the steam. The construction of valves admits of an almost endless variety. [See CUP-VALVE, CLACK-VALVE, CONICAL VALVE, D-VALVE, SAFETY-VALVE, THROTTLE VALVE.]—3. In anat., a membranous partition within the cavity of a vessel, which opens to allow the passage of a fluid in one direction, and shuts to prevent its regurgitation; as the valve of the colon, mitral valve, semilunar valves, tricuspid valves, &c.—4. In bot., the outer coat, shell, or covering of a capsule or other pericarp, or rather one of the pieces which compose it; also, one of the leaflets composing the calyx and corol in grasses. The same term is also applied to the opening in the cells of anthers, which occurs when the pollen is about to be discharged. —5. In conchology, the shell. When the whole shell is in one piece, it is called an univalve; when in two pieces a bivalve; and when of more than two pieces, a multivalve.

VALV'ED, a. Having valves or hinges; composed of valves.

VAL'VET, n. A little valve; a valvule.

VALV'LET, } n. A little valve; one of VALV'ULE, } the pieces which compose the outer covering of a pericarp.

VALV'ULA, n. [L.] A little valve. In anat, applied to the valves of the venous and lymphatic system of animals.

VALV'ULAR, a. Containing valves.

VAM'BRACE, n. [Fr. avant-bras.] In plate armour, the piece of armour which covered the fore-arm from the elbow to the wrist. It is also written vantbrace.

VAMP, n. [W. gwam, that incloses, or goes partly round.] The upper leather of a boot or shoe.

VAMP, v. t. To piece an old thing with a new part; to repair.

I had never much hopes of your vamped play. Swift

VAMP'ED, pp. Pieced; repaired.

VAMP'ER, n. One who pieces an old thing with something new.

VAMP'ING, ppr. Piecing with something new.

VAMP'IRE, n. [G. vampyr.] 1. According to Dom Calmet, the vampire is a dead man who returns in body and soul from the other world, and wanders about the earth doing every kind of mischief to the living. Generally he sucks the blood of persons asleep, and thus causes their death, while those who are destroyed in this manner become themselves vampires. The only way of getting rid of such visitors, is, according to the same author, to disinter their bodies, to pierce them with a stake cut from a green tree, to cut off their heads, and to burn their hearts. This superstition is chiefly prevalent in some parts of Eastern Europe, and especially in Hungary and its dependencies.—2. In zool., the Linnæan trivial or specific name of Pteropus Edwardsii, or the great bat of Madagascar; also, the popular name of Phyllostoma spectrum, or the Vampyre bat of New Spain; also, the popular name of the genus of bats, named Vampyre (Phyllostoma spectrum).

Vampyrus. Bats of the genus Phyllostoma have a leaf-like appendage attached to their upper lip, whence their name. The tongue is capable of considerable extension, and is furnished at its extremity with a number of papillæ, apparently arranged so as to form an organ of suction. These animals grow to a great size, specimens having been killed measuring two feet between the tips of the wings. They attack horses and cattle, and sometimes even man, during the night, puncturing their skin, it is supposed, by means of the hooked nail of the thumb, and then abstracting the blood by the suctorial powers of their lips and tongue. In some parts of Brazil the ravages of these creatures are such as to render the rearing of cattle an impossibility. It is more than probable, however, that the celebrated vampire superstition, and the blood-sucking qualities atttributed to the bat, have some connection with each other.

VAM'PIRISM, n. The actions of a vampire; the practice of blood-sucking; figuratively, the practice of extortion.

VAM'PLATE, n. A gauntlet or iron glove; but some consider it to be the same as vambrace.

VAM'PLET, n. A plate of iron on the lower part of the staff of a tilting spear, for covering the hand. It somewhat resembles a funnel in shape. [See figure under TOURNAMENT.]

VAN, n. [The radical word from which is formed the Fr. avant, avancer, Eng. advance, advantage. It is from the root of L. venio, the primary sense of which is to pass.] 1. The front of an army; or the front line or foremost division of a fleet, either in sailing or in battle.—2. Any thing spread wide, and moved so as to produce a current of air; a fan for winnowing grain.—3. In mining, the cleansing of ore or tin stuff by means of a shovel.—4. A wing with which the air is beaten.

He wheel'd in air, and stretch'd his vans in vain. Dryden.

5. A large covered carriage for the transportation of goods.

VAN,† v. t. [Fr. vanner.] To fan. [See FAN.]

VANA'DIATE, n. A salt formed by the union of vanadic acid with a base; as, vanadiate of lead.

VANA'DIC ACID, n. An acid obtained by heating vanadiate of ammonia so as to expel the alkali. Its colour in the state of fine powder is a light rust yellow; but when fused, it is red with a shade of orange, and has a strong lustre. It is tasteless, nearly insoluble in water, and quite so in alcohol. With bases it forms salts, which are either red or yellow, according as they are acid or neutral salts; but the neutral vanadiates of the alkalies may occur both yellow and colourless, without any known difference in composition. Vanadic acid consists of 3 equivalents of oxygen, and 1 of vanadium.

VANA'DIUM, n. [from Vanadis, a Scandinavian deity.] A metal discovered by Sefström in 1830, in iron prepared from the iron ore of Taberg, in Sweden. It was afterwards obtained by the same individual in the slag formed during the conversion of the cast-iron of Taberg into malleable iron. It has since been found in a lead ore from Wanlockhead, in Scotland, and in a similar mineral from Zimapan, in Mexico. This metal has a white colour, and a strong metallic lustre, considerably resembling silver, but still more like molybdenum. It is extremely brittle. It is not oxydized either by air or water, though by continuous exposure to the atmosphere, its lustre grows weaker, and it acquires a reddish tint. The only acid that dissolves it is aqua regia. Oxygen and vanadium combine to form two oxides, viz., the protoxide, which is a black powder, having a semi-metallic lustre, and the deutoxide, which, when anhydrous, is also black, but forms blue salts. With chlorine, vanadium forms a bichloride, and a terchloride.

VAN-COURIERS, n. [Fr. avant-coureurs.] In armies, light armed soldiers sent before armies to beat the road upon the approach of an enemy; precursors.

VAN'DAL, n. [It signifies a wanderer.] The Vandals formed one of the most barbarous of the northern nations or tribes that invaded Rome in the 5th century, and were notorious for destroying the monuments of art and literature. Hence,—2. One hostile to the arts and literature; one who is ignorant and barbarous.

VANDAL'IC, a. Pertaining to the Vandals; designating the south shore of the Baltic, where once lived the Vandals, a nation of ferocious barbarians; hence, ferocious; rude; barbarous; hostile to the arts and literature.

VAN'DALISM, n. The spirit or conduct of Vandals; ferocious cruelty; hostility to the arts and literature.

VANDEL'LIA, n. A genus of plants; nat. order Scrophulariaceæ. The species are natives of the warm parts of the world, forming smooth or hairy herbs, with tetragonal stems, opposite leaves, and axillary flowers. V. diffusa, a native of Brazil, is described as emetic, and its decoction as useful in fevers and liver complaints.

VANDYKE, n. A pointed collar of lace or sewed work worn by both sexes during the reign of Charles I., and to be seen in portraits painted by Vandyke.

VĀNE, n. [D. vaan. The primary sense is extended.] A plate or thin slip of metal, wood, &c., placed on a spindle at the top of a spire, tower, &c., for the purpose of showing by its turning and direction which way the wind blows. In ships, a piece of bunting is used for the same purpose.—2. A broad vane or flag carried by a knight in the tournament.—3. The thin membranous part or web of a feather on the side of the shaft.—4. In mathematical or philosophical instruments, vanes are sights made to slide and move upon cross-staves, quadrants, &c.—Dog vane. [See among the compounds of Dog.]

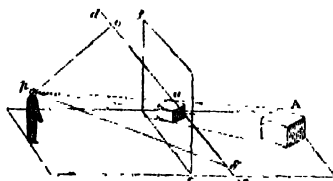
VANEL'LUS, n. A genus of grallatores, including the true lapwings.

VAN'-FOSS, n. A ditch on the outside of the counterscarp.

VANG, n. The vangs of a ship are a sort of braces to steady the peak of a gaff to the ship's side.

VAN'-GUÄRD, n. The troops who march in van of an army; the first line.

VANIL'LA, n. A genus of orchidaceous plants, natives of tropical America;



Vanilla aromatica.

The fruit of Vanilla aromatica or planifolia, is remarkable for its fragrant odour, and for the volatile odoriferous oil extracted from it. As a medicine, it is supposed to possess powers analogous to valerian, while, at the same time, it is far more grateful. It is employed in confectionary, in the preparation of liqueurs, and in flavouring of chocolate.

VAN'ISH, v. i. [L. vanesco; Fr. evanouir; from L. vanus, vain, or its root; Eng. to wane. The primary sense is to withdraw or depart.] 1. To disappear, to pass from a visible to an invisible state; as, vapour vanishes from the sight by being dissipated. Light vanishes when the rays of the illuminating body are intercepted; darkness vanishes before the rising sun.—2. To disappear; to pass beyond the limit of vision; as, a ship vanishes from the sight of spectators on land.—3. To disappear; to pass away; to be annihilated or lost. How cheering is the well founded hope of enjoying delights which can never vanish.—4. In math., a quantity is said to vanish, or become evanescent, when its arithmetical value is nothing, or is denoted by 0.

VAN'ISHED, a. Having no perceptible existence.

VAN'ISHING, ppr. Disappearing; passing from the sight or possession; departing for ever.—Vanishing point, in perspective, the point in which an imaginary line passing through the eye of the observer parallel to any original line cuts the horizon. This point is situated always somewhere in an indefinitely extended line, supposed to be drawn on a level with the eye parallel to the horizon, and called from this circumstance the vanishing line. In perspective drawing this imaginary line (cd) is formed by the intersection of the plane of projection (ef), or surface on which the image (a) falls, with the vanishing plane (p o g), or plane supposed to pass through the eye of the spectator at (p), parallel to the ground or plane upon which the original object (A) stands. The points o and g being formed by the intersection of two lines drawn from the eye parallel to the two sides of the original object will likewise be the vanishing points of those sides.—Vanishing fractions, in alge., those fractions in which, by giving a numerical value to any variable quantity or quantities which enter into them, both numerator and denominator become zero, and the fraction itself $\frac{0}{0}$.

Vanishing point.

VAN'ISHMENT, n. A vanishing.

VAN'ITY, n. [Fr. vanité; L. vanitas, from vanus, vain.] 1. Emptiness; want of substance to satisfy desire; uncertainty; inanity.

> Vanity of vanities, saith the preacher; all is vanity; Eccles i.

2. Fruitless desire or endeavour.

> Vanity possesseth many who are desirous to know the certainty of things to come. Sidney.

3. Trifling labour that produces no good.—4. Emptiness; untruth.

> Here I may well show the vanity of what is reported in the story of Walsingham. Davies.

5. Empty pleasure; vain pursuit; idle show; unsubstantial enjoyment.

> Sin with vanity had fill'd the works of men. Milton.

> Think not when woman's transient breath is fled,
> That all her vanities at once are dead;
> Succeeding vanities she still regards. Pope.

6. Ostentation; arrogance.—7. The desire of indiscriminate admiration. Inflation of mind upon slight grounds; empty pride, inspired by an overweening conceit of one's personal attainments or decorations, and making its possessor anxious for the notice and applause of others. Fops cannot be cured of their vanity.

> Vanity is that species of pride, which while it presumes upon a degree of superiority in some particular articles, fondly courts the applause of every one within its sphere of action, seeking every occasion to display some talent or some supposed excellency. Cogan.

> Vanity is the food of fools. Swift.

> No man sympathizes with the sorrows of vanity. Johnson.

VAN'MURE, } n. [Fr. avant-mure.]
VANT'MURE, } A front wall or false wall.

VAN'QUISH, v. t. [Fr. vaincre; L. vinco; It. vincere; Sp. vincer; probably allied to L. vincio, to bind.] 1. To conquer; to overcome; to subdue in battle; as an enemy.

> They vanquished the rebels in all encounters. Clarendon.

2. To defeat in any contest; to refute in argument.

VAN'QUISH, n. A disease in sheep, in which they pine away.

VAN'QUISHABLE, a. That may be conquered.

VAN'QUISHED, pp. Overcome in battle; subdued; defeated.

VAN'QUISHER, n. A conqueror; a victor.

VAN'QUISHING, ppr. Conquering; subduing; defeating; refuting.

VAN'QUISHMENT,† n. The state of being vanquished, or conquered.

VAN'SIRE, n. In zool., the Mangusta galera, a digitigrade, carnivorous mammal; a small quadruped, somewhat resembling a weasel, of a deep brown colour, speckled with yellow, the tail of equal size its whole length; inhabiting Madagascar and the Isle of France.

VĀNT, v. i. [Fr. vanter.] To boast. [See Vaunt.]

VĀNTAĠE, n. [Sp. ventaja; from the root of L. venio. See Advantage and Van.] 1.† Gain; profit.—2.† Superiority; state in which one has better means of action or defence than another.—3.† Opportunity; convenience.

VĀNTAĠE,† v. t. To profit.

VĀNTAĠE-GROUND, n. Superiority of state or place; the place or condition which gives one an advantage over another.

VANT'BRACE, } †n. [Fr. avant-bras.]
VANT'BRASS, } Armour for the arm. [See Vanbrace.]

VAP'ID, a. [L. vapidus. The radical verb is not in the Latin, but the sense must be to pass or fly off, to escape; or to strike down, L. vapulo. It is probably allied to vapour.] 1. Having lost its life and spirit; dead; spiritless; flat; as, vapid beer; a vapid state of the blood.—2. Dull; unanimated.

VAPID'ITY, n. Vapidness.

VAP'IDLY, adv. In a vapid manner.

VAP'IDNESS, n. The state of having lost its life or spirit; deadness; flatness; as, the vapidness of ale or cider. —2. Dulness; want of life or spirit.

VAPORABIL'ITY, n. The quality of being capable of vaporization.

VAP'ORABLE, a. Capable of being converted into vapour by the agency of caloric.

VAP'ORATE, v. i. To emit vapour. [See EVAPORATE.]

VAPORA'TION, n. [L. vaporatio.] The act or process of converting into vapour, or of passing off in vapour.

VAPORIF'IC, a. [L. vapour and facio, to make.] Forming into vapour; converting into steam, or expelling in a volatile form, as fluids.

VAP'ORIZABLE, a. Capable of being converted into vapour.

VAP'ORIZATION, n. The artificial formation of vapour.

VAP'ORIZE, v. t. To convert into vapour by the application of heat or artificial means.

VAP'ORIZE, v. i. To pass off in vapour.

VAP'ORIZED, pp. Expelled in vapour.

VAP'ORIZING, ppr. Converting into vapour.

VA'POROUS, VA'POROSE, a. [Fr. vaporeux.] 1. Full of vapours or exhalations; as, the vaporous air of valleys.—2. Vain; unreal; proceeding from the vapours.—3. Windy; flatulent; as, vaporous food is the most easily digested.

VA'POROUSNESS, n. State of being full of vapours.

VA'POUR, n. [L. and Sp. vapor; Fr. vapeur; It. vapore. It is probably from a verb signifying to depart, to fly off.] 1. In a general sense, an invisible elastic aeriform fluid, into which any body naturally solid or liquid at ordinary temperature may be converted by the agency of heat, and which is capable of being condensed or brought back to the liquid or solid state, by reducing the temperature, or by a moderate increase of pressure. Vapours are distinguished from gases by their ready conversion into liquids or solids, whereas gases retain their elastic state more obstinately; they are always gaseous at common temperatures; and, with one or two exceptions, cannot be made to change their form, unless by being subjected to much greater pressure than they are naturally exposed to. Several of them, indeed, have hitherto resisted every effort to compress them into liquids. Different substances yield vapours with very different degrees of facility; fluids in general are more easily vaporized than solids, and solids generally pass into the liquid state before they assume the form of vapour. Some liquids, ether for instance, require to be carefully secluded from the atmosphere, to prevent their rapid conversion into vapour. The vapour which is produced by the ebullition of water is distinguished by the name of steam,—which see.—2. A visible fluid floating in the atmosphere. All substances which impair the transparency of the atmosphere, as smoke, fog, &c., are in common language called vapours.—3. In meteorology, that invisible elastic fluid which rises constantly from the surface of land and water all over the world, at common temperatures, and which, uniting itself to the air, ascends into the higher regions of the atmosphere, and is carried by the winds to great distances. Aqueous vapour thus suspended in the atmosphere, when condensed by cold, becomes visible, forming clouds, and returning to the earth in the form of rain, snow, &c. The formation of vapour at the surface of land and water is promoted by an increase of temperature, by winds, and by the dryness of the atmosphere. When the atmosphere is already saturated with aqueous vapour, the formation of vapour goes on slowly. [See EVAPORATION.]—3. Substances resembling smoke, which sometimes fill the atmosphere, particularly in America during the autumn.—4. Wind; flatulence.—5. Mental fume; vain imagination; unreal fancy.—6. Vapours, a disease of nervous debility, in which a variety of strange images float in the brain, or appear as if visible. Hence, hypochondriacal affections and spleen are called vapours.—7. Something unsubstantial, fleeting, or transitory.

> For what is your life? It is even a vapour, that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away; James iv.

VA'POUR, v. i. [L. vaporo.] 1. To pass off in fumes or a moist floating substance; to steam; to be exhaled; to evaporate. [In this sense, evaporate is generally used.]—2. To emit fumes.

> Running water vapours not so much as standing water. [Little used.] Bacon.

3. To bully; to boast or vaunt with a vain, ostentatious display of worth; to brag. [This is the most usual signification of the word.]

> And what in real value's wanting,
> Supply with vapouring and ranting.
> Hudibras.

VA'POUR, v. t. To emit, cast off, or scatter in fumes or steam; as, to vapour away a heated fluid.

> Another sighing vapours forth his soul.
> B. Johnson.

VA'POUR-BATH, n. [vapour and bath.] The application of vapour or steam to the body in a close place; also the place itself.—2. In chem., an apparatus for heating bodies by the vapour of water.

VA'POURED, a. Moist; wet with vapours.—2. Splenetic; peevish.

VA'POURER, n. A boaster; one who makes a vaunting display of his prowess or worth; a braggart.

VA'POURING, ppr. Boasting; vaunting ostentatiously and vainly.

VA'POURINGLY, adv. In a boasting manner.

VA'POURISH, a. Full of vapours.—2. Hypochondriac; splenetic; affected by hysterics.

VA'POURY, a. Vaporous; full of vapours.—2. Hypochondriac; splenetic; peevish.

VAPULA'TION,† n. [L. vapulo.] The act of beating or whipping.

VAR'DINGALE, n. The hooped petticoat of Elizabeth's reign. [See FARTHINGALE.]

VARE,† n. [Sp. vara.] A wand or staff of justice.

VAR'EC, n. The French name for kelp or incinerated sea weed; wrack; Fucus vesiculosus.

VA'RI, n. In zool., a quadrumanous mammal, the Prosimia catta, or ring-tailed lemur, having its tail marked with rings of black and white; it is a native of Madagascar. The vari of Buffon is the black maucauco, Prosimia nigra, with the neck bearded like a ruff.

VA'RIABLE, a. [Fr. See VARY.] That may vary or alter; capable of alteration in any manner; changeable; as, variable winds or seasons; variable colours.—2. Susceptible of change; liable to change; mutable; fickle; unsteady; inconstant; as, the affections of men are variable; passions are variable.

> His heart I know, how variable and vain.
> Milton.

Variable quantities, in analysis, are such quantities as are subject to continual increase or diminution, in opposition to those which are constant, remaining always the same. Thus, the abscissas and ordinates of a curve are variable quantities; because they vary or change their magnitudes together, and in passing from one point to another, their values increase or diminish according to the law of the curve. Variable quantities are usually denoted by the last letters of the alphabet, z, y, x, while those that are constant are denoted by the first letters, a, b, c. In the investigation of the relation which varying and dependent quantities bear to each other, the conclusions are more readily obtained by expressing only two terms in each proportion, than by retaining the four; but it must be kept constantly in mind that four quantities in the shape of a proportion are always understood; namely, each of the two variable quantities at different periods of their increase or decrease. One quantity is said to vary directly as another, when the two quantities depend wholly upon each other, and in such a manner that if one of them be increased or diminished, the other is increased or diminished in the same proportion. Thus, if the altitude of a triangle be invariable, the area varies directly as the base; for if the base be increased or diminished, the area is increased or diminished in the same proportion. One quantity is said to vary inversely as another, when the former cannot be changed in any manner, but the reciprocal of the latter is changed in the same proportion. For example, if the area of a triangle be given, the base varies inversely as the perpendicular altitude. Thus, if A denote the altitude of a triangle whose area is given, and B its base, then A varies as $\frac{1}{B}$, or $A \propto \frac{1}{B}$. One quantity is said to vary as two others jointly, when it increases or decreases as the product of those two quantities increases or decreases. For example, the area of a triangle varies as its base and altitude jointly: thus, if A denote the area of a triangle, B its base, and C its altitude, then A varies as BC, or $A \propto BC$. One quantity is said to vary directly, as a second, and inversely, as a third, when the first cannot be changed in any manner, but the second multiplied by the reciprocal of the third, is changed in the same proportion. For example, the base of a triangle varies as the area directly, and as the perpendicular altitude inversely: thus, if A denote the area, B the base, and C the altitude, then A varies as $B \times \frac{1}{C}$, or $A \propto \frac{B}{C}$. In general, if one quantity varies as another, it is equal to it multiplied by some constant quantity. Thus, if A vary as B, and c be a constant quantity, then $A = cB$, or if A vary as $\frac{1}{B}$, then $A = \frac{c}{B}$. In mech., a variable motion is that which is produced by the action of a force which varies in intensity.

VA'RIABLE, n. In math., a quantity which is in a state of continual increase or decrease. The indefinitely small quantity by which a variable is continually increased or diminished, is called its differential, and the method of finding these quantities, the differential calculus.

VA'RIABLENESS, VARIABIL'ITY, n. Susceptibility of change; liableness or aptness to alter; changeableness; as, the variableness of the weather.—2. Inconstancy; fickleness; unsteadiness; levity; as, the variableness of human passions.

VA'RIABLY, adv. Changeably; with alteration; in an inconstant or fickle manner.

VA'RIANCE, n. [See VARY.] In law, an alteration of something formerly laid in a writ; or a difference between a declaration and a writ, or the deed on which it is grounded. In ordinary language, a departure in the oral evidence from the statement in the pleadings, is termed a variance.—2. Any alteration or change of condition.—3. Difference that produces dispute or controversy; disagreement; dissension; discord. A mere variance may become a war. Without a spirit of condescension, there will be an everlasting variance. —At variance, in disagreement; in a state of difference or want of agreement.—2. In a state of dissension or controversy; in a state of enmity.

VA'RIANT, a. Different; diverse.

VA'RIATE, v. t. To alter; to make different.—2 To vary. [A bad word.]

VARIA'TION, n. [Fr. from L. variatio. See VARY.] 1. Alteration; a partial change in the form, position, state, or qualities of the same thing; as, a variation of colour in different lights; a variation in the size of a plant from day to day; the unceasing, though slow variation of language; a variation in a soil from year to year. Our opinions are subject to continual variations.

The essences of things are conceived not capable of such variation. Locke.

2. Difference; change from one to another.

In some other places are born more females than males; which, upon this variation of proportion, I recommend to the curious. Graunt.

3. In gram., change of termination of nouns and adjectives, constituting what is called case, number, and gender; as, the variation of words.—4. Deviation; as, a variation of a transcript from the original.—5. In astron., the variation of the moon is the third inequality in her motion; by which, when out of the quadratures, her true place differs from her place twice equated. It depends on the angular distance of the moon from the sun.—6. In geography and navigation, the deviation of the magnetic needle from the true north point, or the angle which the magnetic needle makes with the plane of the geographical meridian of a ship or station; called also declination. In navigation, the variation of the compass is properly the angle between the magnetic axis of the needle and a meridian line passing parallel to the horizon through the centre of the compass. The variation of the compass does not remain constantly the same in the same place, but undergoes a slow and progressive change. The needle is observed to move gradually towards the west of the true meridian until it arrives at its maximum on that side; it then returns, passes over the true meridian, and moves easterly, until it arrives at its maximum towards the east, when it returns as before. In the year 1580, in London, the variation was 11° 15′ East; in 1660, the needle pointed due north; since which time it has travelled about 24½° to the westward, and now it has begun to return. The variation however is very different in different parts of the globe, and it is also subject to diurnal changes in the same place.—7. In music, the different manner of singing or playing the same air or tune, by subdividing the notes into several others of less value, or by adding graces, yet so that the tune itself may be discovered through all its embellishments.—Variation of curvature, in analytical geometry, is that inequality or change which takes place in the curvature, in passing from one point of a curve to another. All curves are liable to this variation, with the exception of the circle in which the curvature is uniform at every point.—Calculus of variations, a branch of analysis, the chief object of which is to find what function of a variable will be a maximum or minimum on certain prescribed conditions. This calculus offers the only general, and frequently the only possible, means of solving those problems generally termed isoperimetrical.

VARICEL'LA, n. [Diminutive of variola, the small-pox.] In med., the chicken-pox; called also the water-pox.

VARI'CIFORM, n. Resembling a varix, —which see.

VARICOCELE, n. [L. varix, a dilated vein, and Gr. κηλη, a tumour. A bad term, being part Greek and part Latin. Cirsocele is the correct term, and is that which is much the most commonly used.] In sur., a varicose enlargement of the veins of the spermatic cord; or more rarely a like enlargement of the veins of the scrotum.

VAR'ICOSE, VAR'ICOUS, a. [L. varicosus, having enlarged veins.] Preternaturally enlarged, or permanently dilated; applied only to veins.

VA'RIED, pp. of Vary. Altered; partially changed; changed.

VA'RIEDLY, adv. Diversely.

VA'RIEGATE, v. t. [It. variegiare; from L. vario, varius. See VARY.] To diversify in external appearance; to mark with different colours; as, to variegate a floor with marble of different colours.

The shells are filled with a white spar, which variegates and adds to the beauty of the stone. Woodward.

Ladies like variegated tulips show. Pope.

VA'RIEGATED, pp. Diversified in colours or external appearance. Variegated leaves, in botany, are such as are irregularly marked with white or yellow spots.

VA'RIEGATING, ppr. Diversifying with colours.

VARIEGA'TION, n. The act of diversifying, or state of being diversified by different colours; diversity of colours. —2. In bot., a term employed to designate the disposition of two or more colours in the petals, leaves, and other parts of plants.

VARI'ETY, n. [Fr. variété; L. varietas, from vario, to vary.] 1. Intermixture of different things, or of things different in form; or a succession of different things.

Variety is nothing else but a continued novelty. South.

The variety of colours depends on the composition of light. Newton.

2. One thing of many which constitute variety. In this sense, it has a plural; as, the varieties of a species.—3. Difference; dissimilitude.

There is a variety in the tempers of good men. Atterbury.

4. Variation; deviation; change from a former state.—5. Many and different kinds. The shopkeeper has a great variety of cottons and silks.

He wants to do a variety of good things. Law.

6. In nat. hist., a subdivision of a species; any individual plant or animal which differs from the rest of the species to which it belongs, in some accidental circumstances, which are not permanent, nor invariable, nor essential to the species. In bot., the character of the species is found in its capability of reproducing by seed a plant which is more like itself than it is like any thing else; and this under all circumstances in which the offspring is capable of being produced. The variety differs from the species in points of structure, which are developed only under certain circumstances, arising from climate, cultivation, and other influences, and which are not essential to the species. While species having the normal form and colours, are perpetuated by seed, varieties, although often also propagated in the same manner, are liable to return to the original form, or to deviate into others, so that a variety cannot be preserved without much care. All species have a tendency to form varieties, but all the natural varieties of plants are nothing like so numerous, as those which arise from cultivation. In zool., varieties, are individuals of the same species, which differ from the specific type, in size, colour, form, and relative proportion of the parts of the body, owing to the operation of different causes; as, age, climate, food, locality, domestication, &c.; but which like the varieties of plants, are liable to revert to the original typical form, in successive generations.—7. Different sort; as, varieties of soil or land.

VA'RIFORM, a. Having different shapes or forms.

VA'RIFORMED, a. Formed with different shapes.

VA'RIFORMING, ppr. Making of different forms.

VAR'IFY, v. t. To diversify; to colour variously.

VARI'OLA, n. [L.] The small-pox; so named from L. varius, spotted, from its effects upon the skin.

VARIOLA'RIA, n. A genus of lichens, of an ash-grey or white colour, found on the back of the trunks of various trees, on rocks, walls, or on the ground. About thirteen species are found in Great Britain. V. faginea, is distinguished from all others of the genus, Variolaria faginea.

by its intensely bitter taste, and is employed in France for the purpose of obtaining oxalic acid. V. lactea, or milky-white violaria, is an elegant species, and is collected for the purpose of being used in dyeing.

VA'RIOLITE, n. [L. varius and Gr. λίθος, stone.] In min., a kind of porphyritic rock, in which the imbedded substances are imperfectly crystallized, or are rounded, giving the stone a spotted appearance.

VA'RIOLOID, n. [L. variolæ and Gr. εἶδος, form.] A name recently given to a particular variety of the small pox.

VARI'OLOUS, VARI'OLAR, VARIOL'IC, } a. [L. variolæ, from vario, to diversify.] Pertaining to or designating the small pox.

VARIO'RUM. [L.] Variorum editions of the Greek and Roman classics, (editiones cum notis variorum), are those in which the notes of numerous commentators are inserted. Such editions were published chiefly in Holland in the 17th and 18th centuries.

VA'RIOUS, a. [L. varius. See VARY.] 1. Different; several; manifold; as, men of various names and various occupations.—2. Changeable; uncertain; unfixed.

The names of mixed modes...are very various and doubtful. Locke.

3. Unlike each other; diverse.

So many and so various laws are giv'n. Milton.

4. Variegated; diversified.—Various readings, differences in the text of a work, arising from the ignorance or negligence of early transcribers of manuscripts, from critical conjecture, or wilful corruption, from the mistakes of printers, or from the changes which an author makes himself in the later editions of his works. To restore the true text or true reading of ancient works, is the business of verbal criticism, and is often of great importance, especially in the Bible.

VA'RIOUSLY, adv. In different ways; with change; with diversity; as, objects variously represented; flowers variously coloured. The human system is variously affected by different medicines.

VA'RIX, n. [L.] An uneven dilatation of a vein; a disease known by a soft tumour on a vein, which does not pulsate.—2. In conchology, a term used to designate the longitudinal thickened elevations which occur at greater or less intervals on the outer surface of spiral shells, as in Triton and Murex.

VÄRLET, n. [Old Fr. See VALET.] Anciently, a page or knight's follower; a servant or footman.—2. A scoundrel; a rascal; as, an impudent varlet.

VÄRLETRY,† n. The rabble; the crowd.

VÄRNISH, n. [Fr. vernis; It. vernice; Low L. vernix; G. firniss; D. vernis.] 1. A solution of resinous matter, forming a clear limpid fluid, capable of hardening without losing its transparency, and used by painters, gilders, cabinet-makers, &c., for coating over the surface of their work, in order to give it a shining, transparent, and hard surface, capable of resisting in a greater or less degree the influences of air and moisture. The resinous substances most commonly employed for varnishes are mastic, sandarac, lac, benzoin, copal, amber, and asphaltum; and the solvents employed are alcohol, volatile oil, or fixed oil. Hence, varnishes may be divided into three classes, alcoholic or spirit varnishes, volatile-oil varnishes, and fixed-oil varnishes. But as the materials to which varnishes are applied, and the purposes they are designed to answer, differ very widely, varnishes of course vary in a similar degree, and receive different names accordingly. Amber varnish is made of amber, linseed oil, litharge, and turpentine. Black varnish, for japanning wood and leather, is made by mixing lampblack with a proper quantity of a strong solution of lac in spirit of wine.—2. An artificial covering to give a fair appearance to any act or conduct.

VÄRNISH, v. t. [Fr. vernisser, vernir.] 1. To lay varnish on; to cover with a liquid, for giving any thing a glossy surface, and to protect it from the influences of air and moisture; as, to varnish a sideboard or table.—2. To cover with something that gives a fair external appearance.

Close ambition, varnish'd o'er with zeal. Milton.

3. To give a fair external appearance in words; to give a fair colouring to; as, to varnish errors or deformity.

Cato's voice was ne'er employ'd
To clear the guilty, and to varnish crimes. Addison.

And bow the knee to pomp that loves to varnish guilt. Byron.

VÄRNISHED, pp. Covered with varnish; made glossy.—2. Rendered fair in external appearance.

VÄRNISHER, n. One who varnishes, or whose occupation is to varnish.—2. One who disguises or palliates; one who gives a fair external appearance.

VÄRNISHING, ppr. Laying on varnish; giving a fair external appearance.

VÄRNISH TREES, n. The name given to certain trees which exude resinous juices, either naturally or from incisions. These juices harden in the air, and are employed as varnishes for preserving various articles from the influence of the air, water, or insects, and also for giving them greater brilliancy. Varnish trees are found chiefly in India, Burmah, and China. Many of them belong to the nat. order Anacardiaceæ; as the marking nut (Semecarpus anacardium); Stagmaria verniciflua, which yields the Japan lacquer; Augia sinensis, said to produce the genuine Chinese varnish, with which the different fancy articles are lacquered; and Rhus vernix, the Japan varnish of Kæmpfer and Thunberg.

VAR'RIATED, WAR'RIATED, } pp. In her., cut in the form of vair; as, a bend varriated on the outsides.

VAR'RIES, VAR'RYS, VAR'REYS, } n. In her., separate pieces of vair, in form resembling a shield. [See VAIR.]

VAR'TABED, n. One of an order of ecclesiastics in the Armenian church. They differ from the priests by living in seclusion and celibacy. They also preach, while the priests do not.

The Armenian bishops are all taken from the order of vartabeds, and are ordained by them. Coleman.

VARU'NA, n. In Hindoo myth., the god of the waters, the Indian Neptune, and the regent of the west division of the earth. He is represented as a white man, four-armed, riding on a sea animal, with a rope in one of his hands, and a club in another.

VÄRVELLED, pp. In heraldry, when the leather thongs which tie on the bells to the legs of hawks are borne flotant, with rings at the ends, the bearing is then termed jessed, belled, and varvelled.

Varvelled.

VÄRVELS, VER'VELS, } n [Fr. vervel.] In falconry, silver rings placed on the legs of a hunting hawk, on which the owner's name is engraved.

VÄRVICITE, n. An oxide of manganese found native in Warwickshire. It is supposed to be a compound of two other oxides.

VA'RY, v. t. [L. vario, Fr. varier; It. variare; probably allied to Eng. veer, Sp. birar, L. verto, Eth. bari.] 1. To alter in form, appearance, substance, or position; to make different by a partial change; as, to vary a thing in dimensions; to vary its properties, proportions, or nature; to vary the posture or attitude of a thing; to vary one's dress.—2. To change to something else.

Gods, that never change their state,
Vary oft their love and hate. Waller.

We are to vary the customs according to the time and country where the scene of action lies. Dryden.

3. To make of different kinds.

God hath varied the inclinations of men, according to the variety of actions to be performed. Browne.

4. To diversify; to variegate.

God hath here
Varied his bounty so with new delights. Milton.

VA'RY, v. i. To alter or be altered in any manner; to suffer a partial change.

Colours often vary when held in different positions. Customs vary from one age to another, until they are entirely changed.—2. To be changeable; to alter; as, the varying hues of the clouds; the varying plumage of a dove. —3. To differ or be different; to be unlike. The laws of different countries vary. The laws of France vary from those of England.—4. To be changed; to become different. The man varies in his opinions; his opinions vary with the times.—5. To become unlike one's self; to alter.

He varies from himself no less. Pope.

6. To deviate; to depart; as, to vary from the law; to vary from the rules of justice or reason.—7. To alter or change in succession.

While fear and anger, with alternate grace,
Pant in her breast, and vary in her face.
Addison.

8. To disagree; to be at variance; as, men vary in opinion.—9. In analysis, to be subject to continual increase or decrease; as, variable quantities. [See under VARIABLE.]

VA'RY,† n. Alteration; change.

VA'RYING, ppr. Altering; changing; deviating.

VAS, n. plur. Vasa. [L.] A vessel; applied in anat. to arteries, veins, ducts, &c.—2. In bot., applied to several of the tissues of plants; as, vasa fibrosa, or woody tissue.

VAS'CULAR, a. [L. vasculum, a vessel, from vas, id.] 1. Pertaining to the vessels of animal or vegetable bodies; as, the vascular functions.—2. Full of vessels; consisting of animal or vegetable vessels, as arteries, veins, lacteals, and the like; as, the vascular system. Animal flesh is all vascular, none of it parenchymous.—Vascular tissue, in bot., is that species of tissue which is composed of very elongated membranous tubes, tapering at each end, and having a spiral fibre within them, or having their walls marked with broken spiral lines, or dots arranged in a circular or spiral direction. There are two principal kinds of vascular tissue, namely, spiral vessels and ducts.

VAS'CULARES, n. plur. Plants which have stamens, pistils, and spiral vessels, and bear proper flowers, as exogens and endogens.

VASCULAR'ITY, n. The state of being vascular.

VASCULIF'EROUS, a. [L. vasculum, and fero, to bear.] Vasculiferous plants are such as have seed-vessels divided into cells, such as the pomegranate, Punica granatum; the orange, Citrus aurantium; the poppy, Papaver somniferum, &c., &c.

VÄSE, n. [Fr. from L. vas, vasa, a vessel; It. vaso.] 1. A vessel in general for show rather than for use; a vessel for use in temples; as, a vase for sacrifice, an urn, &c. In its widest sense, the word comprises all vessels intended to contain fluids, whether they are made of metal, stone, or clay. Ancient vases of metal, stone, and clay, and of all varieties of shape, have come down to our time. The most numerous class are those of painted, dried or baked, clay, which have been discovered by thousands in tombs and catacombs in Etruria, Southern Italy, Sicily, Greece, and some of the Grecian islands. Many of them exhibit great beauty and elegance, and accordingly they have been much prized by antiquaries. The most ancient vases are those of the style called Egyptian.—2. In arch., an ornament of sculpture, placed on socles or pedestals, representing the vessels of the ancients, as incense-pots, flower-pots, &c. They usually crown or finish façades or frontispieces.—3. The body of the Corinthian and Composite capital; called also the tambour or drum.—4. Among florists, the calyx of a plant.—5. Among goldsmiths, the middle of a church candlestick.—6. A solid piece of ornamental marble.

VAS'SAL, n. [Fr. vassal; It. vassallo; W. gwâs, a boy or youth, a page, a servant; gwasâu, to serve.] 1. A feudatory; a tenant; one who holds land of a superior, and who vows fidelity and homage to him. A rear vassal is one who holds of a lord who is himself a vassal.—2. A subject; a dependant.—3. A servant.—4. In common law, a bondman; a political slave. We will never be the vassals of a foreign prince.

VAS'SAL, v. t. To subject to control; to enslave.

VAS'SAL, a. Servile; subservient.

VAS'SALAĠE, n. [Fr. vasselage; Sp. vasalage.] 1. The state of being a vassal or feudatory.—2. Political servitude; dependence; subjection; slavery. The Greeks were long held in vassalage by the Turks.

VAS'SALED, pp. or a. Enslaved; subjected to absolute power; as, a vassaled land.

VAS'SALRY, n. The body of vassals.

VÄST, a. [L. vastus; Fr. vaste; It. vasto. The primary sense of the root must be to part or spread, as this is connected with the verb to waste.] 1. Being of great extent; very spacious or large; as, the vast ocean; a vast abyss; the vast empire of Russia; the vast plains of Syria; the vast domains of the Almighty.—2. Huge in bulk and extent; as, the vast mountains of Asia; the vast range of the Andes.—3. Very great in numbers or amount; as, a vast army; vast numbers or multitudes were slain; vast sums of money have been expended to gratify pride and ambition.—4. Very great in force; mighty; as, vast efforts; vast labour.—5. Very great in importance; as, a subject of vast concern.

VÄST, n. An empty waste.

Through the vast of heav'n it sounded.
Milton.

The watery vast. Pope.

VASTA'TION, n. [L. vastatio, from vasto, to waste.] A laying waste; waste; depopulation. [Devastation is generally used.]

VASTID'ITY,† n. Vastness; immensity.

VÄSTITUDE, n. Vastness; immense extent.

VÄSTLY, adv. Very greatly; to a great extent or degree; as, a space vastly extended. Men differ vastly in their opinions and manners.

VÄSTNESS, n. Great extent; immensity; as, the vastness of the ocean or of space.—2. Immense bulk and extent; as, the vastness of a mountain.—3. Immense magnitude or amount; as, the vastness of an army, or of the sums of money necessary to support it.—4. Immense importance.

VAS'TO, n. In Eng. law, a writ against tenants, for terms of life or years, committing waste.

VÄSTY,† a. Being of great extent; very spacious.

I can call spirits from the vasty deep.
Shak.

VAT, n. [D. vat; Sax. fat; G. fass.] 1. A large vessel or cistern for holding liquors in an immature state; as, vats for wine.

Let him produce his vats and tubs, in opposition to heaps of arms and standards.
Addison.

2. A square box or cistern in which hides are laid for steeping in tan.—3. An oil measure in Holland; also, a wine measure.—4. A square hollow place on the back of a calcining furnace, in which tin ore is laid for the purpose of being dried.

VATE'RIA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Dipteraceæ. There are only two species, V. indica, which grows all along the Malabar coast and in Canara; and V. lanceæfolia, common in Silhet. Both species form large trees, valuable both for their timber, and also for the products which they yield. V. indica, whose timber is much employed in ship building, produces the resin, called in India copal, and in England gum anime. It also yields a fatty substance called piney tallow.

VAT'ICAN, n. [L. vates.] In Rome, the celebrated church of St Peter; and also, a magnificent palace of the pope; situated at the foot of one of the seven hills on which Rome was built. Hence the phrase, the thunders of the Vatican, meaning the anathemas or denunciations of the pope. Properly speaking, the vatican is an assemblage of public buildings on the right bank of the Tiber, within the walls of modern Rome. It consists mainly of the papal palace, the court and garden of Belvedere, the library, and the museum.

VAT'ICANIST, n. [From Vatican.] A devoted adherent of the pope; a rigid papist.

VAT'ICIDE, n. [L. vates, a prophet, and cædo, to kill.] The murderer of a prophet.

VATIC'INAL, a. [L. vaticinor, to prophesy.] Containing prophecy.

VATIC'INATE, v. i. [L. vaticinor, from vates, a prophet.] To prophesy; to foretel; to practise prediction. [Little used.]

VATICINA'TION, n. Prediction; prophecy.

VAUDE'VIL, VAUDE'VILLE, n. (vōdevil.) [Fr.] A song common among the vulgar, and sung about the streets. A ballad; a trivial strain.—2. In the French theatre, a vaudeville is a piece whose dialogue is intermingled with light or comic songs, set to popular airs.

VAULT, n. [Fr. voûte; It. volta, a vault; volto, the face, visage, and a vault, L. vultus; a derivative of L. volvo, volutus; Sp. voltear, to turn, to tumble.] 1. In arch., a continued arch, or an arched roof, so constructed that the stones, bricks, or other material of

1. Cylindrical, barrel, or waggon vault.
2. Roman vault, formed by the intersection of two equal cylinders.
3. Gothic groined vault.
4. Spherical or domical vault which it is composed, sustain and keep each other in their places. Vaults are of various kinds, cylindrical, elliptical, single, double, cross, diagonal, Gothic, &c. When a vault is of greater height than half its span, it is said to be surmounted, and when of less height, surbased. A rampant vault is one which springs from planes not parallel to the horizon. One vault placed above another constitutes a double vault. A conic vault is formed of part of the surface of a cone, and a spherical vault of part of the surface of a sphere, as fig. 4. A vault is simple, as figs. 1 and 4, when it is formed by the surface of some regular solid, around one axis; and compound, as figs. 2 and 3, when compounded of more than one surface of the same solid, or of two different solids. A groined vault, fig. 3, is a compound vault, rising to the same height in its surfaces as that of two equal cylinders, or a cylinder with a cylindroid.—2. A cellar.

To banish rats that haunt our vaults. Swift.

3. A cave or cavern.

The silent vaults of death, unknown to light. Sandys.

4. A repository for the dead.—5. In the manege, the leap of a horse.—6. A leap; a jump.

VAULT, v. t. To arch; to form with a a vault; or to cover with a vault; as, to vault a passage to a court.

VAULT, v. i. [Sp. voltear; It. voltare; Fr. vautrer.] 1. To leap; to bound; to jump; to spring.

Vaulting ambition, which o'erleaps itself. Shak.

Leaning on his lance, he vaulted on a tree. Dryden.

Lucan vaulted upon Pegasus with all the heat and intrepidity of youth. Addison.

2. To tumble; to exhibit feats of tumbling or leaping.

VAULT'AGE,† n. Vaulted work; an arched cellar.

VAULT'ED, pp. Arched; concave; as, a vaulted roof.—2. Covered with an arch or vault.—3. a. In bot., arched like the roof of the mouth, as the upper lip of many ringent flowers.

VAULT'ER, n. One that vaults; a leaper; a tumbler.

VAULT'ING, ppr. Arching; covering with an arch.—2. Leaping; tumbling; exhibiting feats of leaping.

VAULT'ING, n. 1. In arch., the art or operation of constructing arched roofs or vaults.—2. Vaults in general.—3. The art or practice of a vaulter.

VAULT'ING SHAFT, VAULT'ING PILLAR, n. In arch., a pillar sometimes rising from the floor to the spring of the vault of the roof; more frequently, a short pillar attached to the wall, rising from a corbel, and from the top of which the ribs of the vault spring. The pillars between the triforium windows of Gothic churches rising to and supporting the vaulting, may be cited as examples.

VAULT'Y,† a. Arched; concave.

VÄUNT, v.i. [Fr. vanter; It. vantarsi, from vanto, a boasting, from vano, vain, L. vanus.] To boast; to make a vain display of one's own worth, attainments, or decorations; to talk with vain ostentation; to brag.

Pride ... prompts a man to vaunt and overvalue what he is. Gov. of the Tongue.

VÄUNT, v t. To boast of; to make a vain display of.

My vanquisher, spoil'd of his vaunted spoil. Milton.

Charity vaunteth not itself; 1 Cor. xiii.

VÄUNT, n. Boast; a vain display of what one is or has, or has done; ostentation from vanity.

Him I seduc'd
With other vaunts and other promises. Milton.

VÄUNT,† n [Fr. avant.] The first part.

VÄUNT-COURIER, n. [Fr. avant-coureur.] A precursor.

VÄUNTED, pp. Vainly boasted of or displayed.

VÄUNTER, n. A vain conceited boaster; a braggart; a man given to vain ostentation.

VÄUNTFUL, a. Boastful; vainly ostentatious.

VÄUNTING, ppr. Vainly boasting; ostentatiously setting forth what one is or has.

VÄUNTINGLY, adv. Boastfully; with vain ostentation.

VÄUNT-MURE, n. [Fr. avant-mur.] A false wall; a work raised in front of the main wall.

VAUQUEL'INITE, n. Chromate of lead and copper, a mineral which occurs in small crystals on quartz, accompanying the chromate of lead, in Siberia.

VAV'ASOR, n. [This word in old books is variously written, valvasor, vavasour, valvasour. It is said to be from vassal. But qu.] Camden holds that the vävasor was next below a baron. Du Cange maintains that there were two sorts of vavasors; the greater, who held of the king, such as barons and counts; and the lesser, called valvasini, who held of the former. The dignity or rank is no longer in use, and the name is known only in books.

VAV'ASORY, n. The quality or tenure of the fee held by a vavasor.

VA'WARD,† n. [van and ward.] The fore part.

V. D. M. An abbreviation for the Latin Verbi Dei minister, minister of God's word.

VE'ADER, n. The 13th month of the Jewish ecclesiastical year, answering to our March.

VĒAL, n. [Fr. veau, a calf; probably contracted from L. vitellus.] The flesh of a calf killed for the table.

VECK,† n. An old woman.

VEC'TION,† n. [L. vectio, from veho, to carry.] The act of carrying, or state of being carried.

VEC'TIS, n. [L.] A lever.

VECTITA'TION,† n. [L. vectito.] A carrying.

VEC'TOR, n. [L. from veho, to carry.] In astron., commonly called Radius vector. [See under Radius.]

VEC'TURE, n. [L. vectura, from veho, supra.] A carrying; carriage; conveyance by carrying. [Little used.]

VE'DA, n. The generic name of the four oldest sacred books of the Hindoos, viz., the Rig or Rish Veda, the Yajur or Yajush Veda, the Sama or Saman Veda, and the Atharva or Atharvana Veda. These are believed by the Hindoos to have been directly revealed by Brahma; but the subdivisions are infinite, as are also the connected works. The vedas consist chiefly of prayers, precepts, or maxims, and stories. The word is sometimes written vedam.

VEDAN'TA, n. A system of philosophy among the Hindoos, founded on the revelations contained in the vedas.

VEDETTE', VIDETTE', n. [Fr. vedette; It. vedetta, from vedere, L. video, to see.] A sentinel on horseback. A dragoon or horseman stationed on the outpost of an army, to watch an enemy and give notice of danger.

VEE'NA, n. The most ancient musical instrument of the Hindoos. It is of the guitar kind, with seven metallic strings, and, in good hands, is capable of yielding great melody and expression.

VĒER, v. i. [Fr. virer; Sp. birar; D. vieren; allied probably to L. vario and verto. See Ware.] To turn; to alter its course, as a ship; to change direction; as, the wind veers to the west or north.

And as he leads, the following navy veers. Dryden.

And turn your veering heart with ev'ry gale. Roscommon.

To veer and haul, as wind, to alter its direction.

VĒER, v. t. To turn; to direct to a different course; to cause a ship to change her course from one board to the other by turning her stern to windward, in opposition to tacking.—To veer out, to suffer to run or to let out to a greater length; as, to veer out a rope.—To veer away, to let out; to slacken and let run; as, to veer away the cable. This is called also paying out the cable.—To veer and haul, to pull tight and slacken alternately.

VĒERABLE,† a. Changeable; shifting.

VĒERED, pp. Turned; changed in direction; let out.

VĒERING, ppr. Turning; letting out to a greater length.

VĒERING, n. In navigation, that movement of a ship, by which, in changing her course from one board to another, her head is turned to leeward, in opposition to tacking. The term is used in the same sense as wearing.

VEERINGLY, adv. Changingly; shiftingly.

VEGETABIL'ITY, n. [from vegetable.] Vegetable nature; the quality of growth without sensation.

VEG'ETABLE, n. [Fr. from vegeter, L. vigeo, to grow.] 1. A plant; an organized body destitute of sense and voluntary motion, deriving its nourishment through pores on its outer surface or vessels, in most instances adhering to some other body, as the earth, and in general, propagating itself by seeds. Some vegetables have spontaneous motion. Vegetables alone have the power of deriving nourishment from inorganic matter, or organic matter entirely decomposed. [See PLANT.]—2. In a more limited sense, vegetables are such plants as are used for culinary purposes and cultivated in gardens, or are destined for feeding cattle and sheep. Vegetables for these uses are such as are of a more soft and fleshy substance than trees and shrubs; such as cabbage, cauliflower, turnips, potatoes, peas, beans, &c.

VEG'ETABLE, a. Belonging to plants; as, a vegetable nature; vegetable qualities; vegetable juices.—2. Consisting of plants; as, the vegetable kingdom.—3. Having the nature of plants; as, a vegetable body.—Vegetable anat., that branch of botany which treats of the form, disposition, and structure of the organs of plants.—Vegetable life, the aggregate of the phenomena exhibited by plants, and which are similar to those that in animals are considered as characteristic of vital agency, agreeing with them in many essential respects, though they differ in others, especially in the absence of sensibility and voluntary motion. Plants breathe, feed, digest, increase in their dimensions, produce new individuals, and perform various other functions, analagous to those of animals, and which are essentially characteristic of life.—Vegetable earth, soil in which decayed vegetable matter is in much larger proportion than the primitive earths.—Vegetable kingdom, that division of natural history which embraces the various organized bodies to which we indifferently give the names of vegetables and plants. The science which treats of these is termed Botany,—which see.—Vegetable marrow, the fruit of a species of gourd, Cucurbita ovifera, a native of Persia. It is used for culinary purposes, and so named from the peculiar tenderness and softness of its flesh.—Vegetable ivory, a close-grained and very hard vegetable substance, resembling the finest ivory in texture and colour, and often wrought into ornamental work. It is the produce of a species of palm, Phytelephas macrocarpas, in the form of a nut, often as large as a hen's egg.—Vegetable physiology, that branch of botany which treats of the vital actions of plants, or of the offices which their various organs perform.—Vegetable morphology. [See MORPHOLOGY.] — Vegetable tissues [See TISSUE.]—Vegetable acids, acids obtained from plants, as vinegar, malic, citric, gallic, &c., acids.—Vegetable alkalies, such as are obtained from vegetables; as, morphia, cinchona, strychnia, &c.—Vegetable butters, the concrete oil of certain vegetables, so named from its resemblance to the butter obtained from the milk of animals, and from being employed for similar purposes. The most important vegetable butters are produced by the Bassia butyracea, the Cocoa butyracea, and the Elais guineensis.—Vegetable oils. [See OIL.]—Vegetable wax. [See WAX.]

VEG'ETAL,† a. Having power to cause growth. As a noun, a vegetable.

VEGETA'RIAN, n. One who abstains from animal food, and lives exclusively on vegetables, eggs, milk, &c.—2. One who maintains that vegetables constitute the only proper food for man.

VEGETA'RIAN, a. Of or belonging to the diet or system of the vegetarians.

VEGETA'RIANISM, n. Abstinence from animal food; the dietetic principles of the vegetarians.

VEG'ETATE, v. i. [L. vegeto; Fr. vegeter; from L. vigeo, to flourish.] To sprout; to germinate; to grow; as plants; to grow and be enlarged by nutriment imbibed from the earth, air, or water, by means of roots and leaves. Plants will not vegetate without a certain degree of heat; but some plants vegetate with less heat than others. Potatoes will vegetate after they are pared, provided what are called the eyes or chits are not removed or injured.

> See dying vegetables life sustain,
> See life dissolving vegetate again. Pope.

VEG'ETATING, ppr. Germinating; sprouting; growing; as plants.

VEGETA'TION, n. [Fr.] The process of growing, as plants, by means of nourishment derived from the earth, or from water and air, and received through roots and leaves. We observe that vegetation depends on heat and on certain substances which constitute the nutriment of plants. Rapid vegetation is caused by increased heat and a rich soil.—2. Vegetables or plants in general. In June, vegetation in our climate wears a beautiful aspect.—Vegetation of salts, so called, consists in certain crystalline concretions formed by salts, after solution in water, when set in the air for evaporation. These concretions appear round the surface of the liquor, affixed to the sides of the vessel.

VEG'ETATIVE, a. [Fr. vegetatif.] 1. Growing, or having the power of growing, as plants.—2. Having the power to produce growth in plants; as, the vegetative properties of soil.

VEG'ETATIVENESS, n. The quality of producing growth.

VEGETE, a. [L. vegetus.] Vigorous; active. [Little used.]

VEG'ETIVE, a. [L. vegeto, vigeo.] Vegetable; having the nature of plants; as, vegetive life. [Little used.]

VEG'ETIVE,† n. A vegetable.

VEG'ETO-AN'IMAL, a. Partaking of the nature both of vegetable and animal matter. Vegeto-animal matter is a term formerly applied to vegetable gluten, which is found in the seeds of certain plants, in a state of union with fecula or starch. It is remarkably elastic, and when dry, semi-transparent. By distillation it affords, like animal substances, ammonia, and an empyreumatic oil.

VEGE'TOUS,† a. Vigorous; lively; vegete.

VE'HEMENCE,
VE'HEMENCY, } n. [Fr. vehemence; from L. vehemens, from veho, to carry, that is, to rush or drive.] 1. Violence; great force; properly, force derived from velocity; as, the vehemence of wind. But it is applied to any kind of forcible action; as, to speak with vehemence.—2. Violent ardour; great heat, animated fervour; as, the vehemence of love or affection; the vehemence of anger or other passion.

> I tremble at his vehemence of temper. Addison.

VE'HEMENT, a. [Fr. from L. vehemens.] 1. Violent; acting with great force; furious; very forcible; as, a vehement wind; a vehement torrent; a vehement fire or heat.—2. Very ardent; very eager or urgent; very fervent; as, a vehement affection or passion; vehement desire; vehement eloquence.

VE'HEMENTLY, adv. With great force and violence.—2. Urgently; forcibly; with great zeal or pathos.

VE'HICLE, n. [Fr. vehicule; L. vehiculum, from veho, to carry.] 1. That in which any thing is or may be carried; any kind of carriage moving on land, either on wheels or runners. This word comprehends coaches, chariots, gigs, sulkies, waggons, carts of every kind, sleighs, and sledges. These are all vehicles. But the word is more generally applied to wheel carriages, and rarely we believe to water craft.—2. That which is used as the instrument of conveyance. Language is the vehicle which conveys ideas to others. Letters are vehicles of communication.

> A simple style forms the best vehicle of thought to a popular assembly. Wirt.

3. A substance in which medicine is taken.—4. A menstruum, in which paints, gums, varnishes, &c., are dissolved and prepared for use.

VE'HICLED, a. Conveyed in a vehicle.

VEHIC'ULAR, a. Pertaining to a vehicle.

VEH'MIC, a. Vehmic courts were the tribunals of a secret society in Germany, during the middle ages, which for a time held a powerful sway over the people by their terrible executions.

VEIL, n. [Fr. voile; It. velo; L. velum, from velo, to cover, to spread over; Gael. falach, a veil.] 1. Any kind of cloth which is used for intercepting the view and hiding something; as, the veil of the temple among the Israelites.—2. A piece of thin cloth or silk stuff, used by females to hide their faces. In some eastern countries, certain classes of females never appear abroad without veils.—3. A cover; that which conceals; as, the veil of oblivion.—4. In bot., the horizontal membrane in fungi, connecting the margin of the pileus with the stipes.

VEIL, v. t. To cover with a veil; to conceal.—2. To invest; to cover.—3. To hide. [See VAIL.]

VEILED, pp. Covered; concealed.

VEILING, ppr. Covering; hiding from the sight.

VEIL'LESS, a. Destitute of a veil.

VEIN, n. [Fr. veine; L. vena, from the root of venio, to come, to pass. The sense is a passage, a conduit.] 1. In anat., a long membranous canal which continually becomes wider, does not pulsate, and returns the blood from the arteries to the heart. The veins may be arranged in three divisions: 1. Those that commence from the capillaries all over the body, and return the blood to the heart; 2. The pulmonary veins; 3. The veins of the vena portæ, in which the blood that has circulated through the organs of digestion is conveyed to the liver. The veins are composed, like arteries, of three tunics or coats, which are much more slender than in the arteries, and are supplied internally with semilunar membranes or folds, called valves. All veins originate from the extremities of arteries, or, more properly speaking, from the capillary vessels which connect the veins and arteries, and terminate in the auricles of the heart. Their use is to return the blood from the arteries back to the heart.—2. In plants, a tube or an assemblage of tubes, through which the sap is transmitted along the leaves. The term is more properly applied to the finer and more complex ramifications, which interbranch with each other like net-work; the larger and more direct assemblages of vessels being called ribs and nerves. Veins are also found in the calyx and corol of flowers. The vessels which branch or variously divide over the surface of leaves are called veins.—3. In geol. and mineral., cracks or fissures in rocks, filled up by substances different from the rock, and which may either be earthy or metallic. Veins are sometimes many yards wide, having an extent of many miles, and they ramify or branch out into innumerable smaller parts, often as slender as threads, like the veins of an animal; hence their name. Metallic veins are chiefly found in the primary, and lower, and middle secondary rocks. Many species of stones, as granite, porphyry, &c., are often found in veins.—4. A streak or wave of different colour, appearing in wood, marble, and other stones; variegation.—5. A cavity or fissure in the earth or in other substance.—6. Tendency or turn of mind; a particular disposition or cast of genius; as, a rich vein of wit or humour; a satirical vein.

Invoke the muses, and improve my vein. Waller.

7. Current.

He can open a vein of true and noble thinking. Swift.

8. Humour; particular temper.—9. Strain; quality; as, my usual vein.

VEIN, v. t. To mark or form with veins.

VEINAL, a. Relating to the veins.

VEINED, a. [from vein.] Full of veins; streaked; variegated; as, veined marble.—2. In bot., having vessels branching over the surface, as a leaf.

VEINING, a. Forming veins.

VEINLESS, a. In bot., having no veins; as, a veinless leaf.

VEIN STONES, n. Gangues; the mineral substances which accompany and often enclose the metallic ores in veins.

VEINY, a. Full of veins; as, veiny marble; veiny leaves.

VELA'RIUM, n. [L.] The great awning which by means of tackle was hoisted over the Roman theatre or amphitheatre, to protect the spectators from the rain or the sun's rays.

VELEL'LA, n. [L. velum.] In zool., a genus of acephalous animals, that are wafted on the water.

VELIF'EROUS, a. [L. velum, a sail, and fero, to bear.] Bearing or carrying sails.

VELITA'TION,† n. [L. velitatio.] A dispute or contest; a slight skirmish.

VELIV'OLANT, a. [L. velum and volo.] Passing under full sail.

VELL, n. [Qu. fell, a skin.] A rennet bag. [Local.]

VELL, v. t. [Qu. fell, a skin.] To cut off the turf or sward of land. [Local.]

VEL'LA, n. A genus of plants; class and order Tetradynamia siliculosa; nat. order Cruciferæ. V. annua, annual cress rocket, is a British plant which was found growing on Salisbury plain by Lawson. It has doubly pinnatified leaves, deflexed pouches; the flowers are pale yellow with purplish veins.

VELLE'ITY, n. [Fr. velléité; from L. velle, to will.] A term by which the schools express the lowest degree of desire.

VEL'LET, } † n. Velvet,—which see.
VEL'LUTE, }

VEL'LICATE, v. t. [L. vellico, from vello, to pull It may be from the root of pull.] To twitch; to stimulate; applied to the muscles and fibres of animals; to cause to twitch convulsively.

VEL'LICATED, pp. Twitched or caused to twitch.

VEL'LICATING, ppr. Twitching; convulsing.

VELLICA'TION, n. The act of twitching, or of causing to twitch.—2. A twitching or convulsive motion of a muscular fibre.

VEL'LICATIVE, a. Having the power of vellicating, plucking, or twitching.

VEL'LOPED, pp In her., a cock is said to be armed, crested, and velloped, when his spurs, comb, and gills are borne of a different tincture from the body.

VEL'LOU, } n. [Sp.] A kind of Spanish
VEILL'OU, } money of account. The reale de vellon is worth about 2½d. English. Murray's H. B. of Spain.

VELLO'ZIA, n. Tree lily, a genus of plants, nat. order Bromeliaceæ. They have the appearance of lilies with a perennial stem, two to ten feet high. They give a peculiar aspect to the flora of some districts of South America.

VEL'LUM, n. [Fr. velin. It coincides with fell, D. vel, skin; probably from the root of L. vello.] A fine kind of parchment made of calf's skin, and rendered clear, smooth, and white for writing on.

VEL'LUM-POST, n. A particular sort of superior writing paper.

VEL'LUMY, a. Resembling vellum.

VELO'CE, in music, quick. When this term is prefixed to a movement, it signifies that the movement is to be performed in a rapid manner.

VELOC'IPEDE, n. [L. velox, swift, and pes, foot.] 1. A carriage for one person, having two wheels placed one before the other, in the same line, and connected by a beam, on which the person sits astride, and propels the vehicle, by striking the tips of his toes against the earth. The front wheel may be turned at pleasure, so that the rider may give any direction to the machine. This species of vehicle was invented by M. Drais at Mannheim, in 1817. It was improved by Knight in England, who received a patent for it, but it never came into general use.—2. A name given to a boat, car, or other vehicle, which moves with rapidity.—3. Any thing which moves with velocity.

Velocipede.

VELOC'ITY, n. [Fr. vélocité; L. velocitas, from velox, swift, allied to volo, to fly.] 1. Swiftness; celerity; rapidity; as, the velocity of wind; the velocity of a planet or comet in its orbit or course; the velocity of a cannon ball; the velocity of light. In these phrases, velocity is more generally used than celerity. We apply celerity to animals; as, a horse or an ostrich runs with celerity, and a stream runs with rapidity or velocity; but bodies moving in the air or in ethereal space, move with greater or less velocity, not celerity. This usage is arbitrary, and perhaps not universal.—2. In physics, velocity is that affection of motion by which a body moves over a certain space in a certain time; or, it is the measure of the degree in which a body moves quickly or slowly; that is, one body is said to have a greater velocity than another, when it moves over a greater space in the same time, or an equal space in a less time. The velocity of a body is uniform when it passes through equal spaces in equal times, and it is variable when the spaces passed through in equal times are unequal. The velocity of a body is accelerated when it passes through a greater space in equal successive portions of time; and it is retarded, when a less space is passed through in each successive portion of time.—Absolute velocity is that in which the velocity of a body is considered simply in itself or as passing over a certain space in a certain time.—Relative velocity is that which has respect to the velocity of another moving body.—Angular velocity, the velocity of a body revolving about a fixed point or axis, or oscillating about a fixed point. The angular velocity of a planet is estimated by the angle described at the centre of the sun, by a straight line drawn from that point to the planet, called the radius rector.—Initial velocity, the velocity with which a body begins to move. When the motion of a body is uniform, its velocity is measured by the space described by it in a unit of time, as one second. If the motion of the body is not uniform, its velocity is measured by the space which it would describe uniformly in a given time, if the motion became and continued uniform from that instant of time. The unit of space and time taken in order to measure velocity, may be assumed of any magnitude, but in theoretical mechanics, one second is usually taken as the unit of time, and one foot as the unit of space; so that if a body is said to have a velocity of 25, it is implied that the body is moving at such a rate as would cause it to describe uniformly 25 feet in one second.—Virtual velocities.—[See under VIRTUAL.]

VEL'URE,† n. [Fr. velours.] Velvet.

VEL'VET, n. [It. velluto; Sp. velludo; Fr. velours; L. vellus, hair, nap.] A rich silk stuff, covered on the outside with a close, short, fine, soft shag or nap. It is extensively used for ladies' dresses, and various other purposes. The same name is given to cotton stuffs manufactured in the same way, which are also called velveteens.

VEL'VET, v. t. To paint velvet.

VEL'VET, } a. Made of velvet; or
VEL'VETY, } soft and delicate, like velvet; as, the skin of an animal or the surface of a plant.

VELVETEEN, n. A kind of cloth made of cotton in imitation of velvet; cotton velvet.

VEL'VETING, n. The fine shag of velvet.

VEL'VET-PAVED, a. Paved with velvet.

VEL'VET-RUN'NER, n. In zool., a bird having black and smooth feathers.

VE'NA, n. [L.] A vein. Vena cava, in anat., the largest vein in the body, so named from its great cavity, into which, as a common channel, all the lesser veins, except the pulmonaries, empty themselves. This vein receives the blood from the extremities, and other parts, and transmits it to the heart. It is distinguished into the superior and inferior. Vena porta, the great vein situated at the entrance of the liver. It receives the blood from the abdominal viscera, and carries it into the substance of the liver. It is distinguished into two portions, the hepatic and abdominal. Vena contracta, in hydraulics. [See CONTRACTED VEIN.]

VE'NAL, a [L. vena, a vein.] Pertaining to a vein or to veins; contained in the veins; as, venal blood. [See VENOUS, which is generally used.]

VE'NAL, a. [L. venalis, from veneo, to be sold.] 1. Mercenary; prostitute; that may be bought or obtained for money or other valuable consideration; as, a venal muse; venal services.—2. That may be sold; set to sale; as, all offices are venal in a corrupt government.—3. Purchased; as, a venal vote.

VENAL'ITY, n. Mercenariness; the state of being influenced by money; prostitution of talents, offices, or services for money or reward; as, the venality of a corrupt court.

VEN'ARY, a. [L. venor, to hunt.] Relating to hunting.

VENAT'IC, } a. [L. venaticus, from VENAT'ICAL, } venor, to hunt.] Used in hunting.

VENA'TION, n. [L. venatio, from venor, to hunt.] 1. The act or practice of hunting.—2. The state of being hunted. —3. In bot., the manner in which the veins of leaves are arranged.

VENATOR'IAL, a. Relating to hunting; venatic.

VEND, v. t. [L. vendo; Fr. vendre; It. vendere; Sp. vender.] To sell; to transfer a thing and the exclusive right of possessing it, to another person for a pecuniary equivalent; as, to vend goods; to vend meat and vegetables in market. Vending differs from barter. We vend for money; we barter for commodities. Vend is applicable only to wares, merchandise, or other small articles, not to lands and tenements. We never say, to vend a farm, a lease, or a bond, a right or a horse.

VEND'ED, pp. Sold; transferred for money; as goods.

VENDEE', n. The person to whom a thing is sold. Opposed to vendor.

VENDEMIAIRE, n. [Fr. from L. vindemia, to gather grapes.] The first month of the French republican calendar. It was so called from its being the vintage season. It began Sept. 21 or 22, and ended Oct. 21.

VEND'ER, n. [Fr. vendeur.] A seller; one who transfers the exclusive right of possessing a thing, either his own, or that of another, as his agent. Auctioneers are the venders of goods for other men.

VENDIBIL'ITY, } n. The state of VEND'IBLENESS, } being vendible or saleable.

VEND'IBLE, a. [L. vendibilis.] Saleable; that may be sold; that can be sold; as, vendible goods. Vendible differs from marketable; the latter signifies proper or fit for market, according to the laws or customs of a place. Vendible has no reference to such legal fitness.

VEND'IBLE, n. Something to be sold or offered for sale.

VEND'IBLY, adv. In a saleable manner.

VENDITA'TION,† n. [L. venditatio.] A boastful display.

VENDI''TION, n. [Fr. from L. venditio.] The act of selling; sale.

VEND'OR, n. A vender; a seller.

VENDUE,† n. [Fr. vendu, sold.] Auction; a public sale of any thing by outcry, to the highest bidder.

VENDUE-MASTER,† n. A salesman; an auctioneer.

VENDUE-ROOMS,† n. pl. Sale-rooms; auction-rooms. [This word, and the preceding, once common in some parts of Britain, are still used in the United States, and the West Indies.]

VENEER, v. t. [G. furnieren. This word seems to be from the root of furnish, the primary sense of which is to put on.] To lay, or fix firmly, thin leaves of a fine or superior wood, over a coarse or inferior wood, so as to give the latter the appearance of a solid mass of the former.

VENEER, n. A thin piece of wood of a more valuable kind laid upon another of a more common sort, so that the whole substance appears to be of the more valuable sort.

VENEERED, pp. Overlaid with a thin leaf of a superior wood.

VENEERING, ppr. Overlaying with a thin leaf of a superior wood.

VENEERING, n. The operation or art of laying thin leaves of a superior kind of wood upon a ground or foundation of an inferior material, by which the whole substance has the appearance of the more valuable kind. In this manner articles are produced of elegant appearance, at smaller cost than if they were made solid, or composed entirely of the fine wood which covers their surface. Veneering is sometimes applied in architecture to doors and other surfaces, but more usually to articles of furniture. Marquetry is a more complicated kind of veneering or inlaid work, in which pieces of various kinds of wood, and sometimes of horn, ivory, and metal, are arranged so as to produce a complicated effect.—2. The covering of fine wood laid upon the surface of the coarser material. This word is also written vaneering and fineering.

VENEFI''CAL, } a. [L. veneficium.]
VENEFI''CIOUS, } Acting by poison; bewitching. [Little used.]

VEN'EFICE,† n. [L. veneficium.] The practice of poisoning.

VENEFI''CIOUSLY, adv. By poison or witchcraft. [Little used.]

VEN'EMOUS. See VENOMOUS.

VEN'ENATE, v. t. [L. veneno; venenum, poison, W. gwenwyn; from raging.] To poison; to infect with poison.

VENENA'TION, n. The act of poisoning.—2. Poison; venom.

VENENE, } † a. [Fr. veneneux.]
VEN'ENOSE, } Poisonous; venomous.

VEN'ERABLE, a. [Fr. from L. venerabilis, from veneror, to honour, to worship.] 1. Worthy of veneration or reverence; deserving of honour and respect; as, a venerable magistrate; a venerable parent.—2. Rendered sacred by religious associations, or being consecrated to God and to his worship; to be regarded with awe and treated with reverence; as, the venerable walls of a temple or church.

> The places where saints have suffered for the testimony of Christ.. rendered venerable by their death. Hooker.

VEN'ERABLENESS, n. The state or quality of being venerable.

VEN'ERABLY, adv. In a manner to excite reverence.

> An awful pile! stands venerably great. Addison.

VEN'ERATE, v. t. [Fr. venerer; L. veneror.] To regard with respect and reverence; to reverence; to revere. We venerate an old faithful magistrate; we venerate parents and elders; we venerate men consecrated to sacred offices. We venerate old age or gray hairs. We venerate, or ought to venerate, the gospel and its precepts.

> And seem'd to venerate the sacred shade. Dryden.

VEN'ERATED, pp. Reverenced; treated with honour and respect.

VEN'ERATING, ppr. Regarding with reverence.

VENERA'TION, n. [Fr. from L. veneratio.] The highest degree of respect and reverence; respect mingled with some degree of awe; a feeling or sentiment excited by the dignity and superiority of a person, or by the sacredness of his character, and with regard to place, by it consecration to sacred services.

> We find a secret awe and veneration for one who moves about us in a regular and illustrious course of virtue. Addison.

2. Among phrenologists, the organ which produces the sentiment of respect and reverence; and, when directed to the Supreme Being, adoration. It is the source also of the tendency to look up to and admire superiors in rank and power. It is also the chief source of filial piety. It is situated at the middle of the coronal region of the brain, at the bregma or fontanel of anatomists. When too energetic, it leads to superstition and religious enthusiasm.

VEN'ERATOR, n. One who venerates and reverences.

VENE'REAL, a. [L. venereus, from Venus; W. Gwener, from gwen, white, fair. See VENUS.] 1. Pertaining to sexual intercourse.—2. Connected with sexual intercourse; as, a venereal disease; venereal virus or poison.—3. Adapted to the cure of venereal diseases; as, venereal medicines.—4. VENGE,† v. t. (venj.) [Fr. venger.] To avenge; to punish. [See AVENGE and REVENGE.]
VENGEABLE,† a. (venj'able.) [from venge.] Revengeful; as, vengeable despite.
VENGEANCE, n. (venj'ance.) [Fr. from venger, to revenge, L. vindico.] The infliction of pain on another, in return for an injury or offence. Such infliction, when it proceeds from malice or mere resentment, and is not necessary for the purposes of justice, is revenge, and a most heinous crime. When such infliction proceeds from a mere love of justice, and the necessity of punishing offenders for the support of the laws, it is vengeance, and is warrantable and just. In this case, vengeance is a just retribution, recompense, or punishment. In this latter sense the word is used in Scripture, and frequently applied to the punishments inflicted by God on sinners.

To me belongeth vengeance and recompense; Deut xxxii.
The Lord will take vengeance on his adversaries; Nah. i.

With a vengeance, in familiar lan., signifies with great violence or vehemence; as, to strike one with a vengeance. Formerly, what a vengeance, was a phrase used for what emphatical.

But what a vengeance makes thee fly? Hudibras.

VENGEFUL, a. (venj'ful.) Vindictive; retributive; as, God's vengeful ire.—2. Revengeful.
VENGE'FULLY, adv. Vindictively.
VENGEMENT, n. (venj'ment.) Avengement; penal retribution. [Avengement is generally used.]
VENG'ER,† n. An avenger.
VE'NI, VI'DI, VI'CI. [L.] I came, I looked, I conquered. These were the words which Cæsar used when he informed the Roman senate of his victories in Gaul.
VE'NIABLE,† a. [See VENIAL.] Venial; pardonable.
VE'NIABLY,† adv. Pardonably; excusably.
VE'NIAL, a. [It. veniale; Sp. venial; Fr. veniel; from L. venia, pardon, leave to depart, from the root of venio, and signifying literally a going or passing.] 1. That may be forgiven; pardonable; as, a venial fault or transgression.—Venial sin, in the Roman catholic church, a sin which weakens sanctifying grace, but does not destroy it like mortal or deadly sins. It does not, therefore, exclude from absolution or communion, when there is evidence of repentance. The reformed churches hold all sins to be venial, through the merits of the Redeemer; but the most trifling sins not to be venial, except through the righteousness and atonement of Christ.—2. In familiar lan., excusable; that may be allowed or permitted to pass without censure; as, a venial slip or fault.—3. Allowed.

Permitting him the while Venial discourse unblam'd. Milton.

VENIAL'ITY, n. Quality of being venial.
VE'NIALLY, adv. In a venial manner; pardonably.
VE'NIALNESS, n. State of being excusable or pardonable.

VENI'RE FACIAS, or VENI'RE. In law, a writ or precept directed to the sheriff, requiring him to cause a jury to come or appear in the neighbourhood where a cause is brought to issue, to try the same. It is also a writ in the nature of a summons, to cause the party indicted on a penal statute to appear.
VE'NI, SANCTE SPIR'ITUS. [L. come, Holy Spirit.] The name given to a mass, celebrated by Roman catholics to invoke the assistance of the Holy Spirit.
VENISON, n. (ven'izn, or ven'zn.) [Fr. venaison, from L. venatio, a hunting, from venor, to hunt.] The flesh of beasts of game, or of such wild animals as are taken in the chase, particularly those of the deer kind.
VEN'OM, n. [Fr. venin; It. veneno; L. venenum; W. gwenwyn. It appears by the Welch word and its affinities, that the primary sense is raging, furious, and hence it is to be referred to the root of L. venor, to hunt, to drive, or chase; venio, to come. See VENUS, &c.] 1. Poison; matter fatal or injurious to life. Venom is generally used to express noxious matter that is applied externally, or that is discharged from animals, as that of bites and stings of serpents, scorpions, &c.; and poison, to express substances taken into the stomach.—2. Spite; malice.
VEN'OM, v. t. To poison; to infect with venom. [Little used, but envenom is in use and elegant. Venom may be elegantly used in poetry.]
VEN'OMED, pp. Poisoned; infected with poison.
VEN'OM-MOUTH'ED, a. Apt to bite.
VEN'OMOUS, a. Poisonous; noxious to animal life; as, the bite of a serpent may be venomous. The sack at the base of the rattlesnake's teeth, contains venomous matter.—2. Noxious; mischievous; malignant; as, a venomous progeny.—3. Spiteful; as, a venomous writer.
VEN'OMOUSLY, adv. Poisonously; malignantly; spitefully.
VEN'OMOUSNESS, n. Poisonousness; noxiousness to animal life.—2. Malignity; spitefulness.
VE'NOUS, a. [L. venosus, from vena, a vein.] 1. Pertaining to a vein or to veins; contained in veins; as, venous blood, which is distinguishable from arterial blood by its darker colour.—2. In bot., veined. A venous leaf has vessels branching, or variously divided, over its surface.
VENT, n. [Fr. vente, Sp. venta, sale, from vendre, Sp. vender; from the root of L. venio, Eng. wind, &c.; properly a passage.] 1. A small aperture; a hole or passage for air or other fluid to escape; as, the vent of a cask.—2. The flue or funnel of a chimney.—3. The touch-hole or the opening in a cannon or other piece of artillery, by which fire is communicated to the charge.—Vent-field, that part of a gun or howitzer between the breech mouldings and the astragal.—Vent-astragal, that part of a gun or howitzer which determines the vent-field.—4. Passage from secrecy to notice; publication.—5. The act of opening.—6. Emission; passage; escape from confinement; as, his smothered passions urge for vent.—7. Discharge; utterance; means of discharge.

Had like grief been dew'd in tears,
Without the vent of words. Milton.

8. Sale; as, the vent of a thousand copies of a treatise.—9. Opportunity to sell; demand.

There is no vent for any commodity except wool. Temple.

10.† [Sp. venta.] An inn; a baiting place.—11. In birds and fishes, the place for the discharge of excrement.—To give vent to, to suffer to escape; to let out; to pour forth.
VENT, v. t. To let out at a small aperture.—2. To let out; to suffer to escape from confinement; to utter; to pour forth; as, to vent passion or complaint.

The queen of heav'n did thus her fury vent. Dryden.

3.† To utter; to report.—4. To publish.

The sectators did greatly enrich their inventions by venting the stolen treasures of divine letters.† Ralegh.

5. To sell.

Therefore did those nations vent such spice.† Ralegh.

[Instead of vent, in the latter sense, we use vend.]
VENT,† v. i. To snuff.
VEN'TA, n. [Sp.] A mean inn; a wayside tavern.
VENT'AGE,† n. A small hole, as of a flute.
VENT'AIL, } n. [Fr. a folding door.]
VENT'AYLE, } The visor or movable front of a helmet which covered the entire face, and through apertures in which air was breathed. Also, called aventail.
VENTAN'NA, } n. [Sp. ventana.] A
VENTAN'A, } window. [Not English.]
VENT'ER, n. One who utters, reports, or publishes.

VENT'ER, n. [L.] In anat., the abdomen, or lower belly; formerly applied to any large cavity containing viscera, as the head, thorax, and abdomen, called the three venters.—2. The womb; and hence, mother. A. has a son B. by one venter, and a daughter C. by another venter; children by different venters.—3. The belly of a muscle.—4. In entom., the lower part of the abdomen.

VENT'-HOLE, n. A small aperture to let out the air.

VEN'TIDUCT, n. [L. ventus, wind, and ductus, a canal; It. ventidotti.] In arch., a passage for wind or air; a subterraneous passage or pipe for ventilating apartments.

VEN'TILATE, v. t. [L. ventilo, from ventus, wind; Fr. ventiler.] 1. To fan with wind; to open and expose to the free passage of air or wind; to supply with fresh air; as, to ventilate a room; to ventilate a cellar.—2 To cause the air to pass through; as, to ventilate a mine.—3. To winnow; to fan; as, to ventilate wheat.—4.† To examine; to discuss; that is, to agitate; as, to ventilate questions of policy.

VEN'TILATED, pp. Exposed to the action of the air; supplied with fresh air; fanned; winnowed; discussed.

VEN'TILATING, ppr. Exposing to the action of wind; supplying with fresh air; fanning; discussing.

VENTILA'TION, n. [Fr. from L. ventilatio.] 1. The act of ventilating; the art or operation of supplying buildings, apartments, and other confined places, with a necessary quantity of fresh air, so as to maintain the atmosphere in such places in a constant state of purity.—2. The act of fanning or winnowing, for the purpose of separating chaff and dust.—3.† Vent; utterance.—4.† Refrigeration.

VEN'TILATOR, n. An instrument or machine for expelling foul or stagnant air from any close place or apartment, and introducing that which is fresh and pure. Ventilators are of very various constructions and sizes.

VENT'ING, ppr. Letting out; uttering.

VENTOSE', a. Windy; flatulent.

VEN'TOSE,† n. A cupping glass.

VENTOSE, n. [Fr., pr. van-tōze; from the Lat. ventus, wind, on account of the usual windiness of the season thus indicated.] The sixth month of the French republican year. It was composed of thirty or of thirty-one days, beginning Feb. 20, and ending March 20, or it ran from Feb. 19 to March 20; according as the year was bissextile or otherwise.

VENTOS'ITY, n. [Fr. ventosité; from L. ventosus.] Windiness; flatulence.

VENT'-PEG, n. A peg to stop a vent-hole.

VEN'TRAL, a. [from L. venter, belly.] Belonging to the belly. The ventral fins, in fishes, are placed between the anus and the throat.

VEN'TRICLE, n. [L. ventriculus, from venter, belly.] In a general sense, a small cavity in an animal body. It is applied to the stomach. It is also applied to two cavities of the heart, distinguished as the right and left ventricles, which propel the blood into the arteries. The word is also applied to cavities in different parts of the brain.

VEN'TRICOUS, } a. [L. ventricosus,
VENT'RICOSE, } from venter, belly.] In bot., bellied; distended; swelling out in the middle; as, a ventricous perianth.—2. In conchology, applied to shells which are inflated, or which swell in the middle.

VENTRIC'ULAR, a. Pertaining to a ventricle; bellied; distended in the middle.

VENTRIC'ULITES, n. A genus of spongoid Zoophytes found fossil in flints, and in the chalk.

VENTRIC'ULOUS, a. [supra] Somewhat distended in the middle.

VENTRILOCU'TION, n. A speaking after the manner of a ventriloquist.

VENTRILO'QUIAL, a. Pertaining to ventriloquism.

VENTRIL'OQUISM, } n. [L. venter,
VENTRIL'OQUY, } belly and loquor, to speak.] The act, art, or practice of speaking or uttering sounds in such a manner that the voice appears to come, not from the person, but from some distant place, as from the opposite side of the room, from the cellar, &c. This was formerly supposed to be done by forming the articulations in the cavity of the chest or of the belly; hence the name. Ventriloquism may be regarded as a species of vocal mimicry of sounds, by which an illusion is produced on the hearer, who imagines that the sound comes, not from the mimic, but from some other appropriate source, at a given or varying distance, and in any or even several directions successively. To make the illusion perfect, the imitations require to be made without moving the lips, features, or body. The art of the ventriloquist is said to consist merely in this: after drawing a long breath so as to fill the lungs with air, he employs during expiration, such organs of voice as can be used with as little movement of the lips, mouth, or cheeks as is compatible with the pronunciation of certain words or sounds. By a dexterous management of the tones of his voice in uttering such words or sounds in the way described, he easily leads his hearers to imagine that the sounds come from a person in a box, or up the chimney, or from inanimate objects, and, to aid the deception, he endeavours by various contrivances to divert the attention of his auditors. The word Ventriloquy is little used.

VENTRIL'OQUIST, n. One who speaks in such a manner that his voice appears to come from some distant place.

> The ancient ventriloquists seemed to speak from their bellies. Encyc.

VENTRIL'OQUOUS, a. Speaking in such a manner as to make the sound appear to come from a place remote from the speaker

VEN'TURE, n. [Fr. aventure; It. and Sp. ventura; from L. venio, ventus, venturus, to come.] 1. A hazard; an undertaking of chance or danger; the risking of something upon an event which cannot be foreseen with tolerable certainty.

> I, in this venture, double gains pursue. Dryden.

2. Chance; hap; contingency; luck; an event that is not or cannot be foreseen.—3. The thing put to hazard; particularly, something sent to sea in trade.

> My ventures are not in one bottom trusted. Shak.

At a venture, at hazard; without seeing the end or mark; or without foreseeing the issue.

> A bargain at a venture made. Hudibras.
> A certain man drew a bow at a venture; 1 Kings xxii.

VEN'TURE, v. i. To dare; to have courage or presumption to do, undertake, or say. A man ventures to mount a ladder; he ventures into battle; he ventures to assert things which he does not know.—2. To run a hazard or risk.

> Who freights a ship to venture on the seas. Dryden.

To venture at, to venture on or upon, to dare to engage in; to attempt without any certainty of success. It is rash to venture upon such a project.

> And when I venture at the comic style. Waller.

VEN'TURE, v. t. To expose to hazard; to risk; as, to venture one's person in a balloon.—2. To put or send on a venture or chance; as, to venture a horse to the West Indies.

VEN'TURED, pp. Put to the hazard; risked.

VEN'TURER, n. One who ventures or puts to hazard.

VEN'TURESOME, a. Bold; daring; intrepid; as, a venturesome boy.

VEN'TURESOMELY, adv. In a bold, daring manner.

VEN'TURESOMENESS, n. Quality of being venturesome.

VEN'TURING, ppr. Putting to hazard; daring.

VEN'TURING, n. The act of putting to risk; a hazarding.

VEN'TUROUS, a. Daring; bold; hardy; fearless; intrepid; adventurous; as, a venturous soldier.

> With vent'rous arm
> He pluck'd, he tasted. Milton.

VEN'TUROUSLY, adv. Daringly; fearlessly; boldly.

VEN'TUROUSNESS, n. Boldness; hardiness; fearlessness; intrepidity. The event made them repent of their venturousness.

VEN'UE, n. [L. vicinia; Norm. visne.] In law, a neighbourhood or near place; the place where an action is laid. The county in which the trial of a particular cause takes place, is said to be the venue of that cause. Originally jurors were summoned from the immediate neighbourhood where a fact happened, to try it by their own knowledge, but they are now summonable from the body of the county. In what are termed local actions, the actual place in which the subject matter is situated must be laid as the venue in the action; but in those actions termed transitory, that is, actions of debt, contract, for personal injuries, &c, any county may be laid as the venue in the action. In criminal trials, the venue is the county in which the offence charged was actually committed. The courts, however, have a discretionary power of changing the venue, both in civil and criminal cases.

VEN'UE, n. A thrust. [See VENEY.]

VE'NULES, n. plur. [L. venula, a small vein.] In bot., the name given to the last ramifications of the veins of a leaf, which intermingle frequently, and form the skeleton of the leaf.

VEN'ULITE, n. A petrified shell of the genus Venus.

VE'NUS, n. [L.; W. Gwener from gwen, white, fair, the feminine of gwyn, white, fair, that affords happiness; also gwyn, rage, violent impulse of the mind, lust, smart; gwyndu, to whiten; gwynt, wind, L. ventus; gwynawg, full of rage; gwent, an open country; gwenu, to smile; gwenwyn, poison, L. venenum, Eng. venom; gwenwynaw, to poison, to fret, or irritate. These affinities lead to the true origin of these words. The primary sense of the root is to shoot or rush, as light or wind. From light is derived the sense of white, fair, Venus, or it is from opening, parting; and from rushing, moving, comes wind, and the sense of raging, fury, whence L. venenum, poison, that which frets or causes to rage. These words all coincide with L. venio, which signifies to rush, to fall, to happen; venor, to hunt, &c. The Greeks had the same idea of the goddess of love, viz., that her name signified fairness, whiteness, and hence the fable that she sprung from froth, whence her Greek name Ἀφροδίτη, from ἀφρος, froth. But Venus may be from lust or raging.] 1. In myth., the goddess of beauty and love; that is, beauty or love deified; just as the Gaelic and Irish diana, swiftness, impetuosity, is denominated the goddess of hunting. The poets mention two of the name Venus, the elder daughter of Uranus and the younger daughter of Jupiter and Dione, but the events in the history of the two are often confounded. She is represented by the Greeks as the highest ideal of female beauty and love, sometimes entirely naked and sometimes but slightly covered. The most famous antique statute of Venus is the dé Medici found in the Villa Hadriana at Tivoli, and one of the most famous modern statues of this goddess is the Venus of Canova, where she is represented as rising from the bath.—2. In astron., one of the inferior planets, the second in order of distance from the sun, and the most brilliant of all the planetary bodies. From her alternate appearance in the morning and evening, she was called by the ancients Lucifer and Hesperus, the morning and evening star. The distance of Venus from the sun is about 68 millions of miles; her diameter 7700 miles; and her period of revolution round the sun about 224 mean solar days. She revolves about an axis, and the time of rotation is about 23h 21m, the axis of rotation being inclined to the ecliptic at an angle of about 75°. Her greatest angular distance from the sun is from 45° to 47° 12′. According to her various positions relatively to the sun and earth, she changes her phases like the moon, appearing full at the superior conjunction, gibbous between that point and the points of her greatest elongation, half-mooned at these points, and crescent-shaped or horned between these and the inferior conjunction. Venus is sometimes seen to pass over the disc of the sun, and this passage is called a transit of Venus. [See TRANSIT.]—3. In the old chemistry, a name given to copper.—4. In conchology, a Linnæan genus of marine bivalve molluscs, including the common clam. The species are found buried in the sand, near the shore, particularly in hot climates. Most of the animals serve as food for man, and some of the shells are so beautiful as fully to justify the name given to the genus. The shells of V. mercenaria are, by the N. American Indians, formed into various ornaments.

Venus of Canova.

VE'NUS'S COMB, n. A plant of the genus Scandix, the S. pecten veneris; called also shepherd's needle and needle-chervil.

VE'NUS'S FLY'-TRAP, n. A plant, Dionæa muscipula. It seizes and holds fast insects which brush against its leaves. [See DIONÆA.]

VE'NUS'S LOOK'ING-GLASS, n. A plant of the genus Campanula, the C. speculum.

VE'NUS'S NA'VEL-WORT, n. A plant of the genus Cynoglossum, the C. linifolium.

VENUST',† a. [L. venestus.] Beautiful.

VERA'CIOUS, a. [L. verax, from verus, true.] 1. Observant of truth: habitually disposed to speak truth.—2. True. [Little used.]

VERAC'ITY, n. [It. veracità; from L. verax, from verus, true.] 1. Habitual observance of truth, or habitual truth; as, a man of veracity. His veracity is not called in question. The question of the court is, whether you know the witness to be a man of veracity. We rely on history, when we have confidence in the veracity and industry of the historian. "The veracity of facts," is not correct language. Truth is applicable to men and to facts; veracity to men only, or to sentient beings.—2. Invariable expression of truth; as, the veracity of our senses.

VERAN'DA, VERAN'DAH, n. An Oriental word denoting a kind of open portico, or a sort of light external gallery in front of a building with a sloping roof, supported on slender pillars, and frequently partly enclosed in front with lattice-work. In India almost every house is furnished with a veranda, which serves to keep the inner rooms cool and dark.

VERA'TRIA, VERA'TRINE, n. [L. veratrum.] A vegetable alkaloid, found in Veratrum sabadilla, Veratrum album, &c. It is generally obtained as a crystalline powder, nearly white, very acrid and poisonous, exciting, when introduced into the nostrils, violent and even dangerous sneezing. It is insoluble in water, but very soluble in alcohol. In the form of tincture, and still more in that of ointment, veratrine is much used as an external application in cases of neuralgia and obstinate rheumatic pains.

VERA'TRIC ACID, n. The acid with which veratria exists combined in Veratrum sabadilla. It crystallizes in short white transparent prisms, which are soluble in water and alcohol. It forms crystallizable salts with the alkalies, which are called veratrates. It is sometimes called cevadillic or sabadillic acid.

VERA'TRUM, n. A well known genus of plants, belonging to the nat. order Melanthaceæ. Veratrum album, common white hellebore, is a native of most alpine meadows in the southern, central, and northern parts of Europe, but is not a native of Britain. Two varieties are officinal. Every part of both varieties is acrid and poisonous, especially the rhizomas. V. sabadilla, is the species from which the vegetable alkaloid veratrine of the pharmacopeias is directed to be prepared. The V. viride of North America is an acrid emetic and powerful stimulant, followed by sedative effects.

Veratrum album.

VERB, n. [L. verbum; Fr. verbe; Sp. and It. verbo; Ir. fearb; probably from the root of L. fero.] 1. In gram., a part of speech that expresses action, motion, being, suffering, or a request or command to do or forbear any thing. The verb affirms, declares, asks, or commands; as, I write; he runs; the river flows; they sleep; we see; they are deceived; depart; go; come; write; does he improve? When the action expressed by a verb is exerted on an object, or terminates upon it, the act is considered as passing to that object, and the verb is called transitive; as, I read Livy. When the act expressed by the verb, terminates in the agent or subject, the verb is called intransitive; as, I run; I walk; I sleep. When the agent and object change places, and the agent is considered as the instrument by which the object is affected, the verb is called passive; as, Goliath was slain by David.—2. A word.

VERB'AL, a. [Fr.; Lat. verbalis.] 1. Spoken; expressed to the ear in words; not written; as, a verbal message; a verbal contract; verbal testimony.—2. Oral; uttered by the mouth.—3. Consisting in mere words; as, a verbal reward.—4. Respecting words only; as, a verbal dispute.—5. Minutely exact in words, or attending to words only; as, a verbal critic.—6. Literal; having word answering to word; as, a verbal translation.—7. In gram., derived from a verb; as, a verbal noun.—8. Verbose; abounding with words.

VERB'AL, n. In gram., a noun derived from a verb.

VERB'ALISM, n. Something expressed orally.

VERB'ALIST, n. One who deals in words merely; one skilled in words.

VERBAL'ITY, n. Mere words; bare literal expressions.

VERB'ALIZE, v. t. To convert into a verb.

VERB'ALLY, adv. In words spoken; by words uttered; orally.—2. Word for word: as, to translate verbally.

VERBA'RIAN, a. Relating to, or consisting of words.

VERBAS'CUM, n. Mullein, a genus of plants; nat. order Scrophulariaceæ. [See MULLEIN.]

VERBA'TIM, adv. [L.] Word for word; in the same words; as, to tell a story verbatim as another has related it.—Verbatim et literatim, word for word, and letter for letter.

VERBE'NA, n. Vervain, a genus of plants, the type of the nat. order Verbenaceæ. Most of the species are weeds, and are generally inhabitants of Europe and North America. V. officinalis, common vervain, a plant common in England, was once held in great repute for its medical virtues, and entered into the composition of various charms and love philters. Two species are cultivated: the one (V. triphylla, or Aloysia citrodora.) for its lemon-scented foliage, and the other (V. aubletia,) for the great beauty of its flowers.

VERBENA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of plants, the species of which are trees or shrubs, sometimes only herbaceous plants, with generally opposite, simple, or compound leaves without stipules. The flowers are in opposite corymbs, or spiked alternately, sometimes in dense heads, and very seldom axillary or solitary. The species are common in the tropics of both hemispheres, and in the temperate districts of South America. They are not of much importance in a medicinal or economical point of view, with the exception of the teak-tree, and the Lantana psuedothea, used in infusion as tea in Brazil. The properties formerly ascribed to vervain appear to have been imaginary.

VER'BENATE, v. t. [L. verbena, vervain.] Strewed with vervain.

VER'BENATED, pp. Strewed or sanctified with vervain, according to a custom of the ancients.

VER'BENATING, ppr. Strewing with vervain.

VERB'ERATE,† v. t. [L. verbero.] To beat; to strike.

VERB'ERATION, n. A beating or striking blows.—2. The impulse of a body, which causes sound.

VERBESI'NA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Compositæ. The species are shrubs or herbaceous plants mostly natives of Central America. From the seeds of V. sativa a fixed oil is obtained, which has the reputation of being anthelmintic.

VERB'IAGE, n. [Fr.] Verbosity; use of many words without necessity; superabundance of words.

VERBOSE, a. [L. verbosus.] Abounding in words; using or containing more words than are necessary; prolix; tedious by a multiplicity of words; as, a verbose speaker; a verbose argument.

VERBOSELY, adv. Wordily.

VERBOS'ITY, } n. Employment of VERBOSENESS, } a superabundance of words; the use of more words than are necessary; as, the verbosity of a speaker.—2. Superabundance of words; prolixity; as, the verbosity of a discourse or argument.

VERD. See VERT.

VER'DANCY, n. [See VERDANT.] Greenness.

VER'DANT, a. [Fr. verdoyant; L. viridans, from viridis, from vireo, to be green. The radical sense of the verb is to grow or advance with strength.] 1. Green; fresh; covered with growing plants or grass; as, verdant fields; a verdant lawn.—2. Flourishing.

VERD ANTIQUE, n. (verd anteek'.) [Fr.] Ancient green; a term given to a green incrustation on ancient coins, brass, or copper. It is a hydrated dicarbonate of copper.—2. In mineral., an aggregate of serpentine and white crystallized marble, having a greenish colour. It is beautifully mottled, takes a fine polish, and is much used for ornamental purposes.

VERD'ANTLY, adv. Freshly; flourishingly.

VER'DERER, } n. [Fr. verdier, from
VER'DEROR, } verd, green; or Low L. viridarius.] In England, an officer in the royal forests, whose peculiar charge was to take care of the vert, that is, the trees and underwood of the forest, to keep the assizes, view, receive, and enroll attachments and presentments of all manner of trespasses.

VER'DICT, n. [L. verum dictum, true declaration.] 1. The answer of a jury given to the court concerning any matter of fact in any cause, civil or criminal, committed to their trial and examination. In criminal causes, the jury decide the law as well as the fact. Verdicts are general or special; general, when they decide in general terms, or in the terms of the general issue, as no wrong, no disseisin; special, when the jury find and state the facts at large, and as to the law, pray the judgment of the court. [See JURY.]—2. Decision; judgment; opinion pronounced; as, to be condemned by the verdict of the public.

These enormities were condemned by the verdict of common humanity. South.

VER'DIGRIS, } n. [Fr. verd and gris;
VER'DEGRIS, } green-gray.] Diacetate of copper. It was formerly prepared almost exclusively in France, by causing the husks and stalks of the grape, after wine-making, to ferment in contact with copper plates, by which means a coat of verdigris was formed on the surface of the copper. It is now prepared in England by more direct processes, principally by alternating copper plates and pieces of coarse woollen cloth previously soaked in crude pyroligneous acid. Verdigris, when pure, is in the form of light blue acicular crystals of a silky lustre. It is decomposed by the stronger acids, by the alkalies, and by heat. It is much employed as a pigment in hat-making, dyeing black, in several processes in the chemical arts, and in medicine. Verdigris, like all the compounds into which copper enters, is poisonous. This salt is very apt to form on the surface of copper utensils by the action of vegetables. Distilled verdigris, a binacetate or superacetate of copper.

VER'DITER, n. [verde-terre, green earth; terre-verte.] A blue or bluish green pigment, generally prepared by decomposing nitrate of oxide of copper with chalk. It is a hydrated percarbonate of copper.

VER'DITURE, n. The faintest and palest green.

VER'DOY, a. In her., an epithet for a border charged with vegetables; as, a border verdoy of trefoils, cinquefoils, &c.

VERD'URE, n. [Fr.; from L. vireo.] Green; greenness; freshness of vegetation; as, the verdure of the meadows in June; the verdure of spring.

VERD'URED, a. Covered with verdure.

VERD'UROUS, a. Covered with green; clothed with the fresh colour of vegetables; as, verdurous pastures.

VER'ECUND, a. [L. verecundus.] Bashful; modest. [Not much used.]

VERECUN'DIOUS,† a. Modest; bashful.

VERECUND'ITY, n. Bashfulness; modesty; blushing. [Not in much use.]

VERETIL'LUM, n. [L.] A kind of polypus.

VERGE, n. (verj.) [Fr.; It. verga, L. virga, a rod, that is, a shoot.] 1. A rod, or something in the form of a rod or staff, carried as an emblem of authority; the mace of a dean.—2. The stick or wand with which persons are admitted tenants, by holding it in the hand, and swearing fealty to the lord. On this account, such tenants are called tenants by the verge.—3. In law, the compass or extent of the king's court, within which is bounded the jurisdiction of the lord steward of the king's household; so called from the verge or staff which the marshal bears.—4. The extreme side or end of any thing which has some extent of length; the brink; edge; border; margin. [This seems to be immediately connected with the L. vergo.]—5. Among gardeners, the edge or outside of a border; also, a slip of grass adjoining to gravel-walks, and dividing them from the borders in the parterre-garden.—6. The spindle of the balance-wheel of a watch.

VERGE, v. i. [L. vergo.] 1. To tend downward; to bend; to slope; as, a hill verges to the north.—2. To tend; to incline; to approach.

I find myself verging to that period of life which is to be labour and sorrow. Swift.

VERGE BOARDS. See BARGE BOARDS.

VERG'ER, n. He that carries the verge or mace before the bishop, dean, &c.—2. An officer who carries a white wand before the justices of either bench in England.—3. A pew-opener or attendant in a church.

VERGET'TE, n. [Fr.] In her., a pallet, also, a shield divided with pallets.

VERG'ING, ppr. Bending or inclining; tending.

VER'GOULEUSE, n. A variety of pear; contracted to vergaloo.

VERID'ICAL,† a. [L. veridicus; verus and dico.] Telling truth.

VER'IFIABLE, a. [from verify.] That may be verified; that may be proved or confirmed by incontestable evidence.

VERIFICA'TION, n. [Fr. See VERIFY.] The act of verifying or proving to be true; the act of confirming or establishing the authenticity of any powers granted, or of any transaction, by legal or competent evidence.

VER'IFIED, pp. Proved; confirmed by competent evidence.

VER'IFIER, n. One that proves or makes appear to be true.

VER'IFY, v. t. [Fr. verifier; L. verus, true, and facio, to make; G. wahr, D. waar, W. gwir, pure, true, ether, purity; gwiraw, to verify.] 1. To prove to be true: to confirm.

This is verified by a number of examples. Baron.

2. To fulfil, as a promise; to confirm the truth of a prediction; to show to be true. The predictions of this venerable patriot have been verified; Gen. xlii; 1 Kings viii.—3. In the U. States, to confirm or establish the authenticity of any thing by examination or competent evidence. The first act of the house of representatives is to verify their powers, by exhibiting their credentials to a committee of the house, or other proper authority.

VER'IFYING, ppr. Proving to be true; confirming.

VER'ILY, adv. [from very.] In truth; in fact; certainly.—2. Really; truly; with great confidence. It was verily thought the enterprise would succeed.

VERISIM'ILAR, a. [L. verisimilis; verus, true, and similis, like.] Having the appearance of truth; probable; likely.

VERISIMIL'ITUDE, n. [L. verisimilitudo.] The appearance of truth; probability; likelihood.

Verisimilitude and opinion are an easy purchase; but true knowledge is dear and difficult. Glanville.

VERISIMIL'ITY, for Verisimilitude, is not in use.

VER'ITABLE, a. [Fr.] True; agreeable to fact.

VER'ITABLY, adv. In a true manner.

VE'RITAS CONVI'CII. [Lat.] In law, the truth of the charge or accusation.

VER'ITY, n. [Fr. verité; L. veritas, from verus, true; W. gwirez; Sans. wartha.] 1. Truth; consonance of a statement, proposition or other thing to fact; 1 Tim. ii.

It is a proposition of eternal verity, that none can govern while he is despised. South.

2. A true assertion or tenet.

By this it seems to be a verity. Davies.

3. Moral truth; agreement of the words with the thoughts.—Oath of verity. In Scots law, when a party in a cause refers the matter in dispute to the oath of his adversary, the oath so emitted is called an oath of verity.

VER'JUICE, n. [Fr. verjus, that is, verd jus, the juice of green fruits.] An acid liquor expressed from wild apples, sour grapes, &c., used in sauces, ragouts, and the like. It is used also in the purification of wax for candles, in poultices, &c.

VER'MEIL. See VERMILLION.

VERMEOL'OGIST, n. [infra.] One who treats of vermes.

VERMEOL'OGY,† n. [L. vermes, worms, and Gr. λόγος, discourse.] A discourse or treatise on vermes, or that part of natural history which treats of vermes. [Helminthology is the legitimate term.]

VER'MES, n. plur. [L.] Worms. The sixth class of animals in the Linnæan arrangement of the animal kingdom. It comprised all animals which could not be arranged under Vertebrata and Insecta. Linnæus divides the vermes into five orders, viz., Intestina, Mollusca, Testacea, Lithophyta, and Zoophyta. Modern naturalists have made a very different arrangement of these animals, and the term vermes is now limited to the Annelides, and Entozoa.

VERMICEL'LI, n. [It. vermicello, a little worm, L. vermiculus, from vermis, a worm.] A species of wheaten paste, manufactured in Italy, in the form of long, slender tubes or threads, and so named on account of its worm-like appearance. Vermicelli is the same substance as maccaroni, the only difference between them being, that the latter is made into larger tubes. Both of them are prepared in the greatest perfection at Naples, where they form the principal food of the bulk of the population, and are a favourite dish of all classes. Vermicelli is used amongst us in soups, broths, &c.

VERMI''CEOUS, a. [L. vermes.] Pertaining to worms; wormy.

VERMIC'ULAR, a. [L. vermiculus, a little worm, from vermis, a worm.] Pertaining to a worm; resembling a worm; particularly, resembling the motion of a worm; as, the vermicular motion of the intestines, called also peristaltic.—Vermicular or vermiculated work, in sculp., a sort of ornament consisting of frets or knots in Mosaic pavements, winding and representing the tracks of worms. Also, a species of rustic work which is so wrought as to have the appearance of having been eaten into, or tracked by worms.

VERMIC'ULATE, v. t. [L. vermiculatus.] To inlay; to form work by inlaying, resembling the motion or the tracks of worms.

VERMIC'ULATE,† a. Full of worms or maggots.

VERMIC'ULATED, pp. Formed in the likeness of the motion of a worm. [See VERMICULAR.]

VERMIC'ULATING, ppr. Forming so as to resemble the motion of a worm.

VERMICULA'TION, n. The act or operation of moving in the form of a worm; continuation of motion from one part to another, as in the peristaltic motion of the intestines.—2. The act of forming so as to resemble the motion of a worm.

VERMIC'ULITE, n. A mineral composed of micaceous looking plates, cemented together by a whitish matter. When heated nearly to redness it projects out with a vermicular motion, as if it were a mass of small worms; hence the name.

VERMIC'ULOUS, } VERMIC'ULOSE, } a. [L. vermiculosus.] 1. Full of worms or grubs.—2. Resembling worms.

VERM'IFORM, a. [L. vermis, a worm, and forma, form.] Having the form or shape of a worm; as, the vermiform process of the cerebellum.

VERMIF'UGAL, a. Tending to prevent or destroy vermin, or to expel worms.

VERM'IFUGE, n. [L. vermis, a worm, and fugo, to expel.] A medicine or substance that expels worms from animal bodies; an anthelmintic. Calomel, gamboge, jalap, male-fern root, cowhage, iron, tin, oil of turpentine, &c., are vermifuges or anthelmintics.

VERMIL'ION, n. (vermil'yon.) [Fr. vermeil, vermillon; It. vermiglione; from L. vermiculus, vermes; a name sometimes improperly given to the kermes. See CRIMSON.] 1 The cochineal, a small insect found on a particular plant. [Improper or obsolete.] —2. The red sulphuret of mercury, or cinnabar. It occurs in nature as a common ore of mercury, of a carmine red colour. It is procured artificially by heating sulphur with eight times its weight of mercury in an iron vessel. The compound is then sublimated, and the sublimate, which is a compact, deep red, crystalline mass, when reduced to powder is of a beautiful scarlet colour. This artificial compound, which is properly a bisulphuret of mercury, is extensively employed on account of the beauty of its colour, in painting, in making red sealing-wax, and other purposes. Hence it is the object of an important manufacture.—3 Any beautiful red colour. In blushing, the delicate cheek is covered with vermilion.

VERMIL'ION, v. t. (vermil'yon.) To dye red; to cover with a delicate red.

VERMIL'IONED, pp. or a. Dyed or tinged with a bright red.

VER'MILY,† a. Same as vermilion

VERM'IN, n. sing. and plur.; used chiefly in the plural. [Fr. and It. vermine; from L. vermes, worms.] 1. All sorts of small animals which are destructive to grain or other produce; all noxious little animals or insects, as squirrels, rats, mice, worms, grubs, flies, &c.

These vermin do great injuries in the field Mortimer.

2. Used of noxious human beings in contempt; as, base vermin.

VERM'INATE, v. i. [L. vermino.] To breed vermin

VERMINA'TION, n. The breeding of vermin.—2. A griping of the bowels.

VERM'INLY,† adv. or a. Like vermin; of the nature of vermin.

VERM'INOUS, a. Tending to breed vermin.

The verminous disposition of the body. Harvey.

VERM'IN PUDDLE, Puddle formed of stiff clay and small stones or gravel beaten together until it forms a mass like pudding stone. It is used in the embankments of reservoirs, to prevent, as its name implies, the inroads of water rats and other vermin.

VERMIP'AROUS, a. [L vermes, worms, and pario, to bear.] Producing worms.

VERMIV'OROUS, a. [L. vermes, worms, and voro, to devour.] Devouring worms; feeding on worms. Vermivorous birds are very useful to the farmer.

VERMONT'ER, n. A native or inhabitant of the state of Vermont, in North America.

VERMONTESE, n. sing. and plur. An inhabitant, or the inhabitants of Vermont.

VERNAC'ULAR, a. [L. vernaculus, born in one's house, from verna, a servant.] 1. Native; belonging to the country of one's birth. English is our vernacular language. The vernacular idiom is seldom perfectly acquired by foreigners.—2. Native; belonging to the person by birth or nature. A vernacular disease is one which prevails in a particular country or district; more generally called endemic.

VERNAC'ULARISM, n. A vernacular idiom.

VERNAC'ULARLY, adv. In agreement with the vernacular manner.

VERNAC'ULOUS,† a. [supra.] Vernacular; also, scoffing.

VER'NAL, a. [L. vernalis, from ver, spring.] 1. Belonging to the spring; appearing in spring; as, vernal bloom.

Vernal flowers are preparatives to autumnal fruits. Rambler.

2. Belonging to youth, the spring of life.—Vernal signs, the signs in which the sun appears in the spring.—Vernal equinox, the equinox in spring or March; the time when the sun enters the first point of the sign Aries, which happens about the 21st of March; opposed to the autumnal equinox, in September. [See ECLIPTIC, EQUINOCTIAL, EQUINOX.]

VER'NAL GRASS, n. The Anthoxanthum ordoratum, one of the grasses which gives the odour to new made hay.

VER'NANT, a. [L. vernans; verno, to flourish.] Flourishing, as in spring; as, vernant flowers.

VER'NATE,† v. i. To become young again.

VERNA'TION, n. [L. verno.] In bot., the disposition of the nascent leaves within the bud. It is called also præfoliation, and corresponds to the terms æstivation and præfloration, which are used to indicate the manner in which the parts of the flower are arranged in the flower-bud. The vernation is said to be conduplicate, when the leaf is folded lengthwise, one half applied against the other, so that their margins correspond; revolute when the leaves are rolled backwards on each side; involute, when the edges of the leaves are rolled inward, spirally on each side; convolute, when two conduplicate leaves clasp each other; circinate, when the leaves are rolled from the tip downwards; plicate, when the leaves are folded lengthwise in several plaits; equitant, when the leaves overlap each other alternately and entirely; and imbricate, when the leaves overlap each other, so that the middle of the outer leaf is opposite to the edges of two inner.

VER'NICLE, n. Same as veronica.

VER'NIER, n. [From the inventor, Peter Vernier.] A small movable scale, running parallel with the fixed scale of a quadrant, barometer, or other graduated instrument, and having the effect of subdividing the divisions of that instrument into more minute parts. The diagram represents the vernier of the common barometer for measuring to the hundredth of an inch. The scale A B is divided into inches, and tenths of inches; the small movable scale C D is the vernier, and consists of a length of eleven parts of A B, divided into ten parts, each part being therefore equal to one and one-tenth of the divisions upon A B, and the difference between any division on the scale and vernier will be one-hundredth of an inch. In the figure, the zero of the vernier is set to the division 30 inches, the division 10 upon the vernier corresponding with that of 28 inches 9-10ths on the scale. Hence, the vernier division 1 is one-hundredth of an inch below the scale division 29 inches 9-10ths; division 2 on the vernier is two-hundredths below 29 inches 8-10ths, and so on. Supposing the vernier were raised any number of hundredths, as two-hundredths of an inch, the division 2 would coincide with 29 inches 8-10ths. To read off the hundredths of an inch the vernier zero advances beyond any tenth on the scale; the division that coincides nearest with any on the scale, must be taken for the hundredth required.—Chromatic vernier, an instrument invented by Sir David Brewster, for the purpose of measuring by comparison the very minute variations of tints.

Vernier scale.

VERNIL'ITY,† n. [L. vernilis, from verna, a slave.] Servility; fawning behaviour, like that of a slave.

VERNO'NIA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Compositæ. The species consist of herbs or shrubs, inhabiting the tropical parts of the world, especially in Brazil, but several are found in India. V. anthelmintica produces dark coloured seeds, which are extremely bitter, and are considered powerfully anthelmintic. They are also employed as an ingredient in compounds prescribed in snake-bites.

Vernonia anthelmintica.

VERON'ICA, n. [vera-icon, true image.] 1. A portrait or representation of the face of our Saviour on handkerchiefs.—2. In bot., a genus of plants, Speedwell,—which see.

VER'REL, } n. A ring at the end of VER'RULE, } a cane, &c.; a ferrule, —which see.

VER'RUCA, n. In medical lan., a wart.

VER'RUCOSE, } a. [L. verruca, a
VER'RUCOUS, } wart; verrucosus, full of warts.] Warty; having little knobs or warts on the surface; as, a verrucous capsule.—2. In entom., applied to the surface of insects, when studded with large smooth elevations resembling warts.—3. In conchol., applied to shells beset with excrescences resembling warts.

VERRU'CULOSE, a. Having minute wart-like prominences.

VER'RY, } n. In her., the same as VER'REY, } Vairy or Vair,—which see.

VERSABIL'ITY,† } n. [L. versabilis,
VERS'ABLENESS,† } from versor, to turn.] Aptness to be turned round

VERS'ABLE,† a. [supra.] That may be turned.

VERS'AL,† for Universal.

VERS'ANT, a. Familiar; conversant. [Little used.]

VERS'ANT, pp. In her., erected or elevated.

VERS'ATILE, a. [L. versatilis, from versor, to turn.] 1. That may be turned round; as, a versatile boat or spindle.—2. Liable to be turned in opinion; changeable; variable; unsteady; as, a man of versatile disposition.—3. Turning with ease from one thing to another; readily applied to a new task, or to various subjects; as, a man of versatile genius.—4. In bot., a versatile anther is one fixed by the middle on the point of the filament, and so poised as to turn like the needle of a compass; fixed by its side, but freely movable.

VERS'ATILELY, adv. In a versatile manner.

VERSATIL'ITY, } n. The quality
VERS'ATILENESS, } of being versatile; aptness to change; readiness to be turned; variableness.—2. The faculty of easily turning one's mind to new tasks or subjects; as, the versatility of genius.

VERSE, n. (vers.) [L. versus; Fr. vers; from L. verto, to turn.] 1. In poetry, a line, consisting of a certain number of long and short syllables, disposed according to the rules of the species of poetry which the author intends to compose. Verses are of various kinds, as hexameter, pentameter, and tetrameter, &c., according to the number of feet in each. A verse of twelve syllables is called an Alexandrian or Alexandrine. Two or more verses form a stanza or strophe.—2. Poetry; metrical language.

Virtue was taught in verse. Prior

3. A short division of any composition, particularly of the chapters in the scriptures. The author of the division of the Old Testament into verses, is not ascertained. The New Testament was divided into verses by Robert Stephens.—4. A piece of poetry.—5. A portion of an anthem to be performed by a single voice to each part.—Blank verse, poetry in which the lines do not end in rhymes.—Heroic verse, usually consists of ten syllables, or in English, of five accented syllables, constituting five feet.

VERSE, v. t. To tell in verse; to relate poetically.

Playing on pipes of corn, and versing love. Shak.

To be versed, [L. versor,] to be well skilled; to be acquainted with; as, to be versed in history or in geometry.

VERS'ED, pp. Skilled.

VERS'ED SINE, n. See SINE.

VERSEHON'OURING, a. Doing honour to poetry.

VERSE'-MA'KER, n. One who writes verses; a rhymer.

VERS'ICOLOUR, } a. [L. versi-
VERS'ICOLOURED, } color.] Having various colours; changeable in colour.

VERSIC'ULAR, a. Pertaining to verses; designating distinct divisions of a writing.

VERSIFICA'TION, n. [Fr from versifier.] The act, art, or practice of composing poetic verse. Versification is the result of art, labour, and rule, rather than of invention or the fire of genius. It consists in adjusting the long and short syllables, and forming feet into harmonious measure.

VERS'IFICATOR, n. A versifier. [Little used.] [See VERSIFIER.]

VERSIFICA'TRIX, n. A female versifier.

VERS'IFIED, pp. [from versify.] Formed into verse

VERS'IFIER, n. One who makes verses. Not every versifier is a poet.—2. One who converts into verse; or one who expresses the ideas of another, written in prose; as, Dr Watts was a versifier of the Psalms.

VERS'IFY, v. i. To make verses.

I'll versify in spite, and do my best. Dryden.

VERS'IFY, v. t. To relate or describe in verse; to turn into verse.

I'll versify the truth. Daniel.

2. To turn into verse; as, to versify the Psalms.

VERS'IFYING, ppr. Converting into verse.

VER'SION, n. [Fr. from L. versio.] 1. A turning; a change or transformation; as, the version of air into water. [Unusual.]—2. Change of direction; as, the version of the beams of light. [Unusual.]—3. The act of translating; the rendering of thoughts or ideas expressed in one language, into words of like signification in another language. How long was Pope engaged in the version of Homer?—4. Translation; that which is rendered from another language. We have a good version of the Scriptures. There is a good version of the Pentateuch in the Samaritan. The Septuagint version of the Old Testament was made for the benefit of the Jews in Alexandria.

VER'SIONIST, n. One who makes a version.

VERST, n. A Russian measure of length, containing 1166⅔ yards, or 3500 feet; about three quarters of an English mile VER'SUS. [L.] Against; as, John Doe versus Richard Roe.

VERSŪTE, a. Crafty; wily.

VERT, VERD, n. [Fr. verd, green, L. viridis.] 1. In the forest laws, every thing within a forest that grows and bears a green leaf, which may serve as a cover for deer, but especially great and thick coverts. Also a power to cut green trees or wood. To preserve vert and venison, is the duty of the verderer.—2. In her., vert is used to signify a green colour. In coats of nobility it is called emerald, and in those of kings venus. It is expressed in engraving by diagonal lines, drawn from the dexter chief to the sinister base.

Vert.

VERT'ANT, REVERT'ANT, VERT'ED, REVERT'ED, In her., the same as flexed and reflexed, or bowed, embowed, that is, formed like the letter S reverted.

VERT'EBRA, VERT'EBRE, n. plur. Vert'ebræ or Vert'ebres. [L. vertebra, from verto, to turn, Fr. vertebre.] A bone of the spine, or back bone of an animal. The different vertebræ which compose the spine, are divided into true and false, the former constituting the upper and longest portion, and the latter the lower portion of the spinal column, consisting of the os sacrum and coccyx. The true vertebræ are further divided into cervical, dorsal, and lumbar; or those of the neck, back, and loins. In man there are seven cervical vertebræ, twelve dorsal, and five lumbar. There is in every vertebra, between its body and apophyses, a foramen or hole, large enough to admit a finger. These foramina correspond with each other through all the vertebræ, and form a long bony conduit for the lodgment of the spinal marrow. The vertebræ are united together by means of a substance compressible like cork, which forms a kind of partition between them, and admits of a certain degree of motion, small between individual bones, but considerable as respects the whole spinal column. The vertebræ and their projections or processes, also afford attachments for a number of muscles and ligaments, and also passages for blood vessels, and for the nerves that pass out of the spine. In different animals the number of vertebræ varies exceedingly.

VERT'EBRAL, a. Pertaining to the vertebræ or joints of the spine or back bone, as vertebral muscles, vertebral artery.—2. Having a back-bone or spinal joints; as, vertebral animals.

VERT'EBRAL, n. An animal of the class which have a back bone.

VER'TEBRATE, n. An animal having a spine with joints.

VERT'EBRA'TED, a. [L. vertebratus.] Having a back-bone, or vertebral column, containing the spinal marrow, as an animal; as man, quadrupeds, fowls, reptiles, and fishes.

VERTEBRA'TES, VERTEBRA'TA, n. The first grand division of the animal kingdom, consisting of those animals which have a true back-bone, composed of vertebræ, and including man and the animals which most resemble him. The vertebrata are divided into the following classes:—Mammalia, Aves, or birds, Reptilia, and Pisces or fishes.

VER'TEX, n. [L. from verto, to turn; primarily a round point.] 1. The crown or top of the head.—2. The summit; the top of a hill or other thing. Any remarkable or principal point, particularly when that point is considered as the top or summit of a figure; as, the vertex of a triangle, the vertex of a cone or pyramid, &c. The vertex of an angle is the angular point, or point where the two lines meet to form the angle. The vertex of a curve is the point from which the diameter is drawn, or the intersection of the diameter and the curve, and this point is also called the vertex of the diameter. The point where the axis of a conic section meets the curve is called the principal vertex. In optics, the vertex of a glass is the same as its pole.—3. In astron., the zenith; the point of the heavens perpendicularly over the head.

VERT'ICAL, a. [Fr. from L. vertex.] 1. Placed or being in the zenith, or perpendicularly over the head. The sun is vertical to the inhabitants within the tropics at certain times every year. —2. Being in a position perpendicular to the plane of the horizon.—Vertical leaves, in bot., are such as stand so erect, that neither of the surfaces can be called the upper or under.—Vertical anthers, are such as terminate the filaments, and being inserted by their base, stand no less upright than the filaments themselves.—Vertical angles, in geom., the opposite angles, made by two straight lines which intersect each other. Thus, if the straight lines A B and C D intersect each other in the point E, the opposite angles A E C and D E B are vertical angles, as are also A E D and C E B.—

Vertical circle, in astron., a great circle passing through the zenith and the nadir. The meridian of any place is a vertical circle. The vertical circles are called azimuth circles or azimuths, and also circles of altitude, because the altitudes of the heavenly bodies are measured upon them. They all intersect one another in the zenith and nadir.—Prime vertical, that vertical circle which is perpendicular to the plane of the meridian, and which passes through the zenith, and the east and west points of the horizon.—Vertical line, a line perpendicular or at right angles to the plane of the horizon. A plumb line hanging freely represents a vertical line. In conics, a vertical line, is a straight line drawn on the vertical plane, which passes through the vertex of the cone. Vertical plane, a plane perpendicular to the plane of the horizon. In conics, a plane passing through the vertex of a cone and through its axis. In perspective, a plane perpendicular to the geometrical plane, passing through the eye, and cutting the perspective plane at right angles.

VERTICAL'ITY, n. State of being vertical.

VERT'ICALLY, adv. In the zenith.

VERT'ICALNESS, n. The state of being in the zenith, or perpendicularly over the head. [Verticality is not used.]

VERT'ICIL, n. [L. verticillus, from vertex, supra.] In bot., a whorl, a mode of inflorescence, in which the flowers surround the stem in a kind of ring, upon the same plane, as in Hippuris vulgaris.

VERTICILLAS'TER, n. In bot, a name given to the cymose inflorescence of Labiate plants. There are usually two verticillasters in the axil of each of the opposite leaves.

VERTICIL'LATE, a. [supra.] In bot., verticillate flowers are such as grow in a whorl, or are arranged on the same plane round the axis; as in Hippuris vulgaris. The term is also applied in this sense to leaves and branches. Verticillate plants are such as bear whorled flowers.

VERTICIL'LUS, n. In bot., a ring; a whorl.

VERTIC'ITY, n. [from vertex, supra.] The power of turning; revolution; rotation.—2.† That property of the loadstone or of a magnet by which it turns to some particular point, as its pole.

> The attraction of the magnet was known long before its verticity. Cyc.

VER'TICLE, n. [L. verticulum.] An axis; a hinge.

VERTIG'INOUS, a. [L. vertiginosus.] 1. Turning round; whirling; rotary; as, a vertiginous motion.—2. Giddy; affected with vertigo.

VERTIG'INOUSLY, adv. With a whirling or giddiness.

VERTIG'INOUSNESS, n. Giddiness; a whirling, or sense of whirling; unsteadiness.

VERT'IGO, VERTI'GO, n. [L. from verto, to turn.] Giddiness; dizziness or swimming of the head; an affection of the head, in which objects appear to move in various directions, though stationary, and the person affected finds it difficult to maintain an erect posture. It is a common symptom of fulness of the vessels of the head, and of nervous and general debility; but it frequently arises from some disturbance of the digestive organs.—2. A genus of marsh or land snails.

VERTILIN'EAR, a. Rectilinear.

VERTUM'NUS, n. A deity among the Romans who presided over gardens and orchards, and who was also worshipped as the god of spring, or of the seasons in general.

VER'UCOUS. See VERRUCOUS.

VER'VAIN, n. A plant; the popular name of some species of the genus Verbena. [See VERBENA.]

VER'VAIN-MALLOW, n. A species of mallow, the Malva alcea.

VER'VELS, n. [Fr. vervelle.] Labels tied to a hawk. [See VARVELS.]

VER'Y, a. [Fr. vrai; L. verus; G. wahr; D. waar.] True; real.

Whether thou be my very son Esau or not; Gen. xxvii.

He that repeateth a matter, separateth very friends; Prov. xvii.

So we say, in very deed, in the very heavens, this is the very man we want. In these phrases, very is emphatical; but its signification is true, real.

VER'Y, adv. As an adverb, or modifier of adjectives and adverbs, very denotes in a great degree, an eminent or high degree, but not generally the highest; as, a very great mountain; a very bright sun; a very cold day; a very pernicious war; a very benevolent disposition; the river flows very rapidly.

VESA'NIÆ, n. plur. [L. vesania, madness.] A class of diseases in which the judgment is impaired, without stupor or fever.

VESI'CA, n. [L.] A bladder.

VES'ICANT, n. [infra.] A blistering application; an epispastic.

VESI'CA PISCIS, n. A name given to a symbolical representation of Christ, of a pointed oval or egg-shaped form, made by the intersection of two equal circles cutting each other in their centres. The actual figure of a fish found on the sarcophagi of the early Christians gave way, in course of time, to this oval-shaped ornament, which was the most common symbol used in the middle ages. It is to be met with sculptured, painted on glass, in ecclesiastical seals, &c. &c. The aureole or glory, in pictures of the Virgin, &c., was frequently made of this form.

Vesica piscis Seal, Wimborne Minster.

VES'ICATE, v. t. [L. vesica, a bladder; Gr. φυσκη, from φυσαω, to inflate.] To blister; to raise little bladders, or separate the cuticle by inflaming the skin.

VES'ICATED, pp. Blistered.

VES'ICATING, ppr. Blistering.

VESICA'TION, n. The process of raising blisters or little cuticular bladders on the skin.

VES'ICATORY, n. [Fr. vésicatoire.] A blistering application or plaster; an épispastic.

VES'ICATORY, a. Having the property, when applied to the skin, of raising a bladder (vesica); blistering, as the blistering fly.

VES'ICLE, n. [L. vesicula, a little bladder.]. 1. A small blister; an elevation of the cuticle, or a bladder-like tumour in any part, containing a transparent watery fluid.—2. Any small membranous cavity in animals or vegetables. The lungs consist of vesicles admitting air.

VESIC'ULAR, VESIC'ULOUS, VESIC'ULOSE, a. Pertaining to vesicles; consisting of vesicles.—2. Hollow; full of interstices.—3. Having little bladders or glands on the surface; as, the leaf of a plant.

VESIC'ULATE, a. Bladdery; full of bladders.

VES'PA, n. The wasp; a genus of hymenopterous insects. [See WASP.]

VES'PER, n. [L. This word and Hesperus are probably of one origin, and both from the root of west.] 1. The evening star; a name given to the planet Venus when she is to the east of the sun, and appears after sunset. Also the evening.—2. Vespers, in the plural, the evening song or evening service in the Romish church.—Sicilian vespers, the era of the general massacre of the French in Sicily, on Easter evening, 1282, at the toll of the bell for vespers.

VES'PER, a. Relating to the evening, or to the service of vespers; as, vesper lamp, vesper bells.

VESPERTIL'IO, n. The bat; a genus of cheiropterous mammalia, consisting of numerous species. The true bats are now divided into many subgenera, as molossus noctilio, vampyrus, &c. &c., distinguished by the absence or presence of a tail; the fact of its being free above the membrane or involved in it, the presence of a membrane on the nose, number of incisors, &c. &c. [See BAT.]

VESPERTILIO'NIDÆ, n. The bat family; a family of cheiropterous mammals, of which the genus Vespertilio is the type.

VES'PERTINE, a. [L. vespertinus. See VESPER.] Pertaining to the evening; happening or being in the evening.

VES'PIARY, n. The nest or habitation of wasps, hornets, &c.

VES'PIDÆ, n. A family of hymenopterous insects, of which the genus Vespa (wasps), is the type. Some of the species are solitary, others live in societies; some are phytophagous, and others carnivorous.

VES'SEL, n. [It. vasello, from vaso, a vase or vessel; Fr. vaisseau; Sp. vasija; from L. vas, vasis. This word is probably the English vat, in a different dialect; G. fass, a vat; gefäss, a vessel; fassen, to hold; allied probably to fast, fasten. The Sp. vasija is from the Latin; but the Spanish has also baxel, a general name of all floating buildings; probably of Celtic origin.] 1. A cask or utensil proper for holding liquors and other things, as a tun, a pipe, a puncheon, a hogshead, a barrel, a firkin, a bottle, a kettle, a cup, a dish, &c.—2. In anat., any tube or canal, in which the blood and other humours are contained, secreted, or circulated, as, the arteries, veins, lymphatics, spermatics, &c.—3. In the physiology of plants, a canal or tube of very small bore, in which the sap is contained and conveyed; also, a bag or utricle, filled with pulp, and serving as a reservoir for sap; also, a spiral canal, usually of a larger bore.—4. Any structure made to float upon the water, for the purposes of commerce, war, &c., whether impelled by wind, steam, or oars.—5. Something containing. In scrip., vessels of different kinds were employed in the service of God in the temple worship, either for more or less honourable purposes, the word vessel is applied in scripture with the same distinction to persons; thus, Vessels of mercy, which God had afore prepared unto glory, designed and by his grace fitted for glory; Vessels of wrath, fitted for destruction; not prepared by God, but "fitted" by their guilt, depravity, and rebellion, for the place of punishment; A chosen vessel, such was Paul designed and selected by God, and endowed with the gifts and graces necessary for the high and honourable office of the apostleship.

VES'SEL,† v. t. To put into a vessel.

VES'SETS, n. A kind of cloth made in Suffolk.

VES'SICNON, VESSIG'NON, n. [L. vesica.] A soft swelling on a horse's leg, called a windgall.

VEST, n. [Fr. veste; It. vesta; Lat. vestis, a coat or garment; vestio, to cover or clothe, Goth. vestyan; W. gwisg.] 1. An outer garment.—2. In common speech, a man's under garment; a short garment covering the body, but without sleeves, worn under the coat; called also waistcoat.

VEST, v. t. To clothe; to cover, surround, or encompass closely.

With ether vested and a purple sky. Dryden.

2. To dress; to clothe with a long garment; as, the vested priest.—To vest with, to clothe; to furnish with; to invest with; as, to vest a man with authority; to vest a court with power to try cases of life and death; to vest one with the right of seizing slave-ships.—To vest in, to put in possession of; to furnish with; to clothe with. The supreme executive power in England is vested in the king; in the United States, it is vested in the president.—2. To clothe with another form; to convert into another substance or species of property; as, to vest money in goods; to vest money in land or houses; to vest money in bank stock, or in six per cent. stock; to vest all one's property in the public funds.

VEST, v. i. To come or descend to; to be fixed; to take effect, as a title or right. Upon the death of the ancestor, the estate, or the right to the estate, vests in the heir at law.

VES'TA, n. [L.] In myth., the goddess

Vesta, from an antique statue.

of the domestic hearth or of fire; worshipped both by the Greeks and Romans. She was a virgin divinity, the daughter of Saturn and Rhea, and the patroness of chastity, as well as of domestic union and happiness. The fire burning on the domestic hearth was regarded as the symbol of Vesta; and each political community, city, or state, had its public hearth or altar of Vesta, on which a perpetual fire was kept burning. She had a temple at Rome, which contained the altar of the goddess, with her sacred fire, and the superintendence of this fire, which was never suffered to go out, was committed to six virgins called vestals.—2. In astron., one of the asteroids or ultra-zodiacal planets. It was discovered by Dr. Olbers in 1807. It is of the fifth or sixth magnitude, and may be seen in a clear evening by the naked eye, its light being more intense, pure, and white, than that of the other asteroids. It performs its sidereal revolution in about 1326 mean solar days; its mean distance from the sun is 2·36787, the mean distance of the earth from the sun being taken as unity; and its orbit is inclined to the ecliptic in an angle of 7° 8′ 9″. Vesta is supposed to be the smallest of all the heavenly bodies with which we are acquainted, its magnitude being estimated to be only about the fifteenth thousandth part of that of the earth.

VEST′AL, a. [L. vestalis, from Vesta, the goddess of fire, Gr. ἑστια.] 1. Pertaining to Vesta, the goddess of fire among the Romans, and a virgin.—2. Pure; chaste.

VEST′AL, n. A virgin consecrated to Vesta, and to the service of watching the sacred fire, which was to be perpetually kept burning upon her altar. The Vestals were six in number, and they made a vow of perpetual virginity.

VEST′ED, pp. Clothed; habited; covered; closely encompassed.—2. a. Fixed; not in a state of contingency or suspension; as, vested rights.—Vested legacy, in law, a legacy the right to which commences in presenti, and does not depend on a contingency, as a legacy to one to be paid when he attains to twenty-one years of age. This is a vested legacy, and if the legatee dies before the testator, his representative shall receive it.—Vested remainder is where the estate is invariably fixed, to remain to a determinate person, after the particular estate is spent. This is called a remainder executed, by which a present interest passes to the party, though to be enjoyed in future. [See REMAINDER.]

VEST′IARY, n. A wardrobe; a place in a monastery where the clothes of the monks are laid up.

VESTIB′ULAR, a. Pertaining to or resembling a vestibule.

VES′TIBULE, n. [Fr.; L. vestibulum.] 1. The porch or entrance into a house, or a large open space before the door, but covered.—2. A little antechamber before the entrance of an ordinary apartment.—3. An apartment in large buildings which presents itself into a hall or suit of rooms or offices. An area in which a magnificent staircase is carried up is sometimes called a vestibule.—4. In anat., a cavity belonging to the labyrinth of the ear, situated between the cochlea and semicircular canals.

VES′TIGATE. See INVESTIGATE. [Vestigate is not in use.]

VES′TIGE, n. [Fr.; L. vestigium. This word and vestibule, showing that some verb, signifying to tread, from which they are derived, is lost.] A track or footstep; the mark of the foot left on the earth; but mostly used for the mark or remains of something else; as, the vestiges of ancient magnificence in Palmyra; vestiges of former population.

VEST′ING, ppr. [from vest.] Clothing; covering; closely encompassing; descending to and becoming permanent, as a right or title; converting into other species of property, as money.

VEST′ING, n. Cloth for vests; vest patterns.

VES′TITURE, n. [L. vestio, or vestis.] The manufacture of cloth; the preparation of cloth.

VEST′MENT, n. [L. vestimentum, from vestio, to clothe; Fr. vêtement.] A garment; some part of clothing or dress; especially some part of outer clothing; but it is not restricted to any particular garment.

> The sculptor could not give vestments suitable to the quality of the persons represented. Dryden.

Ecclesiastical or sacerdotal vestments, articles of dress or ornament worn by clergymen in the celebration of divine service; as, the cope, alb, rochet, surplice, &c.

VES′TRY,† n. [L. vestiarium; Fr. vestiaire.] 1. A place or room appendant to a church, where the ecclesiastical vestments are kept, and where the minister robes himself. In this room, in the Church of England, parochial meetings are also held.—2. A parochial assembly, so called because held in the vestry. Hence, any room in which such meeting is customarily held. The minister, church wardens, and chief men of a parish, generally constitute a vestry, and the minister, whether rector, vicar, or perpetual curate, is ex-officio chairman of the meeting. A general or ordinary vestry is one to which every parishioner or outdweller assessed to or paying the church rates, or scot and lot, is admissible of common right. The powers of the vestry extend to the investigation into, and restraining of, the expenditure of the parish funds, the enlarging, repairing, or alteration of the churches or chapels within the parish, and the appointment of certain parish officers. In certain large and populous parishes, select vestries are chosen, either by custom or under the direction of various acts of parliament. Such vestries consist of a select number of individuals chosen by the rate-payers, to have the government of the parish, make rates, &c.

VEST′RY BOARD, n. The persons who manage parochial affairs.

VEST′RY-CLERK, n. [vestry and clerk.] An officer chosen by the vestry, who keeps the parish accounts and books.

VEST′RY-MAN, n. [vestry and man.] One of a vestry board.

VES′TU, } pp. In REVES′TU, } her., is when an ordinary has some division on it only by lines, and signifies clothed, as if some garment were laid upon it, as in the cut; or a chief gules, vestu argent.

Vestu.

VEST′URE, n. [Fr. vêture. See VEST.] 1. A garment; a robe.

> There polished chests embroider'd vesture grac'd. Pope.

2. Dress; garments in general; habit; clothing; vestment; as, the vesture of priests.—3. Clothing; covering.

> Rocks, precipices, and gulphs apparelled with a vesture of plants. Bentley.
> And gild the humble vestures of the plain. Trumbull.

4. In old law books, the corn with which land was covered; as, the vesture of an acre.—5.† In old books, seisin; possession.

VEST′URED, a. Covered with vesture; dressed.

VESU′VIAN, a. Pertaining to Vesuvius, a volcano near Naples.

VESU′VIAN, n. In mineral., a subspecies of pyramidical garnet, a mineral found in the vicinity of Vesuvius, classed with the family of garnets; called by Haüy idocrase. It is generally crystallized in four-sided prisms, the edges of which are truncated, forming prisms of eight, fourteen, or sixteen sides. It sometimes occurs massive. It is composed chiefly of silex, lime, and alumin, with a portion of oxide of iron, and oxide of manganese.

VETCH, n. [Fr. vesce; It. veccia; L. vicia; Sp. veza; D. wik, wikke, vetch, and a weight; wikken, to weigh; G. wiche, a vetch; wickel, a roller; wichtig, weighty; wickeln, to wind up. We see vetch is from the root of weigh, wag, wiggle, and signifies a little roller.] A leguminous plant of the genus Vicia. It is a common name of most species of the genus. The name is also applied, with various epithets, to many other leguminous plants of different genera; as, the chichling vetch, of the genus Lathyrus; the horse shoe vetch, of the genus Hippocrepis; the milk vetch, of the genus Astragalus, &c. [See VICIA.]

VETCH′LING, n. [from vetch.] In bot., a name of the Lathyrus aphaca, expressive of its diminutive size. The meadow vetchling is a wild plant common in meadows, which makes good hay. [See LATHYRUS.]

VETCH′Y, a. Consisting of vetches or of pea straw; as, a vetchy bed.—2. Abounding with vetches.

VET′ERAN, a. [L. veteranus, from vetero, to grow old, from vetus, old.] Having been long exercised in any thing; long practised or experienced; as, a veteran officer or soldier; veteran skill.

VET′ERAN, n. One who has been long exercised in any service or art, particularly in war; one who has grown old in service, and has had much experience.

> Ensigns that pierced the foe's remotest lines,
> The hardy veteran with tears resigns. Addison.

2. Among the Romans, a soldier who had served a certain number of campaigns; generally twenty-five.

VETERINA′RIAN, n. [L. veterinarius.] One skilled in the diseases of cattle or domestic animals.

VET′ERINARY, a. [L. veterinarius, from veterinum, a beast of burden.] Pertaining to the art or science of healing or treating the diseases of domestic animals, as oxen, horses, sheep, &c. Veterinary science is based upon a minute and accurate knowledge of the structure and functions of all those animals which may require its aid, as also of the disorders and accidents to which these are exposed, and the various resources, whether natural or artificial, available for their cure. A veterinary college was established in England in 1792, at St. Pancras, in the vicinity of London.

VE'TO, n. [L. veto, I forbid.] A forbidding; prohibition; or the right of forbidding; applied to the right of a king or other chief magistrate or officer to withhold his assent to the enactment of a law, or the passing of a decree. Thus the king of Great Britain has a veto upon every act of parliament; he sometimes prevents the passing of a law by his veto.—2. In Scotland, an act passed in 1835 by the General Assembly of the Church, known by the name of the veto act. By this act it was decreed that no one should be admitted a minister of any vacant church, if a majority of the male heads of families, in full communion with the church, should dissent from his call. The veto act, however, by a decision of the Court of Session in 1838, was declared to be illegal, and ultra vires of the General Assembly. This decision was confirmed by the House of Lords in 1839, but the Church of Scotland, considering the admission of ministers a matter of spiritual jurisdiction, inherent in the church, according to the word of God, her original constitution, as well as ratified by the law and constitution of the country, resolved to adhere to the principles of spiritual independence, and non-intrusion; though she always professed her readiness to give effect to them in any form that would in reality secure them. The civil courts and finally the legislature, having resolved to grant the church no redress of the grievances inflicted by the violation of those principles, it ultimately led to the disruption of 1843. After this event the remanent members constituting the Assembly of the Established church rescinded the veto law.—3. In a looser sense, any authoritative prohibition.

VE'TO, v. t. To withhold assent to a bill for a law, and thus prevent its enactment.

VE'TOIST, n. One who sustains the use of the veto.

VETTU'RA, n. [It.] An Italian four-wheeled carriage.

VETTURI'NO, n. In Italy, one who conveys travellers from one place to another, in a vettura, at a price agreed on.

VETUST',† a. [L. vetustus.] Old; ancient.

VEX, v. t. [L. vexo; Fr. vexer; It. vessare; Sp. vexar.] 1. To irritate; to make angry by little provocations; a popular use of the word.—2. To plague; to torment; to harass; to afflict.

Ten thousand torments vex my heart. Prior.

3. To disturb; to disquiet; to agitate.

White curl the waves, and the vex'd ocean roars. Pope.

4 To trouble; to distress.

I will also vex the hearts of many people; Ezek. xxxii.

5. To persecute; Acts xii.—6.† To stretch, as by hooks.

VEX, v. i. To fret; to be teased or irritated.

VEXA'TION, n. [Fr. from L. vexatio.] 1. The act of irritating, or of troubling, disquieting, and harassing.—2. State of being irritated or disturbed in mind.—3. Disquiet; agitation; great uneasiness.

Passions too violent...afford us vexation and pain. Temple.

4. The cause of trouble or disquiet.

Your children were vexation to your youth. Shak.

5. Afflictions; great troubles; severe judgments.

The Lord shall send on thee cursing, vexation, and rebuke; Deut. xxviii.

6. A harassing by law.—7. A slight teasing trouble.

VEXA'TIOUS, a. Irritating; disturbing or agitating to the mind; causing disquiet; afflictive; as, a vexatious controversy; a vexatious neighbour.—2. Distressing; harassing; as, vexatious wars.—3. Full of trouble and disquiet.

He leads a vexatious life. Digby.

4. Teasing; slightly troublesome; provoking. A vexatious suit, in law, is one commenced for the purpose of giving trouble, or without cause.

VEXA'TIOUSLY, adv. In a manner to give great trouble or disquiet.

VEXA'TIOUSNESS, n. The quality of giving great trouble and disquiet, or of teasing and provoking.

VEX'ED, pp. Teased; provoked; irritated; troubled; agitated; disquieted; afflicted.

VEX'ED QUES'TION, n. [L. quæstio vexata.] An inquiry carried on in an irritating manner, or to a wearisome extent.

VEX'ER, n. One who vexes, irritates, or troubles.

VEX'IL, } n. [L. vexillum, a stand-
VEXIL'LUM, } ard.] A flag or standard. In bot., the upper petal of a papilionaceous flower.

VEX'ILLARY, n. A standard bearer.

VEX'ILLARY, a. Pertaining to an ensign or standard.

VEXILLA'TION, n. [L. vexillatio.] A company of troops under one ensign.

VEX'ING, ppr. Provoking; irritating; afflicting.

VEX'INGLY, adv. So as to vex, teaze, or irritate.

VI'A, n. [L.] A way or passage; a journey. In Eng. writing, it is generally used in the ablative case, and with the meaning by way of; as, via Falmouth, by the way of Falmouth.

VIABIL'ITY, n. The state of a child that is viable.

VI'ABLE, a. [Fr. likely to live, from vie, life, from L vivo, to live.] A term adopted from the French and applied to a new-born child, to express its capability of sustaining independent life. Hence, when a fetus is properly organized, and sufficiently developed to live, it is said to be viable.

VI'ADUCT, n. [L. via, way, and duco, to lead. See DUKE.] The name usually given to an extensive bridge, or series of arches erected for the purpose of conducting a road or railway above the level of the ground in crossing a valley, or any place where it may be necessary to conduct the road or railway, at the requisite elevation, above the natural surface of the ground, in order to avoid interference with previously existing lines of communication. A similar structure for supporting a navigable canal is generally termed an aqueduct, or aqueduct bridge, although, strictly speaking, it is a viaduct; so also is an embankment, an excavation, or a tunnel formed for a line of road.

VI'AGE,† n. [L. via, a way.] A voyage; a journey.

VI'AL, n. [Fr. viole; Gr. φιαλη: L. phiala.] A phial; a small bottle of thin glass, used particularly by apothecaries and druggists.

Samuel took a vial of oil, and poured it on his head; 1 Sam. x.

Vials of God's wrath, in scripture, are the execution of his wrath upon the wicked for their sins; Rev. xvi.

VI'AL, v. t. To put in a vial.

VI'A LACTEA, n. [L.] In astron., the milky way,—which see.

VI'ALLED, pp. Put in a vial.

VI'ALLING, ppr. Inclosing in a vial.

VI'AND, n. [Fr. viande; from It. vivanda; L. vivendus, vivo, to live.] Meat dressed; food.

Viands of various kinds allure the taste. Pope.

[It is used chiefly in the plural.]

VI'ARY,† a. Happening in roads or ways.

VIA'TECTURE, n. [L. via, way; Gr. τικτω, from τευχω, to fabricate.] The art of constructing roads, bridges, railways, canals, &c.; civil engineering.

VIAT'IC, a. [L. viaticum, from via, way.] Pertaining to a journey or to travelling.

VIAT'ICUM, n. [L. supra.] Provisions for a journey.—2. Among the ancient Romans, an allowance to officers who were sent into the provinces to exercise any office or perform any service, also to the officers and soldiers of the army.—3. In the Romish church, the communion or eucharist given to persons in their last moments.

VIA'TOR, n. [L.] A traveller; a wayfaring person.—2. Among the Romans, an attendant or officer who summoned persons into the presence of a magistrate; an apparitor; a serjeant. Such servants were assigned both to the magistrates who had lictors, as the dictator, consul, prætor, and especially to those who had none, as the tribunes of the people and the censors.

VI'BRATE, v. i. [L. vibro; It. vibrare. This word belongs to the root of Eng. wabble; W. gwibiaw, to wander, to move in a circular or serpentine direction.] 1. To swing; to oscillate; to move one way and the other; to play to and fro; as, the pendulum of a clock vibrates more or less rapidly, as it is shorter or longer. The chords of an instrument vibrate when touched.—2. To quiver; as, a whisper vibrates on the ear.—3. To pass from one state to another; as, a man vibrates from one opinion to another.

VI'BRATE, v. t. To brandish; to move to and fro; to swing; as, to vibrate a sword or staff. The pendulum of a clock vibrates seconds.—2. To cause to quiver.

Breath vocalized, that is, vibrated or undulated, may differently affect the lips, and impress a swift tremulous motion. Holder.

VI'BRATED, pp. Brandished; moved one way and the other.

VI'BRATILE, a. Adapted to or used for vibratory motion; as, the vibratile organs of radiated animals.

VIBRATIL'ITY, n. Disposition to preternatural vibration or motion. [Not much used.]

VI'BRATING, ppr. Brandishing; moving to and fro, as a pendulum or musical chord.

VIBRA'TION, n. [Fr. from L. vibro.] 1. The act of brandishing; the act of moving or state of being moved one way and the other in quick succession. —2 In mech., a regular reciprocal motion of a body suspended; a motion consisting of continual reciprocations or returns; as, of the pendulum of a time-keeper. This is more frequently called oscillation. The number of vibrations in a given time depends on the length of the vibrating body. The number of vibrations performed by two pendulums of different lengths in a given time is inversely as the square roots of their lengths, and the times of their vibrations are directly as the square roots of their lengths. The vibrations of a pendulum are somewhat slower at or near the equator, than in remote latitudes, in consequence of the diminution of the force of gravity at or near the equator. The vibrations of the same pendulum, or of different pendulums of the same length, in the same place, in very small arcs of circles, are always performed in the same time. [See OSCILLATION, PENDULUM.]—3. In physics, the tremulous motion produced in a body when struck, or when its particles are disturbed by any action or impulse; sound is produced by exciting vibrations in the bodies emitting it. The term vibration is also applied to the alternate or reciprocating motion which is produced among the particles of a fluid or ethereal medium when their equilibrium is disturbed by any impulse; by which means waves or undulations are caused; as, the vibrations produced in water when agitated; the vibrations produced in the air by sounding bodies; the vibrations produced in a supposed ethereal medium by luminous bodies or by heat; the vibrations of the nervous fluid, by which sensation has been supposed to be produced, by impressions of external objects propagated thus to the brain.—4. In music, the regular reciprocating motion of a chord or of a body, which, when suspended, or stretched between two fixed points, swings or shakes to and fro, and thus produces musical sounds, or tones. The number of vibrations performed by a musical string, in a given time, is directly as the length of the string; the number of vibrations are also proportional to the square roots of the forces by which the strings are stretched. The times of vibrations of different strings are as their lengths directly, and the square roots of the tending forces inversely. The number of vibrations will also depend on the thickness and density of the strings, being much less in thick and heavy strings, than in small and light ones. In wind instruments, the sounds are produced by the vibrations of a column of air, contained in a straight or crooked tube. [See SOUND, TONE.]

VIBRAT'IUNCLE, n. A small vibration.

VI'BRATIVE, a. That vibrates.

VI'BRATORY, a. Vibrating; consisting in vibration or oscillation; as, a vibratory motion.—2. Causing to vibrate.

VI'BRIO, n. A genus of Infusoria, belonging to the order Homogenea, Cuv. The body is round and slender like a bit of thread. The disease in wheat called ear-cockles is occasioned by one of the species, V. tritici. The microscopic eels found in vinegar and diluted paste belong to this genus.

VIBRIS'SÆ, n. [L. vibrissa, a whisker.] In mammalogy, the stiff, long, pointed bristles which grow from the upper-lip and other parts of the head; and in ornithology, the hairs which grow from the upper and under sides of the mouth, and stand forward like feelers, and sometimes point both upwards and downwards, as in the fly-catchers.

VIBUR'NUM, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Caprifoliaceæ. The species consist of shrubs almost all ornamental, with opposite petiolate leaves and corymbose flowers. They are natives of Europe, Asia, and America. V. tinus, the laurustinus, is common throughout Europe, and is much cultivated in gardens in Great Britain. There are several varieties, all hardy evergreen shrubs, and general favourites. V. lantana, the wayfaring tree, is a native of Europe and the west of Asia. The young shoots are used in Germany for basket-making; the wood is sometimes employed in turning and cabinet-making; the berries are used for making ink, and the bark of the root for making birdlime. V. opulus, the guelder rose, is native throughout Europe, and is especially frequent in Britain and Sweden. Several North American species, as V. lentago, V. prunifolium. and V. pyrifolium, have been introduced as ornamental shrubs into British gardens.

VIC'AR, n. [Fr. vicaire; It. vicario; L. vicarius, from vicis, a turn, or its root.] 1. In a general sense, a person deputed or authorized to perform the functions of another; a substitute in office. The pope pretends to be vicar of Jesus Christ on earth. He has under him a grand vicar, who is a cardinal, and whose jurisdiction extends over all priests, regular and secular. —2. In the canon law, the priest of a parish, the predial tithes of which are impropriated or appropriated, that is, belong to a chapter or religious house, or to a layman, who receives them, and only allows the vicar the smaller tithes or a salary. [See RECTOR.]—Apostolical vicars are those who perform the functions of the pope in churches or provinces committed to their direction.

VIC'ARAĠE, n. The benefice of a vicar. A vicarage by endowment, becomes a benefice distinct from the parsonage.—2. The house or residence of a vicar.

VIC'AR-ĠEN'ERAL, n. A title given by Henry VIII. to the Earl of Essex, with power to oversee all the clergy, and regulate all church affairs. It is now the title of an office, which, as well as that of official principal, is united in the chancellor of the diocese. The business of the vicar-general is to exercise jurisdiction over matters purely spiritual.

VICA'RIAL, a. [from vicar.] Pertaining to a vicar; small; as, vicarial tithes.

VICA'RIATE, a. Having delegated power, as vicar.

VICA'RIATE, n. A delegated office or power.

VICA'RIOUS, a. [L. vicarius.] 1. Deputed; delegated; as, vicarious power or authority.—2. Acting for another; filling the place of another; as, a vicarious agent or officer.—3. Substituted in the place of another; as, a vicarious sacrifice. The doctrine of vicarious punishment has occasioned much controversy.

VICA'RIOUSLY, adv. In the place of another; by substitution.

VIC'ARSHIP, n. The office of a vicar; the ministry of a vicar.

VICE, n. [Fr. vice; L. vitium; W. gwyd.] 1. Properly, a spot or defect; a fault; a blemish; as, the vices of a political constitution.—2. In ethics, any voluntary action or course of conduct which deviates from the rules of moral rectitude, or from the plain rules of propriety; any moral unfitness of conduct, either from defect of duty, or from the transgression of known principles of rectitude. Vice differs from crime, in being less enormous. We never call murder or robbery a vice; but every act of intemperance, all falsehood, duplicity, deception, lewdness, and the like, is a vice. The excessive indulgence of passions and appetites which in themselves are innocent, is a vice. The smoking of tobacco and the taking of snuff, may in certain cases be innocent and even useful, but these practices may be carried to such an excess as to become vices. This word is also used to denote a habit of transgressing; as, a life of vice. Vice is rarely a solitary invader; it usually brings with it a frightful train of followers.—3. Depravity or corruption of manners; as, an age of vice.

> When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
> The post of honour is a private station.
> Addison.

4. A fault or bad trick in a horse.—5. In the old English drama, (the mysteries, &c.,) a buffoon wearing a cap with ass's ears, whose office was to torment and belabour another buffoon who represented the devil.

> His face made of brass, like a vice in a game. Tusser.

VICE, n. [Fr. vis, a screw.] A kind of iron press which serves to hold fast any thing worked upon, whether it is to be filed, bent, riveted, &c. It consists chiefly of a pair of stout jaws or chaps, which are brought together by means of a screw, in order to compress or hold fast any thing placed between them. There are several kinds of vices; as, the standard vice, the bench vice, and the hand vice.—Glazier's vice, a machine for drawing lead into flat rods for case-windows.—2.† A gripe or grasp.—3. In arch., an old term for a spiral or winding staircase.

VICE,† v. t. To press or screw up to a thing by a kind of violence.

VICE, (vi″sy.) [L.] vice, in the turn or place, is used in composition to denote one qui vicem gerit, who acts in the place of another, or is second in authority.—Succeeding in the vice, in Scots law, an intrusion by which one enters into possession, in the place of a tenant bound to remove; such entry being made collusively with the outgoing tenant, and without the landlord's consent.

VICE-AD'MIRAL, n. In the navy, the second officer in command. His flag is displayed at the fore top-gallant-mast head.—2. A civil officer in Great Britain, appointed by the lords commissioners of the admiralty, for exercising admiralty jurisdiction within their respective districts.

VICE-AD'MIRALTY, n. The office of a vice-admiralty; a vice-admiralty court.

VICE-A'GENT, n. [vice and agent.] One who acts in the place of another.

VICE-CHAMBERLAIN, n. An officer in court, next in command to the lord chamberlain.

VICE-CHANCELLOR, n. An officer in a university in England, a distinguished member, who is annually elected to manage the affairs in the absence of the chancellor.—2. A judge in chancery, subordinate to the lord chancellor, but trying causes in a court apart: there is an appeal from his decision to the lord chancellor. The office was created by the act 53 Geo. 3, c. 24. The number of vice-chancellors was increased to three, by the 5 Vict c. 5; and the chief is now styled vice-chancellor of England.

VICE-CON'SUL, n. One who acts in the place of a consul.

VI'CED,† a. Vicious; corrupt.

VICE-DOGE, n. A counsellor at Venice, who represented the doge when sick or absent.

VICEGE'RENCY, n. [See VICEGERENT.] The office of a vicegerent; agency under another; deputed power; lieutenancy.

VICEGE'RENT, n. [L. vicem gerens, acting in the place of another.] A lieutenant; a vicar; an officer who is deputed by a superior, or by proper authority to exercise the powers of another. Kings are sometimes called God's vicegerents. It is to be wished they would always deserve the appellation.

VICEGE'RENT, a. Having or exercising delegated power; acting by substitution, or in the place of another.

VICE-LEG'ATE, n. An officer employed by the pope to perform the office of spiritual and temporal governor in certain cities, when there is no legate or cardinal to command there.

VIC'ENARY, a. [L. vicenarius.] Belonging to twenty.

VICEN'NIAL, a. [L. viceni, twenty, and annus, a year.] Lasting or continuing twenty years; Vicennial prescription, in Scots law, a prescription of twenty years; one of the lesser prescriptions, which is pleadable against holograph bonds not attested by witnesses. [See PRESCRIPTION.]

VICE-PRES'IDENCY, n. The office of vice-president.

VICE-PRES'IDENT, n. (s as z.) An office-bearer next in rank below a president.

VICE-RE'GAL, a. Being in the place of a king; pertaining to a viceroy, or viceroyalty.

VICEROY, n. [Fr. viceroi, L. vice, and Fr. roy, a king.] A vice-king; the governor of a kingdom or country, who rules in the name of the king with regal authority, as the king's substitute; as the lord lieutenant of Ireland. This title, however, is seldom officially given.

VICEROY'ALTY, n. The dignity, office, or jurisdiction of a viceroy.

VICEROYSHIP, n. The dignity, office, or jurisdiction of a viceroy.

VICE-SUPPRESS'ING, a. Adapted to suppress vice.

VI'CE VER'SA. [L.] Contrariwise; on the contrary. The terms or the case being reversed.

VI'CIA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order, Leguminosæ. The species are known by the common name of vetch; they are usually climbing herbs with abruptly pinnate leaves, with many pairs of leaflets, the common petiole terminating in a tendril at the apex, which is mostly branched. The legume is long, compressed, pointed, one-celled, with two leathery stiffish valves. Above 100 species have been described, most of them natives of Europe. Ten species are enumerated by British botanists. Many of the species are much in use, as green crops, for feeding cattle, sheep, &c., as V. sativa, the common vetch or tare; V. biennis, biennial vetch, V. pisiformis, pea-like vetch; V. sylvatica, the wood vetch, &c.

VI''CIATE. See VITIATE, the more usual orthography.

VIC'INAGE, n. [from L. vicinia, neighbourhood; vicinus, near.] Neighbourhood; the place or places adjoining or near. A jury must be of the vicinage, or body of the county. In law, common because of vicinage, is where the inhabitants of two townships contiguous to each other have usually intercommoned with one another; the beasts of one straying into the other's fields without molestation from either.

VIC'INAL, } a. Near neighbouring.
VIC'INE, } [Little used.]

VICIN'ITY, n. [L. vicinitas.] 1. Nearness in place; as, the vicinity of two country seats.—2. Neighbourhood; as, a seat in the vicinity of the metropolis.—3. Neighbouring country. Vegetables produced in the vicinity of the city are daily brought to market. The vicinity is full of gardens.

VICIOS'ITY, n. Depravity; corruption of manners. [But viciousness is generally used.]

VI''CIOUS, a. [Fr. vicieux; L. vitiosus.] 1. Defective; imperfect; as, a system of government vicious and unsound.—2. Addicted to vice; corrupt in principles or conduct; depraved; wicked; habitually transgressing the moral law; as, a vicious race of men; vicious parents; vicious children.—3. Corrupt; contrary to moral principles or to rectitude; as, vicious examples; vicious conduct.—4. Corrupt, in a physical sense; foul; impure; insalubrious; as, vicious air.—5. Corrupt; not genuine or pure; as, vicious language; vicious idioms.—6. Unruly; refractory; not well tamed or broken; as, a vicious horse.

VI''CIOUSLY, adv. Corruptly; in a manner contrary to rectitude, moral principles, propriety, or purity.—2. Faultily; not correctly.

VI''CIOUSNESS, n. Addictedness to vice; corruptness of moral principles or practice; habitual violation of the moral law, or of moral duties; depravity in principles or in manners.

What makes a governor justly despised, is viciousness and ill morals. South.

2. Unruliness; refractoriness; as of a beast.

VICIS'SITUDE, n. [L. vicissitudo; from vicis, a turn.] 1. Regular change or succession of one thing to another; as, the vicissitudes of day and night, and of winter and summer; the vicissitudes of the seasons.—2. Change; revolution; as in human affairs. We are exposed to continual vicissitudes of fortune.

VICISSITU'DINARY, a. Changing in succession.

VICISSITU'DINOUS, a. Full of vicissitude.

VICON'TIEL, a. [L. vice-comitalia. See VISCOUNT.] In old law books, pertaining to the sheriff.—Vicontiel rents, are certain rents for which the sheriff pays a rent to the king.—Vicontiel writs, are such as are triable in the county or sheriff court.

VICON'TIELS, n. Things belonging to the sheriff; particularly, farms for which the sheriff pays rent to the king.

VI'COUNT, n. [L. vice-comes.] In law books, the sheriff.—2. A degree of nobility next below a count or earl. [See VISCOUNT.]

VIC'TIM, n. [L. victima; Fr. victime.] 1. A living being sacrificed to some deity, or in the performance of a religious rite; usually, some beast slain in sacrifice; but human beings have been slain by some nations, for the purpose of appeasing the wrath or conciliating the favour of some deity.—2. A person or thing destroyed; a person or thing sacrificed in the pursuit of an object. How many persons have fallen victims to jealousy, to lust, to ambition!

VIC'TIMATE,† v. t. To sacrifice.

VIC'TIMIZE, v. t. To make a victim of; to sacrifice or destroy; to make the victim of a swindling transaction. [A cant word, but one in common use.]

VIC'TOR, n. [L. from vinco, victus, to conquer, or the same root. N not being radical, the root is vico or vigo; Sax. wig, wigg, war; wiga, a warrior, a hero, a victor; wigan, to war, to fight. The primary sense is to urge, drive, or strive; hence to subdue.] 1. One who conquers in war; a vanquisher; one who defeats an enemy in battle. Victor differs from conqueror. We apply conqueror to one who subdues countries, kingdoms, or nations; as, Alexander was the conqueror of Asia or India, or of many nations, or of the world. In such phrases, we cannot substitute victor. But we use victor, when we speak of one who overcomes a particular enemy, or in a particular battle; as, Cæsar was victor at Pharsalia. The duke of Wellington was victor at Waterloo. Victor then is not followed by the possessive case; for we do not say, Alexander was the victor of Darius, though we say, he was victor at Arbela.—2. One who vanquishes another in private combat or contest; as, a victor in the Olympic games.—3. One who wins or gains the advantage.

In love, the victors from the vanquish'd fly,
They fly that wound, and they pursue that die. Waller.

4. Master; lord.

These, victor of his health, his fortune, friends. Pope.

[Not usual nor legitimate.]

VIC'TORESS, n. A female who vanquishes.

VICTO'RIOUS, a. [Fr. victorieux.] 1. Having conquered in battle or contest; having overcome an enemy or antagonist; conquering; vanquishing; as, a victorious general; victorious troops; a victorious admiral or navy.—2. That produces conquest; as, a victorious day.—3. Emblematic of conquest; indicating victory; as, brows bound with victorious wreaths.

VICTO'RIOUSLY, adv. With conquest; with defeat of an enemy or antagonist; triumphantly; as, grace will carry us victoriously through all difficulties.

VICTO'RIOUSNESS, n. The state of being victorious.

VIC'TORY, n. [L. victoria, from vinco, victus, to conquer; Fr. victoire.] 1.

Conquest; the defeat of an enemy in battle, or of an antagonist in contest; a gaining of the superiority in war or combat. Victory supposes the power of an enemy or an antagonist to prove inferior to that of the victor. Victory however depends not always on superior skill or valour; it is often gained by the fault or mistake of the vanquished.

Victory may be honourable to the arms, but shameful to the counsels of a nation. Bolingbroke.

2. The advantage or superiority gained over spiritual enemies, over passions and appetites, or over temptations, or in any struggle or competition.

Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ; 1 Cor. xv.

3. In myth., a goddess who presided over victories. The Romans erected a temple to her, where they prayed the gods to give success to their arms. She was painted in the form of a woman arrayed in cloth of gold.

VIC'TRESS, n. A female that conquers.

VIC'TRICE,† n. A victress.

VIC'TRIX, a. [L.] Conquering, or victorious; as, Venus victrix.

VICT'UAL,† n. Provision of food, store for the support of life; meat; sustenance.—2. In Scots law, any sort of grain or corn. [See VICTUALS.]

VICTUAL, v. t. (vit'l.) [from victual, the noun.] 1. To supply with provisions for subsistence; as, to victual an army; to victual a garrison.—2. To store with provisions; as, to victual a ship.

VICTUALLED, pp. (vit'ld.) Supplied with provisions.

VICTUALLER, n. (vit'ler.) One who furnishes provisions.—2. One who keeps a house of entertainment.—3. A provision ship; a ship employed to carry provisions for other ships, or for supplying troops at a distance.

VICTUALLING, ppr. (vit'ling.) Supplying with provisions.

VICT'UALLING-HOUSE, n. A house where provision is made for strangers to eat.

VICT'UALLING-YARD, n A yard generally contiguous to a dock-yard, containing magazines where provisions and other like stores for the Royal navy are deposited.

VICTUALS, n. (vit'lz.) [Fr. victuailles; It. vettovaglia; Sp. vitualla; from L. victus, food, from the root of vivo, which was vigo or vico, coinciding with vigeo; Basque, vicia, life. This word is now never used in the singular.] Food for human beings, prepared for eating; that which supports human life; provisions; meat; sustenance. We never apply this word to that on which beasts or birds feed, and we apply it chiefly to food for men when cooked or prepared for the table. We do not now give this name to flesh, corn, or flour, in a crude state; but we say, the victuals are well cooked or dressed, and in great abundance. We say, a man eats his victuals with a good relish. Such phrases as, to buy victuals for the army or navy, to lay in victuals for the winter, &c., are now obsolete. We say, to buy provisions or stores; yet we use the verb, to victual an army or ship.

VICUG'NA, or VICU'ÑA, n. A ruminant mammal, Auchenia vicugna, of the family Camelidæ. It is closely allied to the llama, the guanaco, and the paco, and in size exceeds the latter two, measuring 4 ft. 1 in. from the sole of the foot to the crown of the head, and 2¼ ft. to the shoulders. Its wool is short and curly, and finer than that of any of its relative species. In colour its upper parts are of a reddish yellow hue, and its breast and lower parts white. It is a native of South America, and frequents lofty slopes in the Andes of Chili, &c., where some scanty vegetation is to be found, but never ventures up to the naked rocky summits, for its soft tender feet are only suited for turfy ground. It lives in herds of 6 to 15 females, and one male, the leader and protector of the herd, who, standing at a short distance, while the females are feeding, gives timely warning of danger, by a sort of whistling sound and a quick movement of the foot.

VIDAME', n. [L. vice-dominus, Fr. vidame.] In ancient English law, a bishop's deputy, in matters temporal; he ranked next to a peer.

VI'DE. [L.] See.

VIDEL'ICET, adv. [L. for videre licet.] To wit; that is, namely. A term used in law pleadings. An abbreviation for this word is viz.

VI'DIMUS, n. [L. we have seen.] An examination or inspection; as, a vidimus of accounts or documents.

VIDO'NIA, n. A white wine, the produce of the island of Teneriffe, much resembling Madeira, but inferior in quality to it and of a tart flavour.

VID'UAGE, n. [Lat. vidua, a widow.] The state or class of widows.

VID'UAL,† a. [L. viduus, deprived.] Belonging to the state of a widow.

VIDU'ITY,† n. [L. viduitas.] Widowhood.

VIE, v. i. [Sax. wigan, to war, to contend, that is, to strain, to urge, to press. See VICTOR.] To strive for superiority; to contend; to use effort in a race, contest, competition, rivalship, or strife. How delightful it is to see children vie with each other in diligence and in duties of obedience.

In a trading nation, the younger sons may be placed in a way of life to vie with the best of their family. Addison.

VIE, v. t. To show or practice in competition; as, to vie power; to vie charities. [Not legitimate.]—2. To urge; to press.

She hung about my neck, and kiss and kiss She vied so fast † Shak.

VIELLE', n. (ve-yel'.) [Fr.] An old stringed instrument played by means of finger keys, and the friction of a wheel instead of a bow. In this country it is called a hurdy-gurdy.

VIELLEUR, n. A species of fly in Surinam, less than the lantern fly.

VIEN'NA GREEN, n. A beautiful green powder much prized as a pigment. It is prepared by mixing together boiling solutions of equal weights of neutral-acetate of copper, and arsenious acid, and adding the mixture to its own volume of cold water, the whole being allowed to stand for some days.

VIENNESE', n. sing. and pl. A native of Vienna; natives of Vienna.

VI ET ARMIS. [L.] In law, with force and arms, words made use of in indictments and actions of trespass, to shew the violent commission of any trespass or crime.

VIEW, v. t. (vu.) [Fr. vue, from voir, to see, contracted from L. videre, Russ. viju, San. vid. The primary sense is to reach or extend to.] 1. To survey; to examine with the eye; to look on with attention, or for the purpose of examining; to inspect; to explore. View differs from look, see, and behold, in expressing more particular or continued attention to the thing which is the object of sight. We ascended mount Tabor, and viewed with admiration the spacious and beautiful plains of Esdraëlon and Galilee. We viewed with delight the rich and beautiful valley of Cashmere.

Go up and view the country; Josh. vii.
I viewed the walls of Jerusalem; Neh. vii.

2. To see; to perceive by the eye.—3. To survey intellectually; to examine with the mental eye; to consider. View the subject in all its aspects.—On view, exposed to public examination; as, the articles advertised for sale are now on view. [Here on view is adverbial.]

VIEW, n. (vu.) Prospect; sight; reach of the eye.

The walls of Pluto's palace are in view. Dryden.

2. The whole extent seen. Vast or extensive views present themselves to the eye.—3. Sight; power of seeing, or limit of sight. The mountain was not within our view.—4. Intellectual or mental sight. These things give us a just view of the designs of Providence. —5. Act of seeing. The facts mentioned were verified by actual view.— 6. Sight; eye.

Objects near our view are thought greater than those of larger size, that are more remote. Locke.

7. Survey; inspection; examination by the eye. The assessors took a view of the premises.

Surveying nature with too nice a view. Dryden.

8. Intellectual survey; mental examination. On a just view of all the arguments in the case, the law appears to be clear.—9. Appearance; show.

Graces,...
Which, by the splendour of her view
Dazzled, before we never knew. Waller.

10. Display; exhibition to the sight or mind.

To give a right view of this mistaken part of liberty. Locke.

11. Prospect of interest.

No man sets himself about any thing, but upon some view or other, which serves him for a reason. Locke.

12. Intention; purpose; design. With that view he began the expedition. With a view to commerce, he passed through Egypt.—13. Opinion; manner of seeing or understanding. These are my views of the policy which ought to be pursued.—14. In law, an inspection judicially authorized. In Scots law, in jury causes, it is sometimes thought expedient that the jurors or a part of them, should have an opportunity of inspecting premises in dispute previous to the trial. The party wishing for the view applies to the court for a view, and where it is granted, six jurors are selected for the purpose, called viewers, who must be summoned by the sheriff to attend at the place in question, where the premises are pointed out to them by two persons named by the court, and technically called shewers. The object of the view is to render the ground of dispute more intelligible to the jury, but it is only granted where the necessity for it is made very apparent. A similar practice obtains in English law.—15. The footing, treading, or track of a fallow-deer.—View of frankpledge, in law, a court of record, held in a hundred, lordship, or manor, before the steward of the leet.—Point of view, the direction in which a thing is seen.

VIEWED, pp. (vu'ed.) Surveyed; examined by the eye; inspected; considered.

VIEWER, n. (vu'er.) One who views, surveys or examines.—2. In law, viewers are those jurors who are authorized by a court to inspect any place in question. [See VIEW, No. 14.]

VIEWING, ppr. (vu'ing.) Surveying; examining by the eye or by the mind; inspecting; exploring.

VIEWING, n. (vu'ing.) The act of beholding or surveying.

VIEWLESS, a. (vu'less.) That cannot be seen; not being perceivable by the eye; invisible; as, viewless winds.

> Swift through the valves the visionary fair
> Repass'd, and viewless mix'd with common air. Pope.

VIEWLY, a. Lightly; striking to the view; handsome. [Obsolete or local.]

VIGES'IMAL, a. The twentieth.

VIGESIMA'TION, n. [L. vigesimus, twentieth.] The act of putting to death every twentieth man.

VIG'IL, n. [L. vigilia; Fr. vigile; L. vigil, waking, watchful; vigilo, to watch. This is formed on the root of Eng. wake, Sax. wæcan, wecan. The primary sense is to stir or excite, to rouse, to agitate.] 1. Watch; devotion performed in the customary hours of rest or sleep.

> So they in heav'n their odes and vigils tun'd. Milton.

2. In church affairs, the eve or evening before any feast, the ecclesiastical day beginning at six o'clock in the evening, and continuing till the same hour the following evening; hence, a religious service performed in the evening preceding a holiday.—3. A fast observed on the day preceding a holiday; a wake. —4. Watch; forbearance of sleep; as, the vigils of the card table.—Vigils or watchings of flowers, a term used by Linnæus to express a peculiar faculty belonging to the flowers of certain plants, of opening and closing their petals at certain hours of the day.

VIG'ILANCE, n. [Fr. from L. vigilans. See VIGIL.] 1. Forbearance of sleep; a state of being awake.—2. Watchfulness; circumspection; attention of the mind in discovering and guarding against danger, or providing for safety. Vigilance is a virtue of prime importance in a general. The vigilance of the dog is no less remarkable than his fidelity.—3. Guard; watch.

> In at this gate none pass
> The vigilance here plac'd. [Unusual.] Milton.

VIG'ILANCY, for Vigilance, is not used.

VIG'ILANT, a. [Fr. from L. vigilans.] Watchful; circumspect; attentive to discover and avoid danger, or to provide for safety.

> Take your places and be vigilant. Shak.
> Be sober, be vigilant; 1 Pet. v.

2. In her., a term applicable to the cat when borne in a position as if upon the watch for prey.

VIG'ILANTLY, adv. [supra.] Watchfully; with attention to danger and the means of safety; circumspectly.

VIGINTIV'IRATE, n. [L. viginti and viri.] A body of officers of government, consisting of twenty men.

VIGNETTE', n. [Fr. vignette, from vigne, a vine.] Originally, a kind of flourish of vine leaves and flowers in the vacant part of the title page of a book, above the dedication, or at the end of a division. At present, however, the word signifies any small engraved embellishment for the illustration or decoration of a page of any work; and, in a more limited sense, such illustrations as are softened off at the edges, and not terminated by a definite boundary line.—2. In arch., ornamental carving in imitation of vine leaves.

VIG'OROSO, In music, with energy.

VIG'OROUS, a. Full of physical strength or active force; strong; lusty; as, a vigorous youth; a vigorous body.—2. Powerful; strong; made by strength, either of body or mind; as, a vigorous attack; vigorous exertions. The enemy expects a vigorous campaign.

> The beginnings of confederacies have been vigorous and successful. Davenant.

VIG'OROUSLY, adv. With great physical force or strength; forcibly; with active exertions; as, to prosecute an enterprise vigorously.

VIG'OROUSNESS, n. The quality of being vigorous or possessed of active strength.

VIG'OUR, n. [L. from vigeo, to be brisk, to grow, to be strong; allied to vivo, vixi, to live, and to Sax. wigan, to carry on war, and to wake.] 1. Active strength or force of body in animals; physical force.

> The vigour of this arm was never vain. Dryden.

2. Strength of mind; intellectual force; energy. We say a man possesses vigour of mind or intellect.—3. Strength or force in animal or vegetable motion; as, a plant grows with vigour.—4. Strength; energy; efficacy.

> In the fruitful earth
> His beams, unactive else, their vigour find. Milton.

VIG'OUR,† v. t. To invigorate. [Vigour and all its derivatives imply active strength, or the power of action and exertion, in distinction from passive strength, or strength to endure.]

VIK'ING, n. plur. Vik'ingr. A pirate. The Vikingr were Northmen who infested the European seas in the 8th, 9th, and 10th centuries. They were generally the sons of Northern kings, who betook themselves to piracy as a means of distinguishing themselves, and of obtaining an independent command. [See SEA KINGS.]

VILD, VILED, † a. Vile; wicked.

VILE, a. [L. vilis; Fr. and Sp. vil; It. vile; Gr. φαῦλος.] 1. Base; mean; worthless; despicable.

> The inhabitants account gold a vile thing. Abbot.
> A man in vile raiment; James ii.
> Wherefore are we counted as beasts, and reputed as vile in your sight? Job xviii.

2. Morally base or impure; sinful; depraved by sin; wicked; hateful in the sight of God and of good men. The sons of Eli made themselves vile; 1 Sam. iii.

> Behold I am vile; what shall I answer? Job xl.

VILED,† a. Abusive; scurrilous; defamatory.

VILELY, adv. Basely; meanly; shamefully; as, Hector vilely dragged about the walls of Troy.—2. In a cowardly manner; 2 Sam. i.

> The Volscians vilely yielded the town. Shak.

VILENESS, n. Baseness; meanness; despicableness.

> His vileness us shall never awe. Drayton.

2. Moral baseness or depravity; degradation by sin; extreme wickedness; as, the vileness of mankind.

VIL'ER, a. comp. More vile.

VIL'EST, a. superl. Most vile.

VILIFICA'TION, n. The act of vilifying or defaming.

VIL'IFIED, pp. [from vilify.] Defamed; traduced; debased.

VIL'IFIER, n. One who defames or traduces.

VIL'IFY, v. t. [from vile.] To make vile; to debase; to degrade.

> Their Maker's image
> Forsook them, when themselves they vilified
> To serve ungovern'd appetite. Milton.

2. To defame; to traduce; to attempt to degrade by slander.

> Many passions dispose us to depress and vilify the merit of one rising in the esteem of mankind Addison.

[This is the most usual sense of the verb.]

VIL'IFYING, ppr. Debasing; defaming.

VIL'IPEND,† v. t. [L. vilipendo.] To despise; to contemn; to disparage; to have in no esteem.

VILIPEND'ENCY,† n. Disesteem; slight.

VIL'ITY,† n. Vileness; baseness.

VILL, n. [L. villa; Fr. ville.] A village; a small collection of houses. [See VILLAGE.] The statute of Exeter, 14 Edward I., mentions entire-vills, demi-vills, and hamlets.

VIL'LA, n. [L. villa; Fr. ville; Gaelic, bail.] A country seat; usually one for the residence of an opulent person. Among the Romans, villa signified a country seat for an individual of the wealthier sort, with its appendages. It comprehended three different kinds of houses, the villa urbana, which was the residence of the proprietor, and contained all the conveniences of a mansion in the city; the villa rustica, containing barns, stables, &c., and lodgings for those who were employed in the operations of the farming establishment; and the villa fructuaria, appropriated to the preservation of the various productions of the farm. By degrees numbers of houses were built round these villas, and hence the origin of villages. In Spanish and Portuguese, villa means a town.

VIL'LAGE, n. [Fr.; from villa.] A small assemblage of houses, less than a town or city, and inhabited chiefly by farmers and other labouring people. In Eng., it is said that a village is distinguished from a town by the want of a market.—2. In law, a village, or vill, is sometimes taken to signify a manor, at other times a whole parish, or a subdivision of it. Most commonly, it means the out part of a parish consisting of a few houses separate from the rest.

VIL'LAGER, n. An inhabitant of a village.

VIL'LAGERY, n. A district of villages.

VIL'LAIN, n. [Fr. vilain; It. and Sp. villano; Norm. vilaint. According to the French orthography, this word is formed from vile; but the orthography in other languages connects this word with vill, village, and this is probably the true origin.] 1. In feudal law, a villain or villein is one who holds lands by a base or servile tenure, or in villanage. Villains, who belonged principally to lords of manors, were of two sorts; villains regardant, that is, annexed to the manor or land, adscriptitii glebæ; or villains in gross, or at large, that is, annexed to the person of their lord, and transferable by deed from one owner to another. They could not leave their lord without his permission; but if they ran away, or were purloined from him, they might be claimed and recovered by action like beasts, or other chattels. They held indeed small portions of land to sustain themselves and families, but it was at the mere will of the lord, who might dispossess them whenever he pleased, and their tenure bound them to what were termed villein or ignoble services. A villein could acquire no property either in land or goods; if he purchased either the lord might seize them to his own use.—2. A vile wicked person; a man extremely depraved, and capable or guilty of great crimes. We call by the name of villain, the thief, the robber, the burglarian, the murderer, the incendiary, the ravisher, the seducer, the cheat, the swindler, &c.

> Calm thinking villains, whom no faith could fix. Pope.

VIL'LAINOUS, a. [from villain.] Base; very vile.—2. Wicked; extremely depraved; as, a villainous person or wretch.—3. Proceeding from extreme depravity; as, a villainous action.—4. Sorry; vile; mischievous; in a familiar sense; as, a villainous trick of the eye. Villainous judgment, in old law, a judgment that casts reproach on the guilty person.

VIL'LAINOUSLY, adv. Basely; with extreme wickedness or depravity.

VIL'LAINOUSNESS, n. Baseness; extreme depravity.

VIL'LAINY, n. Extreme depravity; atrocious wickedness; as, the villainy of the thief or the robber; the villainy of the seducer.

> The commendation is not in his wit, but in his villainy. Shak.

2. A crime; an action of deep depravity. In this sense the word has a plural.

> Such villainies roused Horace into wrath. Dryden.

VIL'LAKIN,† n. A little village.

VIL'LAN, n. A villain or villein.

VIL'LANAGE, a. The state of a villain; base servitude.—2. A base tenure of lands; tenure on condition of doing the meanest services for the lord; usually written villenage,—which see.—3. Baseness; infamy. [See VILLAINY.]

VIL'LANIZE,† } VIL'LAINIZE,† } v. t. To debase; to degrade; to defame; to revile.

> Were virtue by descent, a noble name
> Could never villanize his father's fame. [Little used.] Dryden.

VIL'LANIZED, } VIL'LAINIZED, } pp. Defamed; debased. [Little used.]

VIL'LANIZER,† n. One who villanizes.

VIL'LANIZING, } VIL'LAINIZING, } ppr. Defaming; debasing. [Little used.]

VIL'LANOUS, } VIL'LAINOUS, } a. Serving; being in a state of villenage.

VIL'LANY, } VIL'LAINY, } n. Villenage.

VILLAR'SIA, n. A genus of aquatic or marsh plants, nat. order Gentianaceæ. They inhabit all parts of the world, and are elegant plants when in blossom. One species, V. nymphæoides, a floating plant, is a native of Europe, and is found in Great Britain in rivers and still waters, although rare. It is a beautiful plant, with a large yellow flower, curiously plaited, and easily cultivated.

VIL'LATIC, a. [L. villaticus.] Pertaining to a village.

> Tame villatic fowl. Milton.

VIL'LEIN, n. See VILLAIN, No. 1.

VIL'LENAGE, n. [from villain.] A tenure of lands and tenements by base services. This tenure was neither strictly feudal, Norman, or Saxon, but mixed and compounded of them all. It was originally founded on the servile state of the occupiers of the soil, who were allowed to hold portions of land at the will of their lord, on condition of performing base and menial services. Where the service was base in its nature, and undefined as to time and amount, the tenure received the name of pure villenage, but where the service, although of a base nature, was certain and defined, it was called privileged villenage, and sometimes villein socage. It frequently happened that lands held in villenage descended in uninterrupted succession from father to son, until at length the occupiers or villeins became entitled, by prescription or custom, to hold their lands against the lord, so long as they performed the required services. And although the villeins themselves acquired freedom, or their land came into the possession of freemen, the villein services were still the condition of the tenure, according to the custom of the manor. These customs were preserved and evidenced by the rolls of the several courts-baron, in which they were entered, or kept on foot by the constant immemorial usage of the several manors in which the lands lay. And as such tenants had nothing to shew for their estates but the entries into those rolls, or copies of them authenticated by the steward, they at last came to be called tenants by copy of court-roll, and their tenure a copyhold.

VIL'LI, n. plur. [L. villus.] 1. In anat., fine small fibres, resembling a covering of down or the pile of velvet, as the internal coat of the intestinal canal.—2. In bot., long, straight, and soft hairs on the surface of a plant.

VIL'LOSE, } VIL'LOUS, } a. [L. villosus, from villus, hair, Eng. wool.] 1. Abounding with fine hairs or wooly substance; nappy; shaggy; rough; as, a villous coat. The villous coat of the stomach and intestines is the inner mucous membrane, so called from the innumerable villi or fine fibrils with which its internal surface is covered.—2. In bot., covered with long, straight, and soft hairs.

VIL'LUS, n. [L.] A soft hair. [See VILLI.]

VIM'INAL, a. [L. viminalis.] Pertaining to twigs; consisting of twigs; producing twigs.

VIMIN'EOUS, a. [L. vimineus, from vimen, a twig.] Made of twigs or shoots.

> In the hive's vimineous dome. Prior.

VINA'CEOUS, a. [L. vinaceus.] 1. Belonging to wine or grapes.—2. Of the colour of wine.

VINAIGRETTE', n. [Fr.] A small box of gold, silver, &c. with perforations on the top, for holding aromatic vinegar, contained in a sponge. It is used like a smelling bottle.

VIN'CIBLE, a. [from L. vinco, to conquer. See VICTOR.] Conquerable; that may be overcome or subdued.

> He not vincible in spirit. Hayward.

VIN'CIBLENESS, } VINCIBIL'ITY, } n. The capacity of being conquered; conquerableness.

VINC'TURE,† n. [L. vinctura.] A binding.

VINC'ULUM, n. [L.] A bond of union; a band or tie.—2. In alge., a character in the form of a line or stroke, drawn over a factor, divisor, dividend, &c. when it consists of several letters, quantities, or terms, in order to connect them together as one quantity, and shew that they are to be multiplied, or divided, &c. together: Thus, $a + b \times c$, indicates that the sum of a and b is to be multiplied by c; whereas the expression without this character would indicate simply, that b is to be multiplied by c, and the product added to a. It is now more usual, however, to enclose quantities that are to be connected together, within parentheses or brackets: thus, $(a + b + c) \times x$ or $\{a + b + c\} \times x$; $(x^2 - y^2) \div (x + y)$, or $\{x^2 - y^2\} \div \{x + y\}$.—3. In English civil law, the marriage tie; hence a divorce, a vinculo matrimonii, is an entire release from the bond of matrimony, with leave to marry again.

VINDE'MIAL, a. [L. vindemialis, from vindemia, vintage; vinea and demo] Belonging to a vintage or grape harvest.

VINDE'MIATE, v. i. [supra.] To gather the vintage.

VINDEMIA'TION, n. The operation of gathering grapes.

VINDE'MIATRIX, n. A star of the third magnitude in the constellation Virgo.

VINDICABIL'ITY, n. The quality of being vindicable, or capable of support or justification.

VIN'DICABLE, a. [infra.] That may be vindicated, justified, or supported.

VIN'DICATE, v. t. [L. vindico.] 1. To defend; to justify; to support or maintain as true or correct, against denial, censure, or objections.

> When the respondent denies any proposition, the opponent must vindicate it. Watts.

> Laugh where we must, be candid where we can;
> But vindicate the ways of God to man. Pope.

2. To assert; to defend with success; to maintain; to prove to be just or valid; as, to vindicate a claim or title.

—3. To defend with arms, or otherwise; as, to vindicate our rights.—4. To avenge; to punish; as, a war to vindicate or punish infidelity.

God is more powerful to exact subjection and to vindicate rebellion. Pearson.

[This latter use is entirely obsolete.]

VIN'DICATED, pp. Defended; supported; maintained; proved to be just or true.

VIN'DICATING, ppr. Defending; supporting against denial, censure, charge, or impeachment; proving to be true or just; defending by force.

VINDICA'TION, n. [Fr. from L. vindico.] 1. The defence of any thing, or a justification against denial or censure, or against objections or accusations; as, the vindication of opinions or of a creed; the vindication of the Scriptures against the objections and cavils of infidels.—2. The act of supporting by proof or legal process; the proving of any thing to be just; as, the vindication of a title, claim, or right.—3. Defence by force or otherwise; as, the vindication of the rights of man; the vindication of our liberties or the rights of conscience.

VIN'DICATIVE, a. Tending to vindicate.—2. Revengeful. [This is now generally vindictive.]

VIN'DICATIVENESS,† n. Vindictiveness.

VIN'DICATOR, n. One who vindicates; one who justifies or maintains; one who defends.

VIN'DICATORY, a. Punitory; inflicting punishment; avenging.

The afflictions of Job were not vindicatory punishments. Bramhall.

2. Tending to vindicate; justificatory.

VINDIC'TIVE, a. [Fr. vindicatif.] Revengeful; given to revenge.

I am vindictive enough to repel force by force. Dryden.

VINDIC'TIVELY, adv. By way of revenge; revengefully.

VINDIC'TIVENESS, n. A revengeful temper.—2. Revengefulness.

VINE, n. [L. vinea; Fr. vigne; from the It. vigna, Sp. viña, a vineyard; W. gwinien, vine, and gwin, wine. See WINE.] 1. A well known climbing plant with a woody stem, producing the grapes of commerce. It is of the genus Vitis, and of numerous varieties. [See VITIS.]—2. The long slender stem of any plant that trails on the ground, or climbs and supports itself by winding round a fixed object, or by seizing any fixed thing with its tendrils or claspers. Thus we speak of the hop vine, the bean vine, the vines of melons, squashes, pumpkins, and other cucurbitaceous plants.

VINE-CLAD, a. Clad or covered with vines.

VINED, a. Having leaves like those of the vine.

VINE-DRESSER, n. [vine and dresser.] One who dresses, trims, prunes, and cultivates vines.

VINE-FRETTER, n. [vine and fret.] A small insect that injures vines, the aphis vitis.

VIN'EGAR, n. [Fr. vin, wine, and aigre, sour.] 1. Dilute and impure acetic acid, obtained by the vinous fermentation. In wine countries it is obtained from the acetous fermentation of inferior wines, but in this country it is usually procured from an infusion of malt which has previously undergone the vinous fermentation. Vinegar may also be obtained from strong beer, by the fermentation of various fruits, or of a solution of sugar mixed with yeast; in short, all liquids which are capable of the vinous fermentation may be made to produce vinegar. 120 parts of water, 12 of brandy, 3 of brown sugar, 1 of tartar, and ½ of sour dough, if left for some weeks in a warm place, yield a strong and pleasant vinegar. All the above vinegars yield by distillation a purer and somewhat weaker acetic acid, called distilled vinegar.—Radical vinegar, hydrated acetic acid, obtained by distilling 3 parts of dry powdered acetate of soda, with 9·7 of oil of vitriol, as pure and concentrated as possible. This vinegar, holding camphor and essential oils in solution, constitutes the aromatic vinegar of the shops.—Wood vinegar, pyroligneous acid,—which see. Common and distilled vinegar are used in pharmacy for preparing many remedies, and externally in medicine, in the form of lotions. The use of vinegar as a condiment is universal. It is likewise the antiseptic ingredient in pickles.—2.† Any thing really or metaphorically sour.—Vinegar of lead, a liquor formed by digesting ceruse or litharge with a sufficient quantity of vinegar to dissolve it.

VIN'EGAR-CRUET, n. A small glass bottle for holding vinegar.

VINE-GRUB, n. [vine and grub.] Another name for the vine-fretter, aphis vitis. [See VINE-FRETTER.]

VI'NER, n. An orderer or trimmer of vines.

VINERY, n. In gardening, a hot-house in which vines are grown.

VINE'YARD, n. (vin'-yard.) [Sax. vingeard; Ir. fionghort.] A plantation of vines producing grapes; properly, an inclosure or yard for grape-vines.

VIN'NEWED,† a. [Sax. fynig.] Mouldy; musty.

VIN'NEWEDNESS,† n. Mustiness; mouldiness.

VIN'NY,† a. [supra.] Mouldy; musty.

VIN'OLENCY,† n. [L. vinolentia, from vinum, wine.] Drunkenness.

VIN'OLENT,† a. Given to wine.

VINOS'ITY, n. State or quality of being vinous.

VI'NOUS, VI'NOSE, a. [Fr. vineux, from L. vinum, wine.] Having the qualities of wine; pertaining to wine; as, a vinous taste; a vinous flavour.—Vinous fermentation, that species of fermentation which terminates in the formation of an intoxicating liquid, or one which contains alcohol; as wine, beer, porter, cider, &c. It consists in the peculiar decomposition which the different species of sugar undergo in certain circumstances, and by which their elements combine to form new compounds, which, under similar conditions, are always the same. When a saccharine solution is placed in contact with substances in a state of decomposition or putrefaction, it is observed, after about 24 hours, if the temperature be kept between 40° and 80°, that the taste of the sugar has disappeared; pure carbonic acid is disengaged, and the liquid has acquired intoxicating qualities. It now contains alcohol, which may be separated by distillation. [See FERMENTATION.]

VIN'QUISH, n. A state of pining or languishing; a disease in sheep.

VINT'AGE, n. [Fr. vendange, from L. vendemia.] 1. The produce of the vine for the season. The vintage is abundant.—2. The time of gathering the crop of grapes.—3. The wine produced by the crop of grapes in one season.

VINT'AGER, n. One that gathers the vintage.

VINT'AGE-SPRING, n. A wine-fount.

VINT'NER, n. One who deals in wine; a wine-seller.

VINT'RY, n. A place where wine is sold.

VI'NUM, n. [L.] Wine.

VI'NY, a. Belonging to vines; producing grapes.—2. Abounding in vines.

VI'OL, VIO'LA, n. [Fr. viole; It. and Sp. viola; Ir. biol.] An ancient musical instrument of the same form as the violin, and which may be considered as the parent of our modern instruments of the violin kind. The viol was a stringed instrument with frets, and played on by a bow. There were three sorts, treble, tenor, and base, each having six strings. The treble viol was somewhat larger than our violin, and the music for it was written in the treble clef. The tenor viol was about the same length and breadth as the modern tenor violin, but thicker in the body, and the music for it was in the soprano, or C clef. The dimensions of the base viol were much the same as those of the violoncello, and the music for it was written in the base clef.—Viol di gamba, or leg-viol, an old musical instrument with six strings, so called because it was held between the legs. In form and dimensions it resembled the modern violoncello, and was the immediate predecessor of that instrument. Its tone was nasal and disagreeable.

Me softer airs befit, and softer strings
Of lute, or viol, still more apt for mournful things. Milton.

VI'OLA, n. [It.] The tenor-violin, a kind of violin intermediate in size and pitch between the ordinary violin and violoncello. It has four catgut strings, of which the third and fourth are covered with silver wire. It is tuned C, D, A, G, reckoning upwards, and is an octave higher in pitch than the violoncello, and a fifth lower than the violin.

VI'OLA, n. The violet; a genus of plants, the type of the nat. order Violaceæ. The species are exceedingly numerous; they are elegant low herbs, for the most part perennial, rarely annual. Eight species are enumerated by British botanists. The violets are favourite flowers in all northern and temperate climates, and many of them are among the first to make their appearance in the spring. The greatest favourites are the varieties of the V. odorata, or common sweet violet, and of V. tricolor, the pansy, or heart's ease. The flowers of V. odorata possess purgative or laxative properties, and V. canina, or dog's violet, is reputed a powerful agent for the removal of cutaneous affections.

VI'OLABLE, a. [L. violabilis. See VIOLATE.] That may be violated, broken, or injured.

VIOLA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of Polypetalous exogens, having the genus Viola for its type. The species are herbs, shrubs, or undershrubs, generally with alternate, simple leaves, furnished with stipules. The flowers are erect or drooping, axillary, seated on peduncles, which are one-flowered, solitary, or numerous, sometimes branched. The order is divided into two tribes, Violeæ and Alsodineæ. Violeæ chiefly consist of European, Siberian, and American plants; Alsodineæ are South American and African plants. The roots of all the Violaceæ appear to be more or less emetic, a property which is strongly possessed by the South American species. Hence they form part of the herbs known under the name of Ipecacuanha.

VIOLA'CEOUS, a. [L. viola, a violet.] Resembling violets in colour.

VIOLAS'CENT, a. Resembling a violet in colour.

VI'OLATE, v. t. [Fr. violer; L. violo; It. violare; Sp. violar.] 1. To injure; to hurt; to interrupt; to disturb; as, to violate sleep.

Kindness for man and pity for his fate,
May mix with bliss and yet not violate. Dryden.

2. To break; to infringe; to transgress; as, to violate the laws of the state, or the rules of good breeding; to violate the divine commands; to violate one's vows or promises. Promises and commands may be violated negatively, by non-observance.—3. To injure; to do violence to.

Forbid to violate the sacred fruit. Milton.

4. To treat with irreverence; to profane; as, to violate the sanctity of a holy place.—5. To ravish; to compress by force.

VI'OLATED, pp. Injured; broken; transgressed; ravished.

VI'OLATING, ppr. Injuring; infringing; ravishing.

VIOLA'TION, n. [Fr.] The act of violating or injuring; interruption, as of sleep or peace.—2. Infringement; transgression; non-observance; as, the violation of law or positive command; a violation of covenants, engagements, and promises; a violation of vows.—3. Act of irreverence; profanation or contemptuous treatment of sacred things; as, the violation of a church.—4. Ravishment; rape.

VI'OLATIVE, a. Violating, or tending to violate.

VI'OLATOR, n. One who violates, injures, interrupts, or disturbs; as, a violator of repose.—2. One who infringes or transgresses; as, a violator of law.—3. One who profanes or treats with irreverence; as, a violator of sacred things.—4. A ravisher.

VI'OLENCE, n. [L. violentia.] 1. Physical force; strength of action or motion; as, the violence of a storm; the violence of a blow or of a conflict.—2. Moral force; vehemence. The critic attacked the work with violence.—3. Outrage; unjust force; crimes of all kinds.

The earth was filled with violence; Gen. vi.

4. Eagerness; vehemence.

You ask with violence. Shak.

5. Injury; infringement. Offer no violence to the laws, or to the rules of civility.—6. Injury; hurt.

Do violence to no man; Luke iii.

VI'OLENT, a. [Fr.; L. violentus.] 1. Forcible; moving or acting with physical strength; urged or driven with force; as, a violent wind; a violent stream; a violent assault or blow; a violent conflict.—2. Vehement; outrageous; as, a violent attack on the minister.—3. Produced or continued by force; not spontaneous or natural.

No violent state can be perpetual. Burnet.

4. Produced by violence; not natural; as, a violent death.—5. Acting by violence; assailant; not authorized.

Some violent hands were laid on Humphry's life. Shak.

6. Fierce; vehement; as, a violent philippic; a violent remonstrance.

We might be reckoned fierce and violent. Hooker.

7. Severe; extreme; as, violent pains.—8. Extorted; not voluntary.

Vows made in pain, are violent and void. Milton.

Violent presumption, in law, is presumption that arises from circumstances which necessarily attend such facts. Such circumstances being proved, the mind infers with confidence that the fact has taken place, and this confidence is a violent presumption, which amounts to proof. Violent profits, in Scots law, profits made during an unlawful possession.

VI'OLENT,† n. An assailant.

VI'OLENT,† v. t. To urge with violence.

VI'OLENTLY, adv. With force; forcibly; vehemently; as, the wind blows violently.

Forfeitures must not be exacted violently. Taylor.

VIOLES'CENT, a. Tending to a violent colour.

VI'OLET, n. [Fr. violette; It. violetto; L. viola.] The common name of the different species of the genus Viola. [See VIOLA.]—2. A bluish purple colour, like that of the violet; one of the primitive colours.

VI'OLET, a. Dark blue inclining to red. Violet-dye is produced by a mixture of red and blue colouring matters, which are applied in succession.

VI'OLIN, n. [It. violino; Fr. violon; from viol.] A well-known musical instrument with four strings, played with a bow; a fiddle; one of the most perfect and most powerful instruments that has been invented. The finest violins are those of the old Cremona makers, Jerome, Anthony, and Nicholas Amati, and Stradivarius, and Guarnerius, and F. and T. and G. B. Ruggiero. Next in quality are those of Jacob Steiner, and of the two Klotz, father and son, Tyrolese makers. The violin is tuned G. D. A. E. reckoning upwards.

VIOLI'NA, n. In chem., a vegeto-alkali.

VI'OLINIST, n. A person skilled in playing on a violin.

VI'OLIST, n. A player on the viol.

VIOLONCEL'LIST, n. A performer on the violoncello.

VIOLONCEL'LO, n. [It.] A powerful and expressive bow instrument of the violin kind. It is a bass violin with four strings, the two lowest covered with silver-wire. It is tuned C. G. D. A. reckoning upwards, and is an octave lower than the viola, or tenor violin. The player holds it between his knees.

VIOLO'NE, n. [It.] The contra-basso, or double-bass; the largest instrument of the violin kind. It is seldom played with more than three strings, which lie an octave below the violoncello. It is chiefly used to sustain the harmony.

VI'PER, n. [L. vipera; Fr. vipere; W. gwiber, from gwib, a quick course, a driving, flying, or serpentine motion, a wandering.] 1. Vipera, a genus of venomous serpents, which produce living young, and have a head broader than the neck, and no pits behind the nostrils, as in the case of the rattle-snakes. The true vipers have the scales on the head similar to those on the back, and the nostrils very large. The minute viper, V. brachyura, is one of the most terrible of the genus, on account of the intensity and activity of its poison. The common viper, V. berus, of which there are several varieties, is the only poisonous serpent which occurs in Britain, but it is not very common or very dangerous, except in very dry and warm parts of the country, and during the hot season. The horned viper, V. cerastes, the tufted viper, V. lophophris, and the brown and white viper, V. hæmachates, are natives of Africa.—2. A person or thing mischievous or malignant.

Head and Tail of Common Viper (V. berus).

VIPER'IDÆ, n. The family of vipers. It comprehends the true vipers, rattle-snakes, asps, &c.

VI'PERINE, a. [L. viperinus.] Pertaining to a viper or to vipers.

VI'PEROUS, a. [L. vipereus.] Having the qualities of a viper; malignant; venomous; as, a viperous tongue.

VI'PER'S BUGLOSS, n. A plant, the Echium vulgare. [See ECHIUM.]

VI'PER'S GRÄSS, n. The common name of the different species of plants belonging to the genus Scorzonera. S. hispanica, or esculent viper's grass, is cultivated for its carrot-shaped roots, which are considered a dainty. Nat. order, Compositæ.

VIRAGIN'IAN, a. Having the qualities of a virago.

VIRAGIN'ITY, n. The qualities of a virago.

VIRA'GO, n. [L. from vir, a man.] 1. A woman of extraordinary stature, strength, and courage; a female who has the robust body and masculine mind of a man; a female warrior.—2. In common lan., a bold, impudent, turbulent woman; a termagant.

VIRE,† n. [Sp. vira.] An arrow for the cross-bow; a quarrel.

VIR'ELAY, n. [Fr. virelai, from virer, to turn.] An ancient French song or short poem, derived from Provence, of a peculiar measure, and usually of a sportive character. The modern virelay turns upon two sets of rhymes, the first of which prevails throughout the piece, and the other occurs only from time to time, to produce variety.

To which a lady sung a virelay. Dryden.

VI'RENT, a. [L. virens, from vireo, to be green.] Green; verdant; fresh.

VIRES'CENT, a. Slightly green; beginning to be green.

VIR'GATE, n. (nearly vurgate.) [L. virga, a rod.] In bot., having the shape of a rod or wand; as, a virgate stem.

VIR'GATE, n. A yardland,—which see.

VIRĠE. See VERGE.

VIRĠIL'IA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Leguminosæ. The species are chiefly tropical. The roots of V. aurea, Virgilia aurea.

an Indian species, yield a yellow dye. V. lutea, of North America, is an elegant hardy shrub, frequently cultivated in gardens. The bark yields a yellow colouring matter.

VIRĠIL'IAN, a. Pertaining to Virgil, the Roman poet; as, virgilian husbandry, which was the system of agriculture practised by the Romans, and which is described in the Georgics of Virgil.—2. Resembling the style of Virgil.

VIR'ĠIN, n. (nearly vur'gin.) [It. virgine; Sp. virgen; Fr. vierge; L. virgo.] 1. A woman who has had no carnal knowledge of man.—2. A woman not a mother. [Unusual.]—3. A person of either sex who has not been married; 1 Cor. vii. 25.—4. The sign Virgo. [See VIRGO.]

VIR'ĠIN, a. Pure; untouched; as, virgin gold.—2. Fresh; new; unused; as, virgin soil.—3. Becoming a virgin; maidenly; modest; indicating modesty; as, a virgin blush; virgin shame.—4. Pure; chaste.

VIR'ĠIN, v. i. To play the virgin; a cant word.

VIR'ĠINAL, a. Pertaining to a virgin; maidenly; as, virginal chastity.

VIR'ĠINAL, n. A keyed musical instrument of one string, jack and quill to each note, like a spinet, but in shape resembling the present small pianoforte. It is now entirely disused.

VIR'ĠINAL, v. t. To pat; to strike, as on a virginal. [A cant word.]

VIR'ĠIN-BORN, a. Born of the Virgin. [An epithet applied to our Saviour, by Milton.]

VIRĠIN'IAN SNAKE ROOT, n. A plant of the genus Polygala, the P. senega. [See POLYGALA.]

VIRĠIN'ITY, n. [L. virginitas.] Maidenhood; the state of having had no carnal knowledge of man.

VIR'ĠIN'S BOWER, n. A plant of the genus Clematis, the C. vitalba, called also traveller's joy, and old man's beard. [See CLEMATIS.]

VIR'GO, n. [L.] One of the twelve signs or constellations of the Zodiac, which the sun enters about the 22d of August. It is the sixth in order of the signs beginning with Aries, and contains, according to the British catalogue, 110 stars, among which are two remarkable stars; the first, Spica Virginis, of the first magnitude, and the second, Vindimiatrix, of the third magnitude. Virgo is usually represented with an ear of corn in her hand, intended to denote the period of harvest.

VIR'GOLEUSE, n. [Fr.] A variety of pear of an excellent quality; with us pronounced virgoloo, or vergoloo. [See VERGOULEUSE, the correct orthography.]

VIR'ID, a. Green; verdant.

VIRID'ITY, n. [L. viriditas, from vireo, to be green.] Greenness; verdure; the colour of fresh vegetables.

VIR'IDNESS, n. Viridity; greenness; verdant.

VIR'ILE, a. [L. virilis, from vir, a man, Sax. wer; Sans. vira, strong; from the root of L. vireo.] 1. Pertaining to a man, in the eminent sense of the word, [not to man, in the sense of the human race;] belonging to the male sex; as, virile age.—2. Masculine; not puerile or feminine; as, virile strength or vigour.

VIRIL'ITY, n. [Fr. virilité; L. virilitas.] 1. Manhood; the state of the male sex which has arrived to the maturity and strength of a man, and to the power of procreation.—2. The power of procreation.—3. Character of man. [Unusual.]

VIRIP'OTENT, a. Fit for a husband; marriageable.

VIROLE', n. [Fr.] In her., the hoop, ring, or mouth-piece of the bugle or hunting horn.

VI'ROLLED, pp. In her., an epithet applied to the garnishings of the bugle horn, being the rings or rims which surround it at various parts.

VIR'TU, n. [It. vertu.] A love of the fine arts; a taste for curiosities.

VIR'TUAL, a. [Fr. virtuel; from virtue. See VIRTUE.] 1. Potential; having the power of acting or of invisible efficacy without the material or sensible part.

> Every kind that lives,
> Fomented by his virtual power, and warm'd. Milton.

> Neither an actual nor virtual intention of the mind, but only that which may be gathered from the outward acts. Stillingfleet.

2. Being in essence or effect, not in fact; as, the virtual presence of a man in his agent or substitute.—Virtual focus, in optics, the point from which rays, which have been rendered divergent by reflection or refraction, appear to issue. [See FOCUS.]—Virtual velocity, in mech., the velocity which a body in equilibrium would actually acquire, during the first instant of its motion, in case of the equilibrium being disturbed. The principle of virtual velocities may be thus enunciated: "If any system of bodies or material points, urged each by any forces whatever, be in equilibrium, and there be given to the system any small motion, by virtue of which, each point describes an infinitely small space, which space will represent the virtual velocity of the point; then the sum of the forces, multiplied each by the space which the point to which it is applied describes in the direction of that force, will be always equal to zero or nothing, regarding as positive the small spaces described in the direction of the forces, and as negative those described in the opposite direction." This great principle may be considered as the golden rule of mechanics. It is easily verified by experiment with respect to the six mechanical powers, but it applies immediately and most evidently to all questions respecting equilibrium or statical problems, and it furnishes a very easy method of ascertaining the power of any machine, or the proportion between two forces which would balance one another. For according to this principle, the power multiplied by the space through which it moves in the vertical direction, must always be equal to the weight multiplied by the space through which it moves in the vertical direction.

VIRTUAL'ITY, n. Efficacy.

VIR'TUALLY, adv. In efficacy or effect only; by means of some virtue or influence, or the instrumentality of something else. Thus the sun is virtually on earth by its light and heat. The citizens of an elective government are virtually present in the legislature by their representatives. A man may virtually agree to a proposition by silence or withholding objections.

VIR'TUATE,† v. t. To make efficacious.

VIRTUE, n. (ver'tu.) [Fr. vertu; It. virtu; L. virtus, from vireo, or its root. See WORTH. The radical sense is strength, from straining, stretching, extending. This is the primary sense of L. vir, a man.] 1. Strength; that substance or quality of physical bodies, by which they act and produce effects on other bodies. In this literal and proper sense, we speak of the virtue or virtues of plants in medicine, and the virtues of drugs. In decoctions the virtues of plants are extracted. By long standing in the open air, the virtues are lost.—2. Bravery; valour. This was the predominant signification of virtus among the Romans.

> Trust to thy single virtues. Shak.

[This sense is nearly or quite obsolete.] 3. Moral goodness; the practice of moral duties and the abstaining from vice, or a conformity of life and conversation to the moral law. In this sense, virtue may be, and in many instances must be, distinguished from religion. The practice of moral duties merely from motives of convenience, or from compulsion, or from regard to reputation, is virtue, as distinct from religion. The practice of moral duties from sincere love to God and his laws, is virtue and religion. In this sense it is true,

> That virtue only makes our bliss below. Pope.

> Virtue is nothing but voluntary obedience to truth. Dwight.

4. A particular moral excellence; as, the virtue of temperance, of chastity, of charity.

> Remember all his virtues. Addison.

5. Acting power; something efficacious.

> Jesus, knowing that virtue had gone out of him, turned;—Mark iii.

6. Secret agency; efficacy without visible or material action.

> She moves the body which she doth possess,
> Yet no part toucheth, but by virtue's touch. Davies.

7. Excellence; or that which constitutes value and merit.

> Terence, who thought the sole grace and virtue of their fable, the sticking in of sentences. B. Jonson.

8. One of the orders of the celestial hierarchy.

> Thrones, dominations, princedoms, virtues, powers. Milton.

9. Efficacy; power.

> He used to travel through Greece by virtue of this fable, which procured him reception in all the towns. Addison.

10. Legal efficacy or power; authority. A man administers the laws by virtue of a commission.—In virtue, in consequence; by the efficacy or authority.

This they shall attain, partly in virtue of the promise of God, and partly in virtue of piety. Atterbury.

VIR'TUELESS, a. Destitute of virtue.—2. Destitute of efficacy or operating qualities.

Virtueless she wish'd all her herbs and charms. Fairfax.

VIR'TUE-PROOF,† a. Irresistible in virtue.

VIRTUO'SO, n. [It.] A man skilled in the fine arts, particularly in music; or a man skilled in antiquities, curiosities and the like.

Virtuoso the Italians call a man who loves the noble arts and is a critic in them. Dryden.

VIRTUO'SOSHIP, n. The pursuits of a virtuoso.

VIR'TUOUS, a. Morally good; acting in conformity to the moral law; practising the moral duties, and abstaining from vice; as, a virtuous man.—2. Being in conformity to the moral or divine law; as, a virtuous action; a virtuous life.

The mere performance of virtuous actions does not denominate an agent virtuous. Price.

3. Chaste; applied to women.—4.† Efficacious by inherent qualities; as, virtuous herbs; virtuous drugs.—5.† Having great or powerful properties; as, virtuous steel; a virtuous staff; a virtuous ring.—6.† Having medicinal qualities.

VIR'TUOUSLY, adv. In a virtuous manner; in conformity with the moral law or with duty; as, a life virtuously spent.

A child virtuously educated. Addison.

VIR'TUOUSNESS, n. The state or character of being virtuous.

VIR'ULENCE, } n. [from virulent.]
VIR'ULENCY, } That quality of a thing which renders it extremely active in doing injury; acrimony; malignancy; as, the virulence of poison.—2. Acrimony of temper; extreme bitterness or malignity; as, the virulence of enmity or malice; the virulence of satire; to attack a man with virulence.

VIR'ULENT, a. [L. virulentus, from virus, poison, that is, strength, from the same root as vir, vireo. See VENOM.] 1. Extremely active in doing injury; very poisonous or venomous. No poison is more virulent than that of some species of serpents.—2. Very bitter in enmity; malignant; as, a virulent invective.

VIR'ULENTED,† a. Filled with poison.

VIR'ULENTLY, adv. With malignant activity; with bitter spite or severity.

VI'RUS, n. [L. See VIRULENT.] A poison. Active or contagious matter of an ulcer, pustule, &c. In the language of pathology, any matter which is the product of a disease, and is capable of producing that disease in a healthy individual by inoculation or absorption through the cuticle, is called the virus of that disease; as the virus of small pox, the venereal virus, &c.

VIS, n. [L.] Force or power. A term used in mech., chiefly by the older writers, to denote various kinds of natural forces or powers.—Vis acceleratrix, accelerating force; vis absoluta, absolute force; vis impressa, the force exerted on any body to change its state, whether it be at rest or moving uniformly in a straight line.—Vis inertiæ, literally the force of inactivity. This term was employed by Newton to signify a power implanted in all matter, by which it resists any change endeavoured to be made in its state; that is, by which it becomes difficult to alter its state either of rest or motion. A distinction is made between vis inertiæ and inertia, the former implying the resistance itself which is given by a body to any force endeavouring to make it change its state; and the latter merely the property by which the resistance is given.—Vis motrix, moving force.—Vis mortua and vis viva, terms used by Leibnitz and his followers; the former signifying the power of pressure in a body at rest; and the latter, the force or power of a body in motion, estimated by the distance to which the body goes.—2. In physiology, a term applied to the vital power and its effects.—Vis a tergo, any moving power acting from behind.—Vis insita, that power by which a muscle, when wounded, touched, or irritated, contracts independently of the will of the animal which is the object of the experiment, and without its feeling pain.—Vis medicatrix naturæ, that healing power in an animated body, by which, when diseased, the body is enabled to regain its healthy actions. It is also termed vis conservatrix.—Vis mortua, that property by which a muscle, after the the death of the animal, or immediately after having been cut out of the living body, contracts.—Vis nervosa, the power of the muscles, by which they act, when excited by the nerves, as opposed to the vis insita.—Vis plastica, the formative power or energy which spontaneously operates in animals.—Vis vitæ, the vital power or energy; the natural power of the animal machine in preserving life.—3. In law, violence or any kind of force.

VIS'AGE, n. (s as z.) Fr. from It. visaggio; from L. visus, video.] The face; the countenance or look of a person, or of other animal; chiefly applied to human beings; as, a wolfish visage.

Love and beauty still that visage grace. Waller.

His visage was so marred, more than any man; Is. lii.

VIS'AGED, a. Having a visage or countenance.

VIS'ARD, n. A mask. [See VISOR.]

VIS'ARD, v. t. To mask.

VIS-A-VIS, n. (viz'-a-vee.') [Fr. opposite, face to face.] Two persons sitting or standing face to face are said to be vis-à-vis. In some dances a partner is often colloquially called a vis-à-vis.—2. A carriage in which two persons sit face to face.

VIS'CERA, n. [L. plur. of viscus.] The bowels; the contents of the abdomen, thorax, and cranium. In its most general sense, the organs contained in any cavity of the body, particularly in the thorax, and abdomen.

VIS'CERAL, a. [L. viscera.] 1. Pertaining to the viscera.—2. Feeling; having sensibility. [Unusual.]

VIS'CERATE, v. t. [supra.] To exenterate; to embowel; to deprive of the entrails or viscera. [Eviscerate is generally used.]

VIS'CID, a. [L. viscidus; viscus, birdlime.] Glutinous; sticky; tenacious; not readily separating; as, turpentine, tar, gums, &c., are more or less viscid.

VISCID'ITY, n. Glutinousness; tenacity; stickiness.—2. Glutinous concretion.

VISCOS'ITY, } n. Glutinousness;
VIS'COUSNESS, } tenacity; viscidity; that quality of soft substances which makes them adhere so as not to be easily parted.

VISCOUNT, n. (vi'count.) [L. vicecomes; Fr. vicomte.] 1. Literally, a vice-count. An officer who formerly supplied the place of the count or earl, and acted as his deputy in the management of the affairs of the county; he was in fact the sheriff of the county.—2. A degree or title of nobility next in rank to an earl, and immediately above that of baron. It is the most recently established English title, having been first conferred by letters patent on John, lord Beaumont, by Henry VI., in 1440.—The coronet of a viscount of England is composed of a circle of gold, chased; having on the edge twelve balls or pearls; the cap, of crimson velvet, turned up with ermine, and closed at the top with a rich tassel of gold.

Viscount's coronet.

VISCOUNTESS, n. (vi'countess.) The lady of a viscount; a peeress of the fourth order.

VISCOUNTY, (vi'county.) }
The quality and office of a viscount.

VIS'COUS, a. [Fr. visqueux; from L. viscus, birdlime.] Glutinous; clammy; sticky; adhesive; tenacious; as, a viscous juice.

VIS'CUM, n. A genus of parasitical plants; the mistletoe,—which see.—2. Birdlime.

VIS'CUS, n. [L. plur. viscera.] An entrail, one of the contents of the thorax, or abdomen.

VISE, (vizeh'.) [F.] Literally, seen, an indorsation made upon a passport by the properly constituted authorities, whether ambassador, consul, or police, denoting that it has been examined and found correct.

VISH'NU, n. In the Hindoo myth., the name of one of the chief deities of the trimurti or triad, the other two being Brahma and Siva. He is the second person of this unity, and a personification of the preserving powers. Hence, he is frequently called the Preserver, the other two being respectively the Creator and the Destroyer.

VISIBIL'ITY, n. (s as z.) [from visible; Fr. visibilité.] 1. The state or quality of being perceivable to the eye; as, the visibility of minute particles, or of distant objects.—2. The state of being discoverable or apparent; conspicuousness; as, the perpetual visibility of the church.

VIS'IBLE, a. (s as z.) [Fr. from L. visibilis.] 1. Perceivable by the eye; that can be seen; as, a visible star; the least spot is visible on white paper; the fine dust or other matter in air agitated by heat becomes visible; as in the air near a heated stove, or over a dry, sandy plain, appearing like pellucid waves.

Virtue made visible in outward grace. Young.

In optics, objects are said to be visible when they emit or reflect a sufficient quantity of light, to make a sensible impression on the eye.—2. Discovered to the eye; as, visible spirits.—3. Apparent; open; conspicuous. Factions at court became more visible.—Visible church, in theol., the apparent church of Christ; the whole body of professed believers in Christ, as contradistinguished from the real or invisible church, consisting of sanctified persons.—Visible horizon, the line that bounds the sight. [See HORIZON.]

VIS'IBLENESS, n. State or quality of being visible; visibility.

VIS'IBLY, adv. In a manner perceptible to the eye. The day is visibly governed by the sun; the tides are visibly governed by the moon.

VISIER. See VIZIER.

VIS'IGOTH, n. The name of the Western Goths, or that branch of the Gothic tribes which settled in Dacia, as distinguished from the Ostrogoths, or Easter Goths, who had their seats in Pontus.

VISIGOTH'IC, a. Pertaining to the Visigoths.

VI''SION, n. (s as z.) [Fr. from L. visio, from video, visus.] 1. The act of seeing external objects; actual sight.

Faith here is turned into vision there. Hammond.

2. In optics, the faculty of seeing; sight; the perception of external objects, as conveyed to the brain by means of the organs of sight. Modern philosophers agree in referring the cause of vision to the impressions of light on the eye, and the retina of the eye has usually been regarded as the seat of vision. [See EYE, SIGHT.] Vision is far more perfect and acute in some animals than in man.—3. Something imagined to be seen, though not real; a phantom; a spectre; a mental or optical illusion.

No dreams, but visions strange. Sidney.

4. In scrip., a revelation from God, an appearance or exhibition of something supernaturally presented to the minds of the prophets, by which they were informed of future events. Such were the visions of Isaiah, of Amos, of Ezekiel, &c.—5. Something imaginary; the production of fancy.—6. Any thing which is the object of sight.

VI''SIONAL, a. Pertaining to a vision.

VI''SIONARINESS, n. The quality of being visionary.

VI''SIONARY, a. [Fr. visionnaire.] 1. Affected by phantoms; disposed to receive impressions on the imagination.

Or lull to rest the visionary maid. Pope.

2. Imaginary; existing in imagination only; not real; having no solid foundation; as a visionary prospect; a visionary scheme or project.

VI''SIONARY, n. One whose imagination is disturbed.—2. One who forms impracticable schemes; one who is confident of success in a project which others perceive to be idle and fanciful. [Visionist, in a like sense, is not used.]

VI''SIONLESS, a. Destitute of visions.

VIS'IT, v. t. (s as z.) [L. visito; Fr. visiter; It. visitare; from L. viso, to go to see; W. gwêst, gwesta, to visit, to go about; gwêst, a going, a visit; gwes, that is, going or moving. We see the sense is to go, to move to.] 1. To go or come to see; to attend. The physician visits his patient and prescribes. One friend visits another from respect or affection. Paul and Barnabas visited the churches they had planted, to know their state and confirm their faith. Men visit France, Germany, or Italy in their travels.—2. To go or come to see for inspection, examination, correction of abuses, &c.; as, a bishop visits his diocese; a superintendent visits those persons or works which are under his care.—3. To salute with a present.

Samson visited his wife with a kid; Judges xv.

4. To go to and to use; as, to visit the springs.—5. In naval affairs, to enter on board a vessel for the purpose of ascertaining her character without searching her. [Fr. droite de visite.]—To visit in mercy, in scrip. lan., to be propitious; to grant requests; to deliver from trouble; to support and comfort. It is thus God visits his people; Gen. xxi.; Zech. x.; Luke xii.—To visit with the rod, to punish; Ps. lxxxix.—To visit in wrath, or visit iniquity or sins upon, to chastise; to bring judgments on; to afflict; Exod. xx.—To visit the fatherless and widow, or the sick and imprisoned, to show them regard and pity, and relieve their wants; Matth. xxv.; James i.

VIS'IT, v. i. To keep up the interchange of civilities and salutations; to practice going to see others. We ought not to visit for pleasure or ceremony on the sabbath.

VIS'IT, n. The act of going to see another, or of calling at his house; a waiting on; as, a visit of civility or respect; a visit of ceremony; a short visit; a long visit; a pleasant visit.—2. The act of going to see; as, a visit to the Falls of Clyde or to Niagara.—3. A going to see or attending on; as, the visit of a physician.—4. The act of going to view or inspect; as, the visit of a trustee or inspector.

VIS'ITABLE, a. Liable or subject to be visited. All hospitals in England, built since the reformation, are visitable by the king or lord chancellor.

VISITAN'DINE, n. A religieuse of the order of the visitation, founded A.D. 1620. The visitandines were uncloistered, and their chief secular duty was to visit and comfort the sick prisoners, &c. [See VISITATION, def. 7.]

VIS'ITANT, n. One that goes or comes to see another; one who is a guest in the house of a friend.

When the visitant comes again he is no more a stranger. South.

VISITA'TION, n. [Fr. from L. visito.] 1. The act of visiting.

Nothing but peace and gentle visitation. Shak.

2. Object of visit.

O flowers!
My early visitation and my last. [Unusual.] Milton.

3. In law, the act of a superior or a superintending officer, or officers, who visit a corporation, college, church, hospital, or other institution, to examine into the manner in which it is conducted, and see that its laws and regulations are duly observed and executed.—4. In eccles. law, the inspection by the bishop of the several parishes within his diocese, or by an archbishop of the dioceses in his province. The modern practice of episcopal visitations, however, is to summon the clergy from several parts to one convenient place, while the visitation of the ancient parochial institutions has by degrees devolved on the archdeacons. The duty of the archdeacons now is to visit their respective archdeaconries from time to time, to see that the churches are kept in repair, and that every thing is done conformably to the canons, and consistently with the decent and orderly performance of public worship; and to receive presentations from the church wardens of matters of public scandal. 5. In scrip., and in a religious sense, the sending of afflictions and distresses on men to punish them for their sins, or to prove them. Hence afflictions, calamities, and judgments are called visitations.

What will ye do in the day of visitation? Is. x.

6. Communication of divine love; exhibition of divine goodness and mercy.—7. A church festival in honour of the visit of the Virgin Mary to Elizabeth, celebrated on the second of July.

VISITATO'RIAL, a. Belonging to a judicial visitor; as, visitatorial power.

VIS'ITED, pp. Waited on; attended; inspected; subjected to sufferings; favoured with relief or mercy.

VIS'ITING, ppr. Going or coming to see; attending on, as a physician; inspecting officially; afflicting; showing mercy to.—2. a. Authorized to visit and inspect; as, a visiting committee.

VIS'ITING, n. The act of going to see or of attending; visitation.

VIS'ITOR, n. [Fr. visiteur.] 1. One who comes or goes to see another, as in civility or friendship.—2. A superior or person authorized to visit a corporation or any institution, for the purpose of seeing that the laws and regulations are observed, or that the duties and conditions prescribed by the founder or by law, are duly performed and executed.

The king is the visitor of all lay corporations. Blackstone.

VISITO'RIAL, a. [from visitor.] Belonging to a judicial visitor or superintendant.

An archdeacon has visitorial power in parishes. Ayliffe.

VI'SIVE,† a. [from L. visus.] Pertaining to the power of seeing; formed in the act of seeing.

VIS'MIA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Hyperiaceæ. The bark of V. guianensis, a native of Guiana and Bengal, yields a gum resin, which resembles gamboge. The leaves and fruit yield a similar secretion. It is used in medicine as a purgative; and a Visnia guianensis.

decoction of the leaves is recommended in intermittent fever.

VISNE, n. (veen.) [Norm. from L. vicinia.] Neighbourhood. [See VENUE.]

VIS'NOMY,† n. [a barbarous contraction of physiognomy.] Face; countenance.

VI'SOR, } n. (s as z.) [Fr. visiere; It.
VI'ZOR, } visiera; from L. visus, video; written also visard, visar, vizard.] 1. A head piece or mask used to disfigure and disguise.

> My weaker government since, makes you pull off the visor. — Sidney.
> Swarms of knaves the visor quite disgrace. — Young.

2. The movable and perforated face guard of a helmet.

VI'SORED, a. Wearing a visor; masked; disguised.

VIS'OR-LIKE, a. Resembling a visor or mask.

VIS'TA, n. [It. sight; from L. visus, video.] A view or prospect through an avenue, as between rows of trees; hence, the trees or other things that form the avenue.

> The finish'd garden to the view
> Its vistas opens and its alleys green. — Thomson.

VIS'UAL, a. (s as z.) [Fr. visuel; It. visuale; from L. visus.] Pertaining to sight; used in sight; serving as the instrument of seeing; as, the visual nerve.

> The air,
> No where so clear, sharpen'd his visual ray. — Milton.

Visual point, in persp., a point in the horizontal line, in which all the visual rays unite.—Visual rays, lines of light, imagined to come from the object to the eye. — Visual angle, the angle under which an object is seen, or the angle formed at the eye by the rays of light which come from the extremities of the object. When an object is near the eye the visual angle is increased, and, when at a distance, it is diminished. Hence, objects at a distance appear smaller than when near us.

VIS'UALIZE, v. t. To make visual.

VIS'UALIZED, pp. Rendered visual.

VITA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of plants, of which the genus Vitis is the type. The species are, for the most part, inhabitants of the warmer parts of the temperate zone, and are found in both the old and new worlds, especially in Asia. They are composed of sarmentose and climbing shrubs; the lower leaves are opposite, and the upper ones alternate, stalked, simple, lobed, or compound, with stipules at the base. The peduncles are racemose, thyrsoid, corymbose, cymose, or umbellate, opposite the leaves, and are sometimes changed into tendrils. The most characteristic property of this order is acidity, which is most fully developed in the grape-vine. The acid of the grape is chiefly the tartaric; malic acid is, however, found in them. The dried fruit and wine are the really important products of the grape, and are yielded by no other of the order, if we except the Fox-grapes of North America. All the species are climbing plants, and some of them are supplied with hooked tendrils, by which they lay hold of the branches of trees, and thus elevate themselves above their summits.

VI'TAL, a. [L. vitalis, from vita, life. This must be a contraction of victa, for vivo forms vixi, victus; Gr. βιος, from βιοω, contracted.] 1. Pertaining to life, either animal or vegetable; as, vital energies; vital powers.—2. Contributing to life; necessary to life; as, vital air; vital blood.—3. Containing life.

> Spirits that live throughout,
> Vital in every part. — Milton.
> And vital virtue infus'd, and vital warmth. — Milton.

4. Being the seat of life; being that on which life depends.

> The dart flew on, and pierc'd a vital part. — Pope.

5. Very necessary; highly important; essential. Religion is a business of vital concern. Peace is of vital importance to our country.—6. So disposed as to live.

> Pythagoras and Hippocrates affirm the birth of the seventh month to be vital.
> [Little used.] — Brown.

Vital air, oxygen gas, which is essential to animal life.—Vital functions, those functions or faculties of the body on which life immediately depends; as, the circulation of the blood, respiration, the heat of the body, &c.—Vital principle, the unknown cause of life.—Vital fluid, in plants, a peculiar fluid found in certain vessels, called vital vessels. It is also termed latex, and appears to be the same as that which is denominated the milk of plants. It has a rapid vital motion, and is supposed to be analogous to the blood in cold-blooded animals.

VITAL'ITY, n. [from vital.] The principle of animation, or of life; as, the vitality of vegetable seeds or of eggs. —2. The act of living; animation.

VITALIZA'TION, n. The act or process of infusing the vital principle.

VI'TALIZE, v. t. To give life to.—2. To furnish with the vital principle; as, vitalized blood.

VI'TALIZED, pp. Supplied with the vital principle.

VI'TALIZING, ppr. Furnishing with the vital principle.

VI'TALLY, adv. In such a manner as to give life.

> The organic structure of human bodies, by which they are fitted to live and move, and to be vitally informed by the soul, is the workmanship of a most wise and beneficent Maker. — Bentley.

2. Essentially; as, vitally important.

VI'TALS, n. plur. Parts of animal bodies essential to life, such as the viscera dependent upon the great sympathetic nerve.—2. The part essential to life, or to a sound state. Corruption of manners preys upon the vitals of a state.

VIT'ELLARY, n. [L. vitellus, the yolk of an egg.] The place where the yolk of an egg swims in the white. [Lit. us.]

VIT'ELLUS, n. In bot., a membrane inclosing the embryo in some plants, as Nymphæa, Ginger, and Pepper. It seems to be the remains of the embryo-sac, or the sac of the amnios.

VI'TEX, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Verbenaceæ. The longest known species is V. agnus castus, the chaste tree, a native of the south of Europe. The fruit is globular, with an acrid and aromatic taste, and is called petit poivre, and poivre sauvage, in the south of France. The leaves, in ancient times, were strewed upon beds, and supposed to preserve chastity. V. altissima and V. arborea, which grow in hot countries, yield valuable timber.

VI''TIATE, v. t. [L. vitio. See VICE.] 1. To injure the substance or qualities of a thing, so as to impair or spoil its use and value. Thus we say, luxury vitiates the humours of the body; evil examples vitiate the morals of youth; language is vitiated by foreign idioms.

> This undistinguishing complaisance will vitiate the taste of readers. — Garth.

2. To render defective; to destroy; as, the validity or binding force of an instrument or transaction. Any undue influence exerted on a jury vitiates their verdict. Fraud vitiates a contract.

VI''TIATED, pp. Depraved; rendered impure; rendered defective and void.

VI''TIATING, ppr. Depraving; rendering of no validity.

VITIA'TION, n. The act of vitiating; depravation; corruption; as, the vitiation of the blood.—2. A rendering invalid; as, the vitiation of a contract.

VITILI'GO, n. [L. vitulus, a calf.] A disease of the skin, giving it a white appearance, somewhat resembling the flesh of calves.

VITILIT'IGATE,† v. i. [L. vitiosus and litigo.] To contend in law litigiously or cavilously.

VITILITIGA'TION,† n. Cavilous litigation.

VITIO'SITY, n. A corrupted state; depravation.

> He charges it wholly upon the corruption, perverseness, and vitiosity of man's will. — South.

VI''TIOUS, VI''TIOUSLY, VI''TIOUSNESS. See VICIOUS, and its derivatives.

VI'TIS, n. The vine. A genus of plants, the type of the nat. order Vitaceæ. The species, which are found chiefly in Asia and America, are climbing shrubs, with simple lobed, cut, or toothed, rarely compound leaves, and thyrsoid racemes of small greenish yellow flowers. The best known, and by far the most important species, is Vine (Vitis vinifera).

the V. vinifera, the common vine, or grape-vine, of which there is a multitude of varieties. The cultivation of the vine extends from near 55° north latitude to the equator, but in south latitudes it only extends to about 40°. It is rarely grown at a greater altitude than 3000 feet. In favourable seasons the vine ripens in the open air in England, and in the 11th and 12th centuries, considerable quantities of inferior wine were made from native grapes. Vineyards are now, however, unknown in this country; but the grapes raised in hot houses are excellent. The vine grows in every sort of soil; but that which is light and gravelly seems best suited for the production of fine wines. It succeeds extremely well in volcanic countries. The vine is a long-lived plant; indeed, in warm climates, the period of its existence is not known. It is propagated from seeds, layers, cuttings, grafting, and by inoculation. Several species of vine are indigenous in North America, as the Vitis labrusca, the wild-vine or fox-grape; V. cordifolia, heart-leaved vine or chicken grape; V. riparia, river-side or sweet-scented vine. [See WINE.]

VIT'REO-ELEC'TRIC, a. Containing or exhibiting positive electricity, or that which is excited by rubbing glass.

VIT'REOUS, a. [L. vitreus, from vitrum, glass or woad; W. gwydyr, glass, a greenish blue colour.] 1. Pertaining to glass.—2. Consisting of glass; as, a vitreous substance.—3. Resembling glass; as, the vitreous humour of the eye, so called from its resembling melted glass. This humour occupies more than three-fourths of the interior of the eye, and is seated behind the crystalline lens. The rays of light which enter the eye undergo two refractions in passing through the aqueous humour and crystalline lens. On entering the vitreous humour they undergo a third refraction, thus acquiring their final degree of convergence, so that they form an image at a focus on the retina or very near it. Vitreous electricity, that produced by rubbing glass. [See ELECTRICITY.]

VIT'REOUSNESS, n. The quality or state of being vitreous; resemblance of glass.

VITRES'CENCE, n. [from L. vitrum, glass.] Glassiness, or the quality of being capable of conversion into glass; susceptibility of being formed into glass.

VITRES'CENT, a. Capable of being formed into glass; tending to become glass.

VITRES'CIBLE, a. That can be vitrified.

VITRIFAC'TION, n. [See VITRIFY.] The act, process, or operation of converting into glass by heat; as, the vitrifaction of sand, flint, and pebbles with alkaline salts.

VITRIFAC'TURE, n. The manufacture of glass, porcelain, and pottery.

VIT'RIFIABLE, a. [from vitrify.] Capable of being converted into glass by heat and fusion. Flint and alkalies are vitrifiable.—Vitrifiable colours, metallic pigments, which become vitrified when laid on surfaces. Such are used in enamels, pottery, and stained glass.

VITRIF'ICABLE,† for Vitrifiable.

VIT'RIFICATE,† for Vitrify.

VITRIFICA'TION, for Vitrifaction. [See VITRIFACTION, which is generally used.]

VIT'RIFIED, pp. Converted into glass. —Vitrified forts, a name given to certain remarkable enclosures of stone existing in various parts of Scotland, especially in Inverness-shire. They are constructed of stones piled rudely upon one another, and firmly cemented together by some material which has been vitrified by fire, the stones themselves being also partially vitrified. They generally surround the top of some steep conical hill, and are supposed to have been intended for defensive military posts. Various hypotheses have been framed to account for the vitrified appearance of these structures, but it seems most reasonable to suppose that the material of which they are built was selected with a view to its capability of being vitrified; for the stones that have been most commonly used are granite or moorstone, limestone, sandstone, and pudding-stone, all of which are more or less easily fusible by fire, and the process of vitrifaction may have been rendered easy by the quantities of wood which in early times covered the Highlands.

VIT'RIFORM, a. [L. vitrum, glass, and form.] Having the form or resemblance of glass.

VIT'RIFY, v. t. [L. vitrum, glass, and facio, to make.] To convert into glass by fusion or the action of heat; as, to vitrify sand and alkaline salts.

VIT'RIFY, v. i. To become glass; to be converted into glass.

> Chemists make vessels of animal substances calcined, which will not vitrify in the fire. Arbuthnot.

VIT'RIFYING, ppr. Converting into glass.

VITRI'NA, n. A genus of fresh-water gastropods, having a thin shell.

VIT'RIOL, n. [Fr. vitriol; It. vitriuolo; Sp. vitriolo; from L. vitrum, glass; from their crystalline form or their translucency.] The old chemical and still the vulgar name of sulphuric acid, and of many of its compounds, which, in certain states, have a glassy appearance.—Green vitriol is green sulphate of iron; red vitriol, or vitriol of Mars, is red sulphate of iron; blue vitriol is sulphate of copper; white vitriol is sulphate of zinc; cobalt vitriol is a sulphate of cobalt; oil of vitriol is sulphuric acid.

VIT'RIOLATE, v. t. To convert into a vitriol; as iron pyrites by the absorption of oxygen, which reduces the iron to an oxide, and the sulphur to sulphuric acid. Thus the sulphuret of iron when vitriolated, becomes sulphate of iron or green vitriol.

VIT'RIOLATED, pp. Converted into a sulphate or a vitriol.

VIT'RIOLATING, ppr. Turning into a sulphate or a vitriol.

VITRIOLA'TION, n. The act or process of converting into a sulphate or a vitriol.

VITRIOL'IC, a. Pertaining to vitriol; having the qualities of vitriol, or obtained from vitriol.—Vitriolic acid, in modern chem., is denominated sulphuric acid, the base of it being sulphur; one equivalent of sulphur combined with three equivalents of oxygen.

VIT'RIOLIZABLE, a. Capable of being converted into a vitriol.

VITRIOLIZA'TION. See VITRIOLATION.

VIT'RIOLIZE. See VITRIOLATE.

VIT'RIOLIZED. See VITRIOLATED.

VIT'RIOLIZING. See VITRIOLATING.

VIT'RIOLOUS,† a. Containing vitriol.

VITRU'VIAN SCROLL. A name given to an architectural ornament formed of a series of scrolls joined together.

Vitruvian scroll.

VIT'TA, n. [L.] A head-band, fillet, or garland.—2. The diadem of a medal. —3. In arch., ornament of a capital, frieze, &c.—4. In bot., vittæ are the receptacles of oil which are found in the fruits of umbelliferous plants, as in those of anise, dill, fennel, caraway, &c. The same term is sometimes applied to the various stripes which are found upon leaves.

VIT'TATE, a. [from vitta.] In bot., striped, as distinguished from fasciate or banded. Applied to leaves.

VIT'ULINE, a. [L. vitulinus.] Belonging to a calf, or to veal.

VITU'PERABLE,† a. [See VITUPERATE.] Blameworthy; censurable.

VITU'PERATE, v. t. [L. vitupero.] To blame; to censure.

VITUPERA'TION, n. [L. vituperatio.] Blame; censure.

VITU'PERATIVE, a. Uttering or writing censure; containing censure.

> The torrents of female eloquence, especially in the vituperative way, stem all opposition. Chesterfield.

VITU'PERATIVELY, adv. With vituperation.

VITU'PERATOR, n. A severe censor; a reviler.

VITUPE'RIOUS,† a. [L. vituperium.] Disgraceful.

VIV'A, intj. [It.] An exclamation of applause or joy used in Italy, and similar in meaning to hurra or huzza in English, and to vive in French; as, the king reached his palace amidst the vivas of the people.

VIVA'CE. [It.] In music, a term which denotes a brisk lively manner of performing.

VIVA'CIOUS, a. [L. vivax, from vivo, to live.] 1. Lively; active; sprightly in temper or conduct.—2.† Long lived.—3. Having vigorous powers of life; as, vivacious plants.

VIVA'CIOUSLY, adv. With vivacity, life, or spirit.

VIVA'CIOUSNESS, n. Activity; liveliness; sprightliness of temper or behaviour; vivacity.—2.† Power of living; also, long life.

VIVAC'ITY, n. [Fr. vivacité; L. vivacitas.] 1. Liveliness; sprightliness of temper or behaviour; as, a lady of great vivacity.—2. Air of life and activity; as, vivacity of countenance.—3. Life; animation; spirits; as, the vivacity of a discourse.—4.† Power of living.—5.† Longevity.

VI'VARY, n. [L. vivarium, from vivo, to live.] A warren; a place for keeping living animals, as a pond, a park, &c.

VI'VAT REGINA. [L.] Long live the queen.

VI'VAT RESPUBLICA. [L.] Long live the republic.

VI'VAT REX. [L.] Long live the king.

VI'VA VOCE. [L.] By word of mouth; as, to vote viva voce; to communicate with another person viva voce.

VIVE,† a. [Fr. vif; L. vivus.] Lively; forcible.

VIVE, (veev.) [Fr.] Long live; success to; as, vive le roi, long live the king;

vive la bagatelle, success to trifles or sport.

VIVELY,† adv. In a lively manner.

VI'VENCY,† n. [L. vivens, from vivo.] Manner of supporting life or vegetation.

VIVER'RA, n. The civet; a genus of degitigrade and carnivorous mammalia, arranged by Cuvier between the dogs and hyenas. The Viverra of Linn. has been divided into six subgenera:—1. The Civets, properly so called, (Viverra); 2. The Genets, (Genetta); 3. The Paradoxure, (Paradoxurus); 4. The Mangoustes, (Mangusta); 5. The Suricates, (Ryzæna); 6. The Mangues, (Crossarchus). The true civets are characterized by a deep pouch situated between the anus and the sexual organs, divided into two bags, filled with an abundant concrete secretion of the consistence of pommada, exhaling a strong musky odour, secreted by glands which surround the pouch. V. civetta, the common civet, inhabits Africa; V. zibetha, the zibet, inhabits the East Indies; and V. rasse is found in Java. The civets, in their carnivorous propensities, are next to the cats, which they approach very closely in many points of their zoological character, as well as in their predatory, nocturnal, and sanguinary habits.

VIVER'RIDÆ, n. The civet tribe, having for its type the genus Viverra.

VIVES, n. A disease of brute animals, particularly of horses, seated in the glands under the ear, where a tumour is formed which sometimes ends in suppuration.

VIV'IANITE, n. A phosphate of iron, of various shades of blue and green.

VIV'ID, a. [L. vividus, from vivo, to live.] 1. Bright; strong; exhibiting the appearance of life or freshness; as, the vivid colours of the rainbow; the vivid green of flourishing vegetables.

> Arts which present, with all the vivid charms of painting, the human face and human form divine. Bp. Hobart.

2. Lively; sprightly; forming brilliant images, or painting in lively colours; as, a vivid imagination.

VIVID'ITY, n. Vividness.

VIV'IDLY, adv. With life; with strength.

> Sensitive objects affect a man much more vividly than those which affect only his mind. South.

2. With brightness; in bright colours. —3. In glowing colours; with animated exhibition to the mind. The orator vividly represented the miseries of his client.

VIV'IDNESS, n. Life; strength; sprightliness.—2. Strength of colouring; brightness.

VIVIF'IC, } a. [L. vivificus. See
VIVIF'ICAL, } VIVIFY.] Giving life; reviving; enlivening.

VIV'IFICATE, v. t. [L. vivifico; vivus, alive, and facio, to make.] 1. To give life to; to animate. [See VIVIFY.]—2. In chem., to recover from such a change of form as seems to destroy the essential qualities; or to give to natural bodies new lustre, force, and vigour. [See REVIVE and REDUCE, the terms now used.]

VIVIFICA'TION, n. The act of giving life; revival.—2. Among chemists, the act of giving new lustre, force, and vigour; as, the vivification of mercury. [See REVIVIFICATION, which is more used.]

VIV'IFICATIVE, a. Able to animate or give life.

VIV'IFIED, pp. Revived; endued with life.

VIV'IFY, v. t. [Fr. vivifier; L. vivifico; vivus, alive, and facio, to make.] To endue with life; to animate; to make to be living.

> Sitting on eggs doth vivify, not nourish. Bacon.

VIV'IFYING, ppr. Enduing with life; communicating life to.

VIVIP'AROUS, a. [L. vivus, alive, and pario, to bear.] 1. Producing young in a living state, as all mammifers; as, distinguished from oviparous, producing eggs, as fowls.—2. In bot., producing its offspring alive, either by bulbs instead of seeds, or by the seeds themselves germinating on the plant, instead of falling, as they usually do; as, a viviparous plant.

VIVISEC'TION, n. [L. vivus and seco.] The dissection of an animal while alive, for the purpose of making some physiological discovery.

VIX'EN, n. [vixen is a she fox, or a fox's cub.] A froward, turbulent, quarrelsome woman.

VIX'ENLY, a. Having the qualities of a vixen.

VIZ., a contraction of videlicet; to wit, that is, namely.

VIZ'ARD, n. A mask. [See VISOR.]

VIZ'ARD,† v. t. To mask.

VIZ'IER, } n. (Veetzeer.) [Ar. from
VIZ'IR, } wazara, to bear, to sustain, to administer.] A title of honour and of office among the Turks, and various Oriental countries. Among the Turks, all the pachas of three tails; that is, the highest pachas, receive this title. The councillors of state who sit in the divan, generally eight in number, are styled viziers, and the chief among them vizier azem, called by us grand vizier. He is the representative of the sultan, conducts the deliberations of the divan, and decides alone, being authorized to rule with absolute power in the name of the sultan.

VIZ'IERATE, n. The office of vizier.

VIZ'OR, n. That part of a helmet which defends the face, and which can be lifted up and put down at pleasure. [See VISOR.]

VO'CABLE, n. [L. vocabulum; It. vocabolo. See VOICE.] A word; a term; a name.

VOCAB'ULARY, n. [Fr. vocabulaire, from L. vocabulum, a word.] A list or collection of the words of a language, arranged in alphabetical order and explained; a word-book; the words of a science; a dictionary or lexicon. We often use vocabulary in a sense somewhat different from that of dictionary, restricting the signification to the list of words; as when we say, the vocabulary of Johnson is more full or extensive than that of Entick. We rarely use the word as synonymous with dictionary, but in other countries the corresponding word is so used, and this may be so used in English.

VOCAB'ULIST, n. The writer or framer of a dictionary; a lexicographer or linguist.

VO'CAL, a. [Fr. from L. vocalis. See VOICE.] 1. Having a voice.

> To hill or valley, fountain, or fresh shade,
> Made vocal by my song. Milton.

2. Pertaining to the voice or speech; uttered or modulated by the voice; as, vocal melody; vocal prayer; vocal praise; vocal sounds.—Vocal music, music produced by the human voice alone, or accompanied by instruments, in distinction from instrumental music, which is produced by instruments alone; hence, music or tunes set to words, to be performed by the human voice.—Vocal chords or ligaments, in anat., two ligaments which pass, one on each side, from the base of the arytænoid cartilage, and are inserted into the thyroid cartilage. They are considered to be particularly connected with the formation of the voice.

VO'CAL, n. Among the Romanists, a man who has a right to vote in certain elections.

VOCAL'IC, a. Consisting of the voice or vowel sounds.

VO'CALIST, n. A public singer distinguished by superior powers of voice.

VOCAL'ITY, n. [L. vocalitas.] Quality of being utterable by the voice; as, the vocality of the letters.

VOCALIZA'TION, n. Act of vocalizing.

VO'CALIZE, v. t. To form into voice; to make vocal.

> It is one thing to give impulse to breath alone, and another to vocalize that breath. Holder.

VO'CALIZED, pp. Made vocal; formed into voice.

VO'CALIZING, ppr. Forming into voice or sound.

VO'CALLY, adv. With voice; with an audible sound.—2. In words; as, to express desires vocally.

VO'CALNESS, n. The quality of being vocal.

VOCA'TION, n. [Fr. from L. vocatio, from voco, to call. See VOICE.] 1. Among divines, a calling by the will of God; or the bestowment of God's distinguishing grace upon a person or nation, by which that person or nation is put in the way of salvation; as, the vocation of the Jews under the old dispensation, and of the Gentiles under the gospel.—2. Summons; call; inducement.

> What can be urged for them who, not having the vocation of poverty to scribble, out of mere wantonness make themselves ridiculous. Dryden.

3. Designation or destination to a particular state or profession.

> None is to enter the ecclesiastic or monastic state, without a particular vocation. Cyc.

4. Employment; calling; occupation; trade; a word that includes professions as well as mechanical occupations. Let every divine, every physician, every lawyer, and every mechanic be faithful and diligent in his vocation.

VOC'ATIVE, a. [Fr. vocatif; L. vocativus.] Relating to calling; as, the vocative case in grammar.

VOC'ATIVE, n. In gram., the fifth case or state of nouns in the Latin language; or the case in any language in which a word is placed when the person is addressed; as, Domine, O Lord.

VOCIF'ERATE, v. i. [L. vocifero; vox and fero.] To cry out with vehemence; to exclaim.

VOCIF'ERATE, v. t. To utter with a loud voice.

VOCIF'ERATING, ppr. Crying out with vehemence; uttering with a loud voice.

VOCIFERA'TION, n. A violent outcry; vehement utterance of the voice.

VOCIF'EROUS, a. Making a loud outcry; clamorous; noisy; as, vociferous heralds.

VOCIF'EROUSLY, adv. With great noise in calling, shouting, &c.

VOCIF'EROUSNESS, n. Clamorousness.

VOE, n. An inlet, bay, or creek. [Scotch.]

VOGUE, n. (vōg.) [Fr. vogue, a rowing; It. voga, a rowing, mode, fashion; vogare, to row; Sp. voga; vogar, to row. See WAG and WAY. The sense of vogue is way, or the going of the world.] The way or fashion of people at any particular time; temporary mode, custom, or practice; popular reception for the time. We say, a particular form of dress is now in vogue; an amusing writer is now in vogue; such opinions are now in vogue. The phrase, the vogue of the world, used by good writers formerly, is nearly or quite obsolete.

Use may revive the obsoletest word,
And banish those that now are most in vogue. Roscommon.

VOICE, n. [Fr. voix; L. vox; It. voce; Sp. voz; Gaelic, bagh, a word; baigham, to speak to; Ir. focal, a word: Sans. vach, to speak, L. voco. The sense of the verb is to throw, to drive out sound; and voice is that which is driven out.] 1. An audible sound or noise produced in the throat and mouth of an animal by peculiar organs. Voices are either articulate or inarticulate. Articulate voices are those of which several conspire together to form some assemblage or little system of sounds; such are the voices expressing the letters of an alphabet, numbers of which joined together form words. Inarticulate voices are such as are not organized or assembled into words; as, the barking of dogs, the braying of asses, the hissing of serpents, the singing of birds, &c. We say, the voice of a man is loud or clear; the voice of a woman is soft or musical; the voice of a dog is loud or harsh; the voice of a bird is sweet or melodious. The voice of human beings is articulate; that of beasts, inarticulate. The voices of men are different, and when uttered together, are often dissonant. Mammals, birds, and reptiles are the only animals which possess a voice. In mammals, the air driven by the muscles of expiration from the lungs through the trachea, strikes against the two vibratile vocal chords, which bound the sides of the glottis, and thus a voice is produced varying in different animals according to the structure of the organs, and the power which the animal possesses over them. In man, the superior organization and mobility of the tongue and lips, enable him to modify his vocal sounds so as to render them articulate, and adapted to express his ideas. The infinite varieties of sounds heard in the human voice, are all embraced under the general terms, pitch, loudness, quality, and duration. A good musical voice depends chiefly upon the soundness and power of the organs of utterance and of hearing, and the musical disposition, and is distinguished by clearness of intonation, ease, strength, duration, equality, harmoniousness and fulness of the sounds. —2. Any sound made by the breath; as, the trumpet's voice.—3. A vote; suffrage; opinion or choice expressed. Originally voice was the oral utterance of choice, but it now signifies any vote, however given.

Some laws ordain, and some attend the choice
Of holy senates, and elect by voice. Dryden.

I have no words;
My voice is in my sword. Shak.

4. Language; words; expression.

Let us call on God in the voice of his church. Fell.

5. In scrip., command; precept.

Ye would not be obedient to the voice of the Lord your God; Deut. viii.

6. Sound.

After the fire, a still small voice; 1 Kings xix.

Canst thou thunder with a voice like him? Job xl.

The floods have lifted up their voice; Ps. xciii.

7. Language; tone; mode of expression.

I desire to be present with you now, and to change my voice; Gal. iv.

8. In gram., a particular mode of inflecting or conjugating verbs; as, the active voice; the passive voice.—9. In music, the name given to a part assigned to a human voice or an instrument in a composition, as treble, tenor, and bass voices.

VOICE, v. t. To rumour; to report; to vote.

It was voiced that the king purposed to put to death Edward Plantagenet. [Little used.] Shak.

2. To fit for producing the proper sounds; to regulate the tone of; as, to voice the pipes of an organ.—3. To vote.

VOICE,† v. i. To clamour; to exclaim.

VOIC'ED, pp. Fitted to produce the proper tones.—2. a. Furnished with a voice.

VOICELESS, a (vois'less.) Having no voice or vote.

VOIC'ING, n. The act of giving to an organ-pipe its proper quality of tone.

VOIC'ING, ppr. Fitting the pipe of an organ for producing its proper quality of tone.

VOID, a. [Fr. vuide; It. voto; L. viduus; Sw. öde; G. and Dan. öde, waste, which seems to be the Eng. wide; so waste and vast are from one root. It coincides with Gr. ἰδιος, and the root of L. divido, Ar. badda, to separate.] 1. Empty; vacant; not occupied with any visible matter; as, a void space or place; 1 Kings xxii. —2. Empty; without inhabitants or furniture; Gen. i.—3. Having no legal or binding force; null; not effectual to bind parties, or to convey or support a right; not sufficient to produce its effect. Thus a deed not duly signed and sealed, is void. A fraudulent contract is void, or may be rendered void.

My word shall not return to me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please; Is. lv.

I will make void the counsel of Judah and Jerusalem in this place; Jer. xix.

4. Free; clear; as, a conscience void of offence; Acts xxiv.—5. Destitute; as, void of learning; void of reason or common sense.

He that is void of wisdom, despiseth his neighbour; Prov. xi.

6. Unsupplied; vacant; unoccupied; having no incumbent.

Divers offices that had been long void. Camden.

7. Unsubstantial; vain.

Lifeless idol, void and vain. Pope.

Void space, in physics, a vacuum.—To make void, to violate; to transgress.

They have made void thy law; Ps. cxix.

2. To render useless or of no effect; Rom. iv.

VOID, n. An empty space; a vacuum.

Pride, where wit fails, steps in to our defence,
And fills up all the mighty void of sense. Pope.

Th' illimitable void. Thomson.

VOID, v. t. To quit; to leave.

Bid them come down,
Or void the field. Shak.

2. To emit; to send out; to evacuate; as, to void excrementitious matter; to void worms.—3. To vacate; to annul; to nullify; to render of no validity or effect.

It had become a practice...to void the security given for money borrowed. Clarendon.

4. To make or leave vacant.

VOID, v. i. To be emitted or evacuated.

VOID'ABLE, a. That may be annulled or made void, or that may be adjudged void, invalid, or of no force.

Such administration is not void, but voidable by sentence. Ayliffe.

2. That may be evacuated.

VOID'ANCE, n. The act of emptying. —2. The act of ejecting from a benefice; ejection.—3. Vacancy; want of an incumbent.—4. Evasion; subterfuge.

VOID'ED, pp. Thrust out; evacuated. —2. a. In her., an ordinary is said to be voided when it is pierced through, or the inner part cut away, so that the field appears, and nothing remains of the charge but its outer edges, as in the cut, azure a saltiere argent voided.

Azure a saltiere Voided argent.

VOID'ER, n. A basket in which broken meat is carried from the table.—2. One who evacuates.—3. One who nullifies.—4. In her., one of the ordinaries, whose figure is much like that of the flanch or flasque, but is not quite so circular towards the centre of the field. The term, however, is little used.—5. In agriculture, a provincial name of a kind of shallow basket of open work.

Argent two Volders gules.

VOID'ING, ppr. Ejecting; evacuating. —2. Making or declaring void, or of no force.—3. Quitting; leaving.—4. a. Receiving what is ejected; as, a voiding lobby.

VOID'NESS, n. Emptiness; vacuity; destitution.—2. Nullity; inefficacy; want of binding force.—3. Want of substantiality.

VOIRE DIRE. (vwâr dēr.) [Norm. Fr. q. d. vrai dire; L. veritatem dicere.] In law, an oath administered to a person intended as a witness, requiring him to make true answers to questions. It is often administered to such as are supposed to be interested, or to have formed opinions to bias the mind.

VOI'TURE, n. [Fr. id.; It. vettura, from L. vectus, veho.] Carriage. [Not English.]

VOLA'CIOUS, a. [L. volo.] Apt or fit to fly.

VOLAL'KALI, n. Volatile alkali; by contraction.

VO'LANT, a. [Fr. flying, from voler, Lat. volo, to fly.] 1. Flying; passing through the air; as, volant automata.—2. Nimble; active; as, volant touch.—3. In her., represented as flying or having the wings spread.

Volant.

VOL'ARY,† n. [Fr. volière.] A bird-cage large enough for birds to fly in.

VOL'ATILE, a. [Fr. from L. volatilis, from volo, to fly.] 1. Flying; passing through the air on wings, or by the buoyant force of the atmosphere.—2. Having the power to fly; as, birds are volatile animals.—3. Capable of wasting away, or of easily passing into the aeriform state. Thus substances which affect the smell with pungent or fragrant odours, as musk, hartshorn, and essential oils, are called volatile substances, because they waste away on exposure to the atmosphere. Alcohol and ether are called volatile liquids for a similar reason, and because they easily pass into the state of vapour on the application of heat. On the contrary, gold is a fixed substance, because it does not suffer waste, even when exposed to the heat of a furnace; and oils are called fixed, when they do not evaporate on simple exposure to the atmosphere. [See OIL.]—4. Lively; gay; full of spirit; airy; hence, fickle; apt to change; as, a volatile temper.

You are as giddy and volatile as ever. Swift.

VOL'ATILE,† n. A winged animal.

VOL'ATILE ALKALI. An old name of ammonia.

VOL'ATILENESS, VOLATIL'ITY, n. [Fr. volatilité.] 1. Disposition to exhale or evaporate; the quality of being capable of evaporation; that property of a substance which disposes it to rise and float in the air, and thus to be dissipated; as, the volatility of fluids. Ether is remarkable for its volatility. Many or most solid bodies are susceptible of volatility by the action of intense heat.

By the spirit of a plant we understand that pure elaborated oil, which, by reason of its extreme volatility, exhales spontaneously, and in which the odour or smell consists. Arbuthnot.

2. Great sprightliness; levity; liveliness; whence, mutability of mind; fickleness; as, the volatility of youth.

VOL'ATILIZABLE, a. That may be volatilized.

VOLATILIZA'TION, n. [from volatilize.] The act or process of rendering volatile, or rather of causing to rise and float in the air.

VOL'ATILIZE, v. t. [Fr. volatiliser.] To render volatile; to cause to exhale or evaporate; to cause to pass off in vapour or invisible effluvia, and to rise and float in the air.

The water...dissolving the oil, and volatilizing it by the action. Newton.

VOL'ATILIZED, pp. Rendered volatile; caused to rise and float in the air.

VOL'ATILIZING, ppr. Rendering volatile; causing to rise and float in the air.

VOLCAN'IC, a. [from volcano.] Pertaining to volcanoes; as, volcanic heat.—2. Produced by a volcano; as, volcanic tufa.—Volcanic products are numerous and diversified, but lava, scoria, enamel, and glass, comprise by far the most important and interesting of them. The substances thrown out during volcanic eruptions, whether stony, liquid, or gaseous, disclose more or less completely the nature and condition of the interior masses of the globe. In the lava, or melted rock, the most important ingredients are felspar, augite, and oxide of iron, the mass being modified by various additional minerals and metallic substances. The same substances compose the ashes of scoria. The liquid products of volcanoes, besides abundance of water, contain sometimes sulphuric and muriatic acids. Sublimations of common salt, and muriate of ammonia, are also found among these products. Among the gaseous products, chlorine, azote, sulphuretted hydrogen, sulphurous acid, and carbonic acid are the most common.—Volcanic rocks, rocks which have been formed by volcanic agency, as trachyte, pumice, obsidian, augitic, or felspathic rocks, &c.—Volcanic bombs, the name given to detached masses of melted lava, sometimes thrown out by volcanoes, which masses, as they fall, assume rounded forms, like bomb-shells, and are often elongated into a pear shape.—Volcanic foci, the subterranean centres of action in volcanoes, where the heat is supposed to be in the highest degree of energy.—3. Changed or affected by the heat of a volcano.

VOLCANIC'ITY, n. State of being volcanic; volcanic power.

VOL'CANIST, n. [from volcano.] One versed in the history and phenomena of volcanoes.—2. One who believes in the effects of eruptions of fire in the formation of mountains; otherwise termed a vulcanist.

VOL'CANITE, n. A mineral, otherwise called augite.

VOLCAN'ITY, n. The state of being volcanic, or of volcanic origin.

VOLCANIZA'TION, n. [from volcanize.] The process of undergoing volcanic heat, and being affected by it.

VOL'CANIZE, v. t. To subject to or cause to undergo volcanic heat, and to be affected by its action.

VOL'CANIZED, pp. Affected by volcanic heat.

VOL'CANO, n. [It. from Vulcan.] 1. In geol., an opening in the surface of the earth or frequently in a mountain, from which smoke, flames, stones, lava, or other substances are ejected. Such are seen in Etna and Vesuvius in Sicily and Italy, and Hecla in Iceland. It is vulgarly called a burning mountain, a name quite inapplicable, as many volcanoes are not in mountains, and some are submarine, ejecting their contents from under the sea. The eruptions from volcanoes are in general only temporary, a cessation, sometimes extending to centuries, intervening between the explosions; although, in other cases, a slow action is constantly going on with periods of increased energy, at intervals of months or years. Volcanoes are called active, when they continue to eject melted matter, mud, or vapours at intervals; and extinct, when they have ceased to emit such matters within the records of history. According to Jameson, about 193 active volcanoes have been observed; of which 13 belong to Europe and its islands, 66 to Asia and its islands, 8 to the islands of Africa, and 106 to America and its islands. Volcanoes usually form series of immense extent, frequently running in right lines although widely separated from each other. Volcanic eruptions are preceded by earthquakes, and earthquakes and volcanoes may be considered as different effects produced by the agency of internal heat, arising from chemical processes going on in the bowels of the earth.—2. The mountain that ejects fire, smoke, &c.

VOLE, n. [Fr. from voler, to fly.] A deal at cards that draws all the tricks.

VOLE, v. i. To win all the tricks at cards.

VOLEE, n. (volā.) [Fr. a flying.] A rapid flight of notes in music.

VO'LENS NO'LENS, a. [L.] Willing or not willing.

VO'LERY, n. [Fr. volière, from voler, to fly.] 1. A flight of birds.—2. A large bird-cage, in which the birds have room to fly. Also written volary.

VOLITA'TION,† n. [L. volito, dim. of volo, to fly.] The act of flying; flight.

VOLI''TION, n. [L. volitio, from volo, to will. See WILL.] 1. The act of willing; the act of determining choice, or forming a purpose. There is a great difference between actual volition, and the approbation of judgment.

Volition is the actual exercise of the power which the mind has of considering or forbearing to consider an idea. Locke.

2. The power of willing or determining.

VOL'ITIVE, a. Having the power to will.

They not only perfect the intellectual faculty, but the volitive. Hale.

VOLKAME'RIA, n. A genus of plants; nat. order Verbenaceæ. There is only one species, V. aculeata, a native of the West Indies, and one of the most common plants in the low lands of Jamaica in dry gravelly soil. It grows to the height of five or six feet; the leaves are oblong, acute, with spines from the rudiments of the petioles; and the flowers come out from the side of the stalk, five or six on the same peduncle.

VOL'LEY, n. [Fr. volée, a flight, from voler, to fly, L. volo.] 1. A flight of shot; the discharge of many small arms at once.—2. A burst or emission of many things at once; as, a volley of words.

But rattling nonsense in full volleys breaks. Pope.

VOL'LEY, v. t. To discharge with a volley.

VOL'LEY, v. i. To throw out or discharge at once.

VOL'LEYED, VOL'LIED, a. [from volley.] Disploded; discharged with a sudden burst; as, volleyed thunder.

VŌLT, n. [Fr. volte, a ring; It. volta, a turn; from L. volutus, volvo.] 1. A round or circular tread; a gait of two treads, made by a horse going sideways round a centre.—2. In fencing, a sudden movement or leap to avoid a thrust.

VOL'TA, in Italian music, signifies that the part is to be repeated one, two, or more times.

VOL'TA-ELEC'TRIC, a. Pertaining to voltaic electricity or galvanism; as, volta-electric induction. [See INDUCTION.]

VOLTA'IC, a. Pertaining to Volta, the discoverer of voltaism; as, the voltaic pile. Voltaic electricity, that branch of electricity to which the name of galvanism is generally applied, the phenomena connected with it being produced by the voltaic or galvanic battery. Voltaic apparatus, the apparatus used for accumulating galvanic electricity. The agent itself is denominated galvanism, after its discoverer, Galvani, while the instruments used for exciting and accumulating it are called voltaic, in honour of Volta, who first contrived this kind of apparatus. [See GALVANIC, GALVANISM.]—Voltaic pile, a column formed by successive pairs of plates of two dissimilar metals, as zinc and copper, alternating with moistened flannel or pasteboard, in regular order of succession. The more negative the two metals are to each other, as zinc and silver, zinc and platina, the more active the series.—Voltaic battery, the larger forms of voltaic apparatus, used for accumulating galvanic electricity.

VOL'TAISM, n. [from Volta, an Italian.] That branch of electrical science which has its source in the chemical action between metals and different liquids. It is so named from the Italian philosopher, Volta, whose experiments contributed greatly to the establishment of this branch of science. It is, however, more usually called galvanism, from Galvani, who first showed or brought into notice the remarkable influence produced on animals by this species of electricity.

VOLTA'METER, n. [Volta, and Gr. μετρον, measure.] An instrument contrived by Faraday, for measuring the amount of voltaic electricity passing in a current through it, by means of the quantity of water decomposed in a given time. In principle, it consists of a graduated tube, c, closed at one end, and inserted through a wooden cap into a jar, d, through the bottom of which the platina electrodes, f, connected with the two poles of the battery, a and b, are introduced. To determine the amount of any voltaic current passing through it, the tube, c, is taken out and filled with dilute sulphuric acid and water, then turned down into the solution in the jar, d, care being taken that in so doing no air is admitted into the top, and that the two platina electrodes are introduced under the mouth of the tube. The number of cubic inches of the mixed gases evolved by the current over a given time, may be read off on the scale by the depression of the fluid in the tube. This instrument is also frequently used to exhibit the analysis of water, the two gases, oxygen and hydrogen, being evolved, one at the positive and the other at the negative electrode. For this purpose the instrument is then furnished with two separate tubes, one over each electrode, to collect the respective gases. In the use of these instruments, all contact of the electrodes with each other must be carefully avoided.

Voltameter.

VOL'TAPLAST, n. A kind of voltaic battery used in electrotyping.

VOL'TATYPE. The same as ELECTROTYPE,—which see.

VOL'TI. In music, a direction to turn over the leaf.

VOL'TIGEUR, n. [Fr. voltiger, to leap.] A foot-soldier in a select company of every regiment of French infantry. Voltigeurs were established by Napoleon during his consulate. Their duties, exercises, and equipment, are similar to those of our light companies.—2. In the U. States, a light horseman.

VOL'TI SU'BITO. In music, a term directing that the leaf is to be turned over quickly.

VOLT'ZITE, n. An ore of zinc, which is an oxisulphuret of that metal. It occurs in the form of small hemispheres, divisible into thin layers. It is found in Cornwall.

VOLU'BILATE, } a. In gardening, a
VOL'UBILE, } volubilate stem is one that climbs by winding or twining round another body.

VOLUBIL'ITY, n. [Fr. volubilité; L. volubilitas, from volvo, to roll.] 1. The capacity of being rolled; aptness to roll; as, the volubility of a bowl.—2. The act of rolling.

By irregular volubility. Hooker.

3. Ready motion of the tongue in speaking; fluency of speech.

She ran over the catalogue of diversions with such a volubility of tongue, as drew a gentle reprimand from her father. Female Quixote.

4. Mutability; liableness to revolution; as, the volubility of human affairs. [Unusual.]

VOL'UBLE, a. [L. volubilis.] 1. Formed so as to roll with ease, or to be easily set in motion; apt to roll; as, voluble particles of matter.—2. Rolling; having quick motion.

This less voluble earth. Milton.

3. Nimble; active; moving with ease and smoothness in uttering words; fluent; as, a flippant, voluble tongue.—4. Fluent; flowing with ease and smoothness; as, a voluble speech.—5. Having fluency of speech.

Cassio, a knave very voluble. Shak.

VOL'UBLENESS, n. Quality of being voluble.

VOL'UBLY, adv. In a rolling or fluent manner.

VOL'UME, n. [Fr. from L. volumen, a roll; volvo, to roll. To make u long, in this word, is palpably wrong.] 1. Primarily, something rolled or convolved; a roll, as the ancients wrote on long strips of bark, parchment, or other material, which they formed into rolls or folds. Of such volumes, Ptolemy's library in Alexandria is said to have contained 700,000.—2. A roll or turn; as much as is included in a roll or coil; as, the volume of a serpent.—3. Dimensions; compass; space occupied; bulk, size, or solid content; as, the volume of an elephant's body: the volume of a sphere; the volume of a cylinder; a volume of gas. In chem., the size or bulk of an atom of any gaseous body is termed its atomic volume. It is not meant, however, that we can ascertain the absolute volume of the atoms, but the relative or comparative volume of the atoms or particles of two or more gases. It is generally admitted that equal volumes or bulks of different elementary gases contain different numbers of atoms, and hence the atoms must be of different sizes: Thus, the atoms of oxygen gas are ½ the size, and those of sulphur ⅙ the size of the atoms of hydrogen, nitrogen, chlorine, &c. To obtain the relative atomic volume of any gas, the atomic weight is divided by the specific gravity. Thus, the atomic weight of oxygen = 8, divided by its specific gravity 16, (that of hydrogen being 1,) gives the quotient ½ for the atomic volume of oxygen. When two gaseous bodies combine together, it is always in such proportions by volume, that one volume of the one gas combines with one, two, or more volumes of the other, and thus the composition of gaseous bodies may be expressed by volume as well as by weight. The theory of volumes has recently been extended to solids and liquids.—4. A swelling or spherical body.

The undulating billows rolling their silver volumes. Irving.

5. A book; a collection of sheets of paper, usually printed or written paper, folded and bound, or covered. A book consisting of sheets once folded, is called a folio, or a folio volume; of sheets twice folded, a quarto; and thus, according to the number of leaves in a sheet, it is called an octavo, or a duodecimo. The Scriptures or sacred writings, bound in a single volume, are called the Bible.

An odd volume of a set of books, bears not the value of its proportion to the set. Franklin.

6. In music, the compass of a voice from grave to acute; the tone or power of voice.

VOL'UMED, a. Having the form of a volume or roll; as, volumed mist.

VOLU'MINOUS, a. Consisting of many coils or complications.

The serpent roll'd voluminous and vast. Milton.

2. Consisting of many volumes or books. The collections of Muritori and of the Byzantine history, are very voluminous.—3. Having written much, or made many volumes; as, a voluminous writer. 4.† Copious; diffusive. He was too voluminous in discourse.

VOLU'MINOUSLY, adv. In many volumes; very copiously.

VOLU'MINOUSNESS, n. State of being bulky or in many volumes.

VOL'UMIST,† n. One who writes a volume; an author.

VOL'UNTARIES, n. [from voluntary.] A general name given to those dissenters who are opposed to all connection between church and state, and all endowments for the support of the clergy, secured or allotted to them by the law of the land. They maintain that every pastor of a congregation ought to be chosen by the free-will and consent of the members, and supported by their free-will contributions.

VOL'UNTARILY, adv. [from voluntary.] Spontaneously; of one's own will; without being moved, influenced, or impelled by others.

To be agents voluntarily in our own destruction, is against God and nature. Hooker.

VOL'UNTARINESS, n. The state of being voluntary or optional.

VOL'UNTARY, a. [Fr. volontaire; L. voluntarius, from voluntas, will, from volo. Voluntary is applicable only to beings that have will; spontaneous is applicable to physical causes, as well as to the will of an agent.] 1. Acting by choice or spontaneously; acting without being influenced or impelled by another.—2. Free, or having power to act by choice; not being under restraint; as, man is a voluntary agent.—3. Proceeding from choice or free will.

That sin or guilt pertains exclusively to voluntary action, is the true principle of orthodoxy. N. W. Taylor.

4. Willing; acting with willingness.

She fell to lust a voluntary prey. Pope.

5. Done by design; purposed; intended. If a man kills another by lopping a tree, here is a no voluntary murder.—6. Done freely, or of choice; proceeding from free will. He went into voluntary exile. He made a voluntary surrender.—7. Acting of his own accord; spontaneous; as, the voluntary dictates of knowledge.—8. Subject to the will; as, the voluntary motions of an animal. Thus the motion of a leg or an arm is voluntary, but the motion of the heart is involuntary. Those muscles which are thrown into action, in obedience to the will, are called voluntary muscles, in opposition to the involuntary muscles, or those which act independently of the will.—9 Pertaining to the voluntaries; as, the voluntary system; the voluntary principle. A voluntary escape, in law, is the escape of a prisoner by the express consent of the sheriff.—Voluntary jurisdiction, is that which is exercised in doing that which no one opposes; as, in granting dispensations, &c.—Voluntary jurisdiction, in Scots law, is that jurisdiction which is exercised in matters admitting of no opposition or question, and therefore cognizable by any judge, in any place, or on any lawful day; such as the judicial ratification of a married woman, brieves of tutory, general service, &c.—Voluntary affidavit or oath, is one made in an extra-judicial matter.—Voluntary waste is that which is committed by positive acts.

VOL'UNTARY, n. One who engages in any affair of his own free will; a volunteer. [In this sense, volunteer is now generally used.]—2. In music, a piece played by a musician extemporarily, according to his fancy. In the Philosophical Transactions, we have a method of writing voluntaries, as fast as the musician plays the notes. This is by a cylinder turning under the keys of the organ.—3. A composition for the organ.

VOL'UNTARYISM, n. Voluntary principle or action.—2. The system of supporting any thing by voluntary contribution or assistance.—3. The opinions or principles of the voluntaries.

VOLUNTEER, n. [Fr. volontaire.] A person who enters into military or other service of his own free will. In military affairs, volunteers enter into service voluntarily, but when in service they are subject to discipline and regulations like other soldiers. They sometimes serve gratuitously, but often receive a compensation.

VOLUNTEER, a Entering into service of free will; as, volunteer companies.

VOLUNTEER, v. t. To offer or bestow voluntarily, or without solicitation or compulsion; as, to volunteer one's services.

VOLUNTEER, v. i. To enter into any service of one's free will, without solicitation or compulsion. He volunteered in that undertaking. [These verbs are in respectable use.]

VOLUP'TUARY, n. [L. voluptarius, from voluptas, pleasure] A man addicted to luxury or the gratification of the appetite, and to other sensual pleasures.

VOLUP'TUOUS, a. [Fr. voluptueux; L. voluptuosus] Given to the enjoyments of luxury and pleasure; indulging to excess in sensual gratifications.

> Soften'd with pleasure and voluptuous life. Milton.

VOLUP'TUOUSLY, adv. Luxuriously; with free indulgence of sensual pleasures; as, to live voluptuously.

VOLUP'TUOUSNESS, n. Luxuriousness; addictedness to pleasure or sensual gratification.

> Where no voluptuousness, yet all delight. Donne.

VOLU'TA, n. [Lat. a wreath.] A genus of testaceous gastropodous molluscs, including those which have a univalve spiral shell, with an aperture destitute of a beak, and somewhat effuse, and a columella twisted or plaited, generally without lips or perforation. The species are principally found in tropical seas, and from the numbers and carnivorous habits of these animals, they serve as powerful agents in keeping other mollusca and conchifera within due limits. Their shells are prized by collectors above most others for their beauty and rarity. The Linnæan genus voluta, comprehended numerous species, but later naturalists have distributed them into the following subgenera: oliva, volvaria, voluta proper, marginella, mitra, and cancellaria.

VOLUTA'TION, n. [L. volutatio, from voluto, from volvo, Eng. to wallow.] A wallowing; a rolling of the body on the earth. [See WALLOW.]

VOLUTE, n. [Fr. volute; It. voluta; from L. volutus, volvo.] 1. In arch., a kind of spiral scroll, used in the Ionic and Composite capitals, of which it is a principal ornament. The number of volutes in the Ionic order is four; in Volutes of the Ionic and Corinthian Capitals.

the Composite, eight. There are also eight angular volutes in the Corinthian capital, accompanied with eight smaller ones, called helices.—2. A genus of testaceous gastropodous molluscs. [See VOLUTA.]

VOLU'TED, a. Having a volute, or spiral scroll.

VOLU'TIDÆ, n. A family of testaceous gastropodous molluscs, of which the genus voluta is the type. This family comprises numerous species both recent and fossil, and may be regarded as one of the most interesting and beautiful families of the spiral Testacea, whether in regard to the elegance of the shells themselves, or as exhibiting a principle of variation in their structure, hardly to be excelled. The music-shells, mitre-shells, and date-shells are examples.

Undulated Volute (Voluta undulata).

VOLU'TION, n. A spiral turn or wreath. The wreaths or turnings of the shells of univalves are termed volutions.

VOL'UTITE,† n. A petrified shell of the genus Voluta.

VOL'VA, n. [L.] In bot., the wrapper or involucrum-like base of the stem of certain fungi, as Agaricus volvaceus. It is the remnants of a bag that enveloped the whole plant in its earlier stages, and was left at the foot of the stem when the plant elongated and burst through it.

VOLVA'RIA, n. A genus of testaceous gastropodous molluscs, belonging to the family Volutidæ. The polish and whiteness of the shells, cause them to be employed as necklaces on some coasts.

VOL'VIC, a. Denoting a species of stone or lava.

VOL'VOX, n. [L. from volvo, to roll.] A genus of globular animalcules. To the presence of one species, V. globator, and to its great abundance, stagnant waters owe their green colour.

VO'MER, n. [L. a ploughshare.] In anat., the slender thin bone which separates the nostrils from each other.

VOM'IC, a. The vomic nut, nux vomica, is the seed of the Strychnos nux vomica, a native of the East Indies. It is a very valuable medicine.

VOM'ICA, n. [L.] An abscess of the lungs.

VOM'IC-NUT, n. [L. vomica, emetic, and nux, a nut.] The seed of the Strychnos nux vomica, a medium sized tree growing in various parts of India. [See NUX VOMICA and STRYCHNOS.]

VOM'IT, v. i. [L. vomo; Fr. vomir; It vomire; Sans. vamathu. Probably the Gr. ἐμέω is the same word, with the loss of its first letter.] To eject the contents of the stomach by the mouth. Some animals vomit with ease, as cats and dogs; but horses do not vomit.

VOM'IT, v. t. To throw up or eject from the stomach; to discharge from the stomach through the mouth. It is followed often by up or out, but without necessity and to the injury of the language. In the yellow fever, the patients often vomit dark coloured matter like coffee grounds.

> The fish vomited out Jonah upon the dry land; Jonah ii.

2. To eject with violence from any hollow place. Volcanoes vomit flames, ashes, stones, and liquid lava.

VOM'IT, n. The matter ejected from the stomach.—2. That which excites the stomach to discharge its contents; an emetic.—Black vomit, the dark coloured matter ejected from the stomach in the last stage of the yellow fever or other malignant disease.

VOM'ITED, pp. Ejected from the stomach through the mouth, or from any deep place through an opening.

VOM'ITING, ppr. Discharging from the stomach through the mouth, or ejecting from any deep place.

VOM'ITING, n. The act of ejecting the contents of the stomach through the mouth. Vomiting is essentially an inverted spasmodic motion of the muscular fibres of the esophagus, stomach, and intestines, attended with strong convulsions of the muscles of the abdomen and diaphragm. It is preceded by the sensation called nausea.—2. The act of throwing out substances with violence from a deep hollow, as a volcano, &c.

VOMI''TION, n. The act or power of vomiting.

VOM'ITIVE, a. [Fr. vomitif.] Causing the ejection of matter from the stomach; emetic.

VOMI'TO, n. [Sp.] The yellow fever, in its worst form, when it is usually attended with the black vomit.

VOM'ITORY, a. [L. vomitorius.] Procuring vomiting; causing to eject from the stomach; emetic.

VOM'ITORY, n. An emetic.—2. [L. vomitorium.] In arch, an opening gate or door in an ancient theatre and amphitheatre, which gave ingress or egress to the people.

VORA'CIOUS, a. [Fr. and It. vorace;

L. vorax, from voro, to devour; Heb. and Ch. בער, bear, to clear away, to consume; Gr. βορα, food.] 1. Greedy for eating; ravenous; very hungry; as, a voracious man or appetite.—2. Rapacious; eager to devour; as, voracious animals.—3. Ready to swallow up; as, a voracious gulf, or whirlpool.

VORA'CIOUSLY, adv. With greedy appetite; ravenously.

VORA'CIOUSNESS, n. Greediness of appetite; ravenousness; eagerness to devour; rapaciousness.

VORAC'ITY, n. Greediness of appetite; voraciousness.

Creatures by their voracity pernicious, have commonly fewer young. Derham.

VORAG'INOUS, a. [L. voraginosus, vorago.] Full of gulfs.

VOR'TEX, n. plur. Vortices or Vortexes. [L. from verto, Ant. vorto, to turn.] 1. A whirlpool; a whirling or circular motion of water, forming a kind of cavity in the centre of the circle, and in some instances, drawing in water or absorbing other things.—2. A whirling of the air; a whirlwind.—3. In the Cartesian system, the circular motion originally impressed on the particles of matter, carrying them around their own axes, and around a common centre. Descartes supposed that God created matter of an indefinite extension, and hence concluded that there is no vacuum, but that the universe is absolutely full. He further supposed that God, when he created matter, separated it into small square portions or masses full of angles; that he impressed two motions on this matter; the one by which each part revolved about its own centre or axis; and another, by which an assemblage or system of such parts, turned round a common centre. Hence arose as many different vortices, or eddies, as there were different masses of matter, thus moving about common centres. By means of these vortices, Descartes attempted to account for the formation of the universe, but his system has long since been exploded.

VOR'TICAL, a. Whirling; turning; as, a vortical motion.

VOR'TICEL, } n. [L. vortex.] A
VORTICEL'LA, } genus of wheel-animalcules, having a fixed stem, and having vibratile organs at their anterior extremity, which are constantly in rapid motion, and attract particles of food. The species are very numerous in fresh water, and are generally too small to be perceived without the aid of the microscope.

VO'TARESS, n. A female devoted to any service, worship, or state of life.

No rosary this votaress needs. Cleaveland.

VO'TARIST, n. [See VOTARY.] One devoted or given up to any person or thing, to any service, worship, or pursuit.

I am no idle votarist. Shak.

[Votary is now used.]

VO'TARY, a. [from L. votus, from voveo. See Vow.] Devoted; promised; consecrated by a vow or promise; consequent on a vow.

Votary resolution is made equipollent to custom. Bacon.

VO'TARY, n. One devoted, consecrated, or engaged by a vow or promise; hence more generally, one devoted, given, or addicted to some particular service, worship, study, or state of life. Every goddess of antiquity had her votaries. Every pursuit or study has now its votaries. One is a votary to mathematics, another is a votary to music, and alas, a great portion of the world are votaries of sensual pleasures.

It was the coldness of the votary, not the prayer, which was in fault. Fell.

VŌTE, n. [It. and Sp. voto; L. votum, from voveo, to vow. Votum is properly wish or will.] 1. Suffrage; the expression of a wish, desire, will, preference, or choice, in regard to any measure proposed, in which the person voting has an interest in common with others, either in electing a man to office, or in passing laws, rules, regulations, and the like. This vote or expression of will may be given by holding up the hand, by rising and standing up, by the voice, (viva voce,) by ballot, by a ticket, or otherwise. All these modes and others are used.—Hence, 2. That by which will or preference is expressed in elections, or in deciding propositions; a ballot; a ticket, &c.; as, a written vote.—3. Expression of will by a majority; legal decision by some expression of the minds of a number; as, the vote was unanimous.—4.† United voice in public prayer.—Casting vote. In public meetings, where questions are determined by vote, the chairman or presiding member is frequently entitled not only to give his deliberative vote as a member of the meeting, but also to a second vote in cases of equality, and this second vote is termed the casting vote.

VŌTE, v. i. To express or signify the mind, will, or preference, in electing men to office, or in passing laws, regulations, and the like, or in deciding on any proposition in which one has an interest with others. In elections, men are bound to vote for the best men to fill offices, according to their best knowledge and belief.

To vote for a duelist, is to assist in the prostration of justice, and indirectly to encourage the crime. L. Beecher.

VŌTE, v. t. To choose by suffrage; to elect by some expression of will; as, the citizens voted their candidate into office with little opposition.—2. To enact or establish by vote or some expression of will. The legislature voted the resolution unanimously.—3. To grant by vote or expression of will.

Parliament voted them a hundred thousand pounds. Swift.

VŌTED, pp. Expressed by vote or suffrage; determined.

VŌTER, n. One who has a legal right to vote or give his suffrage.

VŌTING, ppr. Expressing the mind, will, or preference in election, or in determining questions proposed; giving a vote or suffrage; electing, deciding, giving, or enacting by vote.

VŌ'TIVE, a. [Fr. votif; L. votivus, from votus, vowed.] Given by vow; devoted; as, votive offerings. A votive medal is one struck in grateful commemoration of some auspicious event; as, the recovery of a prince from sickness. A votive table, picture, &c., is one dedicated in consequence of the vow [L. ex voto] of a worshipper. Among the Greeks and Romans such offerings were dedicated to some deity, and were deposited in temples. Among Roman Catholics, they are dedicated to saints.

Venus, take my votive glass. Prior.

VO'TIVENESS, n. Quality of being votive.

VOUCH, v. t. [Norm. voucher; L. voco. See VOICE.] 1. To call to witness; to obtest.

And vouch the silent stars and conscious moon. Dryden.

2. To declare; to affirm; to attest; to warrant; to maintain by affirmations.

They made him ashamed to vouch the truth of the relation, and afterward to credit it. Atterbury.

3. To warrant; to confirm; to establish proof.

The consistency of the discourse...vouches it to be worthy of the great apostle. Locke.

4. In law, to call into court to warrant and defend, or to make good a warranty of title.

He vouches the tenant in tail, who vouches over the common vouchee. Blackstone.

VOUCH, v. i. To bear witness; to give testimony or full attestation. I cannot vouch for the truth of the report.

He declares he will not believe her, till the elector of Hanover shall vouch for the truth of what she has so solemnly affirmed. Swift.

VOUCH,† n. Warrant; attestation.

VOUCH'ED, pp. Called to witness; affirmed or fully attested; called into court to make good a warranty.

VOUCHEE', n. In law, the person who is vouched or called into court to support or make good his warranty of title in the process of common recovery.

VOUCH'ER, n. One who gives witness or full attestation to any thing.

The great writers of that age stand up together as vouchers for each other's reputation. Spectator.

2. In law, the act of calling in a person to make good his warranty of title.—3. A book, paper, or document which serves to vouch the truth of accounts, or to confirm and establish facts of any kind. The merchant's books are his vouchers for the correctness of his accounts. Notes, bonds, receipts, and other writings, are used as vouchers in proving facts.—In Scots law, voucher is the technical name for the written evidence of payment.

VOUCH'ER, } n. In law, the tenant in VOUCH'OR, } a writ of right; one who calls in another to establish his warranty of title. In common recoveries, there may be a single voucher, or double vouchers.

VOUCH'ING, ppr. Calling to witness; attesting by affirmation; calling in to maintain warranty of title.

VOUCHSĀFE, v. t. [vouch and safe; to vouch or answer for safety.] 1. To permit to be done without danger.—2. To condescend to grant.

Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two? Shak.

It is not said by the apostle that God vouchsafed to the heathen the means of salvation. South.

VOUCHSĀFE, v. i. To condescend; to deign: to yield.

Vouchsafe, illustrious Ormond, to behold
What pow'r the charms of beauty had of old. Dryden.

VOUCHSĀFED, pp. Granted in condescension.

VOUCHSĀFEMENT, n. Grant in condescension; as, God's greatest communicated vouchsafements.

VOUCHSĀFING, ppr. Condescending to grant; deigning.

VOUS'SOIR, n. (voos'wor.) [Fr.] In arch., a stone in the shape of a truncated wedge which forms part of an arch. The under sides of the voussoirs form the intrados or soffit of the arch, and the upper side the extrados. The Voussoirs.

middle voussoir is termed the key-stone. [See ARCH.]

VOW, n. [Fr. vœu; It. voto; L. votum, from voveo, to vow; probably a contracted word] 1. A solemn promise or oath made to God, or by a pagan to his deity. The Roman generals, when they went to war, sometimes made a vow that they would build a temple to some favourite deity, if he would give them victory. A vow is a promise of something to be given or done hereafter. A person is constituted a religious by taking three vows, of chastity, of poverty, and of obedience. Among the Israelites, the vows of children were not binding, unless ratified by the express or tacit consent of their father; Num. xxx. Among the Romans, vows signified sacrifices, offerings, presents, and prayers made for the Cæsars and emperors, particularly for their prosperity, and the continuance of their empire.—2. A solemn promise; as, the vows of unchangeable love and fidelity. In a moral and religious sense, vows are promises to God, as they appeal to God to witness their sincerity, and the violation of them is a most heinous offence.

VOW, v. t. [Fr. vouer; L. voveo.] 1. To give, consecrate, or dedicate to God by a solemn promise. When Jacob went to Mesopotamia, he vowed to God a tenth of his substance, and his own future devotion to his service; Gen. xxviii.

When thou vowest a vow, defer not to pay it; Eccles. v.

2. To devote.

VOW, v. i. To make vows or solemn promises. He that vows, must be careful to perform.

VOW'ED, pp. Solemnly promised to God; given or consecrated by solemn promise.

VOW'EL, n. [L. vocalis, from voco; Fr. voyelle; It. vocale] 1. In gram., a simple sound; a sound uttered by simply opening the mouth or organs; as the sound of a, e, o.—2. The letter or character which represents a simple sound, and which can be pronounced by itself. Vowels are thus distinguished from consonants, which require to be sounded with the aid of a vowel. The English vowels are six in number, viz., a, e, i, o, u, y.

VOW'EL, a. Pertaining to a vowel; vocal.—Vowel points are used in Hebrew, its alphabet consisting only of consonants; they are placed above and below the letters.

VOW'ELISH,† a. Of the nature of a vowel.

VOW'ELISM, n. The use of vowels.

VOW'ELLED, a. Furnished with vowels.

VOW'ER, n. One who makes a vow.

VOW'-FELLOW, n. [vow and fellow.] One bound by the same vow. [Little used.]

VOW'ING, ppr. Making a vow.

VOX, n. [L.] A voice; a sound.—Vox populi, the voice of the people; opinion or sentiment of the generality.—Vox Dei, the voice or command of God.—Vox clamantis in deserto, the voice of one crying in the wilderness (John i. 23.); applied, by extension, to cases where warnings or prophecies (like those of Cassandra) are uttered in vain.—Vox et præterea nihil, a voice and nothing more; a vain sound, or empty threat.

VOY'AGE, n. [Fr. from voie, or the same root, Eng. way, Sax. wæg, weg. See WAG and WAY.] 1. A passing by sea or water from one place, port, or country to another, especially a passing or journey by water to a distant place or country; as, a voyage to the East or West Indies. Ferdinand Magellan, a Spaniard, made the first voyage round the world, in the early part of the 17th century.—2.† The practice of travelling.—3. In a low sense, course; attempt; undertaking.

VOY'AGE, v. i. To sail or pass by water.

VOY'AGE, v. t. To travel; to pass over.

I with pain
Voyag'd th' unreal, vast, unbounded deep. Milton.

VOY'AGEABLE, a. Navigable.

VOY'AGER, n. One who sails or passes by sea or water.

A private voyager I pass the main. Pope.

VOY'AGEUR, n. [Fr.] Literally, a traveller. The Canadian name of a class of men employed by the fur companies, &c., in transporting goods by the rivers and across the land, to and from the remote stations at the north-west. These men are nearly always French Canadians.

VOY'AGING, n. or ppr. Making a voyage.

VOY'OL VI'OL, n. In mar. lan., a large rope used to unmoor or heave up the anchors of a ship, by transmitting the effort of the capstan to the cables.

VUL'CAN, n. [L. vulcanus.] In myth., the god who presided over fire, and the working of metals. He was called by the Greeks Hephæstos, and was, according to Homer, the son of Jupiter and Juno. He married Venus, who proved unfaithful to him. In sculpture, he is represented as bearded, with a hammer and pincers, and a pointed cap, but does not appear to be lame, as the poets describe him.

VULCA'NIAN, } a. Pertaining to Vul-
VULCA'NIC, } can, or to works in iron, &c.—2. In geol., pertaining to or designating the system or theory of the Vulcanists, otherwise termed Plutonists.

VUL'CANIST, n. One who supports the Vulcanian or Plutonian theory, which ascribes the changes on the earth's surface to the agency of fire, and maintains that all rocks are of igneous production. The Vulcanists maintain that the earth was at first in a state of igneous fusion, that it gradually cooled, and became covered only at a subsequent period. They maintain that the land was raised up by a subterranean force, the irregularities which diversify its surface being the effects of volcanic eruptions; and that the transported soils have been formed by the disintegrations of the higher grounds. The Vulcanists were opposed to the Neptunists, who maintained that all geological formations have been precipitated from water, or from a chaotic fluid. The Vulcanian theory has been expanded and illustrated by Lyell, and some other geologists of the present day.

VULCANIZA'TION, n. A new method of treating Indian rubber, by which its valuable properties are greatly increased, and some new ones bestowed upon it. It is as follows:—The Indian rubber is immersed in a bath of fused sulphur, heated to a proper temperature, until, by absorbing a portion of the sulphur, it assumes a carbonized appearance, and eventually acquires the consistence of horn. The same state can, however, be produced by either kneading the India rubber with sulphur, and then exposing it to a temperature of 190°, or by dissolving it in any of the common solvents, as turpentine, holding sulphur in solution or suspension. The compound thus formed is properly a sulphuret of caoutchouc, and possesses the following properties. It remains elastic at all temperatures; it cannot be dissolved by the ordinary solvents, neither is it affected by heat within a considerable range of temperature; finally, it acquires extraordinary powers of resisting compression, with a great increase of strength and elasticity. Vulcanized India rubber has been employed with great success as a substitute for the spiral steel springs used for the buffers of railway carriages, to moderate the effects of concussion. It is also used in railways, and is laid between the rail and the sleeper, and thus prevents the rails from indicating any traces of pressure. It forms in engines a most valuable material for washers, and it is formed into a tubing of great strength and flexibility, well adapted for fire-hose, and for any apparatus required in conveying steam, water, or gas. It also forms elastic bands, trouser-straps, surgical bandages, and a number of other articles.

VUL'CANIZED INDIAN RUBBER. Indian rubber or caoutchouc combined with sulphur. [See VULCANIZATION.]

VULCA'NO. See VOLCANO.

VUL'GAR, a. [Fr. vulgaire; It. volgare; L. vulgaris, from vulgus, the common people, that is, the crowd, Eng. folk.] 1. Pertaining to the common unlettered people; as, vulgar life.—2. Used or practised by common people; as, vulgar sports.—3. Vernacular; national.

It might be more useful to the English reader, to write in our vulgar language. Fell.

4. Common; used by all classes of people; as, the vulgar version of the scriptures.—5. Public; as, vulgar report.—6. Mean; rustic; rude; low; unrefined; as, vulgar minds; vulgar manners.—7. Consisting of common persons.

In reading an account of a battle, we follow the hero with our whole attention but seldom reflect on the vulgar heaps of slaughter. Rambler.

Vulgar era, the common era used by Christians, dating from the birth of Christ.—Vulgar errors, in law, erroneous notions entertained by the common people in regard to points of law.—Vulgar fractions, in arith., fractions expressed by a numerator and denominator; thus $\frac{1}{4}$. [See FRACTIONS.]

VUL'GAR, n. The common people. [It has no plural termination, but has often a plural verb.]

The vulgar imagine the Pretender to have been a child imposed on the nation. Swift.

VUL'GARISM, n. Grossness of manners; vulgarity. [Little used.]—2. A vulgar phrase or expression. [This is the usual sense of the word.]

VULGAR'ITY, } n. Mean condition
VUL'GARNESS, } in life; the state of the lower classes of society.—2. Grossness or clownishness of manners or language; an act of low manners; as, vulgarity of behaviour: vulgarity of expression or language. [Vulgarness is little used.]

VUL'GARIZE, v. t. To make vulgar.

VUL'GARIZED, pp. Made vulgar.

VUL'GARIZING, ppr. Rendering vulgar.

VUL'GARLY, adv. Commonly; in the ordinary manner among the common people.

Such one we vulgarly call a desperate person. Hammond.

2. Meanly; rudely; clownishly.

VUL'GATE, n. A very ancient Latin version of the scriptures, and the only one which the Romish church admits to be authentic. It is so called from its common use in the Latin church; said to have been discovered, A.D. 218; first printed in 1462.

VUL'GATE, a. Pertaining to the old Latin version of the scriptures.

VUL'NED, a. [L. vulnus, a wound.] In her., an epithet applied to any animal that is wounded and bleeding; as, a hind's head vulned.

VULNERABIL'ITY, } n. That may
VUL'NERABLENESS, } be wounded; liable to injury; exposed to harm.

VUL'NERABLE, a. [Fr. from L. vulnero, to wound, from vulnus, a wound.] 1. That may be wounded; susceptible of wounds or external injuries; as, a vulnerable body.

Achilles was vulnerable in his heel; and there will never be wanting a Paris to infix the dart. Dwight.

2. Liable to injury; subject to be affected injuriously; as, a vulnerable reputation.

VUL'NERARY, a. [Fr. vulneraire; L. vulnerarius.] Useful in healing wounds; adapted to the cure of external injuries; as, vulnerary plants or potions.

VUL'NERARY, n. Any plant, drug, or composition, useful in the cure of wounds. Certain unguents, balsams, and the like, are used as vulneraries.

VUL'NERATE,† v. t. [L. vulnero.] To wound: to hurt.

VULNERA'TION,† n. The act of wounding.

VUL'NEROSE, a. Full of wounds.

VULNIF'IC, a. Causing wounds.

VUL'NING, ppr. Wounding; a term particularly applied in heraldry to the pelican, which is always depicted wounding or picking her breast.

VULPE'CULA ET AN'SER. [L.] The fox and the goose, a constellation of Hevelius, situated immediately above Aquila and Sagitta. According to the British catalogue, it contains 37 stars.

VUL'PES, n. The subgeneric name for the foxes, adopted by those zoologists who distinguish the foxes from the dogs, jackals, and wolves, to which they consequently restrict the term Canis. [See Fox.]

VUL'PINE, a. [L. vulpinus, from vulpes, a fox. Vulpes is our English wolf, the same word applied to a different animal.] Pertaining to the fox; cunning; crafty; artful.

VUL'PINITE, n. [from Vulpino, in Italy.] A mineral of a grayish white colour, splendent and massive; its fracture foliated. It is an anhydrous sulphate of lime, containing a little silica. It occurs along with granular foliated limestone at Vulpino, in Italy, and is sometimes employed by the Italian artists for small statues, and other ornamental work, under the name of marino bardiglio.

VULSEL'LA, n. A genus of conchiferous molluscs, the shells of which are brought from the Indian ocean and the seas of New Holland, and are generally found buried in sponge. They are subcorneous, elongated, flattened, irregular, inequilateral, subequivalve, the umbones nearly anterior, distant, and a little recurved. The hinge is toothless, with a prominent callosity in each valve, showing a pit for the insertion of the ligament.

VUL'TURE, n. [L. vultur.] The English name of a genus (Vultur) of raptorial birds, characterized by having the head and part of the neck destitute of feathers, the tarsi covered with small scales, and a rather elongated beak, of which the upper mandible is curved at the end. The strength of their talons does not correspond with their size, and they make more use of their beak than of their claws. In general, the birds belonging to this genus are of a cowardly nature, living chiefly on dead carcases and offal. Their geographical distribution is confined chiefly to warm countries, where they act as scavengers to purify the earth from the putrid carcases with which it would otherwise be encumbered. The genus Vultur, Linn., is now divided into the subgenera Vultur proper, Cathartes, Sarcoramphus, Percnopterus, and Gypaëtos. The Griffon vulture (V. fulvus), inhabits the mountainous parts of the north of Europe, Silesia, Spain, the Alps, the Pyrenees, Turkey, and the Grecian Archipelago. The cinereous or ash-vulture (V. cinereus), inhabits lofty mountains in Ash Vulture (Vultur cinereus).

Europe, and the vast forests of Hungary, the Tyrol, and the Pyrenees, the south of Spain and Italy. The bearded vulture, or Lämmer-geyer, (Gypaëtos barbatus), inhabits the highest mountains of Europe, Asia, and Africa. The Egyptian vulture is the Nephron

Egyptian Vulture (Nephron percnopterus).

percnopterus. The sociable vulture (V. auricularis) is a gigantic species, inhabiting the greater part of Africa. The black vulture (Cathartes atratus) is a native of the United States. The king vulture (Sarcoramphus papa) is common in Paraguay. The Sarcoramphus gryphus is the celebrated Condor vulture of South America.

VULTU'RIDÆ, n. The family of the vultures. [See VULTURE.]

VUL'TURINE, a. [Lat. vulturinus.] Belonging to the vulture; having the qualities of, or resembling the vulture.

VUL'TURISH, } a. Like a vulture;
VUL'TUROUS, } rapacious.

VY'ING, ppr. Competing; emulating.

W.

W IS the twenty-third letter of the English Alphabet. It takes its written form and its name from the union of two Vs, this being the form of the Roman capital letter which we call U. The name, double u, being given to it from its form or composition, and not from its sound, ought not to be retained. Every letter should be named from its sound, especially the vowels. W is properly a vowel, a simple sound, formed by opening the mouth with a close circular configuration of the lips. It is precisely the ou of the French, and the u of the Spaniards, Italians, and Germans. With the other vowels it forms diphthongs, which are of easy pronunciation; as in well, want, will, dwell; pronounced oell, oont, oill, doell. In English, it is always followed by another vowel, except when followed by h, as in when; but this case is an exception only in writing, and not in pronunciation, for h precedes w in utterance; when being pronounced hoen. In Welsh, w, which is sounded as in English, is used without another vowel, as in ffol, a fool; dwn, dun; dwb, mortar; gwn, a gun, and a gown. It is not improbable that the Romans pronounced v as we do w, for their volvo is our wallow; and volo, velle, is the English will, G. wollen. But this is uncertain. The German v has the sound of the English f, and w that of the English v. W, at the end of words, is often silent after a and o, as in law, saw, low, sow. In many words of this kind, w represents the Saxon g; in other cases it helps to form a diphthong, as in now, vow, new, strew. As an abbreviation, W stands for west; W.N.W., for west-north-west; W.S.W., for west-south-west, &c.

WAB'BLE, v. i. [W. gwibiaw, to wander, to move in a circular form.] To move from one side to the other; to vacillate; as a turning or whirling body. So it is said a top wabbles, when it is in motion, and deviates from a perpendicular direction; a spindle wabbles, when it moves one way and the other. A millstone in motion, if not well balanced, will wabble. [This word is applied chiefly to bodies when turning with a circular motion, and its place cannot be supplied by any other word in the language. It is neither low nor barbarous.]

WAB'BLE, n. A hobbling unequal motion.

WAB'BLING, ppr. or a. Having an irregular motion, backward and forward.

WAB'STER, n. A weaver. [Scotch.]

WACK'E, n. [Ger.] A massive mineral, intermediate between claystone and basalt, and which may be considered as a soft and earthy variety of basalt. Its colours are greenish grey, sometimes passing into blackish green, brown, and grayish black, with sometimes a shade of yellow or red. It is opaque, and occurs in amorphous masses, compact or visicular, streak shining, soft, easily frangible. Specific gravity 2 5 to 2 9. Before the blowpipe it fuses into an opaque porous mass. It is found more abundantly in Germany than in any other country.

WAD, n. [G. watte; Dan. vat, a wad; that is, a mass or collection.] 1. A little mass of some soft or flexible material, such as hay, straw, tow, paper, or old rope-yarn, used for stopping the charge of powder in a gun and pressing it close to the shot, or for keeping the powder and shot close.—2. A little mass, tuft, or bundle, as of hay or tow. [See WADDING.]

WAD, n. [Sax. wæd, wed.] A pledge; a wager. [Scotch.]

WAD, v. t. To pledge; to bet; to wager. [Scotch.]

WADD, n. In mineral., black wadd is an ore of manganese, found in Derbyshire and Banffshire, which consists of the peroxide of manganese associated with nearly its own weight of oxide of iron. When mixed with linseed oil for a paint, it is apt to take fire.—2. A provincial name for plumbago in Cumberland.

WAD'DED, a. Formed into a wad or mass; quilted; stuffed with wadding.

WAD'DING, n. A wad, or the materials for wads; any pliable substance of which wads may be made.—2. Material for ramming down above the charge of fire arms.—3. A spongy web used for stuffing various parts of ladies' dresses. It is made with a fleece of cotton prepared by the carding machine, the surface being covered with tissue paper, applied by a coat of size.

WAD'DING, a. Suited for wadding; as, wadding paper.

WAD'DLE, v. i. [This seems to be a diminutive formed on the root of wade, L. vado, to go; G. waten, to wade; watscheln, to waddle.] 1. To move one way and the other in walking; to deviate to one side and the other; to vacillate; as, a child waddles when he begins to walk; very fat people walk with a kind of waddling pace. So we say, a duck or a goose waddles.—2. To walk with a waddling motion.

> And hardly waddles forth to cool. Swift.

WAD'DLER, n. One that waddles.

WAD'DLING, ppr. Moving from side to side in walking.

WAD'DLINGLY, adv. With a vacillating gait.

WADE, v. i. [Sw. vada; D. waaden; G. waten; Fr. gueer, for gueder; It. guadare; Sp. vadear, L. vado, to go. Qu. Heb. עבד, abad, to go.] 1. To walk through any substance that yields to the feet; as, to wade through water; to wade through sand or snow. To wade over a river, is to walk through on the bottom. Fowls that wade have long legs.—2. To move or pass with difficulty or labour; as, judges wade through an intricate law case. It is not my purpose to wade through these controversies.

> The king's admirable conduct has waded through all these difficulties. Davenant.
> And wades through fumes, and gropes his way. Dryden.

WADE, v. t. To pass by walking on the bottom; as, to wade a river. [This is a common expression, but elliptical for to wade through a river.]

WA'DER, n. One that wades.

WA'DERS, } n. The English
WADING BIRDS, } name of the grallatores. [See GRALLATORES.]

WADING, ppr. Walking through a substance that yields to the feet, as through water or sand.

WAD'SET, } n. [Sax. wæd, wed, Scot.
WAD'SETT, } wad, a pledge; and Sax. settan, to set or lay.] In Scots law, a conveyance of land in pledge for or in satisfaction of a debt or obligation, with a reserved power to the debtor to recover his lands on payment or performance. The lender or creditor is called the wadsetter, and the borrower the reverser. This was the earliest method of granting security on land in Scotland, and though still legal, it is now seldom, if ever, practised. Wadsets are divided into two sorts, proper and improper. When the wadsetter enters on possession, and takes, in place of interest, the yearly fruits, with the risk of the seasons, it is a proper wadset. When he agrees to accept of a fixed yearly sum as interest, and accounts to the reverser for the rents, the wadset is improper.

WAD'Y, n. [Ar.] The channel of a water-course which is dry, except in the rainy season. In a more extended sense applied to a dry valley, and also to signify any valley.

WAE'SUCKS, interj. Alas! [Scotch.]

WA'FER, n. [D. wafel; G. waffel; Russ. vaphel; Fr. gauffre.] 1. A thin cake or leaf; as, a wafer of bread given by the Roman catholics in the eucharist.—2. A thin round leaf of paste, or a composition of flour, the white of eggs, isinglass, and yeast, spread over with gum water and dried; used in sealing letters. The colouring matters used in wafers are mixed with the liquid paste. Fancy wafers are made of gelatine, in a variety of forms.

WA'FER, v. t. To seal or close with a wafer.

WA'FERED, pp. Sealed with a wafer.

WAF'FLE, n. [D. wafel, G. waffel.] A thin cake baked hard and rolled, or a soft indented cake baked in an iron utensil on coals.

WAF'FLE-IRONS, n. An utensil for baking waffles.

WÄFT, v. t. [perhaps from wave; if so, it belongs to the root of wag.] 1. To bear through a fluid or buoyant medium; to convey through water or air; as, a balloon was wafted over the channel.

> Speed the soft intercourse from soul to soul,
> And waft a sigh from Indus to the pole. Pope.

2. To convey; as ships.—3. To buoy; to cause to float; to keep from sinking.—4.† To beckon; to give notice by something in motion. [This verb is regular. But waft was formerly used by some writers for wafted.]

WÄFT, v. i. To float; to be moved or to pass in a buoyant medium.

> And now the shouts waft near the citadel. Dryden.

WÄFT, n. A floating body; also, a signal displayed from a ship's stern, by hoisting an ensign furled in a roll, to the head of the staff.

WÄFTAGE, n. Conveyance or transportation through a buoyant medium, as air or water.

WÄFTED, pp. Born or conveyed through air or water.

WÄFTER, n. He or that which wafts; a passage boat.—2. The conductor of vessels at sea; an old word.

WÄFTING, ppr. Carrying through a buoyant medium.

WÄFTING, n. A bearing or floating in a fluid.

WÄFTURE,† n. The act of waving.

WAG, v. t. [Sax. wagian and wegan; G. bewegen; D. bewegen, to move, to stir; wegen, to weigh; G. wägen, to weigh; Sw. väga, Dan. vajer, to wag, to weigh. This is the radix of the L. vacillo, Eng. fickle, waggon, wain, way, wave, waggle, &c.] To move one way and the other with quick turns; to move a little way, and then turn the other way; to move lightly from side to side; to shake slightly; as, to wag the head.

> Every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished, and wag his head; Jer. xviii.; Matth. xxvii.

[Wag expresses particularly the motion of the head and body used in buffoonery, mirth, derision, sport, and mockery. It is applied also to birds and beasts; as, to wag the tail.]

WAG, v. i. To be quick in ludicrous motion; to stir.

> 'Tis merry in hall, where beards wag all. Shak.
> Tremble and start at wagging of a straw. Shak.

2. To go; to depart; to pack off.

> I will provoke him to't, or let him wag. Shak.

3. To be moved one way and the other; to be moved from side to side.

> The resty sieve wagg'd ne'er the more. Dryden.

WAG, n. [from the verb.] A droll; a man full of low sport and humour;

one full of merry frolicsome tricks; one ludicrously mischievous.

We wink at wags, when they offend Dryden.

The counsellor never pleaded without a piece of packthread in his hand, which he used to twist about his finger all the while he was speaking; the wags used to call it the thread of his discourse. Addison.

WAGE, v. t. [G. wagen; D. waagen; Sw. vaga, to venture, to dare, to wage; Fr. gager, for guager, to lay or bet; from the root of wag. The sense is to throw, to lay or throw down, as a glove or gauntlet.] 1.† To lay; to bet; to throw down, as a pledge; to stake; to put at hazard on the event of a contest.—2.† To venture; to hazard.

To wake and wage a danger profitless. Shak.

3. To make; to begin; to engage in, as by a previous pledge or determination; to carry on; that is, to go forward or advance to attack, as in invasion or aggression; used in the phrase, to wage war. He waged war with all his enemies.

He pondered, which of all his sons was fit
To reign, and wage immortal war with wit. Dryden.

4. To set to hire.

Thou must wage
Thy works for wealth.† Spenser.

5.† To take to hire; to hire for pay; to employ for wages; as, waged soldiers. He was well waged and rewarded. [Fr.] To wage one's law, to come forward as a defendant, with others, on oath that he owes nothing to the plaintiff in manner as he has declared. [See WAGER.]

WAGE,† n. Gage; pledge; a stake.—2.† Hire; pay for service. The plural, wages, is now only used.

WA'GED, pp. Laid; deposited; as a pledge; made or begun, or carried on, as war.

WA'GER, n. A bet; something deposited, laid, or hazarded on the event of a contest or some unsettled question; something staked by each of two parties in support of his own opinion concerning a future or an unknown event. The party whose opinion proves to be correct, receives what has been staked by both.

Besides these plates for horse races, the wagers may be as the persons please. Temple.

If any atheist can stake his soul for a wager against such an inexhaustible disproportion... Bentley.

2. Subject on which bets are laid.—In Eng. law, wagers are valid, and may be made subjects of action, unless such as are rendered expressly void by law, or have an illegal or immoral tendency. In Scots law, all wagers are regarded as pacta illicita, or unlawful contracts. Hence, no action is competent for the recovery of any sum gained by betting or wagering in any form.—3. In law, an offer to make oath of innocence or non-indebtedness; or the act of making oath, together with the oaths of eleven compurgators, to fortify the defendant's oath.—Wager of law was formerly a mode of trial, whereby in an action of debt brought upon a simple contract between the parties, without any deed or record, the defendant might discharge himself by taking an oath that he owed not the plaintiff anything; but he required to bring with him eleven persons of his neighbours, called compurgators, who were to avow upon their oath that they believed in their consciences that he declared the truth. This mode of trial is no longer in use.—Wager of battle was when the tenant in a writ of right offered to prove his right by the body of his champion, and throwing down his glove as a gage or pledge, thus waged or stipulated battle with the champion of the demandant, who, by taking up the glove, accepted the challenge. The champions, armed with batons, entered the list, and taking each other by the hand, each swore to the justice of the cause of the party for whom he appeared; they then fought till the stars appeared, and if the champion of the tenant could defend himself till that time, his cause prevailed. The wager of battle, which had been long disused, was, in 1818, demanded by the nearest relative of a murdered girl, against one Abraham Thornton, her supposed seducer and slayer; this led to its formal abolition, the year after, by the act 59 Geo. 3. c. 46.—To lay a wager, to lay down a pledge or surety; to bet.

WA'GER, v. t. To lay; to bet; to hazard on the issue of a contest, or on some question that is to be decided, or on some casualty.

WA'GERED, pp. Laid; pledged; as a bet.

WA'GERER, n. One who wagers or lays a bet.

WA'GERING, ppr. Laying; betting.—Wagering policy, or wager policy, in com., a policy of insurance, insuring a sum of money when no property is at hazard; as, a policy to insure money on a ship when no property is on board; that is, insurance, interest or no interest: or a wagering policy may be a policy to insure property which is already insured. Such policies are by statute 19 Geo. 3. made null and void.

WA'GES, n. plural in termination, but singular in signification. [Fr. gage, gages.] 1. Hire; reward; that which is paid or stipulated for services. In ordinary lan., the term wages is usually restricted to the sums paid as rewards to artizans, to domestic servants, to labourers employed in manufactures, in agriculture, mines, and other manual occupations. We speak of servant's wages, a labourer's wages, or tradesmen's wages; but we never apply the word to the rewards given to men in office, which are called fees or salary. The money paid for military and naval services is termed pay, and the incomes of clergymen stipends.

Tell me, what shall thy wages be? Gen. xxix.

Be content with your wages; Luke iii.

2. In political economy, the price paid for labour; the return made or compensation paid to those employed to perform any kind of labour or service by their employers. In this sense, the term extends to the salaries of public functionaries of all sorts, to the fees of lawyers, physicians, and other professional men, as well as to the sums paid to artizans, labourers, and menials.—3. Reward; fruit; recompense; that which is given or received in return.

The wages of sin is death; Rom. vi.

WAG'GEL, WAG'EL, } n. A name given in Cornwall to the young of the great black-backed gull, the Larus marinus.

WAG'GERY, n. [from wag.] Mischievous merriment; sportive trick or gayety; sarcasm in good humour; as, the waggery of a school-boy.

WAG'GING, ppr. Moving the head one way and the other with quick turns.

WAG'GISH, a. Mischievous in sport; roguish in merriment or good humour; frolicsome; as, a company of waggish boys.—2. Done, made, or laid in waggery or for sport; as, a waggish trick.

WAG'GISHLY, adv. In a waggish manner; in sport.

WAG'GISHNESS, n. Mischievous sport; wanton merriment.

WAG'GLE, v. i. [D. waggelen; G. wackeln; L. vacillo, dim. of wag.] To waddle; to reel or move from side to side.

Why do you go nodding and waggling so? L'Estrange.

WAG'GLE, v. t. To move one way and the other; as, a bird waggles its tail.

WAG'GON, n. [D. and G. wagen; Sax. wægn, wæn; W. gwain, a waggon, wain, or sheath, L. vagina, the latter being from wag, and signifying a passage; Gaelic, baighin, a waggon; Malabar, vagahan; Sans. wahana. This word is often spelt wagon, especially in American printed books.] 1. A vehicle moved on four wheels, and usually drawn by horses. Waggons are constructed in different forms and of various dimensions, but in general they are heavy, clumsy, and inconvenient vehicles, and suitable only for the conveyance of different sorts of heavy loads to considerable distances.—2.† A chariot.

WAG'GON, v. t. To transport in a waggon. Goods are waggoned from New York to the interior. [American.]

WAG'GONAGE, n. Money paid for carriage in a waggon.

WAG'GONED, pp. Transported in waggons.

WAG'GONING, ppr. Transporting in a waggon.

WAG'GONING, n. The business of transporting in a waggon.

WAG'GON-SPOKE,† n. The spoke of a waggon-wheel.

WAG'GON-TRAIN, n. The carriage service of the British army when in campaign, including the vehicles with their equipments, for conveying munitions of war, &c. The former royal waggon-train now takes the official name of field-train department.

WAG'GON-WAY, n. A tram road or railroad.

WAG'TAIL, n. [wag and tail.] The English name of a sub-genus of birds (Motacilla, Cuv.), separated from the Common Wagtail (Motacilla yarrellii).

genus Motacilla, Linn. The species of wagtails are small birds, and are chiefly confined to the European continent. They are easily distinguished by their brisk and lively motions, as well as by the great length of their tails, which they jerk up and down incessantly; hence the name. The species most common in this country is the pied wagtail, or black and white water-wagtail (M. yarrelli), which is to be seen wherever there are shallow springs and running waters.

WA'HABEE, } n. A follower of Abdel
WA'HABITE, } Wahab, a reformer of Mohammedism, about 1760. His doctrines prevail particularly among the Bedouins; and the sect, though kept in check by the orthodox, influences most parts of Arabia.

WĀID,† a. Crushed; bent with weight.

WĀIF, } n. [Norm. waf, weif; from
WĀIFT,† } waive.] Goods found, of which the owner is not known. These were originally such goods as a thief, when pursued, threw away to prevent being apprehended. They were forfeited to the king, or lord of the manor, having the franchise of waif; but if the owner made fresh pursuit after the felon, took him and brought him to justice within a year and a day, he was entitled to restitution. In Scots law, waif cattle are such as have strayed, and of which the owner is not known. They belong to the sovereign, where they are advertised and not claimed within a year, unless the proprietor on whose lands they were found have a grant of waifs.

WĀIL, v. t. [Ice. væla; It. guaiolare; Gaelic, guilam or uaill; W. gwylaw and wylaw; Arm. goela, to howl; Heb. and Ar. אבל, abal.] To lament; to moan; to bewail.

> Or if no more her absent lord she wails. — Pope.

WĀIL, v. i. To weep; to express sorrow audibly.

> Therefore I will wail and howl; Mic. i.

WĀIL, n. Loud weeping; violent lamentation.

WĀILFUL, a. Sorrowful; mournful.

WĀILING, ppr. Lamenting with audible cries.

WĀILING, n. Loud cries of sorrow; deep lamentation.

> There shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth; Matth. xiii.

WĀILINGLY, adv. In a wailing manner.

WĀILMENT, n. Lamentation.

WĀIN, n. [Sax. wæn, W. gwain; contracted. See WAGGON.] 1. A waggon; a carriage for the transportation of goods, or for carrying corn, hay, &c., on wheels.—2. A constellation, Charles's Wain.

WĀINABLE, a. [Suio-Goth. waanna, to labour.] Capable of being tilled; as, wainable land.

WĀINAGE, n. A finding of carriages.

WĀIN-BOTE, n. Timber for waggons or carts.

WĀIN-HOUSE, n. A house or shed for waggons and carts. [Local.]

WĀIN-ROPE, n. A rope for binding a load on a waggon; a cart-rope.

WĀINSCOT, n. [D. wagenschot.] In arch., the timber-work that serves to line the walls of a room, being usually made in panels, to serve instead of hangings. The wood originally used for this purpose was a foreign oak, known by the name of wagenschot, and hence the name of the material came by degrees to be corrupted into wainscot, and applied to the work itself. Hence, also, the name wainscot is often applied to oak deal.

WĀINSCOT, v. t. To line with boards; as, to wainscot a hall.

> Music sounds better in chambers wainscotted than hanged. — Bacon.

2. To line with different materials.

> The other is wainscotted with looking-glass. — Addison.

WĀINSCOTTED, pp. Lined with boards or panels.

WĀINSCOTTING, ppr. Lining with boards.

WĀINSCOTTING, n. Wainscot, or the material used for it.—2. The act of covering or lining walls with boards in panels.

WĀIR, } v. t. To lay out as expense;
WĀRE, } to lay out money; to expend; to bestow; to waste; to squander. [Scotch.]

WĀIST, n [W. gwâsg, pressure, squeeze, the waist, the part where the girdle is tied; allied to squeeze.] 1. That part of the human body which is immediately below the ribs or thorax; or the small part of the body between the thorax and hips.—2. That part of a ship which is between the quarter deck and forecastle. But in many ships now built, there is no quarter deck, and in such the waist is the middle part of the ship.

WĀISTBAND, n. The band or upper part of breeches, trowsers, or pantaloons, which encompasses the waist.

WĀISTCLOTHS, n. Coverings of canvas or tarpauling for the hammocks, stowed on the gangways, between the quarter deck and the forecastle.

WĀISTCOAT, n. [waist and coat.] A short coat or garment for men, extending no lower than the hips, and covering the waist; a vest.

WĀISTER, n In ships, waisters are men who are stationed in the waist in working the ship.

WĀIT, v. i. [Fr. guetter; It. guatare; W. gweitiaw, to wait; gwaid, attendance. The sense is to stop, or to continue.] 1. To stay or rest in expectation; to stop or remain stationary, till the arrival of some person or event. Thus we say, I went to the place of meeting, and there waited an hour for the chairman. I will go to the hotel, and there wait till you come. We will wait for the mail.—2. To stay proceedings, or suspend any business, in expectation of some person, event, or the arrival of some hour. The court was obliged to wait for a witness.—3. To rest in expectation and patience.

> All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change come; Job xiv.

4. To stay; not to depart.

> Haste, my dear father, 'tis no time to wait. — Dryden.

5. To stay; to continue by reason of hinderance.—6. To lie in ambush, as an enemy.

> Such ambush waited to intercept thy way. — Milton.

To wait on or upon, to attend, as a servant; to perform menial services for; as, to wait on a gentleman; to wait on the table.—To wait on, to attend; to go to see; to visit on business or for ceremony. Tell the gentleman I will wait on him at ten o'clock.—2. To pay servile or submissive attendance.—3. To follow, as a consequence; as, the ruin that waits on such a supine temper. [Instead of this we use await.] 4. To look watchfully.

> It is a point of cunning to wait on him with whom you speak, with your eye. [Unusual.] — Bacon

5. To attend to; to perform.

> Aaron and his sons shall wait on their priest's office; Numb. iii. viii.; Rom. xii.

6. To be ready to serve; to obey; Ps. xxv.; Prov. xx. To wait at, to attend in service; to perform service at; 1 Cor. ix. To wait for, to watch, as an enemy; Job xv.

WĀIT, v. t. To stay for; to rest or remain stationary in expectation of the arrival of.

> Aw'd with these words, in camps they still abide,
> And wait with longing eyes their promis'd guide. — Dryden.

[Elliptical for wait for.] —2. To attend; to accompany with submission or respect.

> He chose a thousand horse, the flow'r of all
> His warlike troops, to wait the funeral. — Dryden.

[This use is not justifiable, but by poetical license.]—3. To attend as a consequence of something.

> Such doom waits luxury.† — Philips.

[In this sense we use attend or attend on.]

WĀIT, n. Ambush. As a noun, this word is used only in certain phrases.—To lie in wait, is to lie in ambush; to be secreted in order to fall by surprise on an enemy; hence figuratively, to lay snares, or to make insidious attempts, or to watch for the purpose of insnaring; Josh. viii.—In wait, is used in a like sense by Milton.—To lay wait, to set an ambush; Jer. ix.

WĀITED, pp. Stayed for; attended.

WĀITER, n. One who waits, particularly in a house of public entertainment; an attendant; a servant in attendance.

> The waiters stand in ranks; the yeomen cry,
> "Make room!" as if a duke were passing by. — Swift.

2. A server or salver; a vessel on which tea furniture, &c., is carried.

WĀITING, ppr. Staying in expectation.—2. a. An epithet applied to one who waits.—Waiting on, attending; accompanying; serving.—Waiting for, staying for the arrival of.—Waiting at, staying or attending at in expectation or in service.—In waiting, in attendance.

WĀITING-WŌMAN, } servant who attends a lady.

[Waiting-gentlewoman is sometimes, though less commonly used.]

WĀITRESS, n. A female attendant in a public room, or at an inn, &c. [A useful word, of recent origin]

WĀITS, n. [Goth. wahts, watch.] The waits were formerly minstrels or musical watchmen, who attended on great men, and sounded the watch at night. At present the name is given to those itinerant musicians who, in most of the large towns in England and Scotland, especially London, go round the principal streets at night for some time before Christmas, play two or three tunes, call the hour, then remove to a suitable distance, where they go through the same ceremony, and so on till four or five o'clock in the morning.

WAIVE,† n. A woman put out of the protection of the law.

WAIVE, v. t. [from waif.] To relinquish; to forsake; not to insist on or claim; to defer for the present; as, to waive a motion; to waive a subject; to waive a claim or privilege.—2. To put out of the protection of the law, as a woman. [See WAVE.]

WAIVED, pp. Relinquished, as a claim; put off; omitted. In law, a term especially applied to a woman, who, for any crime for which a man may be outlawed, is relinquished or forsaken by the law; that is, put out of its protection.

WAIVER, n. In law, the passing by or declining to accept a thing; applied to an estate, or to any thing conveyed to a man; also, to a plea, &c.—2. The legal process by which a woman is waived, or put out of the protection of the law.

WAIVING, ppr. Relinquishing, as a claim; omitting; deferring; depriving of the protection of the law, as a woman.

WAIWODE, VAIVODE. } A Dacian prince; a chief of the Danubian provinces of Turkey.

WAKE, v. i. [Goth. wakan; Sax. wæcan; G. wachen; L. vigil, vigilo. The root wak is allied to wag. The primary sense is to stir, to rouse, to excite. The transitive verb in Saxon is written wæcan, weccan; but both are from one root.] 1. To be awake; to continue awake; to watch; not to sleep; Ps. cxxvii.

The father waketh for the daughter. Ecclus.

Though wisdom wakes, suspicion sleeps. Milton.

I cannot think any time, waking or sleeping, without being sensible of it. Locke.

2. To be excited or roused from sleep; to awake; to be awakened. He wakes at the slightest noise.—3. To cease to sleep; to awake.—4. To be quick; to be alive or active.—5. To be excited from a torpid state; to be put in motion. The dormant powers of nature wake from their frosty slumbers.

Gentle airs to fan the earth now wak'd. Milton.

WAKE, v. t. To rouse from sleep.

The angel that talked with me, came again and waked me; Zec. iv.

2. To arouse; to excite; to put in motion or action.

Prepare war, wake up the mighty men; Joel iii.

[The use of up is common, but not necessary.]

To wake the soul by tender strokes of art. Pope.

3. To bring to life again, as if from the sleep of death.

To second life
Wak'd in the renovation of the just. Milton.

To wake a corpse, is to watch it, to sit up with it all night. [See the noun.]

WAKE, n. The feast of the dedication of the parish church, formerly kept by watching all night. At present most fast days are popularly called wakes in the rural districts of England; but the peculiar wake of country parishes was originally the day of the week on which the church had been dedicated; afterwards the day of the year. Every rural parish had its wake every year, and most of them had two wakes, one on the day of dedication, and another on the birthday of the saint to whom the church was dedicated. The festival of the dedication has long since been entirely discontinued, while the saint's day festival still subsists in some of the rural districts of England, in the altered form of a country wake.—2. Vigils; state of forbearing sleep.

Their merry wakes and pastimes keep. Milton.

3. The watching of a dead body all night by the friends and neighbours of the deceased; a custom which prevails in Ireland, and was formerly prevalent in Scotland. It most probably originated in a superstitious notion, with respect to the danger of a dead body being carried off by some of the agents of the invisible world, or exposed to the ominous liberties of brute animals. Such wakes very early degenerated into scenes of festivity, extremely incongruous to the melancholy occasion.—4. Act of waking. [Old song.]—Wake of a ship, the track it leaves in the water, formed by the meeting of the water, which rushes from each side to fill the space which the ship makes in passing through it. This track may be seen to a considerable distance behind the ship's stern, as smoother than the rest of the sea. Hence it is usually observed by the compass, to discover the angle of lee-way. A ship is said to be in the wake of another, when she follows her on the same track, or a line supposed to be formed on the continuation of her keel. Two distant objects observed at sea are said to be in the wake of each other, when the view of the farthest is intercepted by the nearest, so that the observer's eye and the two objects are all in the same straight line.

WAKED, pp. Roused from sleep; put in action.

WAKEFUL, a. Not sleeping; indisposed to sleep.

Dissembling sleep, but wakeful with the fright. Dryden.

WAKEFULLY, adv. With watching or sleeplessness.

WAKEFULNESS, n. Indisposition to sleep.—2. Forbearance of sleep; want of sleep.

WAKEN, v. i. (wa'kn.) [This seems to be the Saxon infinitive retained.] To wake; to cease to sleep; to be awakened.

Early Tyrnus wak'ning with the light. Dryden.

WAKEN, v. t. (wa'kn.) To excite or rouse from sleep.

Go, waken Eve. Milton.

2. To excite to action or motion.

Then Homer's and Tyrtæus' martial muse
Waken'd the world. Roscommon.

3. To excite; to produce; to rouse into action.

They introduce
Their sacred song, and waken raptures high. Milton.

WAKENED, pp. Roused from sleep; excited into action.

WAKENER, n. One who rouses from sleep.

WAKENING, ppr. Rousing from sleep or stupidity; calling into action.

WAKENING OF A PROCESS. In Scots law, where, at any time, after calling a summons, no judicial proceeding takes place in an action for a year and day, the depending process is said merely to fall asleep, and may then be wakened or revived at any time within the period of the long prescription, either by written consent of parties through their counsel, or by an action of wakening. This action may be raised at the instance of either party, grounded upon the last step of procedure, and insisting against every defender of a number, in the conclusion proper to him.

WAKER, n. One who watches; one who rouses from sleep.

WAKE-ROBIN, n. A plant of the genus Arum, the A. maculatum. [See ARUM.]

WAKING, ppr. Being awake; not sleeping.—2. Rousing from sleep; exciting into motion or action.—Waking hours, the hours when one is awake.

WAKING,† n. The period of being awake.—2. Watch.

WALDEN'SES, n. A sect of Christians professing principles which are substantially the same as those of Protestants in general. They are most numerous in the valleys of Piedmont. They were for several centuries the subjects of a most cruel persecution instituted by the Church of Rome. According to the common opinion, the Waldenses owe their origin and name to Peter Waldo or Waldus, circa A. D. 1170; but some of their own writers derive the appellation from vallée [Fr.], vaud [Swiss], hence, also, vaudois, or dwellers in the valleys.

WALE, n. [This may be the W. gwialen, a rod or twig, from the same root.] 1. In cloth, a ridge or streak rising above the rest. We say, cloth is wove with a wale.—2. A streak or stripe; the mark of a rod or whip on animal flesh.—Wales of a ship, an assemblage of strong planks, extending along a ship's sides, throughout the whole length, at different heights, and serving to strengthen the decks and form the curves. They are distinguished into the main wale and the chain wale.

WALE, v. t. To mark with stripes or streaks.

WALE, v. t. [Suio-Goth. wælia, G. welen, to choose.] To choose; to select. [Scotch.]

WALE, n. The act of choosing; the choice; a person or thing that is excellent; the best. [Scotch.]

WALED, a. Marked with wales.

WALE-KNOT, WALL-KNOT, } n. In seamanship, a particular sort of large knot raised upon the end of a rope, by untwisting the strands, and interweaving them amongst each other. It is made so that it cannot slip, and serves for shuts, tacks, and stoppers.

WAL'HALLA, n. (väl'hällä.) [Ger.] In Scandinavian myth.,—see VALHALLA, which is thus spelt by English writers for the sake of the pronunciation.—2. A remarkable architectural monument, built on the north bank of the Danube, near Ratisbon, intended for a national pantheon, consecrated to all Germans who have established for themselves permanent historical celebrity as warriors, statesmen, philosophers, poets, or in science, or in art. It was commenced October 18, 1830, and finished October 18, 1842, and forms externally a magnificent Doric octastyle peripteral temple, with its principal front facing the river. In the interior it is decorated with the most sumptuous splendour, executed with great originality of design.

WALK, v. i. (wauk.) [Sax. wealcan, to roll or revolve; wealcere, a fuller, whence the name Walker; D. walken, to work a hat; G. walken, to full, to felt hats; walker, a fuller, Sw. valkare;

Dan. valher, to full or mill cloth; valker, a fuller; valke, a pad or stuffed roll; G. wallen, to stir, to be agitated, to rove, to travel, to wander. From the same root are Russ. valyu, G. wälzen, to roll, and wälsch, foreign, Celtic, Welsh, that is, wanderers. The primary sense is simply to move or press, but appropriately, to roll, to press by rolling, as in hatting, and this is the origin of walker, for the practice of felting hats must have preceded that of fulling cloth in mills. Our ancestors appropriated the verb to moving on the feet, and the word is peculiarly expressive of that rolling or wagging motion which marks the walk of clownish people. Qu. Heb. ילך, yalach.] 1. To move slowly on the feet; to step slowly along; to advance by alternate steps moderately repeated; as animals. As applied to a horse, to move with the slowest pace. Walking in men differs from running only in the rapidity and length of the steps; but in quadrupeds, the motion or order of the feet is sometimes changed.

At the end of twelve months, he walked in the palace of the kingdom of Babylon; Dan. iv.

When Peter had come down out of the ship, he walked on the water, to go to Jesus; Matth. xiv.

2. To move or go on the feet for exercise or amusement. Hundreds of students daily walk on Downing terrace, in Cambridge.—3. To appear, as a spectre.

WALL'-EYE, n. [wall and eye.] In horses, an eye in which the iris is of a very light gray or whitish colour.

WALL'-EYED, a. In horses, having an eye of a very light gray or whitish colour. In the North of England, persons are said to be wall-eyed, when the white of the eye is very large and distorted, or on one side. According to Richardson, wall, in this case, which is also found written whall, whally, is from Sax. hwelan, to wither, to pine away, in allusion to the faded colour or unnatural appearance of such eyes. Shakespeare uses wall eyed as a term of reproach; as, wall-eyed rage, a wall-eyed wretch, alluding probably to the idea of unnatural or distorted vision. Hence a wall-eye, in this case, may signify one which is utterly and incurably perverted; an eye that knows no pity.

WALL'-FLOWER, n [wall and flower.] The common name of the species of plants belonging to the genus Cheiranthus; nat. order, Cruciferæ. They are biennial or perennial herbs, or undershrubs. Many of them exhale a delicious odour, and are great favourites in gardens. The most abundant is the C. cheiri, or common wall-flower, which, in its wild state, grows on old walls, and stony places. In the cultivated plant the flowers are of various and brilliant colours, and attain a much larger size than in the wild plant. A number of distinct varieties have been recorded, and double and semi-double varieties are common in gardens.

Walnut-tree (Juglans regia).

best known species is the royal or common walnut-tree (J. regia), a native of Persia. It is a large handsome tree with strong spreading branches. In France and Germany the wood is much used by turners, cabinet-makers, joiners, coach-makers, and musical-instrument makers; but one of the most important uses of walnut timber is the making of gun-stocks, for which it is considered preferable to any other timber. In this country, however, the walnut-tree is more cultivated for its fruit than its timber. Walnuts are used for the table in almost every stage of their growth. The cotyledons of the seed of the walnut contain an oil, which is used in large quantities, especially on the Continent, by artists and also for lamps. Almost all parts of the plant possess a bitter principle, which acts as a tonic and anthelmintic. There are several distinct varieties of the walnut-tree. Two species are natives of North America, viz. J. nigra, or black walnut, and J. cinerea, or butternut.

> Some woods have the veins smooth as fir and walnut. Bacon.

WAL'RUS, n. [G. wall, as in wallfisch, a whale, and ross, a horse.] The morse, sea-horse or sea-cow, a marine carnivorous mammal, inhabiting the arctic seas, and belonging to the seal family, or Phocidæ. It is the Trichecus rosmarus, the only species of its genus. It surpasses the largest ox in size, attaining to the length of twenty feet. It is covered with short yellowish hair. It is sought for, on account of its oil and tusks, the ivory of which, though rough-grained, is employed in the arts. The skin is used for coach-braces.—[For a figure of walrus, see MORSE.]

WAL'TRON, n. Another name of the walrus.

WALTZ, n. [G. walzen, to roll.] The name of the national German dance, and also of the species of music with which it is accompanied. It is common, however, among other nations of the Continent, and has been introduced into this country. The waltz is a gay dance, in triple time, and is performed by two persons, who, almost embracing each other, whirl rapidly round on an axis of their own, while at the same time they move quickly in a circle, whose radius is from 10 to 12 feet, according to the dimensions of the room. The music is always written in $\frac{3}{4}$ or $\frac{3}{8}$ time.

WALTZ, v. i. To dance a waltz.

WALTZ'ER, n. A person who waltzes.

WA'PED,† } a. [Sax. wafian, to WAP'PENED,† } be amazed or astonished.] Dejected; crushed; amazed. The first of these words, used by Chaucer, has certainly the foregoing import; the second, occurring in Timon of Athens, is variously interpreted.

This makes the wappened widow wed again. Shak.

WAP'ENSHAW, } n. [Sax. waepen, and WAP'INSCHAW, } sceawian, to shew.] An exhibition of arms, according to the rank of the individual, made formerly at certain times in every district. These exhibitions or meetings were not designed for military exercises, but only for showing that the lieges were properly provided with arms. [Scotch.]

WAP'ENTAKE, } n. [Sax. wæpen-tac;
WAP'ENTAC, } but it is rather Gothic, as this division of a county was peculiar to the northern counties; wæpen, a weapon, and tac, tace, touch; Goth. tekan. See TOUCH.] Yorkshire is divided into wapentakes instead of hundreds. In some northern counties of England, a division or district, answering to the hundred or cantred in other counties. The name was first given to the meeting, supra.

WAP'ITI, n. This word is used in books

Wapiti (Cervus canadensis).

for the North American stag, Cervus Canadensis, which more nearly resembles the European red deer in colour, shape, and form, than it does any other of the cervine race, though it is much larger and of a stronger make. It is, in fact, the most gigantic of the deer genus, frequently growing to the height of our tallest oxen. Its flesh is not much prized, but its hide, when made into leather, after the Indian fashion, is said not to turn hard in drying, after being wet.

WAPP, n. In a ship, the rope with which the shrouds are set taught in wale-knots.

WAP'PATO, n. An esculent root of western America.

WAP'PE, } n. A species of cur, said

WAR, n. (waur.) [Sax. wær; Fr. guerre; D. warren, to quarrel, wrangle, entangle; Dan. virrer; G. verwirren, to perplex, embroil, disturb. The primary sense of the root is to strive, struggle, urge, drive, or to turn, to twist.] 1. A contest between nations or states, carried on by force, either for defence, or for revenging insults and redressing wrongs, for the extension of commerce or acquisition of territory, or for obtaining and establishing the superiority and dominion of one over the other. These objects are accomplished by the slaughter or capture of troops, and the capture and destruction of ships, towns, and property. Among rude nations, war is often waged and carried on for plunder. As war is the contest of nations or states, it always implies that such contest is authorized by the monarch or the sovereign power of the nation. When war is commenced by attacking a nation in peace, it is called an offensive war, and such attack is aggressive. When war is undertaken to repel invasion or the attacks of an enemy, it is called defensive, and a defensive war is considered as justifiable. When war arises between different portions or members of the same nation, or between the established government of a nation, and a portion of the people resisting it, it is called a civil war. Very few of the wars that have desolated nations and deluged the earth with blood, have been justifiable. Happy would it be for mankind, if the prevalence of Christian principles might ultimately extinguish the spirit of war, and if the ambition to be great might yield to the ambition of being good.

Preparation for war is sometimes the best security for peace. Anon.

2. In poetical lan., instruments of war

His compliment of stores, and total war. Prior.

3. Poetically, forces; army.

Man-of-war, in naval affairs, a ship of large size, armed and equipped for attack or defence.—Holy war, a crusade; a war undertaken to deliver the Holy Land, or Judea, from infidels. These holy wars were carried on by most unholy means.—Rights of war, certain immunities and privileges which belligerent parties, in accordance with the law of nations, allow to each other; such as sparing the lives of those subjects of a hostile state who are not in arms, or who have submitted, the exchanging of prisoners, &c.—Declaration of war, an official notification given by one nation or state to another, to the effect that the former is about to engage in war with the latter. In this country, as in most monarchical governments, the right of declaring war belongs to the sovereign; but formal declarations of war are in modern times out of use, and war is now usually announced by the publication of what is termed a manifesto, the last preliminary step, short of actual hostilities, being the permission of reprisals.—Council of war, an assembly of great officers, called by a general or commander, to deliberate with him on enterprizes and attempts to be made. The term is sometimes applied also to an assembly of officers sitting in judgment on delinquent soldiers, deserters, coward officers, &c.—Honours of war, distinctions granted to a vanquished enemy, as of marching out from a camp or intrenchments with all the insignia of military etiquette. Also, the compliments paid to great personages when they appear before an armed body of men; likewise, such as are paid to the remains of a deceased officer.—Secretary-at-war. [See SECRETARY.]

WAR, v. i. To make war; to invade or attack a nation or state with force of arms; to carry on hostilities; to or to be in a state of contest by a violence.

WAR'BLERS, n. The common name of a genus (Sylvia), or rather of a family (Sylviadæ), of small passerine birds, comprising most of the small woodland songsters of Europe and North America, and species of them are spread over the whole globe. Their bill is slender, straight, awl-shaped, higher than it is wide at the base, and furnished with short bristles, the lower mandible straight. They are generally small, sprightly, and endowed with an incessant activity, in accordance with the subtleness of their flying insect prey. They principally inhabit forests or thickets, and some affect watery situations or reed-marshes. Many are remarkable for the melody of their song, and the sprightliness of their airs, which, in the period of incubation, they almost incessantly pour forth. The nightingales, robin-redbreasts, wheatears, whinchats, stonechats, redstarts, accentors, Dartford warbler, &c., belong to this family.

WAR'BLES, } n. In farriery, small
WARB'LETS, } hard tumours on the backs of horses, occasioned by the heat of the saddle in travelling, or by the uneasiness of its situation; also, small tumours produced by the larvas of the gad fly, in the backs of horses, cattle, &c.

WARD, in composition, as in toward, homeward, is the Sax. weard, from the root of L. verto, &c. It corresponds to the L. versus.

WARD, v. t. (waurd.) [Sax. weardian; Sw. varda; Dan. værger; probably from Sax. warian, werian; Goth. waryan; D. weeren, to defend, guard, prevent; W. gwaru, to fend; allied to wary, aware; Fr. garder, for guarder. The primary sense is to repel, to keep off; hence to stop; hence to defend by repelling or other means.] 1. To guard; to keep in safety; to watch.

Whose gates he found fast shut, no living wight

To ward the same. Spencer.

[In this sense, ward is obsolete, as we have adopted the French of the same word, to guard. We now never apply ward to the thing to be defended, but always to the thing against which it is to be defended. We ward off a blow or dagger, and we guard a person or place.]—2. To defend; to protect.

Tell him it was a hand that warded him From thousand dangers.† Shak.

[See the remark, supra.]—3. To fend off; to repel; to turn aside any thing mischievous that approaches.

WARD'SHIP, n. Guardianship; care and protection of a ward.—2. Right of guardianship. Wardship, under the feudal system, was one of the incidents of tenure by knight service. When the tenant died, and his heir was under the age of 21, being a male, or 14, being a female, the lord was entitled to the wardship of the heir, and was called the guardian in chivalry. This wardship consisted in having the custody of the body and lands of such heir, without any account of the profits, till the age of 21 in males, and 14 (which was afterwards advanced to 16) in females, the male heir being then considered capable of performing knight service, and the female capable of marrying. This right of wardship was abolished under the commonwealth.—3. Pupilage; state of being under a guardian.

WARD'-STAFF, n. A constable's or watchman's staff.

WARE,† pret. of Wear. [It is now written Wore.]

WARP, n. (waurp.) [Sax. wearp; D. werp, a cast or throw. See the verb.] 1. In manufactures, the threads which are extended lengthwise in the loom, and crossed by the woof.—2. In a ship, a rope employed in drawing, towing, or removing a ship or boat; a towing line.—3. In agriculture, a slimy substance deposited on land by marine tides, by which a rich alluvial soil is formed. [See WARPING.]—4. In cows, a premature casting of the young. [See the verb. Local.]

WARP, v. i. [Sax. weorpan, wurpan, wyrpan, to throw, to return; G. werfen, to cast or throw, to whelp; D. werpen, to throw or fling, to whelp, kitten, or litter; Dan. værper, to lay eggs; varper, to tow; Sw. värpa, to lay eggs; Ir. and Gael. fiaram, to bend, twist, incline.] 1. To turn, twist, or be twisted out of a straight direction; as, a board warps in seasoning, or in the heat of the sun, by shrinking.

They clamp one piece of wood to the end of another, to keep it from casting or warping. Moxon.

2. To turn or incline from a straight, true, or proper course; to deviate.

There's our commission,
From which we would not have you warp. Shak.

Methinks
My favour here begins to warp. Shak.

3. To fly with a bending or waving motion; to turn and wave, like a flock of birds or insects. The following use of warp is inimitably beautiful.

As when the potent rod
Of Amram's son, in Egypt's evil day,
Wav'd round the coast, up called a pitchy cloud
Of locusts warping on the eastern wind. Milton.

4. In manufactures, to wind yarn off bobbins to form the warp of a web.—5. To slink, to cast the young prematurely; as, cows.

In an inclosure near a dog-kennel, eight heifers out of twenty warped. [Local.] Cyc.

WARP, v. t. To turn or twist out of shape, or out of a straight direction, by contraction. The heat of the sun warps boards and timber.—2. To turn aside from the true direction; to cause to bend or incline; to pervert.

This first avow'd, nor folly warp'd my mind. Dryden.

I have no private considerations to warp me in this controversy. Addison.

Zeal, to a degree of warmth able to warp the sacred rule of God's word. Locke.

3. In seamen's lan., to tow or move with a line or warp, attached to buoys, to anchors, or to other ships, &c., by which means a ship is drawn, usually in a bending course or with various turns.—4. In rural economy, to cast the young prematurely. [Local.]—5. In agriculture, to inundate, as land, with sea water; or to let in the tide, for the purpose of fertilizing the ground by a deposit of warp or slimy substance. Warp here is the throw, or that which is cast by the water. [Local in Lincolnshire and Yorkshire.]—6. In rope-making, to run the yarn off the winches into hauls to be tarred.—To warp water, in Shakspeare, is forced and unusual; indeed it is not English.

WARP'ED, pp. Twisted by shrinking or seasoning; turned out of the true direction; perverted; moved with a warp; enriched with warp or slime; as, warped land.

WARP'ER, n. One who warps, or prepares the warp of webs for weaving.

WARP'ING, n. Act of him who warps, or that which warps.—2. In agriculture, a mode of fertilizing lands by producing a deposition of mud on their surface. This may be practised on the borders of large rivers and estuaries, into which the tides flow, or where floods are frequent; provided, however, that in either case the waters contain alluvial matter in a state of suspension. Warping is practised by various proprietors and farmers on the Humber, the Trent, the Ouse, and other rivers. The waters of these rivers, from passing through a great extent of alluvial country, are, after heavy rains, muddy to an excess; and they are in that state conducted over the surface of the adjoining land, and there suffered to deposit their mud, which is technically called warp, to the depth of an inch or two, which adds greatly to the fertility of the soil. In order to accomplish the process of warping, banks of earth are raised along the course of the rivers, so high that floods or tides cannot pass over them. In these banks there are more or fewer openings, according to the extent of ground to be warped, and other circumstances; but in general, they have only two sluices; the one, called the floodgate, to admit, and the other, called the clough, to let off the water gently. The floodgate is opened at high water, and the water flows in by one or more channels, made for the purpose of conveying it over the land, and covers it to the depth of high water. The floodgate is then shut, and at low water, the clough is opened, and the water runs out slowly, leaving the sediment behind it.—3. In arch. [See CASTING.]

WARP'ING, ppr. Turning or twisting; causing to incline; perverting; moving with a warp; enriching by overflowing with tide water.

WARP'ING-BANK, n. A bank or mound of earth raised round a field for retaining the water let in from the sea or a river.

WARP'ING-HOOK, n. A hook used by ropemakers for hanging the yarn on, when warping into hauls for tarring.

WARP'ING-MILL, n. A kind of open work cylindriform machine, of light make and easy to turn, used for warping.

WARP'ING-POST, n. A strong post used in warping rope yarn.

WAR'PLUME, n. A plume worn in war.

WAR'PROOF, n. [war and proof.] Valour tried by war.

WAR'RANDICE, n. [Eng. warrantise; warranty.] In Scots law, the obligation by which a party conveying a subject or right is bound to indemnify the grantee, disponee, or receiver of the right, in case of eviction, or of real claims or burdens being made effectual against the subject, arising out of obligations or transactions antecedent to the date of the conveyance. Warrandice is either personal or real. Personal warrandice is that by which the granter and his heirs are bound personally. It is general or special. General warrandice is interpreted by the rules of implied warrandice. Special warrandice is either, 1st, Simple, viz., that the granter shall do nothing inconsistent with the grant, which is that implied in donations; 2d, From fact and deed, that is, that the granter neither has done, nor shall do, any contrary deed, which is that implied in transactions; or, 3d, Absolute, against all deadly, whereby the granter is liable for every defect in the right which he has granted. Real warrandice is that by which certain lands, called warrandice lands, are made over eventually in security of the lands conveyed. In excambion, real warrandice is implied. [See under IMPLIED.]

WAR'RANT, v. t. [Gaelic, barantas, a warrant or pledge; baranta, a warrantee or surety; W. gwarantu, to warrant or guarantee; gwarant, warrant, attestation, authority, security; said to be from gwar, smooth, placid, secure; Norm. garranty, warranty, warranted, proved; garren, [guarren,] a warren; [Fr. garantir, [guarantir,] to warrant; garenne, a warren; It. guarentire. This is from the root of guard, warren, and wary. The primary sense of the root is to stop or hold, or to repel, and thus guard by resisting danger; as we say, to keep off. Hence the sense of security. The Welsh sense of smooth, placid, is derivative, either from security, or from repressing. [See GUARD and GARRISON.] 1. To authorize; to give authority or power to do or forbear any thing, by which the person authorized is secured or saved harmless from any loss or damage by the act. A commission warrants an officer to seize an enemy. We are not warranted to resist legitimate government, except in extreme cases.—2. To maintain; to support by authority or proof.

> Reason warrants it, and we may safely receive it as true. Anon.

3. To justify.

> True fortitude is seen in great exploits,
> That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides. Addison.

4. To secure; to exempt; to privilege.

> I'll warrant him from drowning. Shak.
> In a place
> Less warranted than this, or less secure,
> I cannot be. Milton.

5. To declare with assurance.

> My neck is as smooth as silk, I warrant ye. L'Estrange.

6. In law, to secure to a grantee an estate granted; to assure.—7. To secure to a purchaser of goods the title to the same; or to indemnify him against loss.—8. To secure to a purchaser the good quality of the goods sold. [See WARRANTY.]—9. To assure that a thing is what it appears to be, which implies a covenant to make good any defect or loss incurred by it.

WAR'RANT, n. An act, instrument, or obligation, by which one person authorizes another to do something which he has not otherwise a right to do; an act or instrument investing one with a right or authority, and thus securing him from loss or damage; a word of general application.—2. A precept under hand and seal directed to a proper officer, authorizing him to seize an offender and bring him to justice. A warrant may be issued by a justice of the peace, a sheriff, a magistrate, or judge. A general warrant to seize suspected persons is illegal.—3. Authority; power that authorizes or justifies any act. Those who preach the gospel have the warrant of Scripture. We have the warrant of natural right to do what the laws do not forbid; but civility and propriety may sometimes render things improper, which natural right warrants.—4. A commission that gives authority, or that justifies.—5. A voucher; that which attests or proves.—6. Right; legality.

> There's warrant in that theft
> Which steals itself when there's no mercy left.† Shak.

7. A writing which authorizes a person to receive money or other thing. Warrant of attorney, that by which a man appoints another to act in his name, or to do an act for him, on his behalf, or as his agent or deputy. The term, however, is most commonly applied to cases where a party executes an instrument called a warrant of attorney, authorizing another to confess judgment against him in an action for a certain amount named in the warrant. It is generally given as a security by one who is, or is about to become, the debtor of another, and enables the creditor to obtain a judgment against his debtor at once, and all the advantages of a judgment creditor, without the risk, delay, and expense of an action.—Search warrant, a precept authorizing a person to enter houses, shops, &c., to search for a criminal, or for stolen or smuggled goods. Warrant officer, an officer holding a warrant from the navy board, such as the gunner, boatswain, and carpenter of a ship. Press warrant, a warrant issued by the admiralty on cases of emergency, authorizing the captain or lieutenant of the impress service at any sea port, to impress such seamen belonging to the merchant service as may be found skulking about or unemployed.

WAR'RANTABLE, a. Authorized by commission, precept, or right; justifiable; defensible. The seizure of a thief is always warrantable by law and justice. Falsehood is never warrantable.

> His meals are coarse and short his employment warrantable. South.

WAR'RANTABLENESS, n. The quality of being justifiable.

WAR'RANTABLY, adv. In a manner that may be justified; justifiably.

WAR'RANTED, pp. Authorized; justified; secured; assured by covenant or by implied obligation.

WARRANTEE', n. The person to whom land or other thing is warranted.

WAR'RANTER, n. One who gives authority or legally empowers.—2. One who assures, or covenants to assure; one who contracts to secure another in a right, or to make good any defect of title or quality; as, the warranter of a horse.

WAR'RANTING, ppr. Authorizing; empowering.—2. Assuring; securing to another a right, or covenanting to make good a defect of title in lands, or of quality in goods.

WAR'RANTISE,† n. Authority; security; warranty.

WAR'RANTOR, n. One who warrants.

WAR'RANTY, n. In law, a promise or covenant by deed, made by the bargainer for himself and his heirs, to warrant or secure the bargainee and his heirs against all men in the enjoyment of an estate or other thing granted. Such warranty passes from the seller to the buyer, from the feoffor to the feoffee, and from the releaser to the releasee. Warranty is real, when annexed to lands and tenements granted in fee or for life, &c., and is in deed or in law; and personal, when it respects goods sold or their quality. The use of warranties in conveyances has long been superseded in practice by covenants for title, whereby, as the covenanter engages for his executors and administrators, his personal as well as his real assets are answerable for the performance of the covenant. In common recoveries, a fictitious person is called to warranty. In the sale of goods or personal property, the seller warrants the title; for warranty is express or implied. If a man sells goods which are not his own, or which he has no right to sell, the purchaser may have satisfaction for the injury. And if the seller expressly warrants the goods to be sound and not defective, and they prove to be otherwise, he must indemnify the purchaser; for the law implies a contract in the warranty, to make good any defect. But the warranty must be at the time of sale, and not afterward. In Scots law, warranties in insurance are absolute conditions, non-compliance with which voids the insurance. They are either express or implied.—2. Authority; justificatory mandate or precept.

> If they disobey any precept, that is no excuse to us, nor gives us any warranty to disobey likewise. Kettlewell.

[In this sense, warrant is now used.]—3. Security.

> The stamp was a warranty of the public. Locke.

WAR'RANTY, v. t. To warrant; to guarantee.

WARRAY,† v. t. [Fr. guerroyer, from guerre.] To make war upon.

WARRE,† a. [Sax. wærra, for wærsa.] Worse.

WAR'REN, n. [from the root of wear, an inclosed place; Fr. garenne; D. waarande; Goth. waryan, Sax. warian, to defend. See GUARD, WARRANT, and WARY.] 1. A piece of ground appropriated to the breeding and preservation of rabbits.—2. In law, a franchise or place privileged by prescription or grant from the king, for keeping beasts and fowls of warren, which are hares, rabbits, partridges, and pheasants, though some add quails, woodcocks, and water-fowl. The warren is the next franchise in degree to the park; and a forest, which is the highest in dignity, comprehends a chase, a park, and a free warren.—3. A place for keeping fish in a river.

WAR'RENER, n. The keeper of a warren.

WAR'RIANGLE, n. A hawk.

WAR'RIOR, n. [from war; Fr. guerrier; Sp. guerrero, guerreador.] 1. In a general sense, a soldier; a man engaged in military life.—2. Emphatically, a brave man; a good soldier.

WAR'-WASTED, a. Wasted by war; devastated.

WAR'WHOOP, n. The Indian yell in war; the shout which the Indians raise when they enter into battle. [See WHOOP.]

WAR'-WORN, a. [war and worn.] Worn with military service; as, a war-worn coat; a war-worn soldier.

WA'RY, a. [Sax. wær; Ice. var. See WARE and WARN.] Cautious of danger; carefully watching and guarding against deception, artifices, and dangers; scrupulous; timorously prudent. Old men are usually more wary than the young. It is incumbent on a general in war to be always wary.

WAS, (s as z) the past tense of the substantive verb; Sax. wesan; Goth. wesan; L. esse, for vesse, to be, to exist, whence Eng. is, in the present tense, and was, in the past; as, I was; he was.

WASE, n. A wisp or rude cushion put on the head by porters, &c., to soften the pressure of a load. [Local.]

WASH, v. t. [Sax. wæscan; G. waschen; D. wasschen.] 1. To cleanse by ablution, or by rubbing in water; as, to wash the hands or the body; to wash garments.—2. To wet; to fall on and moisten; as, the rain washes the flowers or plants.—3. To overflow. The tides wash the meadows.—4. To overflow or dash against; to cover with water; as, the waves wash the strand or shore; the sea washes the rocks on the shore or beach.—5. To scrub in water; as, to wash a deck or a floor.—6. To separate extraneous matter from; as, to wash ore; to wash grain.—7. In water-colour painting, to spread or float colours thinly over broad masses or spaces of a picture. Thus work is washed with a pale red to imitate brick and tile, &c.—8. To rub over with some liquid substance; as, to wash trees for removing insects or diseases.—9. To squeeze and cleanse in water; as, to wash wool. So sheep are said to be washed, when they are immersed in water and their wool squeezed, by which means it is cleansed.—10. To cleanse by a current of water; as, showers wash the streets.—11. To overlay with a thin coat of metal; as, steel washed with silver.—12. To purify from the pollution of sin.

> But ye are washed, but ye are sanctified; 1 Cor. vi.

WASH, v. i. To perform the act of ablution.

> Wash in Jordan seven times; 2 Kings v.

[Elliptical.]—2. To perform the business of cleansing clothes in water.

> She can wash and scour. Shak.

To wash off, in calico-printing, to soak and rinse printed calicoes, to dissolve and remove the gum and paste.

WASH, n. Alluvial matter; substances collected and deposited by water; as, the wash of a river.—2. A bog; a marsh; a fen.

> Neptune's salt wash. Shak.

3. A cosmetic; as, a wash for the face to help the complexion.—4. A lotion; a medical liquid preparation for external application.—5. A superficial stain or colour.—6. Waste liquor of a kitchen for hogs.—7. The act of washing the clothes of a family; or the whole quantity washed at once. There is a great wash, or a small wash.—8. With distillers, the fermentable liquor made by dissolving the proper subject for fermentation and distillation in common water. In the distillery of malt, the wash is made by mixing the water hot, with the malt ground into meal.—9. The shallow part of a river, or arm of the sea; as, the washes in Lincolnshire.—10. The blade of an oar; the thin part which enters the water, and by whose impulse the boat is moved.—11. A colour spread or floated thinly over broad masses or spaces of a picture to make it appear the more natural. [See the Verb, No. 7.]—12. A substance laid on boards or other work for beauty or preservation.—13. A thin coat of metal.—14. In the West Indies, a mixture of dunder, molasses, water, and scummings, for distillation.

WASH'-BALL, n. [wash and ball.] A ball of soap, to be used in washing the hands or face.

WASH'-BOARD, n. [wash and board.] A broad thin plank, fixed occasionally on the top of a boat or other small vessel's side, to prevent the sea from breaking over; also, a piece of plank on the sill of a lower deck port, for the same purpose.—2. A board that goes round the bottom of the walls of a room, more correctly called surbase.

WASH'ED, pp. Cleansed in water; purified.—2. Overflowed; dashed against with water.—3. Covered over with a thin coat, as of metal.

WASH'ER, n. One who washes.—2. An iron ring between the nave of a wheel and the linch-pin.—3. A piece of iron, leather, &c., in the form of a flattened ring, interposed between the surface of wood, &c.; and the head or nut of a bolt, to protect the surfaces from being damaged during the process of screwing up. Washers of leather or pasteboard are also used to render screw and other junctions air-tight or water-tight.

WASH'ER-MAN, n. A man who washes clothes, &c. Washermen are common in France.

WASH'ER-WOMAN, n. A woman that washes clothes for others, or for hire.

WASH-HOUSE, n. An apartment, usually in an out-building, for washing linen, &c.

WASH'ING, ppr. Cleansing with water; purifying; overflowing; overspreading.

WASH'ING, n. The act of cleansing with water; ablution; Heb. ix.—2. A wash; or the clothes washed. Washing of ores, the operation of separating, by means of water, the metallic portion of ores from the earthy matters with which they are intermixed. The metallic portion of an ore has a much greater specific gravity than the earthy matters. Hence, if the ore of any metal be pounded, and then subjected to a current of water of sufficient velocity, the lighter earthy substances will be carried away by the water, while the metallic portion remains.

WASHING-DAY, n. The day when family linen is washed; as, Tuesday is our washing-day. [Familiar.]

WASH'ING-MACHINE, n. A machine for cleansing linen, cloth, and various fabrics. Various machines of this kind have been contrived.

WASH'-LEA'THER, n. Leather that will bear washing, as chamois skin, or shammy, &c.

WASH'-POT, n. A vessel in which any thing is washed.

WASH'-TUB, n. A tub in which clothes are washed.

WASH'Y, a. [from wash.] Watery; damp; soft; as, the washy ooze.—2. Weak; not solid.

WASP, n. [Sax. wæsp or wæps; D. wesp; G. wespe; L. vespa; Fr. guèpe.] The English name applied to insects of the genus Vespa; order Hymenoptera. They are characterized by their geniculate antennæ, composed, in the males, of thirteen joints; the mandibles strong and dentated, and the clypeus large. The females and neuters are armed with an extremely powerful and venomous sting. Wasps live in societies, composed of females, males, Wasp (Wasps nest from New Guinea).

and neuters. Their nests are of varied sizes, according to the number of the society by which they are inhabited. They are either constructed underground in holes in banks, or are attached to the branches of trees, or the wood-work of out-houses. The cells are of a hexagonal form, arranged in tiers with the mouth downwards, or opening sideways, in which the larvæ and pupæ are contained. Wasps are very voracious, preying upon other insects, sugar, meat, fruit, honey, &c. Several species are indigenous in Britain. The hornet, Vespa crabro, is the largest. It builds its nest in trees, and passes the winter in deep holes, which it excavates in decayed trees. The most common indigenous species is the Vespa vulgaris, which is a ground wasp, as is also the Vespa rufa. V. britannica, or anglica, is a tree species, and V. borealis, lives in fir woods, in Yorkshire and in the north of Scotland.

WASP'-BITE, n. The bite of a wasp.

WASP'-FLY, n. A species of fly resembling a wasp, but having no sting, and but two wings.

WASP'ISH, a. Snappish; petulant; irritable; irascible; quick to resent any trifling affront.

Much do I suffer, much, to keep in peace,
This jealous, waspish, wrong head, rhyming race. Pope.

2. Having a very slender waist, like a wasp.

WASP'ISH-HEAD'ED,† a. Irritable; passionate.

WASP'ISHLY, adv. Petulantly; in a snappish manner.

WASP'ISHNESS, n. Petulance; irascibility; snappishness.

WAS'SAIL, n. [Sax. wæs-hæl, health-liquor.] 1. A liquor made of apples, sugar, and ale, formerly much used by English good-fellows.—2. A drunken bout; any festival, carousal, or merry-making.—3. A merry song. The term wassail was anciently the pledge-word in drinking, equivalent to the modern your health.

WAS'SAIL, v. i. To hold a merry, drinking meeting; to attend at wassails; to tope.

WAS'SAIL, a. Convivial; festive.

WAS'SAIL-BOWL, n. A large drinking vessel, in which the Saxons, at their public entertainments, drank health to each other. It was also a Saxon custom to go about with such a bowl, containing the liquor called wassail, at the time of the Epiphany, singing a festival song, and drinking the health of the inhabitants, and collecting money to replenish the bowl. In some parts of England, the wassail-bowl still appears at Christmas.

WAS'SAIL-CUP, n. A cup in which wassail was carried to the company.

WAS'SAILER, n. A toper; a drunkard; a feaster; a reveller.

WAST, past tense of the substantive verb, in the second person; as, thou wast.

WASTE, v. t. [Sax. westan, awestan; G. verwüsten; Lat. vasto; Sp. and Port. gastar, for guastar; Fr. gâter; Arm. goasta. The W. gwasgaru, to scatter, seems to be compound. The primary sense is probably to scatter, to spread.] 1. To diminish by gradual dissipation or loss. Thus disease wastes the patient; sorrows waste the strength and spirits.—2. To cause to be lost; to destroy by scattering or by injury. Thus cattle waste their fodder when fed in the open field.—3. To expend without necessity or use; to destroy wantonly or luxuriously; to squander; to cause to be lost through wantonness or negligence. Careless people waste their fuel, their food, or their property. Children waste their inheritance.

And wasted his substance with riotous living; Luke xv.

4. To destroy in enmity; to desolate; as, to waste an enemy's country.—5. To suffer to be lost unnecessarily; or to throw away; as, to waste the blood and treasure of a nation.—6. To destroy by violence.

The Tyber
Insults our walls, and wastes our fruitful grounds. Dryden.

7. To impair strength gradually.

Now wasting years my former strength confounds. Broome.

8. To lose in idleness or misery; to wear out.

Here condemn'd
To waste eternal days in woe and pain. Milton.

9. To spend; to consume.

O were I able
To waste it all myself, and leave you none. Milton.

10. In law, to impair, damage, or injure, as an estate, voluntarily, or by suffering the buildings, fences, &c., to go to decay. [See the Noun.]—11. To exhaust; to be consumed by time or mortality.

Till your carcasses be wasted in the wilderness; Numb. xiv.

12. To scatter and lose for want of use or of occupiers.

Full many a flow'r is born to blush unseen,
And waste its sweetness on the desert air. Gray.

WASTE, v. i. To dwindle; to be diminished; to lose bulk or substance gradually; as, the body wastes in sickness.

The barrel of meal shall not waste; 1 Kings xvii.

2. To be diminished or lost by slow dissipation, consumption, or evaporation; as, water wastes by evaporation; fuel wastes in combustion.—3. To be consumed by time or mortality.

But man dieth, and wasteth away; Job xiv.

WASTE, a. Destroyed; ruined.

The Sophi leaves all waste in his retreat. Milton.

2. Desolate; uncultivated; as, a waste country; a waste howling wilderness; Deut. xxxii.—3. Destitute; stripped; as, lands laid waste.—4. Superfluous; lost for want of occupiers.

And strangled with her waste fertility Milton.

5. Worthless; that which is rejected, or used only for mean purposes; as, waste wood.—6. That of which no account is taken, or of which no value is found; as, waste paper.—7. Uncultivated; untilled; unproductive.

There is yet much waste land in England. Cyc

Laid waste, desolated; ruined.

WASTE, n. The act of squandering; the dissipation of property through wantonness, ambition, extravagance, luxury, or negligence.

For all this waste of wealth, and loss of blood. Milton.

2. Consumption; loss; useless expense; any loss or destruction which is neither necessary nor promotive of a good end; a loss for which there is no equivalent; as, a waste of goods or money; a waste of time; a waste of labour; a waste of words.

Little wastes in great establishments, constantly occurring, may defeat the energies of a mighty capital. L. Beecher.

3. A desolate or uncultivated country. The plains of Arabia are mostly a wide waste.—4. Land untilled, though capable of tillage; as, the wastes in England.—5. Ground, space, or place unoccupied; as, the ethereal waste.

In the dead waste and middle of the night. Shak.

6. Region ruined and deserted.

All the leafy nation sinks at last,
And Vulcan rides in triumph o'er the waste. Dryden.

7. Mischief; destruction.

He will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again. Shak.

8. In law, spoil, destruction, or injury done to houses, woods, fences, lands, &c., by a tenant for life or for years, to the prejudice of the heir, or of him in reversion or remainder. Waste is voluntary, as by felling timber trees, pulling down houses, opening mines or pits, changing the course of husbandry, the destruction of heir-looms; or permissive, as the suffering of damage to accrue, for want of doing the necessary acts to keep buildings and lands in order. Whatever does a lasting damage to the freehold, is a waste. Tenants in tail are privileged to commit every kind of waste during their life time.

WASTE-BOOK, n. A book containing a regular account of a merchant's transactions, set down in the order of time in which they take place, previous to their being carried to the journal. [See BOOK-KEEPING.]

WASTED, pp. Expended without necessity or use; lost through negligence; squandered.—2. Diminished; dissipated; evaporated; exhausted.—3. Desolated; ruined; destroyed.

WASTEFUL, a. Lavish; prodigal; expending property, or that which is valuable, without necessity or use; applied to persons.—2. Destructive to property; ruinous; as, wasteful practices or negligence; wasteful expenses.—3. Desolate; unoccupied; untilled; uncultivated.

In wilderness and wasteful deserts stray'd. Spenser.

WASTEFULLY, adv. In a lavish manner; with prodigality; in useless expenses or consumption.

Her lavish hand is wastefully profuse. Dryden.

WASTEFULNESS, n. Lavishness; prodigality; the act or practice of expending what is valuable, without necessity or use.

WASTE-GATE, n. A gate to let the water of a pond pass off when it is not wanted.

WAS'TEL,† n. A particular sort of bread; fine bread or cake.

WASTE LAND, n. Any tract of land not in a state of cultivation, and producing little or no useful herbage or wood; a common.

WASTENESS, n. A desolate state; solitude.

That day is a day of wrath, a day of trouble and distress, a day of wasteness; Zeph. i.

WASTE PIPE, n. A pipe for conveying away waste water, &c. [This name is sometimes applied to what is properly speaking an overflow pipe.]

WASTER, n. One who is prodigal; one who squanders property; one who consumes extravagantly or without use.

He also that is slothful in his work, is brother to him who is a great waster; Prov. xviii.

Sconces are great wasters of candles. Swift.

2.† A kind of cudgel.—3. An excrescence in the snuff of a candle which causes it to waste, otherwise called a thief.

WASTETHRIFT, n. [waste and thrift.] A spendthrift.

WASTE-WEIR, n. In canals, dams, and reservoirs, a cut made through the side for carrying off surplus water.

WASTING, ppr. Lavishing prodigally; expending or consuming without use; diminishing by slow dissipation; desolating; laying waste.

Wasting and relentless war has made ravages, with but few and short intermissions, from the days of the tyrant Nimrod down to the Nimrod of our own age. J. Lyman.

2. a. Diminishing by dissipation or by great destruction; as, a wasting disease.

WASTREL, n. A state of waste or common. [Local.]

WASTREL, } n. Waste substances;
WASTOREL, } any thing cast away as bad. [Local.]

WAT, n. A Siamese term for a sacred place, within which are pagodas, monasteries, idols, tanks, &c.

WATCH, n. [Sax. wæcca, from wæcan, wæccan, to wake; Sw. vacht or vakt, watch, guard; vachta, to watch; Dan. vagt. It is from the same root as wake,—which see.] 1. Forbearance of sleep.—2. Attendance without sleep.

All the long night their mournful watch they keep. Addison.

3. Attention; close observation. Keep watch of the suspected man.—4. Guard; vigilance for keeping or protecting against danger.

He kept both watch and ward. Spenser.

5. A watchman or watchmen; men set for a guard, either one person or more, set to espy the approach of an enemy or other danger, and to give an alarm or notice of such danger; a sentinel; a guard. He kept a watch at the gate.

Ye have a watch; go your way, make it as sure as ye can; Matt. xxvii.

6. The place where a guard is kept.

He upbraids Iago that he made him
Brave me upon the watch. Shak.

7. Post or office of a watchman.

As I did stand my watch upon the hill. Shak.

8. A period of the night, in which one person or one set of persons stand as sentinels; or the time from one relief of sentinels to another. This period, among the Israelites, seems to have been originally four hours, but was afterward three hours, and there were four watches during the night. Hence we read in scripture of the morning watch, and of the second, third, and fourth watch; the evening watch commencing at six o'clock, the second at nine, the third at twelve, and the fourth at three in the morning; Exod. xiv.; Matt. xiv.; Luke xii. —9. A well known portable machine, generally of a small size, and round flat shape, for measuring time. The moving power in a watch is a spiral spring, and the regulating power the balance wheel, having also a small spiral spring connected with it, which performs the same office as gravity in the case of the pendulum. The most accurately constructed watches are called chronometers, and are used at sea for determining differences of longitude.—Repeating watch, or repeater, a watch which is supplied with mechanism, by putting which in action, the wearer is enabled, at any time, as during the night, to ascertain the time within certain limits. This is usually effected by compressing a spring which causes a hammer or hammers to strike on a bell or other substance, the hours, quarters, &c.—10. Among seamen, a certain number of the ship's crew who are on duty at a time. The crew of every vessel, while at sea, is usually divided into two watches; one called the starboard watch, which in the merchant service is the captain's watch; the other the larboard watch (or as it is now termed in the royal navy, the port watch).—11. The period of time occupied by each part of a ship's crew alternately, while on duty. The period of time called a watch is four hours, the reckoning beginning at noon or midnight. Between 4 and 8 p.m., the time is divided into two short or dog-watches, in order to prevent the constant recurrence of the same portion of the crew keeping the watch during the same hours. Thus, the period from 12 to 4 p.m. is called the afternoon watch, from 4 to 6 the first dog-watch, from 6 to 8 the second dog-watch, from 8 to 12 the first night watch, from 12 to 4 a.m. the middle watch, from 4 to 8 the morning watch, and from 8 to 12 noon the forenoon watch. When this alternation of watches is kept up during the 24 hours, it is termed having watch and watch, in distinction from keeping all hands at work during one or more watches.—Anchor watch, a small watch composed of one or two men appointed to look after the ship while at anchor or in port.—To set the watch, to appoint the division of the crew to enter upon the duty of the watch.—To relieve the watch, to relieve those who have been upon duty by changing the watch.—Watch and ward, the ancient custom of watching by night, and warding or keeping the peace by day, in towns and cities; a duty imposed upon every inhabitant in turn.

WATCH, v. i. [Sax. wacian, wæcan; Dan. vækker; G. wachen; Russ. vetchayu.] 1. To be awake; to be or continue without sleep.

I have two nights watch'd with you. Shak.

2. To be attentive; to look with attention or steadiness. Watch and see when the man passes.—3. To look with expectation.

My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning; Ps. cxxx.

4. To keep guard; to act as sentinel; to look for danger.

He gave signal to the minister that watch'd. Milton.

5. To be attentive; to be vigilant in preparation for an event or trial, the time of whose arrival is uncertain.

Watch therefore; for ye know not what hour your Lord doth come; Matt. xxiv.

6. To be insidiously attentive; as, to watch for an opportunity to injure another.—7. To attend on the sick during the night; as, to watch with a man in a fever.—To watch over, to be cautiously observant of; to inspect, superintend, and guard from error and danger. It is our duty constantly to watch over our own conduct and that of our children.

WATCH, v. t. To guard; to have in keeping.

Flaming ministers watch and tend their charge. Milton.

2. To observe in ambush; to lie in wait for.

Saul also sent messengers to David's house to watch him and to slay him; 1 Sam. xix.

3. To tend; to guard.

Paris watch'd the flocks in the groves of Ida. Broome.

4. To observe in order to detect or prevent, or for some particular purpose; as, to watch a suspected person; to watch the progress of a bill in the legislature.

WATCH AND WARD. See WATCH.

WATCH BELL, n. In ships of war, a large bell which is struck when the half-hour glass is run out, to make known the time or division of the watch.

WATCH BILL, n. A list of the officers and crew of a ship, who are appointed to the watch, together with the several stations to which each man belongs.

WATCH′ CASE, n. A case for a watch.

WATCH′ DOG, n. A dog kept to watch.

WATCH′ED, pp. Guarded; observed with steady vigilance.

WATCH′ER, n. One who sits up or continues awake; particularly, one who attends upon the sick during the night. —2.† A diligent observer; as, an attentive watcher of the works of nature.

WATCH′ET, a. [Sax. wæced, weak.] Pale or light blue.

Who stares in Germany at watchet eyes?† Dryden.

WATCH′ FIRE, n. A fire lighted on an eminence at night, as a signal, to notify the approach of an enemy.

WATCH′FUL, a. Vigilant; attentive; careful to observe; observant; cautious. It has of before the thing to be regulated; as, to be watchful of one's behaviour; and against, before the thing to be avoided; as, to be watchful against the growth of vicious habits.

WATCH′FULLY, adv. Vigilantly; heedfully; with careful observation of the approach of evil, or attention to duty.

WATCH′FULNESS, n. Vigilance; heedfulness; heed; suspicious attention; careful and diligent observation for the purpose of preventing or escaping danger, or of avoiding mistakes or misconduct.—2. Wakefulness; indisposition or inability to sleep.

Watchfulness...often precedes too great sleepiness. Arbuthnot.

WATCH′-GLASS, n. [watch and glass.] In ships, an hour or half-hour glass, used to measure the time of a watch on deck.—3. A concavo-convex glass for covering the face or dial of a watch.

WATCH′-GUN, n. The gun which is fired on board ships of war, at the setting of the watch in the evening, and relieving it in the morning.

WATCH′-HOUSE, n. [watch and house.] A house in which a watch or guard is placed.—2. In cities and towns, a house where the night watchmen assemble previous to the hour at which they enter upon their respective beats, and where disturbers of the peace, seized by them during the night, are lodged and kept in custody till morning, when they are brought before a magistrate.

WATCH'ING, ppr. Being awake; guarding; attending the sick; carefully observing.

WATCH'ING, n. Wakefulness; inability to sleep.

WATCH'-LIGHT, n. [watch and light.] A candle with a rush wick.

WATCH'MAKER, n. [watch and maker.] One whose occupation is to make and repair watches. Properly speaking, however, a watchmaker, in the ordinary sense of the term, is an artificer who arranges and puts together the wheels and different parts of a watch, after they are cast, and prepared by other artizans, and who cleans and repairs watches.

WATCH'MAN, n. [watch and man.] A sentinel; a guard.—2. One who guards the streets of a city or town, or a large building by night.—A watchman's rattle is an instrument having at the end of a handle a revolving arm, which by the action of a strong spring upon cogs, produces, when in motion, a loud, harsh, rattling sound.—To spring a rattle, is to put this instrument in motion, in order to call in the aid of other watchmen when such aid is necessary.

WATCH'TOWER, n. [watch and tower.] A tower on which a sentinel is placed to watch for enemies or the approach of danger.

WATCH'WÖRD, n. [watch and word.] The word given to sentinels, and to such as have occasion to visit the guards, used as a signal by which a friend is known from an enemy, or a person who has a right to pass the watch, from one who has not.

WATER, n. (wau'ter.) [Sax. wæter, wæs; D. water; G. wasser; Goth wato; Russ. voda. This may be from the root of wet, Gr. ὑετός, Sans. udum. In Ar. wadi signifies a stream, or the channel where water flows in winter, but which is dry in summer; a thing common on the plains of Syria and Arabia.] 1. A fluid, the most abundant and most necessary for living beings of any in nature, except air. Water, when pure, is transparent, colourless, inodorous, tasteless; a powerful refractor of light, an imperfect conductor of heat and electricity; it is very slightly compressible, its absolute diminution for a pressure of one atmosphere being only about 51·3 millionths of its bulk. It assumes the solid form, that of ice or snow, at 32°, and all lower temperatures; and it takes the form of gas or vapour, that of steam, at 212°, and retains that form at all higher temperatures. It possesses the liquid form only at temperatures lying between 32° and 212°. The specific gravity of water is 1, being the unit to which the specific gravities of all solids and liquids are referred, as a convenient standard, on account of the facility with which it is obtained in a pure state; one cubic inch of water at 62°, and 30 inches, barometrical pressure, weighs 252·458 grains. It is 815 times heavier than atmospheric air. Water is at its greatest density at 40°, and in this respect it presents a singular exception to the general law of expansion by heat. If water at 40° be cooled, it expands as it cools till reduced to 32°, when it solidifies; and if water at 40° be heated, it expands as the temperature increases in accordance with the general law. This expansion of water by cold below 40° produces very important effects in the economy of nature; for if its density increased as it approached the freezing point, large masses of water would become masses of solid ice. In a chemical point of view, water exhibits in itself neither acid nor basic properties; but it combines with both acids and bases forming hydrates; it also combines with neutral salts. Water also enters, as a liquid, into a peculiar kind of combination with the greater number of all known substances. Of all liquids, water is the most powerful and general solvent, and on this important property its use depends. Without water, not only the operations of the chemist, but the processes of animal and vegetable life would come to a stand. In consequence of the great solvent power of water, it is never found pure in nature. Even in rain-water, which is the purest, there are always traces of carbonic acid, ammonia, and sea-salt. Where the rain-water has filtered through rocks and soils, and reappears, as spring or river-water, it is always more or less charged with salts derived from the earth, such as sea-salt, gypsum and chalk. When the proportion of these is small the water is called soft, when larger it is called hard water. The former dissolves soap better, and is therefore preferred for washing; the latter is often pleasanter to drink. The only way to obtain perfectly pure water is to distil it. Distilled water is preserved in clean well stopped bottles, and used in chemical operations. Water is reposited in the earth in inexhaustible quantities, where it is preserved fresh and cool, and from which it issues in springs, which form streams and rivers. But the great reservoirs of water on the globe are the ocean, seas and lakes, which cover more than three-fifths of its surface, and from which it is raised by evaporation, and uniting with the air in the state of vapour, is wafted over the earth, ready to be precipitated in the form of rain, snow or hail. The old chemists regarded water as a simple element; but it is now known to be a compound substance, consisting of hydrogen and oxygen, in the proportion of 2 volumes of the former gas to one volume of the latter; or by weight, it is composed of 1 equivalent of hydrogen, 1, + 1 equivalent of oxygen, 8 = 9 its equivalent; it is in fact a protoxide of hydrogen.—2. The ocean; a sea; a lake; a river; any great collection of water; as, in the phrases, to go by water, to travel by water.—3. Urine; the animal liquor secreted by the kidneys and discharged from the bladder.—4. The colour or lustre of a diamond or pearl, sometimes perhaps of other precious stones; as, a diamond of the first water, that is, perfectly pure and transparent. Hence the figurative phrase, a man or a genius of the first water, that is, of the first excellence.—5. Water is a name given to several liquid substances or humours in animal bodies; as, the water of the pericardium, of dropsy, &c.—Water of crystallization, the water which unites chemically with many salts during the act of crystallizing. It forms an essential part of the crystal, but not of the salt, and is easily expelled by heat, when the crystals generally fall to powder.—Mineral waters are those waters which are so highly charged with foreign matters, as to have an unpleasant taste, or to acquire medicinal virtues. There are several kinds of mineral waters; those in which iron predominates are called chalybeate waters; where sulphur prevails, they are called sulphurous waters; acidulous waters are those which contain much free carbonic acid; and saline waters are such as contain neutral salts, generally sea-salt, and sulphate of magnesia or Epsom salt. Most natural waters contain more or less of these foreign substances, but the proportion is generally too minute to affect the senses.—Strong waters, brandy, liquors, &c. [This term, once much in use, is now obsolete.]—To hold water, to be sound or tight. [Obsolete or vulgar.]

WATER, v. t. (wau'ter.) To irrigate; to overflow with water, or to wet with water; as, to water land. Showers water the earth.—2. To supply with water; as, a country well watered with rivers and rivulets.—3. To supply with water for drink; as, to water cattle and horses.—4. To diversify; to wet and calender; to give a wavy appearance to; as, to water silk.

WATER, v. i. (wau'ter.) To shed water or liquid matter. His eyes began to water.—2. To get or take in water. The ship put into port to water.—The mouth waters, a phrase denoting that a person has a longing desire; from dogs which drop their slaver when they see meat which they cannot get at.

WATERAGE, n. Money paid for transportation by water.

WATER-ALOE, n. A perennial plant growing in water.

WATER-BAILIFF, n. An officer of the customs in sea-port towns who searches ships, and in London has the supervision of the fish market, gathering of tolls, &c.

WATER-BEAN, n. A plant, the Nelumbium speciosum. It is the Lotus of the ancients, and the Pythagorean bean. [See NELUMBIACEÆ.]

WATER-BEARER, n. [water and bearer.] In astron., a sign of the zodiac, called also Aquarius, from L. aqua, water.

WATER-BEARING, a. Bearing or conveying water.

WATER-BEATEN, a. Beaten by water or the waves.

WATER-BEETLE, n. The Dytiscus, an insect.

WATER-BELLOWS, n. [water and bellows.] A machine for blowing air into a furnace, by means of a column of water falling through a vertical tube.

WATER-BETONY, n. A plant of the genus Scrophularia, the S. aquatica, Linn.

WATER-BLINKS, n. A British plant of the genus Montia, the M. fontana; also called water-chickweed. [See MONTIA.]

WATER-BOARDS, n. Boards fixed up in a boat to keep off the water; called also weather-boards.

WATER-BORNE, a. Borne by the water; floated; having water sufficient to float: as, ships water-borne by the flowing tide.

WATER-BOUGET, } n. A vessel an-
WATER-BUDGET, } ciently used by soldiers for carrying water in long marches and desert places; and also by water carriers, to convey water from conduits to the houses of the citizens. In her., it is a bearing frequent in English coat-armour, but as now generally represented, it is very different in form from those figured in the ancient MSS.

Ancient form of Water-Bougets.

Water-Bouget as depicted in modern coat-armour.

WATER-BUTT, n. A large open-headed cask, usually set up on end in an outhouse, or close to a dwelling, serving as a reservoir for rain or pipe water.

WATER-CAL'AMINT, n. [water and calamint.] A species of mint or Mentha, the M. aquatica, Linn.

WATER-CARRIAGE, n. [water and carriage.] Transportation or conveyance by water; or the means of transporting by water.—2.† A vessel or boat.

WATER-CÄRT, n. [water and cart.] A cart bearing a large cask or tank of water, which, by means of a tube perforated with holes, and placed horizontally across the lower part of the back of the cart, is sprinkled on roads and streets to prevent dust from rising.

WATER-CASK, n. In ships, a large strong hooped barrel, used for holding water for the use of those on board. Iron tanks are now preferred to wooden casks.

WATER-CEMENTS, n. Cements which possess the property of hardening under water, and are therefore employed in structures which are built under water; and also for lining cisterns, for coating damp walls on basement stories, &c. [See CEMENT, PUZZOLANA, TARRAS.]

WATER-CHESTNUT, n. A plant, the Trapa natans.

WATER-CHICKWEED. See WATER-BLINKS.

WATER-CIR'CLED, } a. Surrounded
WATER-GIRD'LED, } by water.

WATER-CLOCK, n. [water and clock.] The clepsydra; an instrument or machine serving to measure time by the fall of a certain quantity of water. [See CLEPSYDRA.]

WATER-CLOSET, n. [water and closet.] A closet for easing nature, having a contrivance for carrying off the discharges by a stream of water through a waste-pipe below.

WATER-CÖLOUR, n. [water and colour.] Water-colours, in painting or limning, are colours diluted and mixed with gum-water. Water-colours are so called in distinction from oil-colours.

WATER-CÖLOURIST, n. One who paints in water-colours.

WATER-CÖLOUR PAINTING, n. A species of painting in which the medium of representation is water-colours instead of oil-colours. The term is now confined to drawing in water-colours upon paper, vellum, and ivory.

WATER-CÖURSE, n. [water and course.] A stream of water; a river or brook; Isa. xliv.—2. A channel or canal for the conveyance of water; any natural or artificial stream of water.—3. In law, the interest or right to take water in another's land, or the right of conducting water through one estate for the use of another. This is an incorporeal hereditament of the class of easements.

WATER-CRAFT, n. Vessels and boats plying on water.

WATER-CRESS, n. [water and cress.] An aquatic plant of the genus Nasturtium, the N. officinale. It was formerly Sisymbrium nasturtium. [See NASTURTIUM.]

WATER-CROW, n. The water-ouzel or ousel,—which see.

WATER-CRÖWFOOT, n. [water and crowfoot.] A plant, the Ranunculus aquatilis, on which cows are said to be fond of feeding.

WATER-DEVIL, n. A name sometimes given to the larva of a British aquatic insect, of the genus Hydrophilus, the H. piceus, common in ponds and ditches.

WATER-DOCK, n. A plant, the Rumex aquatica.

WATER-DOG, n. A dog accustomed to the water; as the Canis aquaticus. [See WATER-SPANIEL.]—Water-dogs, a local name for small, irregular, floating clouds in a rainy season, supposed to indicate rain.

WATER-DRAIN, n. A drain or channel for water to run off.

WATER-DRAINAGE, n. The draining off of water.

WATER-DROP, n. [water and drop.] A drop of water; a tear.

WATER-DROPWÖRT, n. The common name of several British plants of the genus Œnanthe. [See ŒNANTHE.]

WATERED, pp. Overspread or sprinkled with water; made wet; supplied with water; made lustrous by being wet and calendered.

WATER-ELDER, n. A name given to the common guelder rose, Viburnum opulus. [See VIBURNUM.]

WATER-ELEPHANT, n. A name given to the hippopotamus.

WATER-ENGINE, n. [water and engine.] An engine to raise water; or an engine propelled by water.

WATERER, n. One who waters.

WATER-FALL, n. [water and fall.] A fall or perpendicular descent of the water of a river or stream, or a descent nearly perpendicular; a cascade; a cataract; as, the falls of Niagara; the falls of the Bruar in the Highlands of Scotland, of Lodore in Cumberland, and the Rheiddiol in North Wales. [See FALL.] The name water-falls is also given to artificial cascades formed in gardens and pleasure grounds, for the purpose of producing ornamental and picturesque effects.

WATER-FEATHERFOIL, n. A plant of the genus Hottonia, the H. palustris, called also water-violet. [See HOTTONIA.]

WATER-FLAG, n. [water and flag.] A plant of the genus Iris, the I. pseudacorus, called also corn-flag, yellow-iris, and flower-de-luce. [See IRIS.]

WATER-FLANNEL, n. A plant, Conferva crispa; one of the algæ, which forms beds of entangled filaments on the surface of water.

WATER-FLÖOD, n. [water and flood.] A flood of water; an inundation.

WATER-FLY, n. [water and fly.] An insect that is seen on the water.

WATER-FOWL, n. [water and fowl.] A fowl that frequents the water, or lives about rivers, lakes, or on or near the sea; an aquatic fowl. Of aquatic fowls, some are waders, or furnished with long legs as the Grallatores; others are swimmers, and are furnished with webbed feet, as the pelicans, swans, geese, ducks, &c.; others fly or skim along the surface of the water in search of their prey, as the petrels; and birds of the gull kind generally; and others dive into the water to seize their prey; as the divers, puffins and penguins.

WATER-FOX, n. [water and fox.] A name given to the carp, on account of its cunning.

WATER-FRAME, n. In cotton mills, the name given to Arkwright's spinning frame, on account of its having been at first driven by water-wheels.

WATER-FURRÖW, n. [water and furrow.] In agriculture, a deep furrow made for conducting water from the ground and keeping it dry.

WATER-FURRÖW, v. t. To plough or open water-furrows.

WATER-GÄGE, } n. [water and gage.]
WATER-GUÄGE, } An instrument for measuring or ascertaining the depth or quantity of water.

WATER-GALL, n. A cavity made in the earth by a torrent of water.—2. An appearance in the rainbow.

WATER-GAVEL, n. In law, a rent paid for fishing, or any other benefit derived from some river.

WATER-GER'MANDER, n. A plant of the genus Teucrium, the T. scordium. [See GERMANDER.]

WATER-GILDER, n. One who practises the art of water-gilding,—which see.

WATER-GILDING, n. The gilding of metallic surfaces by covering them with a thin coating of amalgam of gold, and then volatilizing the mercury by heat. The gold is thus left adhering to the surface, upon which it is afterwards burnished. Brass and copper buttons are gilt in this way; but before the amalgam is applied the surface of brass or copper is usually prepared by cleaning and rubbing it over with a solution of nitrate of mercury, which causes the amalgam of gold, when subsequently applied, to adhere to the surface.

WATER-GOD, n. [water and god.] In mythol., a deity that presides over the water.

WATER-GRU'EL, n. [water and gruel.] A liquid food, composed of water and a small portion of meal or other farinaceous substance boiled, and seasoned with salt.

WATER-GRU'ELLED, a. Supplied with water-gruel.

WATER-GUT, n. The common name of cryptogamic plants of the genus Enteromorpha; nat. order Ulvaceæ. These plants are chiefly inhabitants of the sea or of pools and ditches of salt water, and when floating in the water very much resemble the intestines of an animal, hence the name. [See ULVACEÆ.]

WATER-HAIR-GRÄSS, n. A species of grass, the Aira aquatica.

WATER-HAMMER, n. A philosophical toy, consisting of a column of water in a vacuum, which not being supported as in the air, falls against the end of the vessel with a peculiar noise. It may be formed by corking a vessel of water while it is boiling. The vapour condensing as it cools, a vacuum is formed.

WATER-HEMLOCK, n. A British plant of the genus Cicuta; the C. virosa. It is a poisonous plant, growing in ditches, lakes and rivers. [See CICUTA.]

WATER-HEMP-AG'RIMONY, n. A plant of the genus Bidens, the B. tripartita, called also three-cleft bur marigold. The Eupatorium cannabinum is also called water-hemp-agrimony.

WATER-HEN, n [water and hen.] A water fowl of the genus Gallinula, the G. chloropus, belonging to the family Rallidæ. It is known in this country by the name of moorhen. The Soree or common Rail of America is also called water-hen.

WATER-HOG, n. [water and hog.] A rodent mammal, Hydrochœrus capybara, the size of a two year's old hog, Water Hog (Hydrochœrus capybara).

classed with the Cavidæ, and a native of South America. It feeds on vegetables and fish, swimming after and seizing the latter like an otter. It is a tailless animal, with a large head, thick divided nose, thick body covered with short, coarse brown hair, short legs, long feet, which instead of being cloven are almost webbed. It is plentiful in Brazil, and frequents the islands at the mouth of the La Plata; and is easily tamed.

WATER-HOREHOUND, n. A British plant of the genus Lycopus, the L. europæus, called also gipsy-wort,—which see.

WATER-HORSE-TAIL, n. The common name of several British aquatic plants of the genus Chara; nat. order Characeæ. Several of them are also known by the name of stonewort,—which see.

WATER-HYSSOP, n. A plant of the genus Gratiola, the G. officinalis, Linn. It has been employed in medicine as a cathartic and diuretic in hydropical cases.

WATERINESS, n. [from watery.] Moisture; humidity; a state of abounding with water.

WATERING, ppr. Overflowing; sprinkling or wetting with water; supplying with water; giving water for drink; giving a wavy appearance to.

WATERING, n. The act of overflowing or sprinkling with water; the act of supplying with water for drink or other purposes.—2. The place where water is supplied.—3. In agriculture, the process of irrigating land; or the application of water to the surface of land for the improvement of the soil, and for promoting vegetation.—4. In horticulture, the process of applying water artificially to plants, in order to promote their growth.—5. A process to which silk and other textile fabrics are subjected, in order to make them exhibit a wavy lustre and different plays of light. This is done by sprinkling the cloth with water, and then calendering it.

WATERING-PLACE, n. 1. A place where water may be obtained, as for a ship, for cattle, &c.—2. A place to which people resort at certain seasons in order to drink mineral waters, or bathe, for the benefit of their health. A sea-bathing place is called a watering-place.

WATERING-TROUGH, n. A trough in which cattle and horses drink.

WATERISH, a. Resembling water; thin, as a liquor.—2. Moist; somewhat watery; as, waterish land.

WATERISHNESS, n. Thinness, as of a liquor; resemblance to water.

Waterishness, which is like the serosity of our blood. Floyer.

WATER-LASHED, a. Lashed by the water.

WATER-LEAF, n. [water and leaf.] The common name of plants of the genus Hydrophyllum.

WATER-LEMON, n. A plant of the genus Passiflora, the P. laurifolia. [See PASSIFLORA.]

WATERLESS, a. Destitute of water.

WATER-LEVEL, n. [water and level.] The level formed by the surface of still water.—2. A levelling instrument in which water is employed instead of mercury or spirit of wine. It consists of a glass tube containing water, open at both ends, and having the ends turned up. When the tube is placed on a horizontal surface, the water will stand at the same height in the turned up ends, and when placed in an inclined position, the water will manifestly stand highest in the depressed end. [See LEVEL.]

WATER-LILY, n [water and lily.] The common name of aquatic plants of the genera Nymphæa and Nuphar, distinguished for their beautiful flowers and large floating leaves. [See NYMPHÆA, and NUPHAR.]

WATER-LINE, n. [water and line.] Water-lines, in shipbuilding, are those horizontal lines supposed to be described by the surface of the water on the bottom of the ship, and which are exhibited at certain depths upon the sheer-draught. The most particular of these lines are, the light-water-line, which shows the depression of the ship's body in the water when she is light or unladen; and the load-water-line, which exhibits her depression in the water when laden.

WATER-LOGGED, a. [water and log.] Lying like a log on the water. A ship is said to be water-logged, when by leaking and receiving a great quantity of water into her hold, she has become so heavy as not to be manageable by the helm, and to be at the mercy of the waves.

WATERMAN, n. [water and man.] A boatman; a ferryman; a man who manages water-craft.

WATER-MARK, n. [water and mark.] The mark or limit of the rise of a flood. Thus, we say high-water-mark, low-water-mark, &c.

WATER-MEADOWS, n. Meadows on low flat grounds, which are capable of being kept in a state of fertility by being overflown with water at certain seasons, from some adjoining river or stream.

WATER-MEASURE, n A measure formerly in use for articles brought by water, as coals, oysters, &c. The bushel used for this purpose was larger than the Winchester bushel by about three gallons.

WATER-MEL'ON, n. [water and melon.] A plant and its fruit, of the genus Cucurbita or Cucumis, (C. citrullus.) This plant requires a warm climate to bring it to perfection. It also requires a dry, sandy, warm soil, and will not grow well in any other. The fruit abounds with a sweetish liquor resembling water in colour, and the pulp is remarkably rich and delicious.

WATER-MILFOIL, n. The common name of three British aquatic plants of the genus Myriophyllum, nat. order Onagraceæ, sub-order Halorageæ.

WATER-MILL, n. [water and mill.] A mill whose machinery is moved by water, and thus distinguished from a wind-mill.

WATER-MINT. See WATER-CALAMINT.

WATER-MOVED, a. Moved by water power.

WA'TER-MURRAIN, n. A disease among black cattle.

WATER-NET, n. A plant, Hydrodictyon utriculatum, a species of Alga, which has the appearance of a green net, composed of filaments enclosing pentagonal and hexagonal spaces.

WATER-NEWT, n. A name given to various species of reptiles of the genus Triton, frequenting ponds, ditches, clear, sluggish, and standing waters. They belong to the family of Salamandridæ, and in appearance resemble small lizards, though differing from them considerably in structure and habits. Like the frog, the newt begins its existence in a tadpole state, and is furnished with branchiæ for breathing water, which subsequently give place to true lungs, fitted for breathing air. The largest species found in this country is the common warty or great water-newt, Triton cristatus. It is not at all uncommon, is very aquatic in its habits, attains the length of six inches, and is perfectly harmless In colour its upper parts are blackish or yellowish brown with dark spots; under parts bright orange, with black spots and sides dotted with white. During the breeding season the male is furnished with a deep flexible indented crest.

Water-Newt, male (Triton cristatus).

WATER-NUTS, n. The common name of plants of the genus Trapa. [See TRAPA.]

WATER-NYMPH, n. A marine nymph; a Naiad.

WATER OR'DEAL, n. [water and ordeal.] A judicial trial of persons accused of crimes, by means of water; formerly in use among illiterate and superstitious nations. [See ORDEAL.]

WATER-OR'GAN, n. A kind of organ recorded by ancient writers, which was operated on in some way by water.

WATER-OU'SEL, } n. [water and ou-
WATER-OU'ZEL, } zel.] A bird of the genus Cinclus, the C. aquaticus, belonging to the family Merulidæ or thrushes. It is also called the Dipper. [See DIPPER.]

WATER-PÄRSNEP, n. [water and parsnep.] The common name of British plants of the genus Sium. [See SIUM.]

WATER-PEP'PER, n. An acrid water-plant, the Polygonum hydropiper, Linn.

WATER-PIMPERNEL, n. A British aquatic plant of the genus Samolus, the S. valerandi, called also common brook-weed. [See SAMOLUS.]

WATER-PIPE, n. A pipe for the conveyance of water. [See PIPE.]

WATER-PLANT, n. Water plants are such as live entirely in water, or which require a preponderating quantity of water as the medium of their existence. All the species of the orders Nymphæaceæ, Callitrichaceæ, Ceratophyllaceæ, Podostemaceæ, Butomaceæ, Naidaceæ, Pistiaceæ, Alismaceæ, consist of water-plants, and likewise the species of cryptogamic plants of the family Algæ.

WATER-PLANTAIN, n. The common name of various species of British plants of the genus Alisma, nat. order Alismaceæ. One species, A. plantago, great water-plantain, is a common wild plant in wet ditches and by river sides. It has had the reputation of being a cure for hydrophobia.

WATER-PO'A, n. A species of grass, the Poa aquatica.

WATER-POISE, n. (s as z.) [water and poise.] A hydrometer or instrument for ascertaining the specific gravity of different liquids. [See HYDROMETER.]

WATER-POT, n. [water and pot.]. A vessel for holding or conveying water or for sprinkling water on cloth in bleaching, or on plants, &c.—2. A urinal.

WATER-POWER, n. Water employed as a prime mover in machinery.

WATER-PRIVILEGE, n. The right to use running water to turn machinery. [American.]

WATER-PROOF, a. [water and proof.] Impervious to water; so firm and compact as not to admit water; as, water-proof cloth, leather, or felt. Cloth may be rendered water-proof by spreading upon its surface a solution of caoutchouc or India rubber, and then extending a similar piece of cloth upon this surface, and passing the whole between a pair of rollers. Thus the fabric consists of two pieces of cloth, with a layer of caoutchouc interposed, and uniting them together. The cloth thus prepared is so impervious to moisture or to air, that floating or hydrostatic beds for invalids are formed of it. There are various other modes of rendering cloth or textile fabrics, or leather, water-proof.

WATER-PURS'LANE, n. An annual plant, the Peplis portula, Linn.

WATER-RAIL, n. [water and rail.] A fowl of the genus Rallus; the R. aquaticus.

WATER-RAM, n. A machine for raising water, otherwise called the Hydraulic ram, and Montgolfier's ram. [See the latter term.]

WATER-RAT, n. [water and rat.] A rodent animal of the genus Arvicola, the A. amphibius of Desmarest, and the Mus amphibius of Linn., which lives in the banks of streams or lakes.

WATER-RETTED, a. Watered; as hemp. [Provincial.]

WATER-ROCKED, a. Rocked by the waves.

WATER-ROCKET, n. [water and rocket.] A water-cress.—2. A kind of fire-work to be discharged in the water.

WATER-ROT, v. t. [water and rot.] To rot by steeping in water; as, to water-rot hemp or flax.

WATER-ROTTED, pp. Rotted by being steeped in water.

WATER-ROTTING, ppr. Rotting in water.

WATER-SAIL, n. [water and sail.] A small sail used under a studding sail or driver boom.

WATER-SAPPHIRE, n. [water and sapphire.] A kind of blue precious stone.

WATER-SCORPION, n. A name given to aquatic, hemipterous insects of the genus Nepa, Linn., (family Nepidæ,) from their fore legs being somewhat similar to those of the scorpion. They feed upon other aquatic insects.

WATER-SHED, n. A range of high land that casts the water in different directions.

WATER-SHOOT, n. [water and shoot.] A sprig or shoot from the root or stock of a tree. [Local.]—2. A wooden trough for discharging water from a building.

WATER-SIDE, n. The brink of water; bank of a stream or lake; the sea-shore.

WATER-SNAKE, n. [water and snake.] A snake that frequents the water; the Coluber sipedon, found in all parts of the United States.

WATER-SOAK, v. t. [water and soak.] To soak or fill the interstices with water.

WATER-SOAKED, pp. Soaked, or having its interstices filled with water; as, water-soaked wood; a water-soaked hat.

WATER-SOLDIER, n. A plant of the genus Stratiotes; the S. aloides. [See STRATIOTES.]

WATER-SPANIEL, n. [water and spaniel.] The name given to two varieties of the dog called spaniel, viz., the large water-spaniel and the small water-spaniel. The rough water-dog (canis aviarius aquaticus), is sometimes called water-spaniel.

WATER-SPEED'WELL, n. A plant, the Veronica maritima, Linn.

WATER-SPOUT, n. [water and spout.] A remarkable meteorological phenomenon observed for the most part at sea, but sometimes over the land. Its general appearance at sea may be thus described:—Below a dense cloud the sea appears to be greatly agitated within a circular area from 100 to 120 yards in diameter, the waves tending rapidly to the centre of the agitated mass, where a vast body of water or aqueous vapour is formed: from hence there rises, with a spiral movement, towards the cloud, a column of a conical form resembling a trumpet. Vertically above this ascending column there is formed, in the cloud, but in an inverted position, a corresponding cone, whose apex gradually approaches that of the ascending column, and at length both are united, and the junction has been observed to be accompanied with a flash of lightning. The water-spout is said to be accompanied also, during its formation, with a rumbling noise like thunder. The whole column, which after the junction of the two cones, extends from the sea to the clouds, assumes a magnificent appearance, being of a light colour near its axis, but dark along the sides. When acted on by the wind the column assumes a position oblique to the horizon, but in calm weather it maintains its vertical position, while at the same time it is carried along the surface of the sea. Sometimes the upper and lower parts move with different velocities, causing the parts to separate from each other, often with a loud report. The whole of the vapour is at length absorbed in the air, or it descends to the sea in a heavy shower of rain. When a water-spout occurs above land, there is consequently no ascending column of water to meet that which descends. Such water-spouts often burst, discharging immense torrents of rain, and causing great destruction. Water-spouts are supposed by some to be formed by whirlwinds of extreme intensity; while others ascribe their origin to electric agency.

WATER-STANDING,† a. Wet with water; as, a water-standing eye.

WATER-STAR-WORT, n. The common name of British plants of the genus Callitriche. [See STAR-WORT.]

WATER-STATION, n. In railways, a small reservoir of water, from which tanks may be replenished.

WATER-TAB'BY, n. A waved silk stuff.

WATER-TABLE, n. [water and table.] In arch, a string-course moulding, or other projection, so placed as to throw off water from the building.

WATER-TATH, n. In England, a species of coarse grass growing in wet grounds, and supposed to be injurious to sheep.

WATER-THERMOM'ETER, n. An instrument for ascertaining the precise degree of temperature at which water attains its maximum density. This is about 40°; and from that point downwards to 32°, or the freezing point, it expands, and it also expands from the same point upwards to 212°, or the boiling point. [See WATER.]

WATER-THIEF,† n. A pirate.

WATER-TIGHT, a. [water and tight.] So tight as to retain or not to admit water. A vessel, tube, or joint is said to be water-tight when it has that degree of closeness which prevents the passage of water.

WATER-TRE'FOIL, n. A plant, Menyanthes trifoliata. [See MENYANTHES.]

WATER-VI'OLET, n. [water and violet.] A plant of the genus Hottonia; the H. palustris, called also water-featherfoil,—which see.

WATER-WAG'TAIL, n. See WAGTAIL.

WATER-WAL'LED,† a. Encompassed by water.

WATER-WAY, n. [water and way.] In ship building, water-ways are the thick planks at the outside of the deck, wrought over the ends of the beams, and fitting against the inside of the top-timbers, to which, as well as to the ends of the beams, they are bolted, and thus form an important binding. Their inner edge is hollowed out to form a channel for water to run off the deck.

WATER-WHEEL, n. [water and wheel.] In hydraulics, an engine for raising water in large quantities; as the Persian wheel, wheels driven by water, and having cranks on their axles for working pumps.—2. A wheel moved by water, and employed to turn machinery. There are three kinds of water-wheels, the overshot wheel, the undershot wheel, and the breast wheel. [See these terms.] All water-wheels consist in common of a hollow cylinder or drum, revolving on a central axle or spindle, from which the power to be used is communicated, while their exterior surface is covered with vanes, float-boards, or cavities upon which the water is to act. Water may be made to act as a moving power against wheels by its weight, as in the overshot wheel; by its momentum, as in the undershot wheel; or by both combined, as in the breast wheel.

WATER-WILLOW, n. [water and willow.] A plant of the genus Salix, the S. aquatica, called also water-sallow.

WATER-WINGS, n. plur. Walls erected on the banks of rivers, next to bridges, to secure the foundations from the action of the current.

WATER-WITH, n. [water and with.] A tree which grows in Jamaica in parched districts, resembling a vine in size and shape. It is so full of clear sap or water, that, by cutting a piece two or three yards long, and merely holding the cut end to the mouth, a plentiful draught is obtained.

WATER-WORKS, n. plur. [water and works.] A term which, in its extended sense, is applied to all machines and engineering works for the purpose of raising, retaining, conducting, or distributing water; and also to contrivances for obtaining motive power from falls or currents of water. Taken in this wide sense, it would embrace aqueducts, conduits, canals, sluices, locks, fountains, pumps, water-wheels, and hydraulic engines generally. In a narrow sense, the term water-works is applied to the methods of simply conducting water in aqueducts, or in pipes for the supply of domestic consumption, or the working of machinery. It comprehends the methods of procuring the supplies necessary for these purposes, by means of pumps, water, or steam-engines. It also comprehends the subsequent management of the water thus conducted, whether in order to make the proper distribution of it according to the demand, or to employ it for the purpose of navigation by lockage, or other contrivances.

WATER-WORN, n. Worn away: rounded; smoothed by the action of running water or water in motion; as, water-worn pebbles.

WATER-WORT, n. The common name of two British species of aquatic plants of the genus Elatine. [See ELATINE.]

WATERY, a. Resembling water; thin or transparent, as a liquid; as, watery humours.

> The oily and watery parts of the aliment > Arbuthnot.

2. Tasteless; insipid; vapid; spiritless; as, watery turnips.—3. Wet; moist; abounding with water; as, watery land; watery eyes.—4. Pertaining to water; as, the watery god.—5. Consisting of water; as, a watery desert.—Watery fusion. In chem., when a salt containing water of crystallization is exposed to heat, it is dissolved, if soluble, in its own water, and this dissolution is termed watery fusion.—Watery head, a disease in sheep, otherwise called staggers, sturdy, turnsick, &c. [See STAGGERS.] In her., watery is sometimes used for wavy, or undée.

WATTLE, n. [Sax. watel, a twig; allied perhaps to withe, L. vitis; that is, a shoot.] 1. Properly, a twig or flexible rod; and hence, a hurdle made of such rods.—2. The fleshy excrescence that grows under the throat of a cock or turkey, or a like substance on a fish.—3. A name given in Van Dieman's Land to various species of acacia, which yield gummy and astringent matters. A. mollisima is called silver wattle; A affinis, black wattle.

WATTLE, v. t. To bind with twigs.—2. To twist or interweave twigs one with another; to plat; to form a kind of net-work with flexible branches; as, to wattle a hedge.

WATTLE BIRD, n. The Glaucopis, Linn., a bird of New Zealand, so called from the wattles or carbuncles under its chin.

WATTLED, pp. Bound or interwoven with twigs. Wattled and combed, in her., terms used in English blazon to express the gills and comb of a cock, when borne of a different tincture from that of the body.

WATTLING, ppr. Interweaving with twigs.

WAUCHT, WAUGHT, n. [Sax. veaht.] A large draught of any liquid [Scotch.]

WAUL, v. i. To cry as a cat.

WAULING, ppr. Crying as a cat.

WAUR, v. t. To overcome; to worst. [Scotch.]

WAUR, a. Worse. [Scotch.]

WAVE, n. [Sax. weg, wæg, a wave, a way; both the same word, and both coinciding with the root of wag, waggon, vacillate, weigh, &c. The sense is, a going, a moving, appropriately a moving one way and the other; G. woge; Sw. våg; Ir. buaice.] 1. A moving swell or volume of water; usually, a swell raised and driven by wind. A pebble thrown into still water produces waves, which form concentric circles, receding from the point where the pebble fell. But waves are generally raised and driven by wind, and the word comprehends any moving swell on the surface of water, from the smallest ripple to the billows of a tempest.

> The wave behind impels the wave before.
> Pope.

A wave, as it is generally observed, is an elevated portion of water travelling successively along the general surface. When the surface of water is unequally pressed upon, in parts contiguous to each other, the columns most pressed upon are shortened, and sink beneath the natural level of the surface, while those that are least pressed on are lengthened, and rise above that level. As soon as the former columns have sunk to a certain depth, and the latter have risen to a certain height, their motions are reversed, and continue so till the columns that were at first most depressed have become most elevated, and those that were most elevated have become most depressed. In this manner a reciprocating motion is produced, and a series of ridges and hollows is formed, which are called waves. When a wave of the sea is seen to advance towards the shore, the water appears to be moving in the same direction; but this is not the case, the only necessary motion of the water being in the vertical direction, so that the water may be perfectly at rest while the wave is moving, except this vertical ascent or descent; or it may be moving in any direction coincident with or opposed to the direction in which the wave is moving, without at all affecting the motion of the wave. The action of the wind upon the surface of the water is the principal cause of the waves which exist, and the height of the wave depends in a great measure on the depth of the water in which it is produced. In a sheet of water only a few feet deep the waves will rarely have a height exceeding a few inches; while the waves of the ocean frequently acquire a magnitude sufficient to hide from each other's view two vessels of the largest size, when only a small distance apart. The waves of the sea are of two kinds, natural and accidental. The natural waves are those which are exactly proportioned in size to the strength of the wind which gives rise to them. The accidental waves are those occasioned by the wind's reacting upon itself by repercussion from hills and mountains, or high shores, and by the washing of the waves themselves against rocks and shoals. Several series of waves moving in different directions may co-exist without destroying each other. Thus it may happen that while a long swell, resulting from some distant storm, is advancing in one direction, a breeze will produce a series of waves moving in the direction of the wind; and a second breeze springing up in another direction will produce a new series, which will become mixed with the former without destroying it. A third gale may also produce a series of waves intersecting the other systems. All these phenomena may be illustrated by throwing several stones into a pool of standing water, when as many series of waves, intersecting each other, will appear upon the surface. The breadth of a wave is equal to the space between the most elevated points of two adjoining waves, or between the lowest points of two adjoining hollows. A wave is said to have passed through its breadth when its elevated part is arrived at the place where the elevated part of the next wave stood before; or, the situation of two contiguous waves being given, when one of these has arrived at the place of the other; and the time which is employed in this transition is called the time of a wave's motion or the time of an undulation. A wave passes through its breadth in the time that a pendulum of half its length (that is, half the length of the surface of the water between the most elevated part of the ridge and the lowest part of the hollow) will perform two of its least vibrations. The velocity of a wave is the rate at which the points of greatest elevation or depression seem to change their places. Tidal wave, the great wave which is raised on the surface of the sea by the attractions of the sun and moon, and which moves from east to west. [See TIDE.]—Artificial waves, those which are produced by artificial means, as when a stone is thrown into a pool of water. Artificial waves serve to illustrate the phenomena of natural waves —2. Unevenness; inequality of surface. —3. The line or streak of lustre on cloth watered and calendered.—4. Any undulating motion; a motion resembling that of a wave

WĀVE, v. i. [Sax wafian; probably a corrupt orthography.] 1. To play loosely; to move like a wave, one way and the other: to float; to undulate.

His purple robes wav'd careless to the winds. Trumbull.

2. To be moved, as a signal.—3.† To fluctuate; to waver; to be in an unsettled state.

WĀVE, v. t. [See WAVER.] To raise into inequalities of surface.—2. To move one way and the other; to brandish; as, to wave the hand; to wave a sword —3. To waft; to remove any thing floating.—4. To beckon; to direct by a waft or waving motion.

WĀVE, v. t. [Norm weyver, to wave or waive; waifnez, waved; wefs, weifs, waifs.] 1. To put off; to cast off; to cast away; to reject; as, to wave goods stolen; usually written waive.—2. To quit; to depart from.

He resolved not to wave his way. Wotton.

3. To put off; to put aside for the present, or to omit to pursue; as, to wave a motion. He offered to wave the subject. [Usually written waive.] —4. To relinquish, as a right, claim, or privilege. [Generally written waive. See WAIVE.]

WĀVE-BORNE, a. Thrown ashore by the waves.

WĀVED, pp. Moved one way and the other; brandished —2. Put off; omitted. [Usually written waived.]—3. a. In her., indented, undated. The same as wavy or undée.—4. Variegated in lustre; as, waved silk.—5. In bot., undate; rising and falling in waves on the margin, as a leaf.—6. In entom., applied to insects when the margin of the body is marked with a succession of arched segments or incisions.

WĀVELESS, a Free from waves; undisturbed; unagitated; as, the waveless sea.

WĀVELET, n. A small wave; a ripple on water.

WĀVELIKE, a. Resembling a wave; undulating.

WA'VELLITE, n. [from Wavel, the discoverer.] A mineral, a phosphate, or sub-phosphate of alumine; commonly found in crystals, which usually adhere and radiate, forming hemispherical or globular concretions, from a very small size to an inch in diameter. The form of the crystal is usually that of a rhombic prism with dihedral terminations. It occurs at Barnstaple in Devonshire, in Cornwall, near Cork, in Ireland, in Germany, Brazil, &c. It has also been called hydrargillite

WĀVE-OFFERING, n. In the Jewish ceremonial worship, an offering made with waving toward the four cardinal points; Numb. xviii.

WA'VER, v. i. [Sax. wafian; Dan. svæver, from væver, to weave, that is, to move one way and the other.] 1. To play or move to and fro; to move one way and the other.—2. To fluctuate; to be unsettled in opinion; to vacillate; to be undetermined; as, to waver in opinion; to waver in faith.

Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering; Heb x.

3. To totter; to reel; to be in danger of falling.

WA'VER, n. A name given to a sapling or young timber tree. [Local.]

WA'VERER, n. One who wavers; one who is unsettled in doctrine, faith, or opinion.

WA'VERING, ppr. or a. Fluctuating; being in doubt; undetermined.

WA'VERINGLY, adv. In a doubtful, fluctuating manner.

WA'VERINGNESS, n. State or quality of being wavering.

WĀVE'SON, n. A name given to goods which after shipwreck appear floating on the sea.

WĀVE-SUBJECT'ED, a. Subject to be overflowed.

WĀVE-WORN, n. [wave and worn] Worn by the waves.

The shore that o'er his wave-worn basis bow'd. Shak.

WĀVING, ppr. Moving as a wave; playing to and fro; brandishing.

WĀVING, n. Act of moving or playing loosely.

WĀVURE, n. The act of waving or putting off.

WA'VY, a. [from wave.] Rising or swelling in waves; full of waves; as, the wavy sea.—2. Playing to and fro; undulating.

Let her glad valleys smile with wavy corn. Prior.

3. Undulating on the border or on the surface; a botanical use.—4. In her., formed like waves; undulating, as lines and charges. It is also written wavée, and is the same as undée or undy.

WAWES or WAES,† for Waves.

WAWL,† v. i. To cry. [See WAUL.]

WAX, n. [Sax. wæx, wex; G wachs; Russ. vaksa; L. viscus, viscum.] 1. A thick, viscid, tenacious substance, excreted by bees, from their bodies, and employed in the construction of their cells; usually called bees' wax. Its native colour is yellow, and it has a peculiar smell resembling honey, which is derived from the honey deposited in the cells. When bleached and freed from impurities, wax is white, brittle, and translucent in thin segments; it has neither taste nor smell; it has a specific gravity of from 0·960 to 0·966. It melts at 158° and softens at 86°, becoming so plastic that it may be moulded by the hand into any form. It is a mixture of two substances in very variable proportions; the one is called cerine, and the other myricine. Wax is extensively employed both in its original and bleached state; in the latter state it is used for candles, and in numerous cerates, ointments, and plasters. It is also used in forming figures or images, busts, &c., in the preparation of anatomical models, in the preparation of fruit, flowers, and many objects of natural history. In statuary it is used in making models for the metal cast. Wax exists also as a vegetable product, and may in this point of view be regarded as a concrete fixed oil. It may be obtained from the pollen of many flowers, and it forms a part of the green fecula of many plants, particularly of the cabbage. It appears as a varnish upon the fruit, and the upper surface of the leaves of many trees, as in the wax-palm and wax-myrtle.—2. "A thick tenacious substance excreted in the ear.—3. A substance found on the hinder legs of bees, derived from the pollen of flowers. This was long supposed to be the substance from which bees elaborated the wax for their cells, but this notion is now found to be erroneous. The pollen collected by bees serves for the nourishment of their larvæ. — 4. A substance used in sealing letters; called sealing-wax, or Spanish wax. This is a composition of lac and resin, coloured with some pigment.—5. A thick substance used by shoemakers for rubbing their thread.—Wax mineral, a mineral like resinous wax, which is sometimes made into candles. It is otherwise called ozocerite.

WAX, v. t. To smear or rub with wax; as, to wax a thread or a table.

WAX, v. i. pret. Waxed; pp. Waxed or Waxen. [Sax. weaxan; G. wachsen; Sw. vaxa; allied probably to L. augeo, auxi, Gr. αὔξω, and αὐξάνω.] 1. To increase in size; to grow; to become larger; as, the waxing and the waning moon.—2. To pass from one state to another; to become; as, to wax strong; to wax warm or cold; to wax feeble; to wax hot; to wax old; to wax worse and worse.

WAX'-CANDLE, n. [wax and candle.] A candle made of wax

WAX'-CHANDLER, n. [wax and chandler.] A maker of wax-candles.

WAX'-CLOTH, n. Cloth covered with a coating of wax, commonly ornamented with some figured pattern, and used as covers to tables, pianos, sideboards, &c. A thick kind, more properly styled oil-cloth, is used for covering lobbies, and parts of rooms, to protect carpets.

WAX'ED, pp. Smeared or rubbed with wax.

WAX'EN, a. Made of wax; as, waxen cells.

WAX'-END, WAX'ED-END, n. A thread pointed with a bristle, and covered with rosin (shoemakers' wax), used in sewing boots and shoes.

WAX'ING, ppr. Growing; increasing; becoming; smearing with wax.

WAX'ING, n. In chem., the preparation of any matter to render it fit for melting; also, the process of stopping out colours in calico-printing.

WAX'-LIGHT, n. A taper made of wax.

WAX-MOD'ELLING, n. The art of forming models and figures in wax; otherwise termed the ceroplastic art. [See WAX.]

WAX'-MOTH, n. A popular name given to various species of moths, of the genera Ptychopoda, Emmelesia, Cabera, &c.

WAX-MYR'TLE, n. The Myrica cerifera, or candleberry tree, a shrub of North America, the berries of which are covered with a greenish wax, called myrtle-wax, or bayberry tallow. [See CANDLEBERRY-TREE and MYRICACEÆ.]

WAX-PĀINTING, n. Encaustic painting. [See ENCAUSTIC.]

WAX'-PĀLM, n. A species of palm, the Ceroxylon andicola, found in South America. It is a native of the Andes, and is found chiefly between 4° and 5° of N. latitude, at an elevation of about 6,000 feet above the sea-level, among rugged precipices. The C. andicola, unlike most other palms, avoids the heat of tropical plains, and thrives best where the temperature of the air is lowered by the proximity of perpetual snow." It is called Palma de cera by the Spaniards, and grows to the height of 180 feet. The trunk is marked by rings, caused by the falling off of the leaves, which are eighteen to twenty feet long, and is covered with a thick secretion, consisting of two-thirds resin and one-third wax. The only other palm which exudes wax, and that in a sort of scales from the palmate leaves, is the Carnauba palm, found plentifully in Brazil.

WAX′-WING, n. The common name of the species of dentirostral birds, of the genus Bombycilla. They are so named because most of them have small, oval, horny appendages on the secondaries of the wings, of the colour of red sealing-wax. Only three species have been recorded, viz., the Bohemian wax-wing, or chatterer (B. garrula), a migratory bird, which has a wide geographical range; the American wax-wing, or cedar-bird (B. carolinensis), which is confined to North America; and the red-winged chatterer, or Japanese wax-wing (B. phenicoptera), an Oriental bird.

WAX′-WORK, n. Figures formed of wax, in imitation of real beings; also anatomical preparations in wax, preparations in wax of fruit, flowers, &c.

WAX′Y, a. Soft like wax; resembling wax; viscid; adhesive.—2. Moist; not floury; as, a waxy potato. [Familiar.]

WAY, n. [Sax. wæg, weg; G. and D. weg; L. and It. via; Fr. voie; coinciding in origin with wag, weigh, waggon, vogue, &c.] 1. Literally, a passing; hence, a passage; the place of passing; hence a road of any kind; a highway; a private road; a lane; a street; any place for the passing of men, cattle, or other animals; a word of very comprehensive signification.—2. Length of space; as, a great way; a little way.—3. Course; direction of motion or travel. What way did he take? Which way shall I go? Keep in the way of truth and knowledge.

Mark what way I make. Shak.

4. Passage; room for passing. Make way for the jury.—5. Course or regular course.

And let eternal justice take the way. Dryden.

6. Tendency to any meaning or act.

There is nothing in the words that sounds that way. Atterbury

7. Sphere of observation.

The general officers and the public ministers that fell in my way. Temple.

8. Manner of doing any thing; method: means of doing. Seek the best way of learning, and pursue it.

By noble ways we conquests will prepare. Dryden

9. Method; scheme of management.

What impious ways my wishes took. Prior.

10. Manner of thinking or behaviour; particular turn of opinion; determination or humour. Let him have his way, when that will not injure him, or any other person. But multitudes of children are ruined by being permitted to have their way.—11. Manner; mode. In no way does this matter belong to me. We admire a person's way of expressing his ideas.—12. Method; manner of practice. Find, if you can, the easiest way to live.

Having lost the way of nobleness. Sidney.

13. Method or plan of life and conduct. Instruct your children in the right way.

Her ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace: Prov. iii.

All flesh had corrupted his way; Gen. vi

14. Course; process of things, good or bad. Things are in a prosperous way. 15. Right method to act or know.

We are quite out of the way. Locke.

16. General scheme of acting.

Men who go out of the way to hint free things, must be guilty of absurdity or rudeness. Clarissa.

17. Sect; denomination of a particular faith, creed or worship; Acts xix. 23. —18. In law, a term used to denote either a right, in one person or more, of passing over the land of another, or the space over which such right is exercisable. Four species of way are known to the law:—1. A foot-way; 2. A horse-way, which includes a foot-way; 3 A carriage-way, which includes both a horse-way and a foot-way; 5. A drift-way, for driving cattle. To these may be added a water-way for ships and boats. A right of way may be either public or private. A public way is one which is open to the public, to the king, (queen), and to all persons who are either permanently or temporarily his (her) subjects. A private way is a right which particular persons or classes have of going over the land of another. This right arises either by a deed or grant, usage or prescription, custom, or some express agreement or declaration.—19 Among seamen, the progress or motion of a ship through the water.—Bilge-ways or launching-ways, a square bed of timber placed under a vessel's bilge to support her while launching. — To make way, to give room for passing; or to make a vacancy.—To give way, to recede; to make room; or to yield; to concede the place or opinion to another.—To make one's way, to advance in life by efforts; to advance successfully.—By the way, en passant, as we proceed; a phrase introducing something in discourse, not immediately connected with the subject.—To go one's way, or to come one's way, to go or come along.—To go the way of all the earth, to die —In the way, a phrase noting obstruction. What is there in the way of your success? In scrip., the ways of God are his providential government or his works; Rom. xi.; Job xl.—Way and ways are used in certain phrases, in the sense of wise. He is no ways a match for his antagonist.

'Tis no way the interest even of the priesthood. Pope.

To be under way, in seamen's language, to be in motion, as when a ship begins to move. So a ship is said to have head-way, when she moves forward in her course, and stern-way, when she is driven astern. She is said also to gather way, or to lose way. Lee-way is a movement of a ship aside of her course, or to the leeward.—Milky way, in astron., the galaxy; a broad luminous belt or space in the heavens, supposed to be occasioned by the blended light of an immense number of stars. By means of a telescope of uncommon magnifying powers, Dr. Herschel has been able to ascertain this fact, by distinguishing the stars —Covert way, in fort., a passage covered from the enemy's fire.—Ways and means, in legislation, means for raising money; resources for revenue. In parliament, when supplies have been voted, the house of commons resolve themselves into a committee of ways and means; that is, a committee to consider the ways and means of raising the sum voted.—Way-going crop, among farmers, is the crop which is taken from the ground the year the tenant leaves the farm.

WĀY-BAGGAGE, n. The baggage or effects of a way-passenger on a railroad, or in a stage-coach. [American.]

WĀY-BENNET, n. A British plant of the genus Hordeum, the H. murinum, called also wall-barley. [See HORDEUM.]

WĀY-BILL, n. A list of passengers in a public vehicle.

WĀY-BREAD, n. A name given to the herb plantain, (Plantago major.)

WĀY-FĀRER, n. [way and fare, Sax. faran, to go.] A traveller; a passenger.

WĀYFĀRING, a. [supra.] Travelling; passing; being on a journey; Judges xix.

WĀYFĀRING-TREE, n. A shrub, a species of Viburnum, the V. lantana; called also mealy guelder-rose. [See VIBURNUM.]

WĀYGHTES. The same as waits,—which see.

WĀY′GOING, a. In farming, the way-going crop is that which is taken from the land the year the tenant leaves a farm.

WAYLĀID, pp. Watched in the way. [See WAYLAY.]

WAYLĀY, v. t. [way and lay.] To watch insidiously in the way, with a view to seize, rob, or slay; to beset in ambush; as, to waylay a traveller. [In this word there is little difference of accent.]

WAYLĀYER, n. One who waits for another in ambush, with a view to seize, rob, or slay him.

WĀY-LEAVE, n. Purchased right of way. Generally applied to liberty granted for the laying of water pipes, making of sewers, &c., through private property, where the surface of the ground is only occupied by the work during their execution.

WĀYLESS, a. Having no road or path; pathless; trackless.

WĀY-MĀKER, n. One who makes a way; a precursor.

WĀY-MĀRK, n. [way and mark.] A mark to guide in travelling; Jer. xxxi.

WĀYMENT,† v. i. [Sax wa, woe.] To lament.

WĀY-PANE, n. A slip left for cartage in watered land. [Local.]

WĀY-PASS′ENGER, n. A passenger on a railroad, &c., taken up at some intermediate station or place. [American.]

WAYSIDE, n. The side of the road or highway.

WAY-THISTLE, n. A plant of the genus Cnicus, the C. arvensis, called also field-thistle and creeping plume thistle.

WAYWARD, a. [way and ward.] Froward; peevish; perverse; liking his own way.

Wayward beauty doth not fancy move. Fairfax

WAY-WARDEN, n. In local usage, the surveyor of a road.

WAYWARDLY, adv. Frowardly; perversely.

WAYWARDNESS, n. Frowardness; perverseness.

WAY'WISE, a. Expert in finding or keeping the way.

WAYWISER, n. An instrument for measuring the distance which one has travelled on the road; called also perambulator, and podometer, or pedometer.

WAYWODE, } WAIWODE, } n. [Slav. voyna, war, and vodit, to lead.] A name originally given to military commanders in various Slavonic countries, and afterwards to governors of towns or provinces. It was assumed for a time by the rulers of Moldavia and Wallachia, who are now called Hospodars, and it was also given to some minor Turkish officers.

WAYWODESHIP, n. The province or jurisdiction of a waywode.

WAYWORN, a. Wearied by travelling.

WE, pron. plur of I; or rather a different word, denoting the person speaking and another or others with him. I and John, the speaker calls we, or I and John and Thomas; or I and many others. In the objective case, us. We is used to express men in general, including the speaker.

Vice seen too oft, familiar with her face
We first endure, then pity, then embrace. Pope.

WEAK, a. [Sax waac, wace; G. weich, schwach The primary sense of the root is to yield, fail, give way, recede, or to be soft.] 1. Having little physical strength; feeble. Children are born weak; men are rendered weak by disease.—2. Infirm; not healthy; as, a weak constitution.—3. Not able to bear a great weight; as, a weak bridge; weak timber. —4. Not strong; not compact; easily broken; as, a weak ship; a weak rope. —5. Not able to resist a violent attack; as, a weak fortress.—6. Soft; pliant; not stiff.—7. Low; small; feeble; as, a weak voice. —8. Feeble of mind; wanting spirit; wanting vigour of understanding; as, a weak prince; a weak magistrate.

To think every thing disputable, is a proof of a weak mind and captious temper. Beattie.

9. Not much impregnated with ingredients, or with things that excite action, or with stimulating and nourishing substances; as, weak broth; weak tea; weak toddy; a weak solution; a weak decoction.—10. Not politically powerful; as, a weak nation or state.—11. Not having force of authority or energy; as, a weak government.—12. Not having moral force or power to convince; not well supported by truth or reason; as, a weak argument.—13. Not well supported by argument; as, weak reasoning.—14. Unfortified; accessible; impressible; as, the weak side of a person. —15. Not having full conviction or confidence; as, weak in faith. —16. Weak land is land of a light thin soil.

WEAK,† v. t. To make weak.

WEAK,† v. i. To become weak.

WEAKEN, v. t. (wee'kn.) [Sax. wacan, to languish, to vacillate.] 1. To lessen the strength of, or to deprive of strength; to debilitate; to enfeeble; as, to weaken the body; to weaken the mind; to weaken the hands of the magistrate; to weaken the force of an objection or an argument.—2. To reduce in strength or spirit; as, to weaken tea; to weaken any solution or decoction.

WEAKENED, pp. Debilitated; enfeebled; reduced in strength.

WEAKENER, n. He or that which weakens.

WEAKENING, ppr. Debilitating; enfeebling; reducing the strength or vigour of any thing.—2. a. Having the quality of reducing strength.

WEAK-EYED, a. Having weak eyes.

WEAK-HANDED, a. Having little strength.

WEAK-HEADED, a. Having a weak intellect.

WEAK-HEARTED, a. Having little courage; dispirited.

WEAKLING, n. A feeble creature.

WEAKLY, adv. Feebly; with little physical strength; faintly; not forcibly; as, a fortress weakly defended.—2. With want of efficacy.

Was plighted faith so weakly seal'd above? Dryden.

3. With feebleness of mind or intellect; indiscreetly; injuriously.

Beneath pretended justice weakly fall. Dryden.

4. Timorously; with little courage or fortitude.

WEAKLY, a. Not strong of constitution; infirm; as, a weakly woman; a man of a weakly constitution.

WEAKNESS, n. Want of physical strength; want of force or vigour; feebleness; as, the weakness of a child; the weakness of an invalid; the weakness of a wall or bridge, or of thread or cordage.—2. Want of sprightliness.

Soft without weakness; without glaring, gay. Pope.

3. Want of steadiness.

By such a review, we shall discern and strengthen our weaknesses. Rogers.

4. Infirmity; unhealthiness; as, weakness of constitution.—5. Want of moral force or effect upon the mind; as, the weakness of evidence; the weakness of arguments.—6. Want of judgment; feebleness of mind; foolishness.

All wickedness is weakness. Milton.

7. Defect; failing; fault; with a plural.

Many take pleasure in spreading abroad the weaknesses of an exalted character. Spectator.

WEAKSIDE, n. [weak and side.] Foible; deficience; failing; infirmity; that part of a person's natural disposition by which he is most easily warped or won.

WEAK-SIGHTED, a. Having weak sight.

WEAK-SPIRITED, a. Having weak spirits.

WEAL, n. [Sax. wela; G. wohl; Dan. vel; from the same root as well, Sw. väl; L. valeo, to be strong, to avail, to prevail. The primary sense of weal is strength, soundness, from the sense of straining, stretching, or advancing.] 1. A sound state of a person or thing; a state which is prosperous, or at least not unfortunate, not declining; prosperity; happiness.

As we love the weal of our souls and bodies. Bacon.

The weal or wo in thee is plac'd. Milton.

So we say, the public weal, the general weal, the weal of the nation or state.—2. Republic; state; public interest; the commonweal. [But we now use commonwealth, in the sense of state.]

WEAL, n. The mark of a stripe. [See WALE.]

WEAL, v. t. To mark with stripes. [See WALE.]

WEALD, } WALD, } WALT, } WOLD, } In Saxon and other Teutonic dialects, signifies a wood or forest, a woody place or woody waste. It is found in names, as in Walt-ham, wood-house; corruptly pronounced Wal-tham. It is also the name given to a valley or tract of country, lying between the North and South Downs of Kent and Sussex in England.

WEALD-CLAY, n. The upper portion of the Wealden formation, composed of beds of clay, sandstone, calcareous sandstone, conglomerate limestone, and ironstone. The clay is of a bluish or brownish colour, tenacious, somewhat indurated and slaty. The limestone is often concretionary, and usually contains fresh-water shells of the genus Paludina. The weald clay forms the subsoil of the Wealds of Sussex and Kent, separating the Shanklin sands from the Hasting beds.

WEALD'EN FORMATION, } WEALD'EN STRATA, } n. The name given by English geologists to a series of rocks lying beneath the greensand, and resting above the oolite, and under chalk, in the Wealds of Kent and Sussex. They form a series of sandstones and clays, with layers and nodules of limestone. The lowest part is named Purbeck limestone, and is composed of fresh-water shells, united by a calcareous cement. It is slaty, argillaceous, of a brownish colour, alternates with slaty marl, and sometimes contains beds of compact limestone. Above this series is the Hastings sand, composed of yellowish grains of sand, very loosely coherent, alternating with beds of clay and conglomerate, containing fragments of bones and scales of fishes. The shells and remains of vertebrate animals which occur in this part of the series are of fluviatile origin. The upper portion of the Wealden formation is the Weald clay. [See WEALD-CLAY.] The organic remains of the Wealden consist of leaves, stems, and branches of plants of a tropical character, bones of enormous reptiles of extinct genera [see IGUANODON], of crocodiles, turtles, flying reptiles and birds, fishes of several genera and species, and fresh-water shells. No bones of mammalia have as yet been found in the Wealden deposits.

WEALSMAN, n. [weal and man.] A name given sneeringly to a politician.

WEALTH, n. (welth.) [from weal; Sax. welega, welga, rich.] 1.† Prosperity; external happiness.—2. Riches; large possessions of money, goods, or land; that abundance of worldly estate which exceeds the estate of the greater part of the community; affluence; opulence.

Each day new wealth without their care provides. Dryden.

3. Among political economists, the means of obtaining the products of labour. An individual is said to be rich or wealthy according to the degree in which he can afford to command those necessaries, conveniences, and luxuries which are the products of human industry; and a nation is said to be rich or wealthy in the aggregate according to its means of enjoying such advantages. It is laid down as a fundamental principle by political economists, that labour is the only source of wealth; and political economy treats mainly of the means of promoting the increase of national wealth, and of removing obstructions to its development.

WEALTH'GIVING, a. Yielding wealth.

WEAL'THIER, a. comp. More wealthy.

WEALTH'IEST, a. superl. Most wealthy.

WEALTH'ILY, adv. Richly.

WEALTH'INESS, n. State of being wealthy; richness.

WEALTH'Y, a. Rich; having large possessions in lands, goods, money, or securities, or larger than the generality of men; opulent; affluent. As wealth is a comparative thing, a man may be wealthy in one place, and not so in another. A man may be deemed wealthy in a village, who would not be so considered in London.—2. In political economy. [See WEALTH.]

WEAN, v. t. [Sax. wenan, gewænan, to accustom; from the root of wone, wont; gewunian, to delay; D. wenan, afwenan; G. entwohnen. See WONT.] 1. To separate from the breast, or from the mother's milk as food; to accustom and reconcile, as a child or other young animal, to a want or deprivation of the breast.

And the child grew and was weaned; Gen. xxi.

2. To detach or alienate, as the affections, from any object of desire; to reconcile to the want or loss of any thing; as, to wean the heart from temporal enjoyments.

WEAN, n. An infant; a child. [Scotch.]

WEANED, pp. Separated from the breast; accustomed or reconciled to the want of the breast or other object of desire.

WEAN'EL,† n. Same as weanling.

WEANING, ppr. Separating from the breast; accustoming or reconciling, as a young child or other animal, to a want of the breast; reconciling to the want of any object or desire.

WEANING, n. The act of separating a child from the partaking of its mother's milk as food, and of accustoming or reconciling it to the want of such food. The proper time for weaning must depend, in some measure, both on the development and health of the child, and the state and health of the mother.

WEANLING, n. A child or other animal newly weaned.

WEAPON, n. (wep'n.) [Sax. wæpn, wepn; D. and G. wapen. This word seems to be from some root signifying to strike, L. vapulo, our vulgar whap, awhap.] 1. Any instrument of offence; any thing used or designed to be used in destroying or annoying an enemy. The weapons of rude nations are clubs, stones, and bows and arrows. Modern weapons of war are swords, muskets, pistols, cannon, and the like.—2. An instrument for contest, or for combating enemies.

The weapons of our warfare are not carnal; 2 Cor. x.

3. An instrument of defence.—4. Weapons, in bot., arms; thorns, prickles, and stings, with which plants are furnished for defence; enumerated among the fulcres by Linnæus.

WEAPONED, a. (wep'nd.) Armed; furnished with weapons or arms; equipped.

WEAP'ONLESS, a. Unarmed; having no weapon.

WEAP'ON-SALVE,† n. [weapon and salve.] A salve which was supposed to cure the wound, by being applied to the weapon that made it.

WEAR, v. t. pret. Wore; pp. Worn. [W. gwariaw, to spend or consume; Sax. weran, werian, to carry, to wear, as arms or clothes.] 1. To waste or impair by rubbing or attrition; to lessen or diminish by time, use, or instruments. A current of water often wears a channel in limestone.—2. To carry appendant to the body, as clothes or weapons; as, to wear a coat or a robe; to wear a sword; to wear a crown.

On her white breast a sparkling cross she wore. Pope.

3. To have or exhibit an appearance; to bear; as, she wears a smile on her countenance.—4. To affect by degrees.

Trials wear us into a liking of what possibly, in the first essay, displeased us. Locke.

5. In navigation, to bring a vessel upon the other tack by turning her round, stern toward the wind. It is also written Veer.—To wear away, to consume; to impair, diminish, or destroy by gradual attrition or decay.—To wear off, to diminish by attrition or slow decay.—To wear out, to consume, to render useless by attrition or decay; as, to wear out a coat or a book.—2. To consume tediously; as, to wear out life in idle projects.—3. To harass; to tire.

He shall wear out the saints of the Most High; Dan. vii.

4. To waste the strength of; as, an old man worn out in the service of his country.

WEAR, v. i. To be wasted; to be diminished by attrition, by use, or by time.

Thou wilt surely wear away; Exod. xviii.

2. To be tediously spent.

Thus wore out night. Milton.

3. To be consumed by slow degrees. It is better to wear out, than to rust out.—To wear off, to pass away by degrees. The follies of youth wear off with age.

WEAR, n. The act of wearing; diminution by friction; as, the wear and tear of a garment.—2. The thing worn.—Wear and tear, the loss by wearing, the waste, diminution, decay, or injury which any thing sustains by ordinary use; as, the wear and tear of machinery; the wear and tear of furniture.—Wear and tear of a ship, its ordinary decay and deterioration arising from the prosecution of a voyage or voyages; and all those losses and damages which occur under ordinary circumstances, for which the insurers are not liable.

WEAR, n. [Sax. wær, wer; from the root of werian, to hold, defend, protect; D. waaren or weeren. See WARREN and GUARD.] 1. A dam in a river to stop and raise the water, for conducting it to a mill, for taking fish, for watering land, &c.—2. A fence of stakes or twigs set in a stream for catching fish. [This word is frequently spelt weir, and sometimes wier. See WEIR.]

WEARABLE, a. That can be worn.

WEARD, Sax. a warden, in names, denotes watchfulness or care; but it must not be confounded with ward, in toward.

WEARER, n. [from wear.] One who wears or carries as appendant to the body; as, the wearer of a cloak, a sword, or a crown.—2. That which wastes or diminishes.

WEARIABLE, a. That may become weary.

WEARIED, pp. Tired; fatigued.

WEARIFUL, a. Causing weariness; wearisome. [Rarely used.]

WEARIFULLY, adv. Wearisomely. [Rarely used.]

WEARILESS, a. Incessant. [Rarely used.]

WEARILY, adv. In a weary or tiresome manner.

WEARINESS, n. [from weary.] The state of being weary or tired; that lassitude or exhaustion of strength which is induced by labour; fatigue.

With weariness and wine oppress'd. Dryden.

2. Lassitude; uneasiness proceeding from continued waiting, disappointed expectation, or exhausted patience, or from other cause.

WEARING, ppr. Bearing on or appendant to the person; diminishing by friction; consuming.—2. a. Denoting what is worn; as, wearing apparel.

WEARING,† n. Clothes; garments.—2. In navigation. [See VEERING.]

WEARISH,† a. Boggy; watery.—2.† Weak; washy.

WEARISOME, a. [from weary.] Causing weariness; tiresome; tedious; fatiguing; as, a wearisome march; a wearisome day's work.

Wearisome nights are appointed to me; Job vii.

WEARISOMELY, adv. Tediously; so as to cause weariness.

WEARISOMENESS, n. The quality of exhausting strength or patience; tiresomeness; tediousness; as, the wearisomeness of toil, or of waiting long in anxious expectation.

WEARY, a. [Sax. werig; allied perhaps to wear.] 1. Having the strength much exhausted by toil or violent exertion; tired; fatigued. [It should be observed however that this word expresses less than tired, particularly when applied to a beast; as, a tired horse. It is followed by of, before the cause of fatigue; as, to be weary of marching; to be weary of reaping; to be weary of study.]—2. Having the patience exhausted, or the mind yielding to discouragement. He was weary of asking for redress.—3. Causing weariness; tiresome; as, a weary way; a weary life.

WEARY, v. t. [from the adjective.] To reduce or exhaust the physical strength of the body; to tire; to fatigue; as, to weary one's self with labour or travelling.

The people shall weary themselves for very vanity; Hab. ii.

2. To make impatient of continuance.

I stay too long by thee; I weary thee. Shak.

3. To harass by any thing irksome; as, to be wearied of waiting for the arrival of the post.—To weary out, to subdue or exhaust by fatigue.

WEARYING, ppr. Exhausting the strength of the body; fatiguing.

WEASAND, n. (s as z.) [Sax. wasend, wæsend; perhaps from the root of wheeze, and Goth. ond, Dan. aande, breath.] The windpipe or trachea; the canal through which air passes to and from the lungs.

WEASEL, n. (s as z.) [Sax. wesle; G. wiesel; D. weezel. We know not the meaning of this name. In G. wiese is a meadow.] Mustela, a genus of digitigrade carnivorous animals, belonging to the family Mustelidæ. The true weasels are distinguished by the length and slenderness of their bodies; the feet are short, the toes separate, and the claws sharp. The common weasel (M. vulgaris), inhabits many countries

Common Weasel (Mustela vulgaris).

of Europe, and is very abundant in North America. The body is extremely slender and arched, the head small and flattened, the neck very long, the legs short, and also the tail. It is of a reddish-brown colour above, white beneath; tail of the same colour as the body. It feeds on mice, rats, moles, and small birds, and is often useful as a destroyer of vermin in ricks, barns, and granaries. The ermine weasel, or ermine, is the M. erminea; the fitchet weasel, or polecat, is the M. putorius; the M. martes is the marten, and the M. zibellina is the sable. [See MUSTELIDÆ.]

WEASEL-COOT, n. A bird, the red headed smew, or Mergus minutus.

WEASEL-FACED, a. Having a thin sharp face like a weasel.

WEASEL-SNOUT, n. A British plant of the genus Galeobdolon, the G. luteum. [See GALEOBDOLON.]

WEATHER, n. (weth'er.) [Sax. weder, wæder, or wether; G. wetter; Sans. widara, a storm. The primary sense of this word, is air, wind, or atmosphere: probably the Gr. αἰθήρ, whence ether.] Properly, the air; hence, 1. The state of the air or atmosphere with respect to heat or cold, wetness or dryness, calm or storm, clearness or cloudiness, or any other meteorological phenomena; as, warm weather; cold weather; wet weather; dry weather; calm weather; tempestuous weather; fair weather; cloudy weather; hazy weather, and the like. The investigation of the various causes which determine the state of the atmosphere, and produce those changes which are incessantly taking place in its condition, forms the subjects of meteorology and climate. The state of the weather has in all ages and in every country, occupied a large share of the attention of naturalists, as well as of ordinary observers; but the subject is so complicated, and the circumstances to be taken into account so numerous, that no theory hitherto framed, can furnish rules for determining the order in which the changes of the weather succeed each other, or for predicting the state of the weather at a future time, with any degree of certainty.—2. Change of the state of the air.—3. Storm; tempest. [These last significations are not now in use, unless by a poetic license.]—Stress of weather, violent winds; force of tempests.

WEATHER, v. t. (weth'er.) To air: to expose to the air. [Rarely used.]—2. In seamen's language, to sail to the windward of something else; as, to weather a cape; to weather another ship. As this is often difficult, hence, 3. To bear up and resist, though with difficulty; as, to weather the storm.—4. To endure a tempest unharmed, through an exertion of nautical skill; as, the pilot that weathered the storm. —To weather a point, to gain or accomplish it against opposition.—To weather out, to endure; to hold out to the end; as, to weather out a storm.—Weather is used with several words, either as an adjective, or as forming part of a compound word.

WEATH'ER-BEATEN, a. [weather and beaten.] Beaten or harassed by the weather.

WEATH'ER-BIT, or BITT, n. A turn of the cable about the end of the windlass, so as to prevent it from slipping round the windlass when the ship is at anchor.

WEATH'ER BOARD, n. That side of a ship which is toward the wind; the windward side. So in other words, weather signifies toward the wind or windward; as, in weather-bow, weather-braces, weather-gage, weather-lifts, weather-quarter, weather-shrouds, weather-side, weather-shore, &c.—2. A board forming a close junction between the shingling of a roof, and the side of the building beneath, usually at the ends where there is no cornice.

WEATH'ER-BOARD, v. t. To nail boards lapping one over another, in order to prevent rain, snow, &c., from penetrating them.

WEATH'ER-BOARDING, n. In arch., boards nailed with a lap on each other, to prevent the penetration of the rain and snow.

WEATH'ER-BOARDS, n. Pieces of planks placed in the ports of a ship, when laid up in ordinary. They are fixed in an inclined position, so as to turn off the rain without preventing the circulation of air.

WEATH'ER-BOUND, a. Delayed by bad weather.

WEATH'ER-CLOTHS, n. Long pieces of canvass or tarpauling used to preserve the hammocks from injury by the weather when stowed, or to defend persons from the wind and spray.

WEATH'ER-COCK, n. [weather and cock.] Something in the shape of a cock placed on the top of a spire, which by turning, shows the direction of the wind; a vane, or weather-vane.—2. Any thing or person that turns easily and frequently; a fickle, inconstant person.

WEATH'ER-DRIVEN, n. [weather and driven.] Driven by winds or storms; forced by stress of weather.

WEATH'ERED, pp. Passed to the windward; passed with difficulty.—2. In mineral., a term applied to a specimen when the surface is altered in colour, texture, or composition, or the edges rounded off, by exposure to the weather. In geol., a rock is said to be weathered, when its surface undergoes similar changes from the same cause.—3. In arch., a term applied to surfaces which have a small slope or inclination given to them to prevent water lodging on them; as window sills, the tops of classic cornices, and the upper surface of most flat stone-work.

WEATH'ER-FEND, v. t. [weather and fend.] To shelter.

WEATH'ER-GAGE, } n. [weather
WEATH'ER-GAUGE, } and gage.] Something that shows the weather. Qu.—2. In mar. lan., the advantage of the wind; the state or situation of one ship to the windward of another, when in action.—3. Advantage of position; superiority. A ship is said to have the weather-gage of another, when she is at the windward of her.

WEATH'ER-GALL, n. A secondary rainbow or a portion of a rainbow, the appearance of which is said to indicate bad weather. [Local.]

WEATH'ER-GLASS, n. [weather and glass.] An instrument to indicate the state of the atmosphere. This word is generally applied to the barometer; but it is also applied to other instruments for measuring atmospheric changes, and indicating the state of the weather; as, the thermometer, hygrometer, manometer, and anemometer.

WEATH'ER-HELM, n. [weather and helm.] A ship is said to carry a weather-helm, when owing to her having a tendency to gripe, the helm requires to be kept a little to windward, or a-weather, in order to prevent her head from coming up in the wind while sailing closehauled.

WEATH'ER-HOUSE, n. A piece of mechanism to show the state of the weather.

WEATH'ERING, ppr. Passing or sailing to the windward; passing with difficulty.

WEATH'ERING, n. Exposure to the weather. In geol., the action of the elements on a rock in altering its colour, texture, or composition, or in rounding off its edges. In arch., inclining a surface so as to throw off the water.

WEATH'ERLY, a. A ship is said to be weatherly, when she holds a good wind; that is, when she presents o great a lateral resistance to the water while sailing closehauled, that she makes very little lee-way.

WEATH'ERMOST, a. [weather and most.] Being furthest to the windward.

WEATH'ER-MOULDINGS, n. In arch., dripstones or canopies over doors and windows, intended to throw off the rain.

WEATH'ER-PROOF, a. [weather and proof.] Proof against rough weather.

WEATH'ER-QUARTER, n. The quarter of a ship which is on the windward side.

WEATH'ER-ROLL, n. [weather and roll.] The roll of a ship to the windward, in a heavy sea, upon the beam; opposed to lee-lurch.

WEATH'ER-SHORE, n. The shore which lies to windward of a ship.

WEATH'ER-SIDE, n. The weather-side of a ship under sail is that side upon which the wind blows, or which is to windward.

WEATH'ER-SPY, n. [weather and spy.] A star-gazer; one that foretells the weather. [Little used.]

WEATH'ER-TIDE, n. [weather and tide.] The tide which sets against the lee-side of a ship, impelling her to the windward.

WEATH'ER-TILING, n. In arch., tiles used to cover wooden erections to protect them from the weather.

WEATH'ER-TINTED, a. Tinted by the weather.

WEATH'ER-WISE, a. [weather and wise.] Skilful in foreseeing the changes or state of the weather.

WEATH'ER-WISER,† n. Something that foreshows the weather.

WEAVE, v. t. pret. Wove; pp. Woven, wove. The regular form, weaved, is rarely or never used. [Sax. wefan; G. weben; D. weeven; Pers. baftan; Gr. ὑφαω.] 1. To unite threads of any kind in such a manner as to form cloth. This is done by crossing the threads by means of a shuttle. The modes of weaving, and the kinds of texture, are various. The threads first laid in length are called the warp; those which cross them in the direction of the breadth, are called the weft or woof.—2. To unite any thing flexible; as, to weave twigs.—3. To unite by intermixture or close connection; as, a form of religion woven into the civil government.—4. To interpose; to insert.

This weaves itself perforce into my business. Shak.

WEAVE, v. i. To practise weaving; to work with a loom.

WEAVER, n. One who weaves; one whose occupation is to weave.

WEAVER-FISH, n. A fish of the genus Trachinus. [See WEEVER.]

WEAVERS, or WEAVER BIRDS, n. The English name of a sub-family of Fringillidæ or finches, called Ploceinæ, and including the genera Ploceus, Euplectes, &c. The weavers are found in both hemispheres, and many of those of the Eastern build their nests with remarkable skill, by intertwining blades of grass, &c., hence the English name. Some species build their nests separate and singly, and hang them from slender branches of trees and shrubs, but others build in companies, numerous nests suspended from the branches of a tree being under one roof, though each one forms a separate compartment, and has a separate entrance. The Ploceus icterocephalus, or yellow-crowned weaver, is a native of S. Africa, and constructs an isolated pensile kidney-shaped nest, about seven inches long by four and a half broad, with an opening in the side. The Euplectes flammiceps, or crimson-crowned weaver, is reputed to be a native of Senegal, having the ears and sides of the head crimson, the chin and body beneath black, crown red, wings and tail blackish. Naturalists are not quite agreed as to whether the nests of the weaver bird are built in their own peculiar manner, as a means of preservation against rain, or against the attacks of serpents and small quadrupeds.

Yellow-crowned Weaver and Nest (P. icterocephalus).

Crimson-crowned Weaver (Euplectes flammiceps).

WEAVING, ppr. Forming cloth by intermixture of threads.

WEAVING, n. The act or art of arranging in a machine called a loom, yarn or thread of various materials, as flax, cotton, wool, silk, &c., so as to form cloth. There are various kinds of weaving, such as plain weaving, pattern weaving, double weaving, cross weaving, chain weaving, pile weaving, &c; but in all kinds of textile fabrics, of whatever material, one system of threads, called the woof or weft, is made to pass alternately under and over another system of threads called the warp, so as to resemble when held up to the light a piece of close net-work. Weaving is performed by the hand in what are called hand-looms, or by steam in what are called power-looms. Weaving, in the most general sense of the term, comprehends not only those textile fabrics which are prepared in the loom, but likewise net-work, lace-work, and hosiery. The invention of weaving is ascribed to the Egyptians, but the art has received many modifications and great improvements in modern times.—2. The task or work to be done in making cloth.

WEAZEN, a. (wē'z'n.) Thin; lean; withered; wizened; as, a weazen face.

WEB, n. [Sax. web; Sw. väf. See WEAVE.] 1. Texture of threads; that which is woven in a loom; a sort of tissue or texture formed of threads interwoven with each other; some of which are extended in length, and are called the warp; others are drawn across and called the weft or woof; plexus; any thing woven. Penelope devised a web to deceive her wooers.—2. Locally, a piece of linen cloth.—3. A dusky film that forms over the eye and hinders the sight; suffusion.—4. Some part of a sword. Qu. net-work of the handle or hilt.—5. In ship-building, the thin partition on the inside of the rim, and between the spokes of a sheave. — 6. In ornithology, the membrane which unites the toes of many water-fowls.—7. In anat., applied to that which resembles a web; as the arachnoid membrane; cellular tissue, &c.—Spider's web, a plexus of very delicate threads or filaments which a spider spins from its bowels, and which serves as a net to catch flies or other insects for its food.—Web of a coulter, is the thin sharp part.

WEB'BED, a [from web.] Having the toes united by a membrane or web; as, the webbed feet of aquatic fowls.

WEB'BER,† n. A weaver.

WEB'BING, n. A strong fabric of hemp, two or three inches wide, made for supporting the seats of stuffed chairs, sofas, &c.

WEB'BY, a. Relating to a web; resembling a web.

WEB-FOOTED, a. [web and foot.] Having the toes united by a membrane; palmiped. A goose, or duck, is a web-footed fowl.

WEBSTER,† n. A weaver.

WED, v. t. [Sax. weddian, to covenant, to promise, to marry; Sw. vädja; Dan. vedder, to wager; W. gwezu; L. vador, to give bail, or fœdus, a league; probably both are of one family.] 1. To marry; to take for husband or for wife.

Since the day
I saw thee first, and wedded thee. Milton.

2. To join in marriage.

And Adam, wedded to another Eve,
Shall live with her. Milton.

3. To unite closely in affection; to attach firmly. We are apt to be wedded to our own customs and opinions.

Men are wedded to their lusts. Tillotson.

4. To unite for ever.

Thou art wedded to calamity. Shak.

5. To espouse; to take part with.

They wedded his cause.† Clarendon.

WED, v. i To marry; to contract matrimony.

When shall I wed? Shak.

WED, n. A pledge. [See WAD.]

WED'DED, pp. Married; closely attached.—2. a. Pertaining to matrimony; as, wedded life; wedded bliss.

WED'DING, ppr. Marrying; uniting with in matrimony.

WED'DING, n. Marriage; nuptials; nuptial ceremony; nuptial festivities.

WED'DING-CLOTHES, n [wedding and clothes.] Garments for a bride or a bridegroom, to be worn at marriage.

WED'DING-DAY, n. [wedding and day.] The day of marriage.

WED'DING-FEAST, n. [wedding and feast.] A feast or entertainment prepared for the guests at a wedding.

WEDGE, n. [Sax. wecg, wæcg; Dan. veg; D. wig. This word signifies a mass, a lump.] 1. A mass of metal; as, a wedge of gold or silver; Josh. vii. —2. A piece of wood or metal, thick at one end and sloping to a thin edge at the other, used in splitting wood, rocks, &c. The wedge is a body contained under two triangular and three rectangular surfaces; as in the figure, where the triangles A B E, D C F, are the ends, the rectangles A D E F, B C E F, the sides, and the rectangle A B D C, the top. The wedge is one of the mechanical powers, and is used for splitting blocks of timber and stone; for producing great pressure, as in the oil-press; and for raising immense weights, as when a ship is raised by wedges driven under the keel, &c. If the power applied to the top were of the nature of a continued pressure, the wedge might be regarded as a double inclined plane, and the power would be to the resistance to be overcome, as the breadth of the back, D C, to the length of the side, D F, on the supposition that the resistance acts perpendicularly to the side. But since the power is usually that of percussion with a hammer, every stroke of which causes a tremor in the wedge, which throws off for the instant the resistance on its sides, no certain theory can be laid down regarding it. To calculate the power, we require the additional elements of weight of the hammer, momentum of the blow, and the intervals between the blows; and, further, the amount of tremor in the wedge and its antagonism to the resistance on the sides. All that is known with certainty respecting the theory of the wedge is that its mechanical power is increased by diminishing the angle of penetration D F C. All cutting and penetrating instruments, as knives, swords, chisels, razors, axes, nails, pins, needles, &c., may be considered as wedges. The angle of the wedge in these cases is more or less acute, according to the purposes to which it is to be applied. The utility of the wedge, in many cases, depends on the great friction which arises between its surface and that of the substance which it divides; for in consequence of this friction it is retained in the position to which it is driven, and prevented from recoiling between the successive blows.—3. Something in the form of a wedge. Sometimes bodies of troops are drawn up in the form of a wedge.

WEDĠE, v. t. To cleave with a wedge; to rive. [Little used.]—2. To drive as a wedge is driven; to crowd or compress closely. We were wedged in by the crowd.—3. To force, as a wedge forces its way; as, to wedge one's way. —4. To fasten with a wedge or with wedges; as, to wedge on a scythe; to wedge in a rail or a piece of timber.—5. To fix in the manner of a wedge.

> Wedg'd in the rocky shoals, and sticking fast. Dryden.

WEDĠ'ED, pp. Split with a wedge; fastened with a wedge; closely compressed.

WEDĠE-SHĀPED, a. [wedge and shape.] Having the shape of a wedge; cuneiform. A wedge-shaped leaf is broad and truncate at the summit, and tapering down to the base, as in Saxifraga cuneifolia. [See CUNEIFORM.]

WEDĠE'WOOD'S PYROMETER. See PYROMETER.

WEDĠE'WOOD-WARE, n. [from the name of the inventor.] A superior kind of semivitrified pottery, without much glaze, but capable of receiving all kinds of ornament, by means of metallic oxides and ochres. Admirable imitations of Etruscan and other vases have been executed in this ware. It is manufactured in Staffordshire.

WEDĠ'ING, ppr. Cleaving with a wedge; fastening with wedges; compressing closely.

WED'LOCK, n. [Qu. wed and lock, or Sax. lac, a gift.] Marriage; matrimony.

WED'LOCK, v. t. To marry. [Little used.]

WED'LOCKED, pp. United in marriage. [Little used.]

WEDNESDAY, n. (wenz'day) [Sax. Wodensdæg, Woden's day; Sw. Odensdag or Onsdag; from Woden or Odin, a deity or chief among the northern nations of Europe.] The fourth day of the week; the next day after Tuesday, consecrated by our Scandinavian ancestors to Woden, the Mercury of northern nations.

WEE, a. [contracted from G. wenig.] Small; little. [Scotch.]

WĒECHELM, WITCH'-ELM, } n. A species of elm. [See WYCH-ELM.]

WEED, n. [Sax. weod.] 1. The general name of any plant that is useless or troublesome. The word therefore has no definite application to any particular plant or species of plants; but whatever plants grow among corn, grass, or in hedges, and which are either of no use to man or injurious to crops, are denominated weeds.—2. Any kind of unprofitable substance among ores in mines, as mundic or marcasite. [Local.]

WEED, n. [Sax. wæd, wæda, a vestment, any garment, that which is put on.] 1. Properly, a garment, as in Spenser, but now used only in the plural, weeds, for the mourning apparel of a female; as, a widow's weeds. —2.† An upper garment.—3. In Scotland, a general name for any sudden illness from cold or relapse, usually accompanied by febrile symptoms, taken by females after confinement, or during nursing.

WEED, v. t. [Sax. weodian; D. weeden.] 1. To free from noxious plants; as, to weed corn or onions; to weed a garden. —2. To take away, as noxious plants; as, to weed a writing of invectives.—3. To free from any thing hurtful or offensive; as, to weed a kingdom of bad subjects.—4. To root out vice; as, to weed the hearts of the young.

WĒEDED, pp. Freed from weeds or whatever is noxious.

WĒEDER, n. One that weeds or frees from any thing noxious.—2. A weeding tool.

WĒEDER-CLIPS, n. Weeding-sheers.

> I turned aside my weeder-clips,
> And spared the symbol dear. Burns.

[Local.]

WĒEDERY,† n. Weeds.—2. A place for weeds.

WĒED-GROWN, a. Overgrown with weeds.

WĒED-HOOK, WĒEDING-HOOK, } n. [weed and hook.] A hook used for cutting away or extirpating weeds.

WĒEDING, ppr. Freeing from weeds or whatever is noxious to growth.

WĒEDING, n. The operation of freeing from noxious weeds, as a crop. Weeding is performed by the hand simply, or by the hand aided by various instruments, as pincers, forks, spuds, &c.

WĒEDING-CHISEL, n. (s as z.) A tool with a divided chisel point, for cutting the roots of large weeds within the ground.

WĒEDING-FORCEPS, WĒEDING-PINCERS, WĒEDING-TONGS, } n. An instrument for pulling up some sorts of plants in weeding, as thistles.

WĒEDING-FORK, n. A strong three-pronged fork, used in clearing ground of weeds.

WĒEDING-RHIM, n. An implement somewhat like the frame of a wheelbarrow, used for tearing up weeds on summer fallows, &c.; used in Kent.

WĒEDING-SHEARS, n. Shears used for cutting weeds.

WĒEDING-TOOL, n. An implement for pulling up, digging up, or cutting weeds.

WĒEDLESS, a. Free from weeds or noxious matter.

WĒEDY, a. Consisting of weeds; as, weedy trophies.—2. Abounding with weeds; as, weedy grounds; a weedy garden; weedy corn.

WEEK, n. [Sax. weoc; D. week; G. woche.] 1. The space of seven days; a cycle of time which has been used from the earliest ages in Eastern countries, and is now universally adopted over the Christian and Mohammedan worlds. It has been commonly regarded as a memorial of the creation of the world in that space of time. It is besides the most obvious and convenient division of the lunar or natural month.—2. In scripture, a prophetic week, is a week of years, or seven years; Dan. ix.

WĒEK-DAY, n. [week and day.] Any day of the week except the sabbath.

WĒEKLY, a. Coming, happening, or done once a week; hebdomadary; as, a weekly payment of bills; a weekly gazette; a weekly allowance.

WĒEKLY, adv. Once a week; by hebdomadal periods; as, each performs service weekly.

WEEL,† n. [See WELL. Sax. wæl, from weallan, to boil.] A whirlpool.

WEEL, WĒELY, } n. A kind of twiggen trap or snare for fish.

WEEN, v. i. [Sax. wenan, to think, suppose, or hope, and to wean. The sense is to set, fix, or hold in the mind; G. wähnen, to imagine; D. waanen.] To think; to imagine; to fancy. [Obsolete, except in burlesque.]

WĒENING,† ppr. Thinking; imagining.

WEEP, v. i. pret. and pp. Wept. Weeped, we believe, is never used. [Sax. wepan; evidently the same word as whoop. See WHOOP. The primary sense is to cry out.] 1. To express sorrow, grief, or anguish by outcry. This is the original sense. But in present usage, to manifest and express grief by outcry or by shedding tears.

> They all wept sore, and fell on Paul's neck, and kissed him; Acts xx.

> Phocion was rarely seen to weep or to laugh. Mitford.

2. To shed tears from any passion. Persons sometimes weep for joy.—3. To lament; to complain; Numb. xi.

WEEP, v. t. To lament; to bewail; to bemoan.

> We wand'ring go
> Through dreary wastes, and weep each other's woe. Pope.

2. To shed moisture; as, to weep tears of joy.

> Groves whose rich trees wept od'rous gum and balm. Milton.

3. To drop; as, the weeping amber.—4. To abound with wet; as, weeping grounds.

WĒEPED, pp. Lamented; bewailed; shed tears.

WĒEPER, n. One who weeps; one who sheds tears.—2. A sort of white linen cuff on a mourning dress, worn as a badge of mourning.—3. A species of monkey, the Simia capucina.—4. In arch., weepers are the statues at the base of a funeral monument.

WĒEPING, ppr. or a. Lamenting; shedding tears.

WĒEPING, n. Lamentation.

WĒEPING-BIRCH, n. A tree or shrub of the genus Betula, the B. pendula, with drooping branches. It is very common in different parts of Europe. It differs from the common birch not only in its weeping habit, but also in its young shoots being quite smooth, bright chestnut brown when ripe, and then covered with little white warts.

WEEPING-CROSSES, n. In arch., the name given to stone crosses at which penances were commonly finished with weeping, and signs of contrition.

WEEPINGLY, adv. In a weeping manner.

WEEPING-ROCK, n. [weep and rock.] A porous rock from which water gradually issues.

WEEPING-SPRING, n. A spring that slowly discharges water.

WEEPING-WILLOW, n. A species of willow, the Salix Babylonica, whose branches grow very long and slender, and hang down nearly in a perpendicular direction. It is a native of the Levant, and is said to have been first planted in England by the celebrated Alexander Pope.

WEERISH,† a. Insipid; weak; washy; surly.

WEET,† v. i. pret. Wot. [Sax. witan; D. weeten; G. wissen; Russ. vidayu; allied probably to L. video, Gr. ιδω.] To know.

WEET, n. Rain; moisture. [Scotch.]

WEETLESS,† a. Unknowing.

WEE'VER, n. The name given to acanthopterygious fishes of the genus Trachinus, belonging to the perch family. About four species are well known, two of which are found in the British seas, viz., the dragon-weever or sting-bull T. draco, about ten or twelve inches long, and the lesser weever or sting fish. They inflict wounds with the spines of their first dorsal fin, which are much dreaded. Their flesh is esteemed.

Weever (Trachinus draco).

WEE'VIL, n. [Sax. wefl; G. wibel.] The name applied to coleopterous insects of the family Curculionidæ, distinguished by the prolongation of the head, so as to form a sort of snout or proboscis. Many of the weevils are a, Insect natural size; b, Insect magnified; c, Larva; d, Egg, both magnified.

Corn Weevil (Calandra granaria).

dangerous enemies to the agriculturist, destroying grain, fruit, flowers, leaves, and stems. The corn weevil, (Calandra granaria,) in its larva state is exceedingly destructive to grain in granaries.

WEE'VILY, a. Infested with weevils.

WEEZEL, a. Thin; sharp; as, a weezel face. [Local. See WEASEL.]

WEFT, old pret. of Wave.

WEFT, n. [from weave.] The woof of cloth; the threads that cross the warp. —2. A web; a thing woven.

WEFT,† n. A thing waved, waived, or cast away. [See WAIF.]

WEFT'AGE,† n. Texture.

WEGOTISM, n. The frequent use of the pronoun we, weism. [A modern cant term.]

WEHRGELD. See WEREGILD.

WEIGH, v. t. (wā.) Sax. wæg, weg, a balance; wægan, to weigh, to bear, to carry, L. veho; G. wägen; Dan. vejer, to weigh; Russ. vaga, a balance; Amharic, awaki, weight. See WAG.] 1. To examine by the balance; to ascertain the weight, that is, the force with which a thing tends to the centre of gravity; to determine by the balance the weights of bodies by shewing their relation to the weights of some other bodies which are known, or which are assumed as general standards of weight; as, to weigh sugar; to weigh gold.—2. To be equivalent to in weight; that is, according to the Saxon sense of the verb, to lift to an equipoise a weight on the other side of the fulcrum. Thus when a body balances a weight of twenty-eight pounds avoirdupois, it lifts or bears it, and is said to weigh so much. It weighs a quarter of a hundred weight.—3. To raise; to lift; as an anchor from the ground, or any other body; as, to weigh anchor; to weigh an old hulk.—Under-weigh. A vessel is said to be under-weigh, when she has weighed anchor or left her moorings. It is also written under-way.—4. To pay, allot, or take by weight.

> They weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver; Zech. xi.

5. To ponder in the mind; to consider or examine for the purpose of forming an opinion or coming to a conclusion; as, to weigh the advantages and disadvantages of a scheme.

> Regard not who it is which speaketh, but weigh only what is spoken. Hooker.

6. To compare by the scales.

> Here in nice balance truth with gold she weighs. Pope.

7. To regard; to consider as worthy of notice.

> I weigh not you. Shak.

To weigh down, to overbalance.—2. To oppress with weight; to depress.

WEIGH, v. i. To have weight; as, to weigh lighter or heavier.—2. To be considered as important; to have weight in the intellectual balance. This argument weighs with the considerate part of the community.—3. To bear heavily; to press hard.

> Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff,
> Which weighs upon the heart. Shak.

To weigh down, to sink by its own weight.

WEIGH, n. A certain quantity or measure. [See WEY.]

WEIGHABLE, a. That may be weighed.

WEIGHAGE, n. A rate or toll paid for weighing goods.

WEIGH-BRIDGE, n. A weighing-machine for weighing carts and waggons with their load.

WEIGHED, pp. Examined by the scales; having the weight ascertained. —2. Considered.—3. a. Experienced; as, a young man not weighed in state affairs.

WEIGHER, n. One who weighs.—2. An officer whose duty is to weigh commodities.

WEIGH'-HOUSE, n. A place for testing the weight or bulk of any produce brought for sale into a city or town to be sold, in order to fix the amount of municipal dues to be paid thereon. [Both word and custom are now disused.]

WEIGHING, ppr. Examining by scales; considering.

WEIGHING, n. The act of ascertaining weight; the process by which the measure of the force by which any body, or a given portion of any substance gravitates to the earth, is ascertained; the process of determining the quantity of matter; or the number of grains, ounces, pounds, hundredweights, &c., which any substance contains. This is effected by balances of various kinds. Accurate weighing is of great importance, since in general it affords one of the best practical means of ascertaining the quantity of matter in bodies, and thence the values of the greater part of the necessaries of life. It is also of great importance in many philosophical experiments. Troy weight is used in philosophical experiments, and in delicate weighing, and the weight is usually reckoned in grains.—2. As much as is weighed at once; as, a weighing of beef.

WEIGHING-CAGE, n. A cage in which small living animals may be conveniently weighed; as pigs, sheep, calves, &c.

WEIGHING-HOUSE, n. A building furnished with a dock and other conveniences for weighing commodities and ascertaining the tonnage of boats to be used on a canal.

WEIGHING-MACHINE, n. Any contrivance by which the weight of an object may be ascertained; as the common balance, spring balance, steelyard, &c., but the term is generally applied to those contrivances which are employed for ascertaining the weight of heavy bodies; as the machine usually employed at the toll-gates on roads for the purpose of determining the weights of laden carriages; machines for weighing cattle; machines for weighing heavy goods, as large casks, bales, &c. Some of these are constructed on the principle of the lever or steelyard, others on that of a combination of levers, and others on that of the spring-balance. They are also called weigh-bridges.

WEIGHT, n. (wāte.) [Sax. wiht; D. wigt; G. gewicht. See WEIGH.] 1. The quantity of a body, ascertained by the balance; that property of bodies in virtue of which they tend towards the earth's centre of gravity. In a strictly philosophical sense, weight is the measure of the force of gravity, and not gravity itself. Gravity may be considered as a force acting on each of the elementary particles of a body urging it downwards; whereas the weight of a body is the product of the gravity of a single particle, by the number of particles. The weights of two bodies are to one another as the quantities of matter in those bodies; and two bodies are of equal weight which counterpoise each other, when placed at the ends of equal arms of a self-poising lever. As weight is the measure of the force of gravity, it follows that the weight of a body must be increased or diminished according as the force of gravity is increased or diminished. Hence a body that weighs, for instance, one pound at the level of the sea, will, if carried to the top of a mountain, weigh less than a pound, the force of gravity being inversely as the square of the distance from the earth's centre. The diminution of weight, however, at the top of the mountain, could not be indicated by a common balance, because in this instrument, both the weight and its counterpoise are in every situation equally affected by gravity; but if a body that weighs a pound at the level of the sea, be weighed at the top of a mountain by means of an accurately constructed spring-balance, the diminution of weight which it sustains can be ascertained. It must also be remembered, when weight is to be very accurately taken, that every body is buoyed up to a certain extent by the air; and the weight of a body in air is less than it would be in a vacuum, by the weight of its own bulk of air. Now the air varies in weight in a manner depending upon the temperature, the quantity of moisture contained in it, and other causes. In measuring standards of weight, therefore, close attention must be paid to the state of the air at the time of weighing, and also to the substance weighed.—2. In commerce, the measure of the force by which any body, or a given portion of any substance gravitates to the earth. A mass of iron, lead, brass, or other metal, to be used for ascertaining the weight of other bodies; as, an ounce weight, a pound weight, a stone weight, &c. Three systems of weights are admitted as standards in this country: viz., Troy weight used for weighing gold, silver, and precious stones; apothecaries' weight, used for the combination of drugs; and avoirdupois weight, used for all other commodities estimated by weight.—Standard unit of weight, a body selected as a standard by comparison, with which the weights of other bodies may be determined, and all other weights used in commerce measured and adjusted. By the Act of Parliament, 1824, the standard brass weight of 1 pound troy, made in the year 1758, then in the custody of the clerk of the House of Commons, was declared to be the original and genuine standard measure of weight, from which all other weights were to be derived, computed and ascertained; and that $\frac{1}{12}$ of the said pound should be reckoned an ounce, $\frac{1}{20}$ of said ounce, a pennyweight, and $\frac{1}{24}$ of said pennyweight a grain, so that 5760 such grains were to constitute a pound troy, also 7000 such grains were to be a pound avoirdupois. The standard pound, however, was destroyed by the burning of the houses of parliament in 1834, and since that time there has been no legal standard unit of weight.—3. In mech., the resistance to be overcome by a machine, whether in raising, sustaining, or moving any heavy body. This resistance is so named, because whatever it be, a weight of equivalent effect may be found. The force which is employed to sustain or overcome the weight or resistance, is called the power.—4. A ponderous mass; something heavy.

> A man leaps better with weights in his hands Bacon.

5. Pressure; burden; as, the weight of grief; weight of care; weight of business; weight of government.—6 Importance; power; influence; efficacy; consequence; moment; impressiveness; as, an argument of great weight; a consideration of vast weight. The dignity of a man's character adds weight to his words.

WEIGHTILY, adv. Heavily; ponderously.—2. With force or impressiveness; with moral power.

WEIGHTINESS, n. Ponderousness; gravity; heaviness.—2. Solidity; force; impressiveness; power of convincing; as, the weightiness of an argument.—3. Importance.

WEIGHTLESS, a. Having no weight; light.

WEIGHTY, a. Having great weight; heavy; ponderous; as, a weighty body. —2. Important; forcible; momentous; adapted to turn the balance in the mind, or to convince; as, weighty reasons; weighty matters; weighty considerations or arguments.—3.† Rigorous; severe; as, our weightier judgment.

WEIR, n. [Sax. wær, wer; D. waaren, or weeren.] A dam erected across a river, to stop and raise the water, either for the purpose of taking fish, of conveying a stream to a mill, or of maintaining the water at the level required for navigating it, or for purposes of irrigation. — 2. A fence of twigs or stakes set in a stream for catching fish. [See WEAR.]

WEIRD, n. A spell or charm. [Scotch.]

WEIRD, n. Fate; destiny; as, to dree (bear) one's weird. [Scotch.]

WEIRD,† a. Skilled in witchcraft.

WEISM, n. The frequent use of the pronoun we. [A modern cant term. See WEGOTISM.]

WEIVE,† for Waive.

WELAWAY,† an exclamation expressive of grief or sorrow, equivalent to alas. It is a compound of Sax. wa, wo, and la, oh. The original is wa-la, which is doubtless the origin of our common exclamation, O la, and to this, wa, wo, is added. The true orthography would be wa la wa.

WELCH. See WELSH.

WELCH'GLAIVE, n. In armour, a kind of bill five or six feet long.

WELCHMAN. See WELSHMAN.

WEL'COME, a. [Sax. wil-cuma; well and come; that is, your coming is pleasing to me.] 1. Received with gladness; admitted willingly to the house, entertainment, and company; as, a welcome guest.—2. Grateful; pleasing; as, a welcome present; welcome news. —3. Free to have or enjoy gratuitously. You are welcome to the use of my library.—To bid welcome, to receive with professions of kindness.

WEL'COME, is used elliptically for you are welcome.

> Welcome, great monarch, to your own. Dryden.

Welcome to our house, an herb.

WEL'COME, n. Salutation of a new comer.

> Welcome ever smiles. Shak.

2. Kind reception of a guest or new comer. We entered the house and found a ready welcome.

> Truth finds an entrance and a welcome too. South.

WEL'COME, v. t. [Sax. wilcumian.] To salute a new comer with kindness; or to receive and entertain hospitably, gratuitously, and cheerfully.

> Thus we salute thee with our early song,
> And welcome thee, and wish thee long. Milton.

WEL'COMED, pp. Received with gladness and kindness.

WEL'COMELY, adv. In a welcome manner.

WEL'COMENESS, n. Gratefulness; agreeableness; kind reception.

WEL'COMER, n. One who salutes or receives kindly a new comer.

WEL'COMING, ppr. Saluting or receiving with kindness a new comer or guest.

WELD, } n. A plant used by dyers to WOLD, } give a yellow colour, and sometimes called dyers' weed. It is much cultivated in Kent for the London

Weld (Reseda luteola).

dyers. It is the Reseda luteola of the botanists.

WELD,† v. t. To wield.

WELD, v. t. [Sw. välla, to weld; G. wellen, to join; D. wellen, to well, to spring, to solder.] To unite or hammer into firm union, as two pieces of iron, when heated almost to fusion.

WELD'ED, pp. Forged or beat into union in an intense heat.

WELD'ER, n. One who welds iron.— 2.† In Ireland, a manager; an actual occupant.

WELD'ING, ppr. Uniting in an intense heat.

WELD'ING, n. Most usually applied to iron. The process of uniting together two or more pieces of iron, or iron and steel, when heated to whiteness, by means of pressure or hammering. This union is so complete that when two bars of iron are properly welded, the place of junction is as strong relatively to its thickness, as any other part of the bar, nor is there any appearance of junction. Iron and platinum are the only metals capable of being welded.

WELD'ING-HEAT, n. The heat necessary for welding iron bars, which is usually estimated at from 60° to 90° of Wedgewood's pyrometer.

WEL'FARE, n. [well and fare, a good going; G. wohlfahrt; D. welvaart.] 1. Exemption from misfortune, sickness, calamity, or evil; the enjoyment of health and the common blessings of life; prosperity; happiness; applied to persons.—2. Exemption from any unusual evil or calamity; the enjoyment of peace and prosperity, or the ordinary blessings of society and civil government; applied to states.

WELK, v. i. [G. and D. welken, to wither, to fade, to decay; primarily to shrink or contract, as things in drying, whence the Saxon weolc, a whilk or whelk, a shell; from its wrinkles.] To decline; to fade; to decay; to fall.

> When ruddy Phœbus 'gins to welk in west.† Spenser.

WELK, v. t. To contract; to shorten.

> Now sad winter welked hath the day. Spenser.

[This word is obsolete. But its signification has heretofore been misunderstood. See WILT.]

WELK, n. See WHELK.

WELK'ED, pp. or a. Contracted into wrinkles or ridges.

Horns welk'd and wav'd like the enridged sea.† Shak.

WELK'IN, n. [Sax. wolc, wolcen, a cloud, the air, ether, the vault of heaven; G. wolke, a cloud. Qu. Sax. wealcan, to roll, to full.] The visible regions of the air; the vault of heaven. [This is obsolete, unless in poetry.]—Welkin eye, in Shakspeare, is interpreted by Johnson, a blue eye, from welkin, the sky; by Todd, a rolling eye, from Sax. wealcan, to roll; and by Entinck, a languishing eye. [See WELK.]

WELK'ING, ppr. Fading; declining; contracting.

WELL, n. [Sax. well, a spring or fountain; wellan, to well, to boil or bubble, to spring, to rise; D. wel, wellen, id.; G. quelle, a spring; quellen, to spring, to issue forth, to gush; to well; to swell; wallen, to swell. In G. welle is a wave. On this word we suppose swell to be formed.] 1. A spring; a fountain; the issuing of water from the earth.

Begin then, sisters of the sacred well. Milton.

2. A pit or cylindrical hole, sunk perpendicularly into the earth to such a depth as to reach a supply of water, and walled with stone to prevent the earth from caving in.—Artesian wells. WERE, pron. (wer), which, when prolonged, becomes ware. This is used as the imperfect tense plural of be; we were, you were, they were; and in some other tenses. It is the Danish verb værer, to be, to exist, Sw. vara, and in origin has no connection with be, nor with was. It is united with be, to supply its want of tenses, as went is with go.
WERE, n. A dam. [See WEIR.]
WER'EGILD, / WER'EGELD, / WEHR'GELD, n. [Sax. wer, man, and the estimated value of a man, and gild, geld, money.] Among the Anglo-Saxons and ancient Teutonic nations generally, a kind of fine for manslaughter, wounds, &c., by paying which the offender got rid of every further obligation or punishment. The fine or compensation due by the offender varied in amount according to his rank or station, and that of the person killed or injured, and also according to the nature of the crime. It was in general paid to the relatives of him who had been slain, or, in the case of a wound or other bodily harm, to the person who sustained the injury; but if the cause was brought before the community, the plaintiff only received part of the fine; the community, or the king, when there was one, received the other part.
WERNE'RIAN, a. Pertaining to Werner, the German mineralogist and geologist, who arranged minerals in classes, &c., according to their external characters, and advocated the theory, that the strata which compose the crust of the earth, were formed by depositions from water. The Wernerian theory of the earth is the same as the Neptunian theory. [See NEPTUNIAN.]
WER'NERITE, n. A mineral regarded by Werner as a subspecies of scapolite; called foliated scapolite. It is a silicate of alumina, lime, and oxide of iron, and is named from that distinguished mineralogist, Werner. It is found massive, and crystallized in octahedral prisms with four-sided pyramidal terminations, disseminated in rocks of greyish or red feldspar. It is imperfectly lamellar, of a greenish, greyish, or olive green colour, with a pearly or resinous lustre. It is softer than feldspar, and melts into a white enamel.

WEST, n. [Sax. west; D. and G. west; Fr. ouest. This word probably signifies decline or fall, or departure; as in L. occidens, and in other cases. In elements, it coincides with waste.] 1. In strictness, that point of the horizon where the sun sets at the equinox, and midway between the north and south points, or any point in a direct line between the spectator or other object, and that point of the horizon; or west is the intersection of the prime vertical with the horizon, on that side where the sun sets. West is directly opposite to east, and one of the cardinal points. In a less strict sense, west is the region of the hemisphere near the point where the sun sets when in the equator. Thus we say, a star sets in the west, a meteor appears in the west, a cloud rises in the west.—2. A country situated in a region toward the sunsetting with respect to another. Thus in the United States, the inhabitants of the Atlantic states speak of the inhabitants of Ohio, Kentucky, or Missouri, and call them people of the west; and formerly, the empire of Rome was called the empire of the West, in opposition to the empire of the East, the seat of which was Constantinople.

WEST, a. Being in a line toward the point where the sun sets when in the equator; or in a looser sense, being in the region near the line of direction toward that point, either on the earth or in the heavens.

This shall be your west border; Numb. xxxiv.

2. Coming or moving from the west or western region; as, a west wind.

WEST, adv. To the western region; at the westward; more westward; as, Ireland lies west of England.

WEST,† v. i. To pass to the west; to set, as the sun.

They are characterized by having fin-like anterior extremities, the posterior extremities having their place supplied by a large horizontal caudal fin or tail, and the cervical bones so compressed as to leave the animal without any outward appearance of a neck. In this order are comprised the largest animal forms in existence. Some of the genera are phytophagous, or feed upon plants; others are zoophagous, or feed upon animals. Their abode is in the sea or the great rivers, and they resemble the fishes so closely in external appearance, that not only the vulgar, but even some of the earlier zoologists regarded them as belonging to that class. The Cetacea are divided by Cuvier into two great tribes or families, one of which he terms Herbivorous cetacea, including the genera Manatus, Halicore, and Stellerus; and the other, Ordinary cetacea, comprising the genera Delphinus, Phocæna, Monodon, Physeter, and Balæna. The Herbivorous Cetacea, however, are rather aquatic pachydermata. The common or Greenland whale is the Balæna mysticetus, so valuable on account of the oil and whalebone which it furnishes. It is principally found in the Arctic seas, but it is also found, in considerable numbers, in many other parts of the world. Its length is usually about 60 feet, and its greatest circumference from 30 to 40 feet. The razor-backed whale, or northern rorqual, is the Balænoptera physalis. It is about 100 feet long, and from 30 to 35 feet in circumference. The sperm whale is the Physeter macrocephalus, and is about 80 feet in

WHANG, v. t. To beat; to flog. [Local.]

WHAP, n. A heavy blow; written also Whop. [Vulgar and local.]

WHAP'PER, n. Something uncommonly large of the kind. So thumper is connected with thump, to strike with a heavy blow; applied particularly to a bold lie; written also Whopper. [Vulgar.]

WHARF, n. (hworf.) Sax. hwarf, hweorf; D. werf; Dan. verf; Russ. vorph. In D. werven signifies to raise or levy.] A sort of quay, constructed of wood or stone, on the margin of a roadstead, harbour, or river, alongside of which ships or lighters are brought for the sake of being conveniently loaded or unloaded. There are two kinds of wharfs, viz., legal wharfs and sufferance wharfs. The former are certain wharfs in all sea ports, at which goods are required to be landed and shipped, by 1 Eliz. c. 11 (now repealed), and subsequent acts. Wharfs in docks and similar situations, are made legal by special acts of parliament; certain wharfs, as at Chepstow, Gloucester, &c., are deemed legal from immemorial usage. Sufferance wharfs are places where certain goods may be landed and shipped; as hemp, flax, coal, and other bulky goods, by special sufferance, granted by the crown for that purpose.

WHARF'AGE, n. The fee or duty paid for the privilege of using a wharf for loading or unloading goods, timber, wood, &c.

WHARF'ING, n. Wharfs in general.

WHARF'INGER, n. A person who has the charge of a wharf.

WHAT, pron. relative or substitute. [Sax. hwæt; Goth. waiht; D. wat; G. was; Dan. and Sw. hvad; Scot. quhat; L. quod, quid. The Sax. hwæt, hwat, signifies brisk, lively, vigorous; which shows that this pronoun is the same word as wight, a living being, from the root of the L. vivo, for vigo. See WIGHT. The Gothic h represents the Latin c, in victus.] 1. That which. Say what you will, is the same as say that which you will.—2. Which part. Consider what is due to nature, and what to art or labour.—3. What is the substitute for a sentence or clause of a sentence. "I tell thee what, corporal, I could tear her." Here what relates to the last clause, "I could tear her;" this is what I tell you.—4. What is used as an adjective, of both genders, often in specifying sorts or particulars. See what colours this silk exhibits. I know what qualities you desire in a friend; that is, I know the qualities which you desire.—5. What is much used in asking questions. What sort of character is this? What poem is this? What man is this we see coming?—6. What time, at the time or on the day when.

What time the morn mysterious visions brings. Pope.

7. To how great a degree.

What partial judges are our love and hate! Dryden.

8. Whatever.

Whether it was the shortness of his foresight, the strength of his will...or what it was. Bacon.

9. Some part, or some. "The year before, he had so used the matter, that what by force, what by policy, he had taken from the Christians above thirty castles;" that is, he had taken above thirty castles, a part or some by force, a part or some by policy; or what may be interpreted partly. Sometimes what has no verb to govern it, and it must be considered as adverbially used. "What with carrying apples and fuel, he finds himself in a hurry;" that is, partly, in part.—10. What is sometimes used elliptically for what is this, or how is this?

What! could ye not watch with me one hour? Matt. xxvi.

11. What is used interrogatively and elliptically, as equivalent to what will be the consequence? What will follow? as in the phrase, what if I undertake this business myself? What though, that is, grant this or that; allow it to be so. What ho, an exclamation of calling.

WHAT,† n. Fare; things; matter.

WHATEV'ER, pron. [what and ever.] Being this or that; being of one nature or another; being one thing or another; any thing that may be. Whatever is read, let it be read with attention. Whatever measure may be adopted, let it be with due caution. Whatever you do, let it be done with prudence.—2. All that; the whole that; all particulars that.

At once came forth whatever creeps. Milton.

WHAT NOT, n. A stand, or piece of household furniture, having shelves for papers, books, &c.

WHATSO,† a. Whatsoever.

WHATSOEV'ER, a. compound of what, so, and ever, has the sense of whatever, and is less used than the latter. Indeed it is nearly obsolete.

WHEAL, n. A mine, Cornish dialect.

WHEAL, n. A pustule; a small swelling filled with matter. [See WEAL.]

WHEAT, n. [Sax hwæte; Goth. hwit; Ice. hveitenu; G. weitzen; D. weit.] A plant of the genus Triticum, and the seed of the plant, which furnishes a white flour for bread, and is by far the most important species of grain cultivated in Europe. It grows readily in almost every climate; but its natural home seems to be a temperate climate, and the soils best adapted for its culture are rich clays and heavy loams. Several species of wheat are enumerated by botanists, as summer or spring wheat (T. æstivum); winter wheat (T. hybernum), common bearded wheat (T. turgidum), single grained wheat (T. monococcum), Polish wheat (T. polonicum), Egyptian wheat (T. egyptiacum), spelter wheat (T. spelta). Many botanists, however, consider most of these as merely varieties, and others look upon all the cultivated wheats as varieties. Of cultivated wheats there are many varieties, but there are three principal ones which claim attention, viz., hard wheats, which are the produce of warm climates; soft wheats, which grow in the northern parts of Europe, as in Belgium, England, Denmark, and Sweden; and Polish wheats, which grow in Poland. The difference in colour between red and white wheats is owing chiefly to the soil, and, in fact, the varieties of wheat are perpetually changing in consequence of variations of culture, climate, and soil. The wheats cultivated in England are mostly varieties of the winter wheat and common bearded wheat. [See TRITICUM.]

WHEAT-EAR, n. An ear of wheat.—2. A small bird, the Motacilla œnanthe,

Linn., and Saxicola œnanthe, of modern ornithologists. It is also known by the names of fallow-finch, white-tail, stone-chacker, chack bird, &c. It is very abundant in Europe. [See FALLOW-FINCH.]

WHEATEN, a. (hwee'tn.) Made of wheat; as, wheaten bread.

WHEAT-FLY, n. An insect of the genus Cecidomyia, the C. tritici. It is Wheat fly (Cecidomyia tritici).

a, Insect natural size; b, Insect magnified; c, Larva natural size; d, Larva magnified.

a two-winged gnat, about the tenth of an inch long, and appears about the end of June. The females lay their eggs in clusters of from two to fifteen, among the chaffy flowers of the wheat, where they are hatched in about eight or ten days, producing little footless maggots, whose ravages destroy the flowers of the plant, and render it shrivelled and worthless. [See HESSIAN-FLY.]

WHEAT-GRĂSS, n. The common name of several British plants of the genus Triticum. [See TRITICUM.]

WHEAT-PLUM, n. A sort of plum.

WHEE'DLE, v. t. [Qu. Gr. γεντιω, or κωτιλλω.] To flatter; to entice by soft words; to cajole; to coax.

To learn th' unlucky art of wheedling fools. Dryden.

WHEE'DLE, v. i. To flatter; to coax.

WHEE'DLE, n Enticement; cajolery.

WHEE'DLED, pp. Flattered; enticed; coaxed.

WHEE'DLER, n. One who wheedles.

WHEE'DLING, ppr. Flattering; enticing by soft words.

WHEE'DLING, n. The act of flattering or enticing.

WHEEL, n. [Sax. hweol, hweohl, hweogl, hweogul; D. wiel; Sw. hiul.] A circular frame or solid disc of wood or metal turning on an axis. Wheels, as applied to carriages, usually consist of a nave, into which are inserted spokes or radii, which connect it with the periphery, or circular ring. Wheels are of various kinds; as, carriage wheels, water wheels, toothed wheels, conical wheels, fly wheels, pinions, lanterns, &c. Wheels are most important agents in machinery, being employed in a variety of forms and combinations, for the purpose of transmitting motion, regulating velocity, converting one species of motion into another, reducing friction, and equalizing the effect of forces applied in an intermittent or irregular manner.—Wheel and axle, one of the mechanical powers, sometimes named the axis in peritrochio, consisting of a wheel with a cylindrical axis of greater or less diameter passing through its centre and turning along with it. By reference to figs. 1. 2, it will be seen that this power resolves itself into a lever of the first order, in which the weight and power are at the ends, and the fulcrum between them. C is the centre, or fulcrum; A C and C B are the semi-diameters of the wheel and the axle; and on the principle of the lever the power is to the weight as A C is to C B. The wheel is grooved and carries a coil of rope; another rope is secured to the axis; and when the power is in motion, every revolution of the wheel raises the weight to a height equal to the circumference of the axis or cylinder. The power is increased by enlarging the wheel or diminishing the diameter of the cylinder; but there is a limit beyond which the increase cannot be obtained with safety. There is a modification of the wheel and axle, called the double axis machine, in which the power can be increased with more safety. This is shown in figure, 3 where b and c are two cylinders of different diameters, firmly fixed on the axis carrying the crank a. The rope is coiled round the smaller cylinder, carried through a pulley supporting the weight, and then attached to the larger cylinder in a contrary direction. When in motion, every turn of the crank lifts the weight to a height equal to half the difference between the circumferences of the two axes; and the power is therefore to the weight, as this half difference is to the circumference of the power, or the circle described by the crank a. Hence the power is increased by making the axes more nearly of the same diameter; but there is a limit to this increase, since if b and c come to be of equal thickness, the weight would not rise at all; the rope, in that case, wound upon b being only equal to that unwound from c. The wheel and axle is sometimes called the perpetual lever, in consequence of the power being continued by the revolution of the wheel. The common winch, the windlass, the capstan, and the tread-mill, are so many applications of the wheel and axle; and the annexed fig. 4 shows an adaptation of the same principle to a train of wheel-work, wherein motion is regulated and power acquired. The power P is applied to the circumference of the wheel A, whose pinion drives the wheel B, which by another pinion gives motion to the wheel D, carrying an axle supporting and raising the weight W. The power in this combination is to the weight, as the continued product of the radii of all the wheels, to that of the radii of all the axles.—2. A circular body.—3. A carriage that moves on wheels.—4. An instrument for torturing criminals; as, an examination made by the rack and the wheel.—5. A machine for spinning thread of various kinds.—6. Rotation; revolution; turn; as, the vicissitude and wheel of things.—7. A turning about; a compass.

Fig 1.

Fig. 2.

Fig. 3.

He throws his flight in many an airy wheel. Milton.

8. In pottery, a round board turned by a lathe in a horizontal position, on which the clay is shaped by the hand. —9. A circular frame having handles on the periphery, and connected by the tiller-ropes or wheel-ropes with the rudder, used for steering a ship.

WHEEL, v. t. To convey on wheels, or on a wheel-barrow; as, to wheel earth, stones, wood, hay, &c.—2. To put into a rotary motion; to cause to turn round; to whirl.

WHEEL, v. i To move on wheels; to turn on an axis; to have a rotatory motion.—2. To turn; to move round; as, a body of troops wheel to the right or left.—3. To fetch a compass.

Then wheeling down the steep of heav'n he flies. Pope.

4. To roll forward.

Thunder
Must wheel on th' earth, devouring where it rolls. Milton.

WHEEL'-ANIMAL, } n. One
WHEEL'-ANIMAL'CULE, } of a class of infusorial animals, having arms for seizing their prey resembling wheels; a rotifer. [See ROTIFERS.]

WHEEL-BARO'METER. See BAROMETER.

WHEEL-BARROW, n. [wheel and barrow.] A sort of hand-machine, consisting of a frame with two handles or trams, and frequently a box, supported on a single wheel, and rolled by a single individual. Its uses are well known.

WHEEL-BIRD, n. A name given to a bird of the genus Caprimulgus, the C. europæus, on account of the noise made by the male during incubation, when perched, which is not unlike that of a spinning wheel. It is also known by the names of goat-sucker, night-jar, night-hawk, &c.

WHEEL-BOAT, n. [wheel and boat.] A boat with wheels, to be used either on water or upon inclined planes or railways.

WHEEL-CARRIAGE, n. [wheel and carriage.] A carriage moved on wheels. Under this term writers on mechanics usually include all sorts of vehicles which move on wheels, and are drawn by horses or propelled by steam; as, coaches, chaises, gigs, railway carriages, waggons, carts, &c. The use of wheels in such vehicles is twofold, viz., to lessen the friction, and to enable the vehicle more easily to overcome obstacles on the road.

WHEEL-CUTTING, n. The operation of cutting the teeth in the wheels used by watch and clock makers, and for other mechanical purposes. This is effected by means of engines.

WHEELED, pp. Conveyed on wheels; turned; rolled round.—2. a. Having wheels—used in composition; as, a two-wheeled carriage, a four-wheeled carriage.

WHEELER, n. One who wheels; a maker of wheels; a wheel-horse, or one next the wheels of the carriage.

WHEELERA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Leguminosæ. W. ebenus, American ebony, is a native of America and the West Indies. It is cut and sent to this country under the name of ebony, although it is very different from the true ebony. The wood is very hard, and is much employed by cabinet and musical instrument-makers.

WHEEL-FIRE, n. [wheel and fire.] In chem., a fire which encompasses the crucible without touching it.

WHEELING, ppr. Conveying on wheels or in a wheel-carriage; turning.

WHEELING, n. The act of conveying on wheels; the act of conveying materials, as earth, stones, &c., on a wheel-barrow.—2. A turning or circular movement of troops embodied.

WHEEL-PLOUGH, n. A plough with a wheel or wheels added to it, for the purpose of regulating the depth of the furrow, and rendering the implement more steady to hold. [See PLOUGH.]

WHEEL-RACE, n. The place in which a water-wheel is fixed.

WHEEL-ROPES, n. In ships, ropes which are reeved through a block on each side of the deck, and led round the barrel of the steering wheel, to assist in steering. Chains are now much more commonly used for this purpose.

WHEEL-SHAPED, a. [wheel and shape.] In bot., rotate; monopetalous, expanding into a flat border at top, with scarcely any tube; as, a wheel-shaped corolla.

WHEEL-TIRE, n. The iron band that encircles a wooden wheel. [See TIRE.]

WHEEL-WINDOW, n. In Gothic arch., a circular window with radiating mullions resembling the spokes of a wheel. [See CATHERINE-WHEEL.]

WHEEL-WORK, n. In machinery, the combination of wheels which communicate motion to one another. Such combinations are generally reducible to the principle of the wheel and axle, though the wheel which turns the other is not always on the same axis with it. The motion in such cases is communicated from the one wheel to the other by belts or straps passing over the circumferences of both, or by teeth cut in those circumferences, and working in one another. When the resistance of the work is not great, motion may be transmitted from one wheel to another by causing their peripheries to revolve in contact with each other, by the mere friction of the surfaces in contact. The most familiar instances of wheel-work are to be found in clocks and watches.

WHEEL-WORN, a. Worn by the action of moving wheel-tires.

WHEEL-WRIGHT, n. [wheel and wright.] A man whose occupation is to make wheels and wheel-carriages, as carts and waggons.

WHEELY, a. Circular; suitable to rotation.

WHEEZE, v. i. [Sax. hweosan; Arm. chueza; Sw. hes, hoarse; Sw. hväsa, to hiss, to whiz; Dan. hvaes, a whistling. Wheeze, whiz, and probably whisper, are of one family, and accord with the root of the L. fistula.] To breathe hard and with an audible sound, as persons affected with asthma.

WHEEZING, ppr. Breathing with difficulty and noise.

WHEEZING, n. A noisy respiration, produced by obstruction of the air passages.

WHELK, n. A wrinkle; inequality on the surface; protuberance; a pustule, generally situated on the face. [See WELK and WEAL.]—2. A shell named the Buccinum undatum, or trumpet-shell, univalvular, spiral, and gibbous, with an oval aperture ending in a short canal or gutter. It is much used for food.

WHELK'Y, a. Protuberant; embossed; rounded.

WHELM, v. t. [Sax. ahwylfan; Goth. hulyan; Ice. wilma or hwilma.] 1. To cover with water or other fluid; to cover by immersion in something that envelopes on all sides; as, to whelm a person or a company in the seas; to whelm a caravan in sand or dust. — 2. To cover completely; to immerse deeply; to overburden; as, to whelm one in sorrows.—3.† To throw over so as to cover.

WHELM'ED, pp. Covered, as by being plunged or immersed.

WHELM'ING, ppr. Covering, as by immersion.

WHELP, n. [Dan. hvalp; Sw. valp; D. welp. This word coincides in elements with wolf, L. vulpes.] 1. The young of the canine species, and of several other beasts of prey; a puppy; a cub; as, a bear robbed of her whelps; lion's whelps.—2. A son; in contempt. —3. A young man; in contempt.

WHELP, v. i. To bring forth young, as the female of the canine species and some other beasts of prey.

WHELPS, n. In ships, upright pieces of wood placed round the barrel of the capstan, to prevent it from being chafed, and to afford resting points for the messenger or hawsers. The same name is given to pieces of wood bolted on the main piece of a windlass or a winch, for a similar purpose.

WHEN, adv. [Goth. hwan; Sax hwænne; G. wann; D. wanneer; L. quando; Gaelic, cuinne.] 1. At the time that.—2. At what time, interrogatively.

> When shall these things be? Matt. xxiv.

3. Which time.

> I was adopted heir by his consent;
> Since when, his oath is broke. Shak.

4. After the time that. When the act is passed, the public will be satisfied. —5. At what time.

> Kings may > Take their advantage when and how they list. Daniel.

When as, at the time when; what time.†

> When as sacred light began to dawn. Milton.

WHENCE, adv. [Sax. hwanon.] 1. From what place

> Whence and what art thou? Milton.

2. From what source. Whence shall we derive hope? Whence comes this honour?

> Whence hath this man this wisdom? Matt. xiii.

3. From which premises, principles, or facts. These facts or principles are admitted, whence it follows, that judgment must be entered for the plaintiff. —4. How; by what way or means; Mark xii.—5. In general, from which person, cause, place, principle, or circumstance.—From whence may be considered as tautological, from being implied in whence; but the use is well authorized, and in some cases the use of it seems to give force or beauty to the phrase. We ascended the mountain, from whence we took a view of the beautiful plains below.—Of whence is not now used.

WHENCESOEV'ER, adv. [whence, so, and ever.] From what place soever; from what cause or source soever.

> Any idea, whencesoever we have it. Locke.

WHENCEV'ER. See WHENCESOEVER.

WHENEV'ER, adv. [when and ever.] At whatever time. Whenever you come, you will be kindly received.

WHENSOEV'ER, adv. [when, so, and ever.] At what time soever; at whatever time.

WHERE, adv. [Sax. hwær; Goth. hwar; D. waar.] 1. At which place or places.

> She visited the place where first she was so happy. Sidney.
> In all places where I record my name, I will come to thee and I will bless thee; Exod. xx.

2. At or in what place.

> Adam, where art thou? Gen. iii.

3. At the place in which.

> Where I thought the remnant of my age
> Should have been cherish'd by her child-like duty. Shak.

4. Whither; to what place or from what place. Where are you going? Where are you from? [These uses of where are common, and the first cannot be condemned as vulgar.]—Any where, in any place. I sought the man, but could not find him any where.—No where, at or in no place.

Note.—Where seems to have been originally a noun, and was so used by Spenser. "He shall find no where safe to him." In this sense, it is obsolete; yet it implies place, its original signification.

WHEREABOUT', comp. [where and about.] Near what place. Whereabout did you meet your friend?—2. Near which place.—3. Concerning which.

> The object whereabout they are conversant. Hooker.

It often takes the form whereabouts.

WHEREABOUT',† n. The place where one is.

WHEREAS, comp. (s as z.) [where and as.] When in fact or truth, implying opposition to something that precedes

> Are not those found to be the greatest zealots, who are most notoriously ignorant? whereas true zeal should always begin with true knowledge. Sprat.

2. The thing being so that; considering that things are so; implying an admission of facts, sometimes followed by a different statement, and sometimes by inferences or something consequent, as in the law style, where a preamble introduces a law.

> Whereas wars are generally causes of poverty... Bacon.

3.† Whereat; at which place.—4. But on the contrary. [See No. 1.]

WHEREAT', comp. [where and at.] At which.

> Whereat he was no less angry and ashamed, than desirous to obey Zelmane. Sidney.

2. At what, interrogatively. Whereat are you offended?

WHEREBY', comp. [where and by.] By which.

> You take my life,
> When you do take the means whereby I live. Shak.

2. By what, interrogatively.

> Whereby shall I know this? Luke i.

WHERE'FORE, comp. [where and for.] For which reason.

> Wherefore by their fruits ye shall know them. Matth. vii.

2. Why; for what reason.

> Wherefore didst thou doubt? Matth. xiv.

WHEREIN', comp. [where and in.] In which; in which thing, time, respect, book, &c. This is the thing wherein you have erred.—2. In what.

Yet ye say, wherein have we wearied him? Mal. ii.

WHEREINTŎ′,† comp. [where and into.] Into which.

WHERENESS,† n. Ubiety; imperfect locality.

WHEREOF′, comp. [where and of.] Of which. We are not guilty of the crime whereof we are accused.—2.† Of what. Whereof was this house built.

How this world, when and whereof created. Milton.

WHEREON′, comp. [where and on.] On which; as, the ground whereon we tread.—2.† On what. Whereon do we stand?

WHERE′SO,† comp. See WHERESOEVER.

WHERESOEV′ER, comp. [where, so, and ever.] In what place soever; in whatever place, or in any place indefinitely. Seize the thief, wheresoever he may be found. [Wherever is the preferable word.]

WHERE′THROUGH, through which, is not in use.

WHERETŎ, comp. [where and to.] To which.

Whereto we have already attained; Phil. iii.

2. To what; to what end. [Lit. us.]

WHEREUNTO′,† comp. The same as whereto.

WHEREUPON′, comp. Upon which.

The townsmen mutinied and sent to Essex, whereupon he came thither. Clarendon.

WHEREV′ER, comp. [where and ever.] At whatever place.

He cannot but love virtue, wherever it is. Atterbury.

WHEREWITH′, comp. [where and with.] With which.

The love wherewith thou hast loved me; John xvii.

2. With what, interrogatively.

Wherewith shall I save Israel? Judges vi.

WHEREWITHAL′, comp. [See WITHAL.] [where, with, and all.] The same as wherewith.

WHER′RET,† v. t. [G. wirren. Qu.] To hurry; to trouble; to tease; to give a box on the ear. [Low.]

WHER′RET,† n. A box on the ear.

WHER′RY, n. [a different orthography of ferry, formed with a strong breathing; like whistle, from the root of L. fistula.] 1. A boat used on rivers. The name is given to several kinds of light boats. It is also applied to some half decked vessels used in fishing, in different parts of Great Britain and Ireland.—2. A liquor made from the pulp of crabs after the verjuice is expressed; sometimes called crab-wherry. [Local.]

WHET, v. t. pret. and pp. Whetted or Whet. [Sax. hwettan; Sw. hvässa; Dan. hvas, sharp; hvedser, to whet; D. wetten; G. wetzen.] 1. To rub for the purpose of sharpening, as an edge tool; to sharpen by using a whetstone; to edge; as, to whet a scythe or an axe.—2. To provoke; to excite; to stimulate; as, to whet the appetite.—3. To provoke; to make angry or acrimonious.

Since Cassius first did whet me against Cesar,
I have not slept. Shak.

To whet on, or whet forward, to urge on; to instigate.†

WHET, n. The act of sharpening by friction.—2. Something that provokes or stimulates the appetite; as, sips, drams and whets.

WHETH′ER, pronoun or substitute. [Sax. hwæther. This word seems to be connected with what and the L. uter, the latter not being aspirated. The sense seems to be what, or which of two, referring either to persons or to sentences.] 1. Which of two.

Whether of them twain did the will of his father? Matth. xxi.

Here whether is a substitute for one of two, and signifies which; which of the two; but in this sense it is obsolete—2. Which of two alternatives expressed by a sentence or the clause of a sentence, and followed by or. "Resolve whether you will go or not;" that is, you will go or not go; resolve which.

Note.—In the latter use, which is now most common, whether is called an adverb. This is a mistake. It is the same part of speech as in the former example. The only difference is that in the former example it represents or refers to a noun, and in the latter to a sentence or clause.

WHETH′ERING, n. The retention of the after birth in cows.

WHET′STONE, n. [whet and stone.] A smooth flat stone used for sharpening edged instruments by friction. Whetstones, or hones, as they are sometimes called, are made of various kinds of hard close-grained stone, and when used, are moistened with oil or water.

WHET′STONE-SLATE, } n. Novaculite or coticular schist, a variety of slate used for sharpening instruments of iron. The light green coloured variety from the Levant is the most valuable. It should be kept in a damp place, that it may not become too dry and hard. [See NOVACULITE.]
WHET′-SLATE, }

WHET′TED, pp. Rubbed for sharpening; sharpened; provoked; stimulated.

WHET′TER, n. He or that which whets or sharpens.

WHET′TING, ppr. Rubbing for the purpose of making sharp; sharpening; provoking; inciting; stimulating.

WHEW, interjection. Begone! expressing aversion or contempt.

WHEW′ER, n. Another name of the widgeon. [Local.]

WHEY, n. [Sax. hwæg; D. wei or hui.] The serum or watery part of milk, separated from the more thick or coagulable part, particularly in the process of making cheese. In this process, the thick part is called curd, and the thin part whey.—2. Any thing white and thin.

WHEY, a. White or pale; as, a whey face.

WHEYEY, a. Partaking of whey; resembling whey.

WHEYISH, a. Having the qualities of whey.

WHEYISHNESS, n. Quality of being wheyish.

WHICH, pron. [If this is from the Sax. hwilc or hwylc, it is from the Gothic hweleiks, which coincides with the Latin qualis; D. welk, G. welche, welcher, Dan. hwilken, hwilket, Sw. hwilken. This is the probable origin of the word, and its true sense is that of the Latin quis, qualis, quicunque. In these senses it occurs in all Saxon books. Its proper use was as a pronoun of interrogation, "Hwylc man is of eow?" what man is there of you? Matt. vii. 9. "Hwylc is min modor?" who is my mother? Mark iii. 33. Its use for who, Saxon hwa, as in the Lord's prayer, "Our father which art in heaven," is an improper application of the word. In its original sense it is used for all genders; as, which man, which woman, which thing? As an interrogative we still use it in this manner. Its use for who was of long continuance, but is happily discontinued; and our present practice accords with its original use in the Saxon.] 1. A pronoun or word of interrogation, in all genders; as, which man is it? which woman was it? which is the house?—2. In reference to things, or in the neuter gender, it is a relative referring to something before mentioned; as, "God rested on the seventh day from all his work which he had made;" Gen. ii. 2. In some phrases, the relative may precede the noun to which it refers.—3. Which, like other pronouns, may be used as a substitute for another word or for a sentence. "We are bound to obey all the divine commands, which we cannot do without divine aid." Here which is a substitute for obey all the divine commands. The man was said to be innocent, which he was not. Here which is a substitute for innocent.—4. That which; those which; as, take which you will.—The which, by the which, &c., are obsolete.

WHICHEV′ER, } pron. Whether one or the other.
WHICHSOEV′ER, }
Whichever road you take, it will conduct you to town.

WHID, n. A quick motion; a smart stroke; a lie. As a verb, to whisk; to move nimbly, as a hare or other small animal. [Scotch.]

WHID′AH-FINCH, A genus, Vidua, of several species of beautiful birds, inhabiting India and Southern and Western Africa, and found in great abundance in the kingdom of Dahomey, near Whidah. In size of body, the Whidah-finch resembles a linnet or canary-bird, and during the breeding season, the male is supplied with long, drooping, not inelegant, but certainly disproportioned tail feathers. V. paradisea is of a deep brownish-black on the upper parts, but paler on the wings. The body, abdomen, and thighs are of a pale buff, and a rich orange-rufon colour nearly surrounds its neck. V. erythorynchus is less than the former, and is of a deep glossy blue-black colour on the upper parts, with the sides of the head and under parts white. These birds are commonly called widow-birds, but whether this be merely a translation of their Latin generic name, Vidua, which was probably given from the sombre hue of the plumage, or whether it be a corruption of Whidah, is uncertain.

1 Broad-shafted Whidah-finch (Vidua paradisea), and 2 Red-billed Whidah (Vidua erythorynchus).

WHIFF, n. [W. çwif, a whiff or puff, a hiss; çwifaw, to whiff, and çwaf, a quick gust.] 1. A sudden expulsion of air from the mouth; a puff; as the whiff of a smoker.

And seasons his whiffs with impertinent jokes. Pope.

2. In ichthyology, a flat malacopterygious fish, belonging to the family Pleuronectidæ. It is a British fish, of the turbot or flounder group, Rhombus megastoma, and in Cornwall is called carter. It is not highly esteemed for the table.

WHIFF, v. t. To puff; to throw out in whiffs; to consume in whiffs; to smoke.

WHIF'FLE, v. i. [D. weifelen, to waver; zweeven, to hover. This accords in sense with G. zweifeln, to doubt, which would seem to be from zwei, two, or its root. The G. has also schweifen, to rove or wander, which seems to be allied to sweep. The D. has also twyfelen, to doubt, from twee, two, or its root; Sw. tvifla, Dan. tvivler, from the root of two. Yet whiffle seems to be directly from whiff.] To start, shift, and turn; to change from one opinion or course to another; to use evasions; to prevaricate; to be fickle and unsteady.

A person of whiffling and unsteady turn of mind, cannot keep close to a point of a controversy. Watts.

WHIF'FLE,† v. t. To disperse with a puff; to scatter.

WHIF'FLE, n. Anciently, a fife or small flute.

WHIF'FLER, n. One who whiffles or frequently changes his opinion or course; one who uses shifts and evasions in argument; one of no consequence; one driven about by every puff.—2. A piper or fifer.—3. A harbinger; an officer who went before processions, to clear the way by blowing the horn or trumpet.

WHIF'FLE-TREE. See WHIPPLE-TREE.

WHIF'FLING, ppr. Shifting and turning; prevaricating; shuffling.

WHIF'FLING, n. Prevarication.

WHIG, n. [Sax. hwæg. See WHEY.] Acidulated whey, sometimes mixed with buttermilk and sweet herbs, used as a cooling beverage. [Local.] In Scotland, this term is applied to the thin serous liquid which lies below the cream in a churn, after it has become sour, and before it has been agitated.

WHIG, n. The designation of one of the great political parties in this country. The term is of Scottish origin, and was first used in the reign of Charles II. According to Bishop Burnet, it is derived from whiggam, a word which was used by the peasants of the southwest of Scotland, in driving their horses; the drivers being called whiggamores, contracted to whiggs. In 1648, after the news of the Duke of Hamilton's defeat, the clergy stirred up the people to rise and march to Edinburgh, and they themselves marched at the head of their parishes. The Marquis of Argyle and his party came and headed them. This was called the whiggamores' inroad, and ever after that all that opposed the court came, in contempt, to be called whiggs; and from Scotland, the word was brought to England, where it has since continued to be used as the distinguishing appellation of the political party opposed to the Tories. It was first assumed as a party name by that body of politicans who were most active in placing William III. on the throne of England. Generally speaking, the principles of the whigs have been of a popular character, and their measures, when in power, tending to increase the democratic influence in the constitution. [See TORY.] In American hist., the friends and supporters of the war and the principles of the revolution, were called whigs, and those who opposed them were called tories and royalists.

WHIG, a. Relating to the whigs; whiggish; as, whig measures; a whig ministry.

WHIG'GARCHY, n. Government by whigs. [Cant.]

WHIG'GERY, n. The principles of the whigs; whiggism.

WHIG'GISHLY, adv. In a whiggish manner.

WHIG'GISM, n. The principles of the whigs.

WHIG'LING, n. A whig, in contempt.

WHILE, n. [Sax. hwile; G. weil; D. wyl; time, while; Sw. hvila, repose; W. çwyl, a turn, Ir. foil. See the verb.] Time; space of time, or continued duration. He was some while in this country. One while we thought him innocent.

Pausing a while, thus to herself she mus'd. Milton.

Worth while, worth the time which it requires; worth the time and pains; hence, worth the expense. It is not always worth while for a man to prosecute for small debts.

WHILE, adv. During the time that. While I write you sleep.—2. As long as.

Use your memory, and you will sensibly experience a gradual improvement, while you take care not to overload it. Watts.

3. At the same time that.

WHILE, v. t [W. çwylaw, to turn, to run a course, to bustle; Eth. waala, to pass the time, to spend the day or life, to remain; Amharic, id.; Dan. hviler, Sw. hvila, to rest or repose; Ir. foillim, to stay, to rest, to tarry; G. weilen, verweilen, to abide, to stay; Qu. the identity of these words.] To draw out; to waste in a tedious way. —To while away, as time, in English, is to loiter; or more generally, to cause time to pass away pleasantly, without irksomeness; as, we while away time in amusements or diversions.

Let us while away this life. Pope.

WHILE, v. i. To loiter; to spend to little use; as time.

WHILERE,† adv. [while and ere.] A little while ago.

WHILES,† adv. While.

WHILING, ppr. Loitering; passing time agreeably, without impatience or tediousness.

WHILK, n. A shell. [See WHELK.]

WHILK, pron. rel. Which. [Scotch. The old spelling was quhilk.]

Or, as the Scots say, whilk. Byron.

Men's follies, whimsies, and inconstancy. Swift.

WHIM'SEY,† v. t. To fill with whimseys.

WHIM'SICAL, a. Full of whims; freakish; having odd fancies; capricious.

My neighbours call me whimsical. Addison.

WHIM'SICALLY, adv. [supra.] In a whimsical manner; freakishly.

WHIM'SICALNESS, or WHIM'SICALITY, n. [supra.] Freakishness; whimsical disposition; odd temper.

WHIM'WHAM,† n. A plaything; a toy; a freak or whim; an odd device.

WHIN, n. [In W. çwyn is a weed; L. Genista spinosa.] Gorse; furze; a plant of the genus Ulex. [See FURZE, ULEX.]—Petty-whim, is a species of Genista, the G. angelica.—2. A mineral. [See WHINSTONE.]

WHIN'-AXE, n. [whin and axe.] An instrument used for extirpating whin from land.

WHIN'-CHAT, n. A passerine bird of the genus Saxicola, the S. rubetra. It is not unfrequent in the British Islands during summer, and may be commonly found on broom and furze, on the highest twigs of which it perches, and occasionally sings very sweetly. It is closely allied to the stonechat.

WHINE, v. i. [Sax. wanian and cwanian; Goth. hwainon; Dan. hviner, to whine, and to whinny, as a horse; Sw. hvina, to squeal or squeak; W. açwyn, to complain; L. hinnio, and qu. gannio.] To express murmurs by a plaintive drawling cry; to moan with a puerile noise; to murmur meanly.

They came ... with a whining accent craving liberty. Sydney.

Then, if we whine, look pale.... Shak.

WHINE, n. A drawling plaintive tone; the nasal puerile tone of mean complaint; mean or affected complaint.

WHINER, n. One who whines.

WHINING, ppr. Expressing murmurs by a mean plaintive tone or cant.

WHININGLY, adv. In a whining manner.

WHIN'NY, a. Abounding in whin; resembling whin.—2. Abounding in whins, or whin-bushes.

WHIN'NY, v. i. [L. hinnio; from the root of whine.] To utter the sound of a horse; to neigh.

WHIN'-STONE, n. [whin and stone; Scot. quhyn-stane.] Whin-stone or whin is a provincial name given to basaltic rocks, and applied by miners to any kind of dark coloured and hard unstratified rock which resists the point of the pick. Veins of dark basalt, or green-stone, are frequently called whin-dykes.

WHIN'-YÄRD, n. A sword; in contempt.

WHIP, v. t. [Sax. hweopan, to whip, and to weep, that is, to whoop or hoop; D. wippen, to shake, to move or wag, to give the strapado; zweepen, to whip; Dan. vipper, to swing; W. çwipwia, to move briskly, to whip; çwip, a quick flirt or turn. The sense is well expressed by the Welsh, and we say, a man whips round a corner, when running he suddenly turns. It seems to be allied to wipe and sweep, and L. vapulo, and implies a sweeping throw or thrust.] 1. To strike with a lash or sweeping cord, or with anything tough and flexible; as, to whip a horse.—2. To sew slightly.—3. To drive with lashes; as, to whip a top.—4. To punish with the whip; to correct with lashes; as, to whip a vagrant; to whip one thirty-nine lashes; to whip a perverse boy.

WHIP'PLE-TREE, n. [whip and tree.] The bar to which the traces or tugs of a harness are fastened, and by which a carriage, a plough, a harrow, or other implement is drawn. It is also written Whiffle-tree.

WHIP'PO-WIL, } WHIP-POOR-WILL', } n. The popular name of an American bird, the Caprimulgus vociferus, allied to the night-hawk or Whip-poor-will (Caprimulgus vociferus).

night-jar, so called from its note, or the sounds of its voice. It appears in Georgia, Louisiana, and Virginia about the middle of March or early in April, and retires about the middle of August. It flies low, and skimming a few feet above the surface of the ground, it settles on logs and fences, from which it pursues the flying moths and insects. Its note is heard in the evening, or early in the morning, and when two or more males meet, their whip-poor-will altercations become rapid and incessant, as if each were straining to overpower or silence the other. During the day these birds retire into the darkest woods, where they repose in silence. Like the owls, their sight seems to be deficient during the day.

WHIP'-SAW, n. [whip and saw.] A saw usually set in a frame for dividing or splitting wood in the direction of the fibres. It is wrought by two persons.

WHIP'-SNAKE, n. A species of venomous serpent, a native of the East, so named from its resemblance to a whip cord.

WHIP'STOCK, n. [whip and stock.] The rod or staff to which the lash of a whip is fastened.

WHIPT, pp. of Whip; sometimes used for Whipped.

WHIR, v. i. (hwur.) To whirl round with noise; to whiz; to hurry away; to fly off with such a noise as a partridge or moor-cock makes when it springs from the ground.

WHIR, v. t. To hurry.

WHIRL, v. t. (hwurl.) [Sax. hwyrfan; G. wirbeln, to whirl, to warble; Sw. hvirfla, to whirl, Dan. hvirvelbeen, whirl-bone, vertebra; hvirvelsoe, whirl-sea, a whirlpool; Sw. hvirfvel, Ice. whirla, a whirl. We see that whirl and warble are dialectical forms of the same word, and both probably from the root of L. verto and Eng. veer.] To turn round rapidly; to turn with velocity.

> He whirls his sword around without delay. Dryden.

WHIRL, v. i. To be turned round rapidly; to move round with velocity; as, the whirling spindles of a cotton machine or wheels of a coach.

> The wooden engine flies and whirls about. Dryden.

2. To move hastily.

> But whirl'd away to shun his hateful sight. Dryden.

WHIRL, n. [G. wirbel; Dan. hvirvel.] 1. A turning with rapidity or velocity; rapid rotation or circumvolution; quick gyration; as, the whirl of a top; the whirl of a wheel; the whirl of time; the whirls of fancy.—2. Any thing that moves or is turned with velocity, particularly on an axis or pivot.—3. A hook used in twisting.—4. In botany and conchology,—see WHORL.

WHIRL'-BAT, n. [whirl and bat.] Any thing moved with a whirl as preparatory for a blow, or to augment the force of it. Poets use it for the ancient cestus.

> The whirl bat and the rapid race shall be > Reserv'd for Cesar. Dryden.

WHIRL'-BLÄST, n. [whirl and blast.] A whirling blast of wind.

WHIRL'-BONE, n. [whirl and bone.] The patella; the cup of the knee; the knee-pan.

WHIRL'ED, pp. Turned round with velocity.

WHIRL'ER, n. He or that which whirls.

WHIRL'ICOTE, n. An ancient open car or chariot.

WHIRL'IGIG, n. [whirl and gig.] A toy which children spin or whirl round. —2. In military antiquities, an instrument for punishing petty offenders, as sutlers, brawling women, &c.; a kind of wooden cage turning on a pivot, in which the offender was whirled round with great velocity.

WHIRL'ING, ppr. Turning or moving round with velocity.

WHIRL'ING-TABLE, WHIRL'ING-MACHINE, n. A machine contrived for the purpose of exhibiting the principal effects of centripetal or centrifugal forces, when bodies revolve in the circumferences of circles, or on an axis. The same name is given to a machine invented by Mr. Robins, for the purpose of determining the resistance of the air against bodies moving with velocities less than those for which the resistance can be determined by the ballistic pendulum. Dr. Hutton made a series of experiments with a machine of this kind, with the view of ascertaining the resistance experienced by military projectiles in passing through the air.

WHIRL'-PIT,† n. A whirlpool.

WHIRL'POOL, n. [whirl and pool.] An eddy of water; a vortex or gulf where the water moves round in a circle, in consequence of obstructions from banks, rocks, or islands; or the opposition of winds and currents. Whirlpools in rivers are very common, and are of little consequence. In the sea they are more rare, but often dangerous to navigation. The most celebrated whirlpools are the Euripus, near the coast of Negropont; the Charybdis, in the strait between Sicily and Italy; and the Maelstrom, off the coast of Norway.

WHIRL'WIND, n. [whirl and wind.] A violent wind moving in a circle, or rather in a spiral form, as if moving round an axis; this axis having at the same time a progressive motion rectilinear or curvilinear, on the surface of the land or sea. Whirlwinds are produced chiefly by the meeting of currents of air which run in different directions. When they occur on land they give a whirling motion to dust, sand, part of a cloud, and sometimes even to bodies of great weight and bulk, carrying them either upwards or downwards, and scattering them about in all directions. At sea they often give rise to waterspouts. They are most frequent and violent in tropical countries.

WHIR'RING, n. The sound of partridge's or pheasant's wings.

WHISK, n. [G. and D. wisch, a wisp.] 1. A small bunch of grass, straw, hair, or the like, used for a brush; hence, a brush or small besom.—2. A bundle of peeled twigs used by cooks, for rapidly agitating or whisking certain articles, as cream, eggs, &c.—3. Part of a woman's dress; a kind of tippet. —4. A quick violent motion, a sudden gale.

WHISK, v. t. To sweep, brush, or agitate with a light rapid motion.—2. To sweep along; to move nimbly over the ground.

WHISK, v. i. To move nimbly and with velocity.

WHISK'ER, n. [from whisk.] Long hair growing on the human cheek.—2. The bristly hairs on the upper lip of a cat, &c. [Used chiefly in the plural.]

WHISK'ERED, a. Formed into whiskers; furnished with whiskers; wearing whiskers.

WHISK'ET, n. A basket. [Local.]

WHISK'ING, ppr. Brushing; sweeping along; moving with velocity along the surface; agitating rapidly with a whisk; as cream.

WHISK'Y, n. [Ir. uisge, water, whence usquebaugh; W. wysg, a stream.] An ardent spirit distilled generally from barley, but sometimes from wheat, rye, sugar, molasses, &c. It may be considered the national spirit of Scotland and Ireland.

WHISK'Y, WHISK'EY, n. [Probably from whisk.] A kind of one horse chaise, sometimes called a tim-whiskey.

WHIS'PER, v. i. [Sax. hwisprian; Sw. hviska, to buzz, to whisper; G. flispern; allied to whistle, wheeze, and L. fistula. The word seems by its sound to be an onomatopy, as it expresses a sibilant sound or breathing.] 1. To speak with a low hissing or sibilant voice. It is ill manners to whisper in company.

> The hollow whisp'ring breeze. Thomson.

2. To speak with suspicion or timorous caution.—3. To plot secretly; to devise mischief.

> All that hate me whisper together against me: Ps. xli.

WHIS'PER, v. t. To address in a low voice. He whispers the man in the ear. [But this is elliptical for whispers to.] —2. To utter in a low sibilant voice. He whispered a word in my ear.—3. To prompt secretly; as, he came to whisper Wolsey.

WHIS'PER, n. A low soft sibilant voice; or words uttered with such a voice.

> The whisper cannot give a tone. Bacon.
> Soft whispers through th' assembly went. Dryden.

2. A cautious or timorous speech.—3. A hissing or buzzing sound.

WHIS'PERED, pp. Uttered in a low voice; uttered with suspicion or caution.

WHIS'PERER, n. One who whispers. —2. A tattler; one who tells secrets; a conveyer of intelligence secretly.—3. A backbiter; one who slanders secretly; Prov. xvi.

WHIS'PERING, ppr. or a. Speaking in a low voice; telling secretly; backbiting.—Whispering gallery or dome, a gallery or dome, in which the sound of words uttered in a low voice or whisper, is communicated to a greater distance than under any ordinary circumstances. Thus in an elliptical chamber, if a person standing in one of the foci, speak in a whisper, he will be heard distinctly by a person standing in the other focus, although the same sound would not be audible at the same distance, under any other circumstances, or at any other place in the chamber. The reason is that the sounds produced in one of the foci of such a chamber, strike upon the wall all round, and, from the nature of the ellipse, are all reflected to the other focus. This serves in some measure to explain the effects of whispering galleries and domes in general. There is a whispering gallery in St. Paul's cathedral, London, and one in Gloucester cathedral.

WHIS'PERING, n. The act of speaking with a low voice; the telling of tales, and exciting of suspicions; a backbiting.

WHIS'PERINGLY, adv. In a low voice.

WHIST, a. [Corn. huist, silence.] Silent: mute; still; not speaking; not making a noise.

> The winds with wonder whist,
> Smoothly the waters kiss'd. Milton.

[This adjective, like some others, always follows its noun. We never say, whist wind; but the wind is whist.]

WHIST,† v. t. To silence; to still.—Whist is used interjectionally for be silent. Whist, whist, that is, be silent or still.

WHIST,† v. i. To become silent.

WHIST, n. A well known game at cards, so called because it requires silence or close attention.

WHIS'TLE, v. i. (hwis'l.) [Sax. hwistlan; Dan. hvidsler; L. fistula, a whistle; allied to whisper.] 1. To utter a kind of musical sound, by pressing the breath through a small orifice formed by contracting the lips.

> While the ploughman near at hand,
> Whistles o'er the furrow'd land. Milton.

2. To make a sound with a small wind instrument.—3. To sound shrill, or like a pipe.

> The wild winds whistle and the billows roar. Pope.

WHY, adv. [Sax. hwi, and for hwi, or for hwig, for why. Hwi, whig, coincides in elements with which. So pourquoi in French, is the same; pour and L. quid, quod; for what. The original phrase is for what, for why.] 1. For what cause or reason, interrogatively.

> Turn ye, turn ye, for why will ye die? Jer. xxvii.

2. For which reason or cause, relatively.

> No ground of enmity,
> Why he should mean me ill. Milton.

3. For what reason or cause; for which; relatively.

> Turn the discourse; I have a reason why
> I would not have you speak so tenderly. Dryden.

4. It is used sometimes emphatically, or rather as an expletive.

> If her chill heart I cannot move,
> Why, I'll enjoy the very love. Cowley.

WHY, n. A young heifer. [Local in England.] In Scotland, Quey is used in the same sense.

WHY'NOT, n. A cant word for violent and peremptory procedure.

WI, from the Gothic weiha, signifies holy. It is found in some names, as in Wibert, holy-bright, or bright-holy, eminent for sanctity; Dan. vier, to consecrate, Sw. viga.

WIC, WICK, a termination, denotes jurisdiction, as in bailiwick. Its primary sense is a village or mansion, L. vicus, Sax. wic or wyc; hence it occurs in Berwick, Harwich, Norwich, &c. It signifies also a bay or a castle.

WICK, n. [Sax. weoc; Sw. veke, a wick or match; Ir. buaic, Qu. from twisting.] A number of threads of cotton or some spongy substance loosely twisted into a string, plaited or parallel, which by capillary action draws up the oil in lamps, or the melted tallow or wax in candles, in small successive portions, to be burned.

WICK, v. t. [Suio-Goth. wika, to bend, to turn.] To strike a stone in an oblique direction; a term in curling. [Scotch.]

WICK'ED, a. [Sw. vika, to decline, to err, to deviate, also to fold; Sax. wican, to recede, to slide, to fall away; wicelian, to vacillate, to stumble. It seems to be connected in origin with wag, and Sax. wicca, witch. The primary sense is to wind and turn, or to depart, to fall away.] 1. Evil in principle or practice; deviating from the divine law; addicted to vice; sinful; immoral. This is a word of comprehensive signification, extending to every thing that is contrary to the moral law, and both to persons and actions. We say, a wicked man, a wicked deed, wicked ways, wicked lives, a wicked heart, wicked designs, wicked works.

> No man was ever wicked without secret discontent. Rambler.

2. A word of slight blame; as, the wicked urchin.—3. Cursed; baneful; pernicious; as, wicked words, words pernicious in their effects. [Obs.] [This last signification may throw some light on the word witch.] The wicked, in Scripture, persons who live in sin; transgressors of the divine law; all who are unreconciled to God, unsanctified, or impenitent.

WICK'EDLY, adv. In a manner or with motives and designs contrary to the divine law; viciously; corruptly; immorally.

WILL, n. [Sax. willa; Goth. wilja; D. wil or wille; G. wille; W. gwyll; Ir. ail; Gr. βουλη, counsel; Slav. volia. See the Verb.] 1. That faculty or power of the mind by which we determine either to do or not to do, something which we conceive to be in our power; the faculty which is exercised in deciding, among two or more objects, which we shall embrace or pursue. Every man is conscious of a power to determine in things which he conceives to depend upon his determination. To this power we give the name of will; and, as it is usual, in the operations of the mind, to give the same name to the power and to the act of that power, the term will is often put to signify the act of determining, which more properly is called volition. Volition, therefore, signifies the act of willing and determining, and will is put indifferently to signify either the power of willing or the act. Some philosophers, however, give a more extensive meaning to the term will, comprehending under it not only our determination to act or not to act, but every motive and incitement to action, but this tends to confound things which are very different in their nature. The will is directed or influenced by the judgment. The understanding or reason compares different objects, which operate as motives; the judgment determines which is preferable, and the will decides which to pursue. In other words, we reason with respect to the value or importance of things; we then judge which is to be preferred; and we will to take the most valuable. These are but different operations of the mind, soul, or intellectual part of man. The freedom of the will is essential to moral action; but respecting this subject there have been great disputes among philosophers and divines.—2. Choice; determination. It is my will to prosecute the trespasser. —3. Choice; discretion; pleasure.

Go, then, the guilty at thy will chastise. Pope.

4. Command; direction.

Our prayers should be according to the will of God. Law.

5. Disposition; inclination; desire. "What is your will, Sir?" In this phrase, the word may also signify determination, especially when addressed to a superior.—6. Power; arbitrary disposal.

Deliver me not over to the will of my enemies; Ps. xxvii.

7. Divine determination; moral purpose or counsel.

Thy will be done. Lord's Prayer.

8. In law, a testament, the legal declaration of a man's intentions, as to what he wills to be performed after his death in relation to his property. In strictness of language, the term will is limited to land, and testament to personal estate. Formerly wills were either nuncupative or written; but, according to the Act I. Vict. c. 26, (passed in 1837), by which the making of wills is now regulated, no will, whether of real or personal estate, is to be valid, unless it be in writing, and signed at the foot or end by the testator, or by some person in his presence, and by his direction; and such signature must be made or acknowledged by the testator in the presence of two or more witnesses present at the same time, and such witnesses must attest and subscribe the will in the presence of the testator, but no particular form of attestation is necessary. This act, however, does not affect the wills of soldiers on actual service, or of mariners at sea. These have the power of making nuncupative wills. In the law of Scotland, the term will is not used technically, at least by itself, although it is sometimes so used in combination, as in the expression last or latter will, which is synonymous with testament.

In popular language, however, it is employed to signify any declaration of what a person wills, with regard to the disposal of his property, heritable or movable, and thus includes not only testaments, but all the complicated forms of deeds, granted in the prospect of death.—Will of a summons, or other signet letter, in Scots law, that part of the writ beginning, "Our will is," &c.—Good will, favour; kindness. —2. Right intention; Phil. i.—Ill will, enmity; unfriendliness. It expresses less than malice.—To have one's will, to obtain what is desired.—At will. To hold an estate at the will of another, is to enjoy the possession at his pleasure, and be liable to be ousted at any time by the lessor or proprietor.— Will with a wisp, or Will o' the wisp, Jack with a lantern; ignis fatuus; a luminous appearance sometimes seen in the air over moist ground. [See IGNIS FATUUS.]

WILL, v. t. [Sax. willan; Goth. wilyan; D. willen; G. wollen; L. volo, velle; Gr. βούλομαι; Fr. vouloir. The sense is to set, or to set forward, to stretch forward. The sense is well expressed by the L. propono.] 1. To determine; to decide in the mind that something shall be done or forborne, implying power to carry the purpose into effect. In this manner God wills whatever comes to pass. So in the style of princes: "we will that execution be done."

A man that sits still is said to be at liberty, because he can walk if he wills it. Locke.

2. To command; to direct.

'Tis yours, O queen! to will
The work which duty bids me to fulfil. Dryden.

3. To be inclined or resolved to have.

There, there, Hortensio, will you any wife? Shak.

4. To wish; to desire. What will you? —5. To dispose of estate and effects by testament. — 6. It is sometimes equivalent to may be. Let the circumstances be what they will; that is, any circumstances, of whatever nature.—7. Will is used as an auxiliary verb, and a sign of the future tense. When an auxiliary verb, the past tense is would. It has different significations in different persons.—1. I will go, is a present promise to go; and with an emphasis on will, it expresses determination.—2. Thou wilt go, you will go, express foretelling; simply stating an event that is to come.—3. He will go, is also a foretelling. The use of will in the plural is the same. We will, promises; ye will, they will, foretell. [See SHALL.]

WILL, n. The abridged form of William, a man's name. [Familiar.]

WILL, v. i. To dispose of effects by will or testament.

WILL'ED, pp. Determined; resolved; desired.—2. Disposed of by will or testament.

WIL'LEMITE, n. A mineral of resinous lustre and yellowish colour. It is a silicate of zinc.

WILL'ER, n. One who wills.—2. One who wishes; as, he is my ill-willer. [Not much used in either sense.]

WILL'ING, ppr. Determining; resolving; desiring. — 2. Disposing of by will.

WILL'ING, a. [Sw. and Dan. villig.] 1. Free to do or grant; having the mind inclined; disposed; not averse. Let every man give, who is able and willing.—2. Pleased; desirous.

Felix, willing to show the Jews a pleasure; Acts xxiv.

3. Ready; prompt.

He stoop'd with weary wings and willing feet. Milton.

4. Chosen; received of choice or without reluctance; as, to be held in willing chains.—5. Spontaneous.

No spouts of blood run willing from a tree. Dryden.

6. Consenting.

WILL'ING-HEARTED, a. Well disposed; having a free heart; Exod. xxxv.

WILL'INGLY, adv. With free will; without reluctance; cheerfully.—2. By one's own choice

The condition of that people is not so much to be envied as some would willingly represent it. Addison.

WILL'INGNESS, n. Free choice or consent of the will; freedom from reluctance; readiness of the mind to do or forbear.

Sweet is the love that comes with willingness. Dryden.

WIL'LOW, n. [Sax. welig; D wilge; W. gwial, twigs; also helig, L. salix.] The common name of the different species of plants belonging to the genus Salix, the type of the nat. order Salicaceæ. The species of willows are very numerous, about 220 having been described, of which more than 60 are British. They are all either trees or bushes, occurring abundantly in all the cooler parts of the northern hemisphere. They grow naturally in a moist soil, and wherever planted, they should be within the reach of water. On account of the flexible nature of their shoots, and the toughness of their woody fibre, willows have always been used as materials for baskets, hoops, crates, &c. They are much used in the manufacture of charcoal, and the bark of them all contains the tanning principle. The willow is considered as the emblem of despairing love, and is often associated with the yew and the cypress in the churchyard.

WILLOW, } WIL'LY, } n. In woollen manufactures, a machine for opening and disentangling the locks of wool, and cleansing them from sandy and other loose impurities. This operation is called willowing or willying.

WIL'LOWED, a. Abounding with willows.

WIL'LOW-GALL, n. A protuberance on the leaves of willows.

WIL'LOW-GROUND, n. A piece of swampy land, where osiers are grown for basket-making.

WIL'LOW-HERB, n. The common name of the plants belonging to the genus Epilobium, natives of the cooler parts and mountainous districts of Europe, Asia, and America. They are all ornamental plants, but are of little utility. [See EPILOBIUM]

WIL'LOWISH, a. Like the colour of the willow.

WIL'LOW-OAK, n. An American tree of the genus Quercus, the Q. phellos. The wood is of loose coarse texture, and is little used.

WIL'LOW-WEED, n. The Polygonum lapathifolium, a weed growing on wet light lands, with a seed like buckwheat.

WIL'LOW-WORT, n. A plant.

WIL'LOW-WREN, n. The Sylvia trochilus, one of the most abundant of the warblers. It is a summer visitant in Britain, and is found in almost every wood and copse.

WIL'LOWY, a. Abounding with willows.

WILL-WITH-A-WISP, } See under
WILL-O'-THE-WISP. } WILL.

WILL'YART, a. Wild; strange; shy. [Scotch.]

WILSOME, a. Obstinate; stubborn. [Obsolete or local.]

WILT, v. i. [D. and G. welken, to fade; that is, to shrink or withdraw.] To fade; to decay; to droop; to wither; as plants or flowers cut or plucked off. A word often used in the United States, and provincial in England. [See WELK.]

WI'LY, a. [from wile.] Cunning; sly; using craft or stratagem to accomplish a purpose; subtle; as, a wily adversary.

WIM'BLE, n. [W. gwimbill, a gimlet; gwimiaw, to move round briskly. See WHIM.] An instrument used by carpenters and joiners for boring holes; a kind of augur.

WIM'BLE, v. t. To bore, as with a wimble.

WIM'BLE,† a. Active; nimble.

WIM'BREL, n. A bird of the curlew kind, a species of Scolopax, S. phæopus.

WIM'PLE,† n. [G. wimpel, a pendant; Dan. vimpel; W. gwempyl, a vail, a wimple; Fr. guimpe, a neck handkerchief.] A hood or vail; Is. iii.

WIM'PLE, n. A winding or fold. [Scotch.]

WIM'PLE,† v. t. To draw down, as a vail.

WIM'PLE, v. t. To wrap; to fold. As a verb neuter, to meander, as a stream. [Scotch.]

WIN, v. t. pret. and pp. Won. [Sax. winnan, to labour, to toil, to gain by labour, to win; D. winnen; G. gewinnen; Sw. vinna.] 1. To gain by success in competition or contest; as, to win the prize in a game; to win money; to win a battle, or to win a country. Battles are won by superior strength or skill.

Who thus shall Canaan win. Milton.

2. To gain by solicitation or courtship. —3. To obtain; to allure to kindness or compliance. Thy virtue won me Win your enemy by kindness.—4. To gain by persuasion or influence; as, an orator wins his audience by argument. The advocate has won the jury.

And Mammon wins his way, where seraphs might despair. Byron.

5. In North Britain, to earn; as, he wins his bread honestly.

WIN, v. t. [from wind.] To dry corn, hay, &c., by exposing them to the air. [Scotch.]

WIN, v. i. To gain the victory.

Nor is it aught but just
That he, who in debate of truth hath won,
Should win in arms. Milton.

To win upon, to gain favour or influence; as, to win upon the heart or affections.—2. To gain ground.

The rabble will in time win upon power. Shak.

To win of, to be conqueror.

WIN, v. i. To get; to gain. [Scotch.]

WINCE, v. i. [Fr. guincher, to twist; guingois, crookedness, W. gwing; gwingaw, to wriggle, to wince.] 1. To twist or turn, as in pain or uneasiness; to shrink, as from a blow or from pain; to start back.

I will not stir nor wince. Shak.

2. To kick or flounce when uneasy, or impatient of a rider; as, a horse winces.

WINCE, or WIN'CING MACHINE, n. The dyer's reel, upon which he winds the piece of cloth to be dyed. It is suspended horizontally by the ends of its axis in bearings, over the edge of the vat, so that the line of the axis may be placed over the middle partition in the vessel. By this means, the piece of cloth wound upon the reel is allowed to descend alternately into either compartment of the bath, according as it is turned by hand to the right or the left.

WIN'CER, n. One that winces, shrinks, or kicks.

WINCH, n. [Sax. wince; Fr. guincher, to twist.] In mech., the crank or rectangular lever by which the axis of a revolving machine is turned; as in the common windlass, the grindstone, &c. Also an instrument with which to turn or strain something forcibly. The term winch is also popularly applied to the windlass.—2. A kick from impatience or fretfulness, as of a horse; a twist or turn.

WINCH, v. i. To wince; to shrink; to kick with impatience or uneasiness. [This is a more correct orthography than wince.]

WINCH AND AXLE. Another name for the double axis machine. [See under WHEEL AND AXLE.]

WIN'CHESTER BUSHEL, n. The original English standard measure of capacity, established by Henry VII., and ordered to be kept in the town-hall of Winchester. It contains 2150·42 cubic inches, and is to the imperial standard bushel now established as 32 to 33 nearly.

WINCH'ING, } ppr. Flinching; shrink-
WIN'CING, } ing; kicking.

WIN'COPIPE, n. The vulgar name of a little flower, that, when it opens in the morning, bodes a fair day. This is probably the Anagallis arvensis, or common scarlet pimpernel, often called the poor man's hour-glass or barometer. [See PIMPERNEL.]

WIND, n. [Sax. wind; D. and G. wind; W. gwynt; L. ventus; Fr. vent. This word accords with L. venio, ventum, and the Teutonic wendan, Eng. went. The primary sense is to move, flow, rush, or drive along.] 1. Air in motion with any degree of velocity, indefinitely; a current of air; a current in the atmosphere, conveying the air with greater or less velocity from one part to another; a current as coming from a particular point. When the air moves moderately, we call it a light wind or a breeze; when with more velocity, we call it a fresh breeze; and when with violence, we call it a gale, storm, tempest, or hurricane. The word gale is used by the poets for a moderate breeze, but seamen use it as equivalent to storm. The principal cause of those currents of air to which we give the name of winds, is the disturbance of the equilibrium of the atmosphere by the unequal distribution of heat. When one part of the earth's surface is more heated than another, the heat is communicated to the air above that part, in consequence of which the air expands, becomes lighter, and rises up, while colder air rushes in to supply its place, and thus produces wind. As the heat of the sun is greatest in the equatorial regions, the general tendency there is for the heavier columns of air to displace the lighter, and for the air at the earth's surface to move from the poles toward the equator. The only supply for the air thus constantly abstracted from the higher latitudes must be produced by a counter-current in the upper regions of the atmosphere, carrying back the air from the equator towards the poles. The quantity of air thus transported, by these opposite currents, is so nearly equal, that the average weight of the air, as indicated by the barometer, is the same in all places of the earth. Besides the unequal distribution of heat already mentioned, there are various other causes which give rise to currents of air in the atmosphere, such as the chemical changes which are carried on in the air, the condensation of the aqueous vapours which are constantly rising from the surfaces of rivers and seas, and the agency of electricity. Winds have been divided into fixed or constant, as the trade winds; periodical, as the monsoons; land and sea breezes; and variable winds, or such as blow at one time from one point; at another from another point; and at another time cease altogether. [See TRADE WINDS, MONSOONS, LAND AND SEA BREEZES.] There are also various local winds, which receive particular names; as the Etesian wind, the Sirocco, the Samiel or Simoom, the Harmattan, &c. [See these terms.] The velocity of the wind varies from one that is hardly sensible, to one of 100 miles in an hour. Winds are denominated from the point of compass from which they blow; as, a north wind; an east wind; a south wind; a west wind; a southwest wind. &c.—2. The four winds, the cardinal points of the heavens.

Come from the four winds, O breath, and breathe upon these slain; Ezek. xxxvii.

This sense of the word seems to have had its origin with the Orientals, as it was the practice of the Hebrews to give to each of the four cardinal points the name of wind.—3.† Direction of the wind from other points of the compass than the cardinal, or any point of compass; as, a compass of eight winds. —4. Breath; power of respiration.

If my wind were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent. Shak.

5. Air in motion from any force or action; as, the wind of a cannon ball; the wind of a bellows.—6. Breath modulated by the organs or by an instrument.

Their instruments were various in their kind,
Some for the bow, and some for breathing wind. Dryden.

7. Air impregnated with scent.

A pack of dog-fish had him in the wind. Shak.

8. Any thing insignificant or light as wind.

Think not with wind or airy threats to awe. Milton.

9. Flatulence; air generated in the stomach and bowels; as, to be troubled with wind.—10. The name given to a disease of sheep, in which the intestines are distended with air, or rather affected with a violent inflammation. It occurs immediately after shearing.—Down the wind, decaying; declining; in a state of decay; as, he went down the wind.†—To take or have the wind, to gain or have the advantage.—To take wind, or to get wind, to be divulged; to become public. The story got wind, or took wind.—In the wind's eye, in seamen's language, toward the direct point from which the wind blows.—All in the wind, a term applied to a vessel when her head is too close to the wind, so that the sails are shivering.—Between wind and water, denoting that part of a ship's side or bottom which is frequently brought above water by the rolling of the ship, or fluctuation of the water's surface.—To carry the wind, in the manege, is when a horse tosses his nose as high as his ears. [In poetry, wind often rhymes with find; but the common pronunciation is with i short, and so let it continue.]

WIND, v. t. pret. and pp. Wound. [Sax. windan; G. and D. winden; from wind, or the same root.] 1. To blow; to sound by blowing or inflation; to sound so that the notes shall be prolonged and varied.

Wind the shrill horn. Pope.

2. To turn; to move, or cause to turn.

To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus. Shak.

3. To turn round some fixed object; to bind, or to form into a ball or coil by turning; as, to wind thread on a reel; to wind thread into a ball; to wind a rope into a coil.—4. To turn by shifts and expedients.

He endeavours to turn and wind himself every way to evade the force of this famous challenge. Waterland.

5. To introduce by insinuation. The child winds himself into my affections.

They have little arts and dexterities to wind in such things into discourse. Gov. of the Tongue

6. To change; to vary.

Were our legislature vested in the prince, he might wind and turn our constitution at his pleasure. Addison.

7. To entwist; to enfold; to encircle. —To wind off, to unwind.—To wind out, to extricate.—To wind up, to bring to a small compass, as a ball of thread. —8. To bring to a conclusion or settlement; as, to wind up one's affairs.— 9. To put in a state of renovated or continued motion.

Fate seem'd to wind him up for fourscore years. Dryden.

To wind up a clock, is to wind the cord by which the weights are suspended, round an axis or pin.—To wind up a watch, is to wind the spring round its axis or pin.—10. To raise by degrees.

Thus they wound up his temper to a pitch. Atterbury.

11. To straiten, as a string; to put in tune.

Wind up the slacken'd strings of thy lute. Waller.

12. To put in order for regular action.

WIND, v. t. To nose; to perceive or follow by the wind or scent; as hounds wind an animal.—2. To ventilate; to expose to the wind; to winnow.—3. To drive or ride hard, as a horse, so as to render scant of wind; also, to rest, as a horse, in order to recover wind.—To wind a ship, to bring it round until the head occupies the place where the stern was, so that the wind may strike the opposite side.

WIND, v. i. To turn; to change.

So swift your judgments turn and wind. Dryden.

2. To turn around something; as, vines wind around a pole.—3. To have a circular direction; as, winding stairs.—4. To crook; to bend; to proceed in flexures. The road winds in various places.—5. To move round; to double; as, a hare pursued turns and winds.—6. To have a twist, or an uneven surface, or a surface whose parts do not lie in the same plane; as, a piece of wood.—To wind out, to be extricated; to escape.

Long lab'ring underneath, ere they could wind
Out of such prison. Milton.

WIND'AĠE, n. [Sp. viento, wind, windage.] The difference between the diameter of a gun or other piece of ordnance and that of a ball or shell.

WIND' BEAM, n. In arch., an old term for a collar beam.

WIND' BILL, n. In Scots law, an accommodation bill; a bill of exchange granted without value having been received by the acceptors, for the purpose of raising money by discount.

WIND'-BORE, n. The extremity of the suction pipe of a pump, usually covered with a perforated plate, to prevent the intrusion of foreign substances.

WIND'BOUND, a. [wind and bound.] Prevented from sailing by a contrary wind.

WIND'-BRO'KEN, a. Diseased in the wind, or breath; as, a wind-broken horse.

WIND'-CHANĠ'ING,† a. Changeful as the wind; fickle.

WIND'-DRIED, a. Dried in the wind.

WIND'-DROPSY, n. [wind and dropsy.] A swelling of the belly from wind in the intestines; tympanites.

WIND'-EGG, n. [wind and egg.] An addle egg.

WIND'ER, v. t. To fan; to clean grain with a fan. [Local.]

WIND'ER, n. He or that which winds; as a bobbin-winder.—2. An instrument or machine for winding.—3. A plant that twists itself round others.

WIND'ER-MEB, n. A bird of the genus Larus, or gull-kind.

WINDERS, n. In arch., steps of a stair while radiating from a centre, are narrower at the one end than the other.—2. Among pugilists, a blow that deprives of breath. [Vulgar.]

WIND'FALL, n. [wind and fall.] Fruit blown off the tree by wind.—2. An unexpected legacy; any unexpected advantage.

WIND'-FALLEN, a. Blown down by the wind.

WIND'-FLOWER, n. [wind and flower.] A plant, the anemone.

WIND'-FURNACE, n. [wind and furnace.] A furnace in which the air is supplied by an artificial current, as from a bellows.

WIND'-GAĠE, n [wind and gage.] An instrument for ascertaining the velocity and force of wind; an anemometer. [See ANEMOMETER.]

WIND'-GALL, n. [wind and gall.] A soft tumour on the fetlock joints of a horse.

WIND'-GUN, n. An air gun; a gun discharged by the force of compressed air.

WIND'-HATCH, n. [wind and hatch.] In mining, the opening or place where the ore is taken out of the earth.

WIND'-HŎVER, n. [wind and hover.] A species of hawk, the Falco tinnunculus, called also the stannel, but more usually the kestrel.

WIND'INESS, n. [from windy.] The state of being windy or tempestuous; as, the windiness of the weather or season.—2. Fulness of wind; flatulence.—3. Tendency to generate wind; as, the windiness of vegetables.—4. Tumour; puffiness.

The swelling windiness of much knowledge. Brerewood.

WINDING, n. Act of those persons or things that wind.

WINDING, ppr. Turning; binding about; bending.—2. a. Bending; twisting from a direct line or an even surface.

WINDING, n. A turn or turning; a bend; flexure; meander; as, the windings of a road or stream.—2. Among workmen, a turn or twist in any surface, so that all its parts do not lie in the same plane. When a surface is perfectly plane, it is said to be out of winding.—3. A call by the boatswain's whistle.

WINDING-ENGINE, n. An engine employed in mining, to draw up buckets from a deep pit.

WINDINGLY, adv. In a winding or circuitous form.

WINDING-SHEET, n. [winding and sheet] A sheet in which a corpse is wrapped.

WINDING-STICKS, n. In joinery, two slips of wood, each straightened on one edge, and having the opposite edge parallel. Their use is to ascertain whether the surface of a board, &c., winds or is twisted. For this purpose, one of the slips is placed across one end of the board, and the other across the other end, with one of the straight-edges of each upon the surface. The joiner then looks in a longitudinal direction over the upper edges of the two slips, and if he finds that these edges coincide throughout their length, he concludes that the surface is out of winding; but if the upper edges do not coincide, this is a proof that the surface winds. [See WINDING.]

WINDING-TACKLE, n. [winding and tackle.] In ships, a tackle consisting of one fixed triple block, and one double or triple movable block, used principally to hoist up any weighty materials, as guns.

WIND'-INSTRUMENT, n. An instrument of music, played by wind, chiefly by the breath; as a flute, a clarionet, &c. Wind instruments generally produce their effects by the vibrations of a column of air in a tube, shut at one end, and either open or shut at the other. These vibrations are determined mainly by the length of the sounding column; yet inferior and subordinate ones are found to co-exist with the fundamental one. The whole column spontaneously divides itself into portions equal to the half, the third, or the fourth of its longitudinal extent, and thus different sounds are produced. The finger holes, and keys of wind instruments, are contrivances for varying the length of the sounding column, and thus producing different tones.

WIND'LASS, n. [wind and lace. Qu.] In mech., a modification of the wheel and axle, used for raising weights, &c. The common windlass, such as is used for raising water from wells, &c., consists simply of an axle, which is turned by a winch. One end of a rope or chain being attached to the axle, and the other to a weight, by turning the winch, the rope is coiled on the axle, and thus the weight is raised. The windlass used in ships for raising the anchors, or obtaining a purchase on other occasions, consists of a strong beam of wood placed horizontally, and supported at its ends by iron spindles, which turn in collars or bushes inserted in what are termed the windlass bitts.

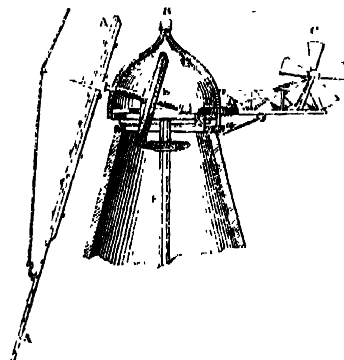
Ship's Windlass.



This large axle is pierced with holes directed towards its centre, in which long levers or handspikes are inserted, for turning it round when the anchor is to be weighed or any purchase is required. It is furnished with pauls to prevent it from turning backwards when the pressure on the handspikes is intermitted. It is sometimes written windlace. Improved patent windlasses are now extensively used in ships.—2.† A handle by which any thing is turned.

WIND'LE, n. A spindle; a kind of reel.

WIND'LESS, a. Having no wind; calm.

WIND'LESTRAWS, n. The withered flower-stalks of grasses; bents. [Local.] In Scotland, windlestraw is a name given to crested dog's-tail grass (Cynosurus cristatus).

WIND'-MILL, n. [wind and mill.] A mill which receives its motion from the impulse of the wind, and which is used for grinding corn, pumping water, &c. There are two kinds of wind-mills, the vertical and horizontal. In the former, a section of which is here given, the wind is made to act upon sails or vanes, A A (generally four in number), attached by means of rectangular frames to the extremities of the principal axis or wind-shaft of the mill, which is placed nearly horizontal, so that the sails, by the action of the wind, revolve in a plane nearly vertical, giving a rotatory motion to the driving wheel, E, fixed to the wind-shaft, and thus conveying motion to the vertical shaft, F, and the machinery connected with it. The extremity of the wind-shaft must always be placed so as to point to the quarter from which the wind blows. To effect this, some mills have a self-adjusting cap, B, which is turned round by the force of the wind acting upon the fan or flyer, C, attached to the projecting frame-work at the back of the cap. By means of a pinion on its axis, motion is given to the inclined shaft, and to the wheel, D, on the vertical spindle of the pinion, A, this latter pinion engages the cogs on the outside of the fixed rim of the cap; by these means the sails are kept constantly turned to the wind, the head of the mill moving slowly round, the moment any change in the direction of the wind causes the fan, C, to revolve. In the horizontal wind-mill, the wind-shaft is vertical, so that the sails revolve in a horizontal plane. The effect of horizontal wind-mills, however, is considered to be far inferior to that of the vertical kind. The effect of wind-mills depends greatly upon the form and position of the sails.

Section of upper part of Wind mill.

WIND'OW, n. [Dan. vindue; Sp. ventana, from the same root as venta, sale, vent of goods. The word in Spanish signifies also a nostril, that is, a passage. Ventaja is advantage; ventalla, a valve, and ventalle, a fan; ventear, to blow. Hence we see that vent, L. vendo, wind, fan, and van, Fr. avant, are all of one family. So is also the L. fenestra, Fr. fenêtre, D. venster, G. fenster, Ir. fineog. The vulgar pronunciation is windor, as if from the Welsh gwyntdor, wind-door.] 1. An opening in the wall of a building for the admission of light, and of air when necessary. This opening has a frame on the sides, in which are set movable sashes, containing panes of glass. The sashes are generally made to rise and fall, for the admission or exclusion of air, but sometimes the sashes are made to open and shut vertically, like the leaves of a folding door.—2. An aperture or opening resembling a window.

A window shalt thou make to the ark; Gen. vi.

3. The frame or other thing that covers the aperture.

Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes. Shak.

4. An aperture; or rather the clouds or water-spouts.

The windows of heaven were opened; Gen. vii.

5. Lattice or casement; or the net work of wire used before the invention of glass; Judges v.—6. Lines crossing each other.

Till he has windows on his bread and butter. King.

WIND'OW, v. t. To furnish with windows.—2. To place at a window. [Unusual.]—3. To break into openings. [Unusual.]

WIND'OW-BLIND, n. [window and blind.] A blind to intercept the light of a window. [See BLIND.]

WIND'OW-CURTAIN, n. A curtain, usually decorative, hung over the window recess inside a room. [See CURTAIN.]

WIND'OWED, pp. Furnished with windows.—2. Having many openings or rents.

Your loop'd and window'd raggedness. Shak.

WIND'OW-FRAME, n. [window and frame.] The frame of a window which receives and holds the sashes.

WIND'OW-GLASS, n. [window and glass.] Panes of glass for windows.

WIND'OWLESS, n. Destitute of windows.

WINE, n. [Sax. win; G. wein; D. wyn; W. gwin; Russ. vino; L. vinum; Fr. vin; Ir. fion; Gr. οινος; Eolic, Fοινος; Heb. יין, ain. This Oriental word seems to be connected with עין, ain, a fountain, and ענה anah, to thrust, to press, or press out.] 1. The fermented juice of the grape, or of the fruit of the vine, (vitis vinifera. See VITIS). Wines are distinguished practically, by their colour, hardness or softness on the palate, their flavour, and their being still or effervescing. The differences in the quality of wines depend partly upon differences in the vines, but more on the differences of the soils in which they are planted, in the exposure of the vineyards, in the treatment of the grapes, and the mode of manufacturing the wines. When the grapes are fully ripe, they generally yield the most perfect wine as to strength and flavour. The leading character of wine, however, must be referred to the alcohol which it contains, and upon which its intoxicating powers principally depend. The most celebrated ancient wines were those of Lesbos and Chios among the Greeks, and the Falernian and Cecuban among the Romans. The principal modern wines are Port, Sherry, Claret, Champagne, Madeira, Hock, Marsala, Cape, with their varieties. The wines most used in this country are Port and Sherry, especially the former. The wines intended for the English market, are mixed with a large quantity of brandy. Genuine unmixed port wine is very rarely met with in this country.—2. The juice of certain fruits, prepared with sugar, sometimes with spirits, &c.; as, currant wine; gooseberry wine.—3. Any spirituous product of fermentation.—4. Intoxication.

Noah awoke from his wine; Gen. ix.

5. Drinking.

They that tarry long at the wine; Prov. xxiii.

Corn and wine, in Scripture, are put for all kinds of necessaries for subsistence; Ps. iv.—Bread and wine, in the Lord's supper, are symbols of the body and blood of Christ.—Spirit of wine, alcohol,—which see.

WINE-CASK, n. [wine and cask.] A cask in which wine is or has been kept.

WINE-CELLAR, n. An apartment or cellar for stowing wine. Wine cellars are generally underground, on the basement story of a building, in order that the wine may be kept cool and at an equal temperature.

WINE-COOLER, n. A porous vessel of earthenware, which being dipped in water, absorbs a considerable quantity of it. A bottle of wine is placed in the vessel, and the evaporation which takes place from the vessel, abstracts heat from the wine. Wine coolers for the table are usually made of silver, or of plated metal, and are provided with a chamber in which evaporation is carried on by means of a chemical mixture.

WINE-GLASS, n. [wine and glass.] A small glass in which wine is drunk.

WINELESS, a. Destitute of wine; as, wineless life.

WINE-MAKING, n. The process of manufacturing wines.

WINE-MEASURE, n. [See MEASURE.] An old English measure by which wines and other spirits were sold. In this measure the gallon contained 231 cubic inches, and was to the imperial standard gallon as 5 to 6 nearly.

WINE-MERCHANT, n. A merchant who deals in wines.

WINE-PRESS, n. [wine and press.] A place where grapes are pressed.

WINE'-STONE, n. A deposit of crude tartar or argal, which settles on the sides and bottoms of wine casks.

WING, n. [Sax. gehwing; Sw. and Dan. vinge. The word signifies the side, end, or extremity.] 1. The limb of a fowl by which it flies. In a few species of fowls, the wings do not enable them to fly; as is the case with the dodo, ostrich, great auk, and penguin; but in the two former, the wings assist the fowls in running.—2. The limb of an insect by which it flies.—3. Figuratively, care or protection.—4. In bot., the side petal of a papilionaceous corolla, of which there are two; also, an appendage of seeds, by means of which they are wafted in the air and scattered; also, any membranous or leafy dilatation of a footstalk, or of the angles of a stem, branch, or flower-stalk, or of a calyx.—5. Flight; passage by the wing; as, to be on the wing; to take wing.—6. Means of flying; acceleration. Fear adds wings to flight.—7. Motive or incitement of flight.

Then fiery expedition be my wing. Shak.

8.† A fan to winnow.—9. The flank or extreme body or part of an army.—10. Any side-piece.—11. In gardening, a side-shoot.—12. In arch., a side building, less than the main edifice.—13. In fort., the longer sides of horn-works, crown-works, &c.—14. In a fleet, the ships on the extremities, when ranged in a line, or when forming the two sides of a triangle.—15. In a ship, the wings are those parts of the hold and orlop deck, which are nearest the sides. The term wing is also applied to the projecting part of the deck of a steam vessel, before and abaft each of the paddle boxes.—16. In Scrip., protection; generally in the plural; Ps. lxiii; Exod. xix.—On the wings of the wind, with the utmost velocity; Ps. xviii.

WING, v. t. To furnish with wings; to enable to fly or to move with celerity.

Who heaves old ocean, and who wings the storms. Pope.

2. To supply with side bodies; as, on either side well winged.—3. To transport by flight.

I, an old turtle,
Will wing me to some wither'd bough. Shak.

Edge the keen sword, and wing th' unerring ball. Trumbull.

4. To wound in the wing. [A term among sportsmen.]—To wing a flight, to exert the power of flying.

WING'-CASE, } n. The case or shell WING'-SHELL, } which covers the wings of coleopterous insects; as the beetle, &c.

WING-COV'ERING, a. Covering the wings.

WING'ED, pp. Furnished with wings; transported by flying.—2. a. Having wings; as, a winged fowl; Gen. i.—3. Swift; rapid; as, with winged haste.—4. In bot., alate; furnished with longitudinal membranous appendages, as a winged stalk or stem; or with downy or hairy appendages, as winged seeds.—Winged petiole, having a thin membrane or border on each side, or dilated on the sides.—Winged leaf, a pinnate leaf; a species of compound leaf, wherein a simple leaf has several leaflets fastened to each side of it.—5. In her., represented with wings, or having wings of a different colour from the body.—6. Fanned with wings; swarming with birds.—7. Hurt or disabled in the wing; as, that bird cannot fly far, for it has been winged.

WING'ED-PEA, n. A plant.

WING'ERS, n. A name for casks stowed in the wings of a vessel.

WING'-FOOTED, a. [wing and foot.] Having wings attached to the feet; as, wing-footed mercury.—2. Swift; moving with rapidity; fleet.

WING'LESS, a. Having no wings; not able to ascend or fly.

WING'LET, n. A little wing.

WING'-STROKE, n. A blow with a bird's expanded wing; as, a swan's wing-stroke may break a man's leg.

WING'-SWIFT, a. Swift on the wing; of rapid flight.

WING'-TRANSOM, n. In ships, the uppermost or longest transom, called also the main-transom. [See TRANSOM.]

WING'Y, a. Having wings; rapid; as, wingy speed.

WINK, v. i. [Sax. wincian; G. winken; W. gwing, a wink; gwinciaw, to wriggle, to wink, to wince. Wink and wince are radically one word.] 1. To shut the eyes; to close the eyelids.

They are not blind, but they wink. Tillotson.

2. To close and open the eyelids.—3. To give a hint by a motion of the eyelids.

Wink at the footman to leave him without a plate. Swift.

4. To close the eyelids and exclude the light.

Or wink as cowards and afraid. Prior.

5. To be dim; as, a winking light.—To wink at, to connive at; to seem not to see; to tolerate; to overlook, as something not perfectly agreeable; as, to wink at faults.

WINK, n. The act of closing the eyelids. I lay awake and could not sleep a wink.

I could eclipse and cloud them with a wink. Donne.

2. A motion of the eye.—3. A hint given by shutting the eye with a significant cast.

WINK'ER, n. One who winks.—2. One of the blinds of a horse.

WINK'ING, ppr. Shutting the eyes; shutting and opening the eyelids; hinting by closing the eye; conniving at; overlooking.

WINK'INGLY, adv. With the eye almost closed.

WIN'NER, n. [from win.] One who gains by success in competition or contest.

WIN'NING, ppr. [from win.] Gaining by success in competition or contest.—2. a. Attracting; adapted to gain favour; charming; as, a winning address.

WIN'NING, n. The sum won or gained by success in competition or contest. [This word is seldom used except in its plural form, winnings.]

WIN'NINGLY, adv. In a winning manner.

WIN'NOW, v. t. [L. evanno, from vannus, a fan; D. and G. wannen; from the root of fan and wind. The Sax. has windwian, to wind.] 1. To separate and drive off the chaff from grain by means of wind. Grain is winnowed by a fan, or by a machine, or by pouring it out of a vessel in a current of air.—2. To fan; to beat as with wings.—3. To examine; to sift for the purpose of separating falsehood from truth.

Winnow well this thought. Dryden.

4. To separate, as the bad from the good.

WIN'NOW, v. i. To separate chaff from corn.

Winnow not with every wind. Eccles.

WIN'NOWED, pp. Separated from the chaff by wind; sifted; examined.

WIN'NOWER, n. One who winnows.

WIN'NOWING, ppr. Separating from the chaff by wind; examining.

WIN'NOWING, n. The act of separating the chaff from grain, by means of the wind, or by an artificial current of air.

WIN'SOME, a. Cheerful; merry; gay; comely; agreeable; engaging. [Scotch.]

WIN'TER, n. [Sax. G. D. Sw. and Dan.; from wind, or its root; Goth. wintrus.] 1. The cold season of the year. Astronomically considered, winter commences in northern latitudes when the sun enters Capricorn, or at the solstice about the 21st of December, and ends at the equinox in March; but in ordinary discourse, the three winter months are December, January, and February. Our Saxon ancestors reckoned the years by winters; as, ten winters; thirty winters. In tropical climates, there are two winters annually; but they cannot be said to be cold. In the temperate and frigid climates, there is one winter only in the year.—2. The part of a printing press which sustains the carriage.

WIN'TER, v. i. To pass the winter. He wintered in Italy. Cattle winter well on good fodder.

WIN'TER, v. t. To feed or manage during the winter. To winter young cattle on hay is not profitable. Delicate plants must be wintered under cover.

WIN'TER, a. Pertaining to winter. [See the following compounds.]

WINTERA'CEÆ, n. A small nat. order of polypetalous exogenous plants. The plants of this order are small trees or shrubs, closely allied to Magnoliaceæ, from which they differ chiefly in their dotted leaves and aromatic qualities. About ten species have been enumerated, of which two inhabit New Holland, two are found in the hotter parts of America, two in South America, two in North America, one in China and Japan, and one in New Zealand. Illicium anisatum, the Chinese anise-seed tree, yields the Chinese anise, which is frequently used to give an agreeable aromatic flavour to certain dishes, and also to flavour the liquor called Anisette de Bordeaux. Illicium floridanum, the Florida anise-seed tree, yields, by distillation, a volatile oil, which has a spicy aromatic taste and smell. Drimys winteri yields the winter's bark, which is known for its resemblance to that of cinnamon. Drimys granatensis, New Granada winter's bark, is a large tree, the bark of which is aromatic and stimulating, and is much used by the natives where it grows, both as a medicine, and for seasoning their food.

WIN'TER-ACONITE, n. A plant of the genus Eranthis, the E. hiemalis, a small stemless, tuberous plant, inhabiting shady places in the midland parts of Europe. It is cultivated in gardens on account of its cup-like flowers of bright yellow, which it puts forth in early spring. [See ERANTHIS.]

WIN'TER-AP'PLE, n. [winter and apple.] An apple that keeps well in winter.

WIN'TER-BARLEY, n. [winter and barley.] A kind of barley which is sowed in autumn.

WIN'TER-BEATEN, a. [winter and beat.] Harassed by the severe weather of winter.

WIN'TER-BERRY, n. [winter and berry.] The common name of North American plants of the genus Prinos. [See PRINOS.]

WIN'TER-BLOOM, n. [winter and bloom.] A plant of the genus Azalea.

WIN'TER-CHER'RY, n. [winter and cherry.] A plant of the genus Physalis, the P. alkekengi, and its fruit, which is of the size of a cherry. The other species of the genus Physalis are also known by the name of winter-cherry. [See PHYSALIS.]

WIN'TER-CIT'RON, n. [winter and citron.] A sort of pear.

WIN'TER-CRESS, n. [winter and cress.] The common name of two British cruciferous plants of the genus Barbarea, formerly included in the genus Erysimum. Bitter winter-cress (B. vulgaris), called also yellow rocket, grows on the banks of ditches and rivers, and about hedges and walls. It is bitter and sharp to the taste, and is sometimes used as a salad.

WIN'TER-CROP', n. [winter and crop.] A crop which will bear the winter, or which may be converted into fodder during the winter.

WIN'TERED, pp. Kept through the winter; lived through the winter.

WIN'TER-FAL'LOW, n. [winter and fallow.] Ground that is fallowed in winter.

WIN'TER-GÄRDEN, n. [winter and garden.] An ornamental garden for winter.

WIN'TER-GREEN, n. [winter and green.] The common name of plants of the genus Pyrola, and of its allies. [See PYROLA.]

WIN'TERING, ppr. Passing the winter; keeping in winter.

WIN'TERING, n. The act of passing the winter; the act of keeping, feeding, or preserving during the winter.

WIN'TER-KILL, v. t. [winter and kill.] In America, to kill by means of the weather in winter; as, to winter-kill wheat or clover.

WIN'TER-LODGE, } n. [winter
WIN'TER-LODGMENT, } and lodge.] In bot., the hybernacle of a plant, which protects the embryo or future shoot from injuries during the winter. It is either a bud or a bulb.

WIN'TERLY, a. Such as is suitable to winter. [Little used.]

WIN'TER-PEAR, n. [winter and pear.] Any pear that keeps well in winter.

WIN'TER-PROUD, a. Too green and luxuriant in winter; applied to wheat. [Local.]

WIN'TER-QUAR'TERS, n. [winter and quarters.] The quarters of an army during the winter; a winter residence or station.

WIN'TER-RIG, v. t. [winter and rig.] To fallow or till in winter. [Local.]

WINTER'S BARK, n. [Capt. W. Winter, who first brought it to this country.] A plant of the nat. order Winteraceæ, and genus Drimys, a native of South America. D. winteri, or Wintera aromatica, of older botanists, true winter's bark, is a native of the Straits of Magelhaens, where it grows to the height of from six to forty feet. The bark is of a pale greyish red colour externally, has an agreeable, pungent, aromatic taste, and contains an acid resin, an acid volatile oil and some tannin. It is an excellent aromatic, but not easily procured, other substances, particularly the bark of the Canella alba, being substituted for it.—D. granatensis, New Granada winter's bark, is inferior to the former in its aromatic properties, and grows in New Granada and Brazil, where it is indigenous, to about twenty feet high.

Winter's Bark (Drimys Winteri).

WINTER-SOL'STICE, n. [winter and solstice.] The solstice of the winter, which takes place when the sun enters Capricorn, December 21st. [See SOLSTICE.]

WIN'TERY,† a. Pertaining to winter; suitable to winter; brumal; hyemal; cold; stormy.

WIN'TLE, v. i. To stagger; to reel; to roll or tumble gently over. [Scotch.]

WIN'TLE, n. A staggering motion; a gentle rolling tumble. [Scotch.]

WINTRY, instead of Wintery.

WI'NY, a. [from wine.] Having the taste or qualities of wine.

WINZE, n. In mining, a small shaft sunk from one level to another for the purpose of ventilation.

WINZE, n. A curse or imprecation. [Scotch.]

WIPE, v. t. [Sax. wipian.] 1. To rub with something soft for cleaning; to clean by rubbing; as, to wipe the hands or face with a towel; Luke vii.—2. To strike off gently.

Some nat'ral tears they dropp'd but wip'd them soon. Milton.

3. To cleanse from evil practices or abuses; to overturn and destroy what is foul and hateful.

I will wipe Jerusalem as a man wipeth a dish; 2 Kings xxi.

4. To cheat; to defraud.—To wipe away, to cleanse by rubbing or tersion; as, to wipe away a stain or reproach.—To wipe off, to clear away.—Wipe off this foul stain; wipe off the dust.—To wipe out, to efface; to obliterate. Wipe out the blot.

WIPE, n. The act of rubbing for the purpose of cleaning.—2. A blow; a stroke.—3. A gibe; a jeer; a severe sarcasm.—4. A bird. [Sw. vipa, the lapwing.]

WIPED, pp. Rubbed for cleaning; cleaned by rubbing; cleared away; effaced.

WIPER, n. One who wipes.—2. The instrument used for wiping.—3. Wipers, in machinery, are pieces projecting generally from horizontal axles, for the purpose of raising stampers, pounders, or pistons, in a vertical direction, and letting them fall by their own weight. They are employed in fulling mills, stamping mills, oil mills, powder mills, &c.

WIPER-SHAFT, n. In mech., a shaft carrying wipers for lifting, as in fulling mills.—2. In a marine steam-engine, the shaft on which the end of the slide-valve lever is fixed, and also the end of the gab-lever. It is also termed the weigh-shaft.

WIPING, ppr. Rubbing with a cloth or other soft thing for cleaning; clearing away; effacing.

WIRE, n. [Sw. vir; Ice. wijr.] A thread of metal; any metallic substance drawn to an even thread, or slender cylindrical rod. The term wire has also a plural signification, being frequently used, as well as the regular plural wires, to designate a number of metallic threads. Wire is frequently drawn so fine as to be only the three-thousandth part of an inch in diameter. The metals most commonly drawn into wire are gold, silver, copper, and iron; but the finest wire is made from platina.—Wire of Lapland, a shining slender substance made from the sinews of the rein-deer, soaked in water, beaten, and spun into a sort of thread of great strength. These threads are dipped in melted tin, and drawn through a horn with a hole in it. The Laplanders use this wire in embroidering their clothes.

WIRE, v. t. To bind with wire; to apply wire to, as in bottling liquors.

WIRE-DRAW, v. t. [wire and draw.] To draw a metal into wire, which is done by drawing it through a hole in a plate of steel.—2. To draw into length.—3. To draw by art or violence.

My sense has been wiredrawn into blasphemy. Dryden.

4. To draw or spin out to great length and tenuity; as, to wiredraw an argument.

WIREDRAWER, n. One who draws metal into wire.

WIREDRAWING, ppr. Drawing a metal into wire.—2. Drawing to a great length or fineness.

WIREDRAWING, n. The act or art of extending ductile metals into wire. The metal to be extended into wire is first hammered into a bar, and then it is passed successively through a series of holes in a hardened steel plate, successively diminishing in diameter, until the requisite degree of fineness is attained. Extremely fine wires of platina, gold, or silver, are sometimes formed by drawing the metals through holes in a diamond or ruby.

WIREDRAWN, pp. Drawn into wire; drawn out to great length or fineness.

WIRE-GAUZE, n. A texture of finely interwoven wire, resembling gauze. It is employed for lanterns, sieves, flour-dressing machines, screens, window-blinds, covering safety-lamps, &c. It is also formed into dish-covers, baskets, and other useful and ornamental articles.

WIRE-GRATE, n. [wire and grate.] A grate or contrivance of fine wire work to keep insects out of vineries, hot-houses, &c.

WIRE-GRUB, n. The wire-worm,—which see.

WIRE-HEEL, n. [wire and heel.] A defect and disease in the feet of a horse or other beast.

WIRE′-PULLER, n. One who pulls the wires, as of a puppet; hence, one who operates by secret means; an intriguer.

WIRE′-PUL′LING, n. The act of pulling the wires; as of a puppet; hence, secret influence or management; intrigue.

WIRE-ROPE, n. A rope formed of wire, usually iron-wire wound round a hempen core. Wire-ropes are found to be very superior in strength to those made of hemp, weight for weight.

WIRE-WORM, n. [wire and worm.] A name given by farmers to the larvæ or grubs, of several insects, which are species of the coleopterous genus Elater. They are very destructive to corn fields, and also to vegetables, by attacking the roots Hemerhipus segetis, is another insect, the larva of which is called wire-worm. It destroys plants of all kinds.

WIRY, a. Made of wire; like wire. It is sometimes written Wiery.

WIS,† v. t. pret. Wist. [G. wissen; D. weeten; Dan. vider; Sw. veta. This is the Sax. witan, to wit.] To think; to suppose; to imagine; to know.

WI′SALLS, } n. The leaves or tops of WI′SOMES, } carrots and parsneps. [Local.]

WIS′ARD. See WIZARD.

WIS′DOM, n. (s as z.) [Sax. id.; wise and dom; G. weisheit, [wisehood;] D. wysheid; Sw. visdom and vishet; Dan. visdom or viisdom. See WISE. Wisdom, it seems, is from the Gothic dialect.] 1. The right use or exercise of knowledge; the choice of laudable ends, and of the best means to accomplish them. This is wisdom in act, effect, or practice. If wisdom is to be considered as a faculty of the mind, it is the faculty of discerning or judging what is most just, proper, and useful; and if it is to be considered as an acquirement, it is the knowledge and use of what is best, most just, most proper, most conducive to prosperity or happiness. Wisdom in the first sense, or practical wisdom, is nearly synonymous with discretion. It differs somewhat from prudence, in this respect; prudence is the exercise of sound judgment in avoiding evils; wisdom is the exercise of sound judgment either in avoiding evils or attempting good. Prudence then is a species, of which wisdom is the genus.

> Wisdom gained by experience, is of inestimable value. Scott.

> It is hoped that our rulers will act with dignity and wisdom; that they will yield every thing to reason, and refuse every thing to force. Ames.

2. In scripture, human learning; erudition; knowledge of arts and sciences.

> Moses was learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians; Acts vii.

3. Quickness of intellect; readiness of apprehension; dexterity in execution; as, the wisdom of Bezaleel and Aholiab; Exod. xxxi.—4. Natural instinct and sagacity; Job xxxix.—5. In scripture theol., wisdom is true religion; godliness; piety; the knowledge and fear of God, and sincere and uniform obedience to his commands. This is the wisdom which is from above; Ps. xc.; Job xxviii.—6. Profitable words or doctrine; Ps. xxxvii.—The wisdom of this world, mere human erudition; or the carnal policy of men, their craft and artifices in promoting their temporal interests; called also fleshly wisdom; 1 Cor. ii.; 2 Cor. i.—The wisdom of words, artificial or affected eloquence; or learning displayed in teaching; 1 Cor. i. ii.

WISE, a. (s as z.) [Sax. wis, wise; G. weise; D. wys; Sw. vis; Dan. viis; Sax. wissan, G. wissen, to know; Sans. vid. This in Dutch, is weeten, to know, which is the Goth. witan, Sax. witan, Eng. to wit, perhaps Gr. εἰδω. So that wise, wit, weet, wot, are all from one root, or dialectical forms of the same word; Ir. fois, feas, knowledge; W. gwys, gwyz, Sans. widja, intelligence. In general, the radical sense of know, is to reach or to hold, from extension, stretching. In this case, it may be to show, to disclose, from a like sense; for in Sw. visa, Dan. viser, G. weisen, D. wysen, is to show. In this case, L. video, visum, which seems to be connected with this word, may coincide in origin with wide. Wistful, attentive, eager, is from reaching forward.] 1. Properly, having knowledge; hence, having the power of discerning and judging correctly, or of discriminating between what is true and what is false; between what is fit and proper and what is improper; as, a wise prince; a wise magistrate. Solomon was deemed the wisest man. But a man may be speculatively and not practically wise. Hence,—2. Discreet and judicious in the use or application of knowledge; choosing laudable ends, and the best means to accomplish them. This is to be practically wise; Gen. xli.—3. Skilful; dextrous.

> They are wise to do evil, but to do good they have no knowledge; Jer. iv.

4. Learned; knowing; as, the wise and the unwise; Rom. i.—5. Skilled in arts, science, philosophy, or in magic and divination; 2 Sam. xiv.—6. Godly; pious; Prov. xiii.

> The holy Scriptures, which are able to make thee wise to salvation; 2 Tim. iii.

7. Skilled in hidden arts; a sense somewhat ironical; as, the wise woman of Brainford.—8. Dictated or guided by wisdom; containing wisdom; judicious; well adapted to produce good effects; applicable to things; as, a wise saying; a wise scheme or plan; wise conduct or management; a wise determination.—9. Becoming a wise man; grave; discreet; as, wise deportment.

WISE, n. (s as z.) [Sax. wise; G. weise; D. wys; Fr. guise; It. guisa; Arm. guis.] Manner; way of being or acting.

> This song she sings in most commanding wise. Sidney.

> In fittest wise. Spenser.

In the foregoing form this word is obsolete. The use of it is now very limited. It is common in the following phrases.—1. In any wise.

> If he that sanctified the field will in any wise redeem it; Lev. xxvii.

> Fret not thyself in any wise; Ps. xxxvii.

2. On this wise.

> On this wise ye shall bless the children of Israel; Numb vi.

3. In no wise.

> He shall in no wise lose his reward; Matth. x.

It is used in composition, as in likewise, otherwise, lengthwise, &c. By mistake, ways is often used for it; as, lengthways, for lengthwise.

WISEACRE, n. [G. weise, wise, and sagen, to say; G. weissager, a foreteller. The proper English word would be wise-sayer.] One who makes pretensions to great wisdom; hence, in contempt or irony, a fool; a simpleton; a dunce.

WISE-HEÄRTED, a. [wise and heart.] Wise; knowing; skilful; Exod. xxviii.

WISELING, n. One who pretends to be wise.

WISELY, adv. Prudently; judiciously; discreetly; with wisdom; Prov. xvi. xxi.—2. Craftily; with art or stratagem.

> Let us deal wisely with them; Exod. i.

WISENESS,† n. Wisdom.

WISE-SAYER, n. [G. weissager, a foreteller.] 1. A foreteller; one who is noted for predicting the weather.—2. A wiseacre,—which see.

WISH, v. i. [Sax. Wiscan; Cimbric, oska. In all the other Teutonic and Gothic dialects, the corresponding word is written with n; D. wenschen; G. wünschen; Dan. önsker; Sw. önska. This is probably the same word.] 1. To have a desire, or strong desire, either for what is or is not supposed to be obtainable. It usually expresses less than long; but sometimes it denotes to long or wish earnestly. We often wish for what is not obtainable.

> This is as good an argument as an antiquary could wish for. Arbuthnot.

> They have more than heart could wish; Ps. lxxiii.

> I wish above all things that thou mayest prosper; 3 John 2.

> They cast four anchors out of the stern, and wished for the day; Acts xxvii.

2. To be disposed or inclined; as, to wish well to another's affairs.—3. It sometimes partakes of hope or fear. I wish the event may prove fortunate, or less calamitous than we apprehend.

WISH, v. t. To desire. I wish your prosperity.

> Let them be driven backward and put to shame, that wish me evil; Ps. xl.

2. To long for; to desire eagerly or ardently. It has this sense when expressed with emphasis.—3. To recommend by wishing.

> I would not wish them to a fairer death. Shak.

4. To imprecate; as, to wish curses on an enemy.—5. To ask; to express desire.

WISH, n. Desire; sometimes eager desire; Job xxxiii.—2. Desire expressed.

Blister'd be thy tongue
For such a wish. Shak.

3. Thing desired. He has his wish.

The difference between wish and desire seems to be, that desire is directed to what is obtainable, and a wish may be directed to what is obtainable or not. Kames.

WISH'ED, pp. Desired; or ardently desired.

WISH'ER, n. One who desires; one who expresses a wish.

WISH'FUL, a. Having desire, or ardent desire.—2. Showing desire; as, wishful eyes.—3. Desirable; exciting wishes. [Bad.]

WISH'Y-WASH'Y, a. Resembling wish-wash; very thin and weak; diluted; feeble; not solid; as, a wishy-washy speech [See WASHY, from which this word is formed by reduplication.] [Colloq.]

WISK'ET, n. A basket; a whisket. [Local.]

WISP, n. [Dan. visk, a wisp, a whisk; visker, to whisk, to rub or wipe; G. and D. wisch.] A small bundle of straw or other like substance; as, a wisp of straw; a wisp of hay; a wisp of herbs.

WIST,† pret. of Wis.

WISTA'RIA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Leguminosæ. The species are deciduous twining shrubs, natives of China and North America. Several (as Wistaria chinensis) have been introduced into England, and, when in flower, they form the handsomest ornaments of the garden.

WIST'FUL, a. [from wist. The sense is stretching or reaching toward.] Full of thoughts; earnest; attentive; eager. 2. Wishful.

Why dost thou so wistful seem? Gay.

WIST'FULLY, adv. Attentively; earnestly.

WIS'TIT, n. The striated monkey; a small species of monkey from South

Wistit (Hapales Jacchus).

America, with sharp claws and squirrel-like habits, the ouistiti of Buffon; and the hapales jacchus of Illiger.

WIST'LY,† adv. Earnestly.

WIS'TONWITH, n. The Arctomys ludovicianus, a rodent quadruped of America, of a dark-brown colour, found on the banks of the Missouri and its tributaries; called also barking squirrel, burrowing squirrel, and prairie dog.

Wistonwith (Arctomys ludovicianus).

WIT, v. i. [Sax. witan, Goth. witan, D. weeten, G. wissen, to know; Sans. vid. See WISE.] To know; to be informed; to be known. This verb is used only in the infinitive, to wit, when it is an adverbial phrase, signifying, namely, that is to say. [L. videlicet, i. e. videre licet.] In law, it is used as a formal expression, by which a county or other district is called upon to know or to witness the legal setting forth of something that follows. [See VIDELICET.]

WIT, n. [Sax. wit or ge-wit; G. witz; Dan. vid. See the verb and WISE.]—1. Primarily, the intellect; the understanding or mental powers collectively.

Will puts in practice what the wit deviseth. Davies.
For wit and power their last endeavours bend
T' outshine each other. Dryden.

2. The association of ideas in a manner natural, but unusual and striking, so as to produce surprise joined with pleasure. Wit is defined

What oft was thought, but ne'er so well express'd. Pope.

Wit consists in assembling and putting together with quickness, ideas in which can be found resemblance and congruity, by which to make up pleasant pictures and agreeable visions in the fancy. Locke.

Wit consists chiefly in joining things by distant and fanciful relations, which surprise us because they are unexpected. Kames.

Wit is a propriety of thoughts and words; or in other terms, thoughts and words elegantly adapted to the subject. Dryden.

3. The faculty of associating ideas in a new and unexpected manner.—4. A man of genius; as, the age of Addison abounded with wits.

A wit herself, Amelia weds a wit. Young.

5. A man of fancy or wit.

Intemperate wits will spare neither friend nor foe. L'Estrange.

6. Sense; judgment.

He wants not wit the danger to decline. Dryden.

7. Faculty of the mind.—8. Wits, in the plural, soundness of mind; intellect not disordered; sound mind. No man in his wits would venture on such an expedition. Have you lost your wits? Is he out of his wits?—9. Power of invention; contrivance; ingenuity. He was at his wits' end.—10. Among phrenologists, the faculty which produces the sentiment of the ludicrous, and gives the tendency to view objects in that light. When combined with destructiveness it produces satire, and when combined with secretiveness it produces humour. Its organ is situated at the side of the upper part of the forehead, between causality and ideality.

Note.—It is difficult to give any strict definition of the term wit, its precise boundaries being still too unsettled. It has passed through a greater variety of significations in the course of the last two centuries than most other terms in the English language. Originally, wit signified wisdom; and anciently, a man of witte was a wise man. In the reign of Elizabeth, a man of pregnant wit, or of great wit, was a man of vast judgment. In the reign of James I. wit was used to signify the intellectual faculties or mental powers collectively. In the time of Cowley it came to signify a superior understanding, and more particularly a quick and brilliant reason. By Dryden it is used as nearly synonymous with talent or ability. According to Locke, it consists in quickness of fancy and imagination. Pope defined wit to be a quick conception and an easy delivery; according to which, a man of wit, or a wit, is a man of brilliant fancy; a man of genius. At present, wit is used to designate a peculiar faculty of the mind, connected with the more comprehensive faculty of the imagination; and also the effect produced by this faculty, which consists in the display of remote resemblances between dissimilar objects, or an unexpected combination of remote resemblances; in the exhibition or perception of ludicrous points of analogy or resemblance among things in other respects dissimilar. Hence, a man of wit, or a wit, is considered to be a man in whom a readiness for such exercise of the mind is remarkable. It is evident that wit excites in the mind an agreeable surprise, and that arising, not from any thing marvellous in the subject, but solely from the imagery employed or the strange assemblage of related ideas presented to the mind. This end is effected, 1, by debasing things pompous or seemingly grave; 2, by aggrandizing things little and frivolous; or, 3, by setting ordinary objects in a particular and uncommon point of view, by means not only remote, but apparently contrary. Hence arise a great many kinds of wit. Wit is often joined with humour, but not necessarily so; it often displays itself in the keenest satire; but when it is not kept under proper control, or when it becomes the habitual exercise of the mind, it is apt to impair the nobler powers of the understanding, to chill the feelings, to check friendly and social intercourse, and to break down those barriers which have been established by courtesy. At the same time, when kept within its proper sphere, and judiciously used, it may be rendered very effective in attacking pedantry, pretension, or folly, and may also be employed as a powerful weapon against error.

WITCH, n. [Sax. wicca. See WICKED.] 1. A woman supposed to have formed a compact with the devil, or with evil spirits, and by their means to operate supernaturally; one who practises sorcery or enchantment.—2. A woman who is given to unlawful arts.—3.† [Sax. wic.] A winding, sinuous bank.—4. A piece of conical paper which is placed in a vessel of lard, and being lighted, answers the purpose of a taper. [Qu. wick. Local]

WITCH, v. t. To bewitch; to fascinate; to enchant.

I'll witch sweet ladies with my words and looks. Shak.

WITCH'CRAFT, n [witch and craft.] The practices of witches; sorcery; enchantments; intercourse with the devil; a supernatural power, which persons were formerly supposed to obtain possession of by entering into compact with the devil. Indeed it was fully believed that they gave themselves up to him, body and soul, while he engaged that they should want for nothing, and be able to assume whatever shape they pleased, to visit and torment their enemies, and accomplish their infernal purposes. As soon as the bargain was concluded, the devil was said to deliver to the witch an imp or familiar spirit, to be ready at call, and to do whatever it was directed. By the aid of this imp and the devil together, the witch, who was almost always an old woman, was enabled to transport herself through the air on a broomstick or a spit, and to transform herself into various shapes, particularly those of cats and hares; to inflict diseases on whomsoever she pleased, and to punish her enemies in a variety of ways. The belief in witchcraft is very ancient. It was universally believed in Europe till the 16th century, and even maintained its ground with tolerable firmness till the middle of the 17th century. Vast numbers of reputed witches were condemned to be burned every year, so that in England alone it is computed that no fewer than 30,000 of them suffered at the stake.—2. Power more than natural.

He hath a witchcraft
Over the king in 's tongue. Shak.

WITCH'ED, pp. Bewitched; fascinated.

WITCH'-ELM. See WYCH ELM.

WITCH'ERY, n. Sorcery; enchantment.—2. Fascination.

WITCH'-HAZEL. See WYCH HAZEL.

WITCH'ING, ppr. Fascinating; enchanting.

WIT'-CRACKER, † n. [wit and cracker.] One who breaks jests; a joker.

WIT'-CRAFT, † n. [wit and craft.] Contrivance; invention.

WITE, v. t. [Sax. witan; the root of twit.] To reproach; to blame. [Scotch.]

WITE, n. Blame; reproach. [Scotch.]

WITELESS, a Blameless. [Scotch.]

WITENAG'EMOTE, n. [Sax. witan, to know, and gemoth, an assembly.] Literally, an assembly of wise men Among the Anglo-Saxons, the great national council or parliament, consisting of nobles, or chiefs, the largest landholders, and the principal ecclesiastics. The meetings of this council were frequent; they formed the highest court of judicature in the kingdom; they were summoned by the king in any political emergency; their concurrence was necessary to give validity to laws, and treaties with foreign states were submitted to their approval. They had even power to elect the king, and if the sceptre descended in his race, it was by means of the formal recognition of the new king by the nobles, bishops, &c., in an assembly convened for the purpose.

WIT'-FISH, n. [whitefish; D. witvisch.] An East Indian fish of the size of a whiting; also, another East Indian fish, the Albula Indica of Ray.

WITH, prep. [Sax. with, near or against; Goth. ga-withan, to join. The primary sense is to press, or to meet, to unite; hence in composition it denotes opposition, as in withstand and withdraw; hence against, Sax. wither, G. wider.] 1. By, noting cause, instrument, or means. We are distressed with pain; we are elevated with joy. With study men become learned and respectable. Fire is extinguished with water.—2. On the side of, noting friendship or favour.

Fear not, for I am with thee; Gen. xxvi.

3. In opposition to; in competition or contest; as, to struggle with adversity. The champions fought with each other an hour. He will lie with any man living.—4. Noting comparison. 12. Immediately after.

With this he pointed to his face. Dryden.

13. Among. I left the assembly with the last.

Tragedy was originally with the ancients a piece of religious worship. Rymer.

14. Upon.

Such arguments had invincible force with those pagan philosophers. Addison.

15. In consent, noting parity of state.

See! where on earth the flow'ry glories lie,
With her they flourish'd, and with her they die. Pope.

With and by are closely allied in many of their uses, and it is not easy to lay down a rule by which their uses may be distinguished. It is observed by Johnson that with seems rather to denote an instrument, and by a cause; as, he killed an enemy with a sword, but he died by an arrow. But this rule is not always observed. With, in composition, signifies sometimes opposition, privation; or separation, departure.

WITHAL, adv. (withaul'.) [with and all.] With the rest; together with; likewise; at the same time.

If you choose that, then I am yours withal. Shak.

How modest in exception, and withal
How terrible in constant resolution! Shak.

2. It was formerly used as a preposition instead of with, and was placed after the objective case; as, the most perfect rule of life that ever the world was acquainted withal.

6. Independent of; not by the use of. Men like to live without labour.

Wise men will do it without a law. Bacon.

7. On the outside of; as, without the gate; without doors.—8. With exemption from. That event cannot happen without great damage to our interests. —9. Unless; except.—Without, when it precedes a sentence or member of a sentence, has been called a conjunction. This is a mistake. "You will not enjoy health, without you use much exercise." In this sentence, without is a preposition still, but followed by a member of a sentence, instead of a single noun. It has no property of a connective or conjunction, and does not fall within the definition. You will not enjoy health, this fact following being removed, or not taking place; you use exercise. This use of without, is nearly superseded by unless and except, among good writers and speakers; but is common in popular discourse or parlance.

WITHOUT', adv. Not on the inside; not within.

These were from without the growing miseries. Milton.

2. Out of doors.—3. Externally; not in the mind.

WŌAD, n. [Sax. wad or waad; G. waid, weid; Fr. guede. Supposed to be derived from Guadum, now Gualdo, the name of a town in the Roman states, where it was long ago extensively cultivated.] A plant of the genus Isatis, the I. tinctoria, formerly cultivated to a great extent in Britain, on account of the blue dye extracted from it. It is now, however, nearly superseded by indigo, which gives a stronger and finer blue. It is still cultivated to a considerable extent in the south of France and Flanders, and the dye which it furnishes is said to improve the quality and colour of indigo, when mixed with it in a certain proportion. The colouring matter is obtained from the leaves of the plant. These are first dried, then ground or bruised by machinery, and formed into a sort of paste. This paste is formed into balls, which are allowed to ferment and fall into a dry powder, which is sold to the dyer. The ancient Britons are said to have tinctured their bodies with the dye procured from the woad plant.—Wild woad, weld, or wold, is the Reseda luteola, a British plant, which yields a beautiful yellow dye. [See RESEDA.]

Woad (Isatis tinctoria).

WOLD, n. A plant. [See WALD.]

WOLF, n. (wulf.) [Sax. wulf; G. and D. wolf; Russ. volk; L. vulpes, a fox, the same word differently applied. The Gr. is λύκος.] 1. The Canis lupus, Linn., a ferocious quadruped, belonging to the digitgrade carnivora, in habits and physical development closely related to the dog. The common European wolf is yellowish or fulvous-gray; the hair is harsh and strong, the tail straight, or nearly so, and there is a blackish band or streak on the fore-legs about the carpus. The height at the shoulder from 27 to 29 inches. The wolf is a crafty, greedy, and ravenous animal; the sheep-cote and the farm-yard become the scenes of his ravages, and the size and speed of the elk and of the stag are not sufficient to protect them from his violence, his swiftness, and his cunning. When pressed by famine, he becomes dangerous to man, falling at unawares upon the solitary and unprotected traveller, and carrying off the defenceless children of the villager. Sometimes wolves pursue their prey in companies, which separate again as soon as the object of the pursuit is attained. The common wolf infests the western countries of Europe, and once lurked in the uncleared woody districts of Britain. There are several species of wolf; as, the black-wolf of Southern Europe, and particularly of the Pyrenees, and south of those mountains; the red-wolf of South America. Several varieties of the common wolf are found in North America.—2. Any thing ravenous or destructive.—3. A small white worm or maggot, which infests granaries.—4. An eating ulcer.—5. In musical instruments, such as the piano-forte, a term applied by some writers to the bad fifth which exists in the worst key, when the temperament is allowed to favour some keys at the expense of others. Other writers, however, apply the name wolf to the interval from the false octave, obtained by the fifths, to the true one. [See TEMPERAMENT.]

with a turnip-shaped root, and flowers in long stiff spikes, and of a deep blue colour. It is a native of alpine pastures in Switzerland and other mountainous parts of Europe. It is a common plant in flower borders, and is found in a wild state in one or two parts of England. All the parts of the plant are extremely acrid, especially the roots. The juice of the leaves introduced into the stomach is said to occasion death in a short time, but the powdered root is far more energetic. The poison acts upon the nervous system, especially the brain, producing a sort of phrenzy. The plant is used in medicine in cases of neuralgia.

WOLF'S'-CLAW, n. A cryptogamous plant of the genus Lycopodium; the L. clavatum.

WOLF'S'-PEACH, n. A plant of the genus Lycopersicum, the L. esculentum; also called Love-apple.

That soft species of hair which grows on sheep and some other animals, as rabbits, beavers, racoons, wild cats, some species of goats, &c., which in fineness sometimes approaches to fur. The word generally signifies the fleecy coat of the sheep, which constitutes a most essential material of clothing in all cold and temperate climates. Wool is divided into two classes: short or clothing wool, and long or combing wool, each class being subdivided into a variety of sorts, according to their fineness and soundness of the staple. The finest wools are of short staple, and the coarser wools usually of long staple. Wools which unite a high degree of fineness and softness, with considerable length of staple, bear a high price. Of all European wools those of Saxony are pre-eminent in point of softness, but all the European wools yield to those of India in this respect. Fine wools are produced in Spain, and also in England.—2. Short thick hair. —3. In bot, a sort of pubescence, or a clothing of dense curling hairs on the surface of certain plants.—4. Under the old poor-laws of England a poor-house; also an establishment in each parish, partaking of the character of a bridewell, where indigent, vagrant, and idle people were set to work, and supplied with food and clothing, or what is termed in-door relief. Workhouses were employed for two different purposes. Some were used as prisons for vagrant or sturdy beggars, who were there confined and compelled to labour; whilst others, sometimes called poor-houses, were large alms houses, for the maintenance and support of the indigent and such able-bodied persons as were out of employment. Previous to the passing of the poor-law amendment act in 1834, these workhouses were described as generally speaking, nurseries of idleness, ignorance, and vice. By the act alluded to, parishes were united for the better management of workhouses, which gave rise to the poor-law unions. New workhouses, capable of containing from 100 to 500 inmates, have been erected in nearly every poor-law union. In these establishments, a suitable classification of the pauper inmates has been effected, and proper government and discipline instituted. The paupers of the several classes, are kept employed according to their capacity and ability. Religious and secular instruction is supplied, habits of industry, cleanliness, and order are enforced; and wholesome food and sufficient clothing are furnished.

WŎRLD-WEARIED, a. Tired of the world.

WŎRM, n. [Sax. wyrm; G. wurm; D. worm; Dan. orm; Sw. id. a serpent. This word is probably named from a winding motion, and the root of swarm.] 1. In common usage, any small creeping animal, or reptile, either entirely without feet, or with very short ones, including a great variety of animals of different classes and orders, viz., certain small serpents, as the blind-worm or slow-worm; the larvæ of insects, viz., grubs, caterpillars, and maggots, as the wood-worm, canker-worm, silk-worm, (the larva of a moth, Phalæna, which spins the filaments of which silk is made,) the grub that injures corn, grass, &c., the worms that breed in putrid flesh, the bots in the stomach of horses, and many others; certain wingless insects, as the glow-worm; the intestinal worms, or such as breed in the cavities and organs of living animals, as the tape-worm, the round-worm, the fluke, &c.; and numerous animals found in the earth, and in water, particularly in the sea, as the earth-worm or lumbricus, the hair-worm or gordius, the teredo, or worm that bores into the bottom of ships, &c. Worms, in the plural, in common usage, is used for intestinal worms, or those which breed in the stomach and bowels, particularly the round and thread worms, (ascarides and oxyurides,) which are often found there in great numbers; as we say, a child has worms.—2. In zool., the term Vermes or worms has been applied to different divisions of invertebral animals, by different naturalists. Linnæus's class of Vermes includes the following orders, viz., Intestina, including the proper intestinal worms, the earth-worm, the hair-worm, the teredo, and some other marine worms; Mollusca, including the slug, and numerous soft animals inhabiting the water, particularly the sea; Testacea, including all the proper shell-fish; Zoophyta, or compound animals, including corals, polypes, and sponges; and Infusoria, or simple microscopic animalcules. His character of the class is,—spiracles obscure, jaws various, organs of sense usually tentacula, no brain, ears, nor nostrils, limbs wanting, frequently hermaphrodite. This class includes all the invertebral animals, except the insects and crustacea. The term Vermes has been since greatly limited, particularly by the French naturalists. Lamarck confined it to the intestinal worms, and some others, whose organization is equally simple. The character of his class is, suboviparous, body soft, highly reproductive, undergo no metamorphosis; no eyes, nor articulated limbs, nor radiated disposition of internal organs. [See VERMES.]—3. Remorse; that which incessantly gnaws the conscience; that which torments.

Where their worm dieth not; Mark ix.

4. A being debased and despised.

I am a worm, and no man; Ps. xxii

5. An instrument resembling a double cork-screw fixed on the end of a staff or rammer, used for drawing wads and cartridges from cannon or small arms. —6. Something spiral, vermiculated, or resembling a worm; as, the threads of a screw.—7. In chem. and distilleries, a spiral leaden pipe placed in a tub of water, through which the vapour passes in distillation, and in which it is cooled and condensed. It is called also a serpentine.—8. A small worm-like part situated beneath a dog's tongue.

WŎRM, v. i. To work slowly, gradually, and secretly.

When debates and fretting jealousy
Did worm and work within you more and more,
Your colour faded. Herbert.

WŎRM, v. t. To expel or undermine by slow and secret means.

They find themselves wormed out of all power. Swift.

2. To cut something, called a worm, from under the tongue of a dog.—3. To draw the wad or cartridge from a gun; to clean by the worm.—4. In marine lan., to wind a rope spirally round a cable, between the strands; or to pass spun yarn or other small stuff between the strands of a smaller rope, in order to render the surface smooth for parcelling and serving.—To worm one's self into, to enter gradually by arts and insinuations; as, to worm one's self into favour.

WŎRM, a. Having reference to worms; good against worms; vermifuge; as, worm medicines.

WŎRM-EATEN, a. [worm and eat.] Gnawed by worms; having a number of internal cavities made by worms; as, worm-eaten boards, planks, or timber. —2. Old; worthless.

WORM-EAT'ENNESS, n. State of being worm-eaten; rottenness.

WORMED, pp. Cleared by a worm or screw.—2. In ships, the state of timber or plank when a number of holes or cavities are made in it by the ship worm, Teredo navalis. [See TEREDO.]

WORM-FENCE, n. A zigzag fence, made by placing the ends of the rails upon each other; sometimes called a stake fence.

WORM-GRASS, WORM-SEED, n. Names given to plants of the genus Spigelia. [See SPIGELIA.]

WORM-HOLE, n. A hole made by the gnawing of a worm.

WORM'ING, ppr. Entering by insinuation; drawing, as a cartridge; clearing, as a gun.

WORM'ING, n. An operation performed on puppies, which consists in the removal of a small worm-like ligament, situated under the tongue. This operation is ignorantly supposed to prevent madness, but in reality it only weans the animal from the habit of gnawing everything that comes in its way.—2. In mar. lan., stuff wound spirally round ropes between the strands. Also the operation of winding this stuff round ropes.

WORM-LIKE, a. Resembling a worm; spiral; vermicular.

WORM-POWDER, n. A powder used for expelling worms from the stomach and intestines.

WORM-SEED, n. A seed which has the property of expelling worms from the stomach, bowels, and intestines. It is brought from the Levant, and is the produce of a species of Artemisia, the A. santonica, which is a native of Tartary and Persia.—2. A plant of the genus Spigelia. [See SPIGELIA.]

WORM-TINCTURE, n. A tincture prepared from earth-worms dried, pulverized, and mixed with oil of tartar, spirit of wine, saffron, and castor.

WOR'MUL, n. [Probably a corruption of worm-ill.] A warble or tumour on the back of cattle. [See WORNIL.] It is sometimes called puckeridge, from its appearance on the hide.

WORMWOOD, n. [Sax. wermod; G. wermuth.] The common name of several plants of the genus Artemisia. Common wormwood, A. absinthium, a well-known plant, is celebrated for its intensely bitter, tonic, and stimulating qualities, which have caused it to be an ingredient in various medicinal preparations, and even in the preparation of liqueurs. It is also useful in destroying worms in children; hence the name.

Wormwood (Artemisia absinthium).

WORMWOOD-FLY, n. A small black fly, found on the stalks of wormwood.

WORMY, a. Containing a worm; abounding with worms.—2. Earthy; grovelling.

WORN, pp. of Wear; as, a garment long worn.—Worn out, quite consumed; destroyed or much injured by wear; trite.

WOR'NIL, WOR'NAL, n. A tumour on the backs of cattle, occasioned by a dipterous insect, which punctures the skin and deposits its eggs in each puncture. When the eggs are hatched, and the larvæ or maggots have arrived at their full size, they make their way out and leave a large hole in the hide, to prevent which the eggs should be destroyed by nipping the tumour, or thrusting in a hot wire.

WOR'RAL, n. An animal of the lizard kind, about four feet long and eight inches broad, with a forked tongue. It feeds on flies, and is harmless. It is found in Egypt.

WORRIED, pp. [from worry.] Harassed; fatigued.

WORRIER, n. [from worry.] One that worries or harasses.

WORRY, v. t. [Sax. werig, malign vexatious; werigan, werian, to disturb, to tease, to harass, to weary; or Dan. uroe, trouble, Sw. oro. The sense of tearing does not properly belong to this word. It may have that sense as secondary.] 1. To tease; to trouble; to harass with importunity, or with care and anxiety. Persons are often worried with care and solicitude.

> Let them rail
> And then worry one another at their pleasure. Rowe.
> Worry him out till he gives his consent. Swift.
> A church worried with reformation. South.

2. To fatigue; to harass with labour; a popular sense of the word.—3. To harass by pursuit and barking; as, dogs worry sheep.—4. To tear; to mangle with the teeth.—5. To vex; to persecute brutally.

WORRYING, ppr. Teasing; troubling; harassing; fatiguing; tearing.

WOR'RYINGLY, adv. Teasingly; harassingly.

WORSE, a. [Sax. wærse; wyrsc; Dan. verre, Sw. värre. This adjective has the signification of the comparative degree, and as bad has no comparative and superlative, worse and worst are used in lieu of them, although radically they have no relation to bad.] 1. More evil; more bad or ill; more depraved and corrupt; in a moral sense.

> Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse; 2 Tim. iii.
> There are men who seem to believe they are not bad, while another can be found worse. Rambler.

2. In a physical sense, in regard to health, more sick.

> She was nothing bettered, but rather grew worse; Mark v.

3. More bad; less perfect or good. This carriage is worse for wear.—The worse, the loss; the disadvantage.

> Judah was put to the worse before Israel; 2 Kings xiv.

2. Something less good. Think not the worse of him for his enterprise.

WORSE, adv. In a manner more evil or bad.

> We will deal worse with thee than with them; Gen. xix.

WORSE, to put to disadvantage, is not in use. [See WORST.]

WORSEN,† v. t. To worse; to make worse; to obtain advantage of.

WORSEN,† v. i. To grow worse.

WORSER, is a vulgar word for worse, and not used in good writing or speaking.

WORSHIP, n. [Sax. weorthscype; worth and ship; the state of worth or worthiness. See WORTH.] 1. Excellence of character; dignity; worth; worthiness.

> Elfin born of noble state,
> And muckle worship in his native land. Spenser.

In this sense, the word is nearly or quite obsolete; but hence,—2. A title of honour, used in addresses to certain magistrates and others of rank or station.

> My father desires your worship's company. Shak.

3. A term of ironical respect.—4. Chiefly and eminently, the act of paying divine honours to the Supreme Being; or the reverence and homage paid to him in religious exercises, consisting in adoration, confession, prayer, thanksgiving, and the like.

> The worship of God is an eminent part of religion. Tillotson.
> Prayer is a chief part of religious worship. Tillotson

5. The homage paid to idols or false gods by pagans; as, the worship of Isis.—6. Honour; respect; civil deference.

2. To respect; to honour; to treat with civil reverence.

> Nor worshipp'd with a waxen epitaph. Shak

3. To honour with extravagant love and extreme submission; as a lover.

> With bended knees I daily worship her. Carew.

WORSHIP, v. i. To perform acts of adoration.—2. To perform religious service.

> Our fathers worshipped in this mountain; John iv.

WOR'SHIPABLE, a. That may be worshipped.

WORSHIPFUL, a. Claiming respect; worthy of honour from its character or dignity.

> This is worshipful society. Shak.

2. A term of respect, specially applied to magistrates and corporate bodies; sometimes a term of ironical respect.

WORSHIPFULLY, adv. Respectfully.

WORSHIPFULNESS, n. The quality of being worshipful.

WORSHIPPED, pp. Adored; treated with divine honours; treated with civil respect.

WORSHIPPER, n. One who worships; one who pays divine honours to any being; one who adores.

WORSHIPPING, ppr. Adoring; paying divine honours to; treating with supreme reverence; treating with extreme submission.

WORST, a. [superl. of Worse,—which see.] 1. Most bad; most evil; in a moral sense; as, the worst man; the worst sinner.—2. Most severe or dangerous; most difficult to heal; as, the worst disease.—3. Most afflictive, pernicious, or calamitous; as, the worst evil that can befal a state or an individual.

WORST, n. The most evil state; in a moral sense.—2. The most severe or aggravated state; the height; as, the disease is at the worst.—3. The most calamitous state. Be armed against the worst.

WORST, v. t. To get the advantage over in contest; to defeat; to overthrow. It is madness to contend, when we are sure to be worsted.

WORSTED, pp. Defeated; overthrown.

WORSTED, n. [The origin of this word is uncertain. It is usually supposed to take its name from a town in Norfolk, England.] Yarn spun from combed wool, and which, in the spinning, is twisted harder than ordinary. It is knit or woven into stockings, caps, &c.

WORST'ED, a. Consisting of worsted; made of worsted yarn; as, worsted stockings.

WORT, n. [Sax. wyrt; G. wurz; Fr. vert, verd; from the root of L. vireo, to grow; viridis, green.] 1. A plant; an herb; now used chiefly or wholly in compounds; as in mugwort, liverwort, spleenwort.—2. A plant of the cabbage kind.—3. New beer unfermented, or in the act of fermentation; the sweet infusion of malt or grain.

WORTH, a termination, signifies a farm or court; as in Wordsworth.

WORTH, v. i. [Sax. weorthan, to be or to become, to cause to be or to become.] This verb is now used only in the phrases woe worth the day, woe worth the man, &c., in which the verb is in the imperative mode, and the noun in the dative; woe be to the day.

WORTH, n. [Sax. weorth, wurth, wyrth; G. werth; D. waarde; W. gwerth; L. virtus, from the root of vireo. The primary sense is strength.] 1. Value; price; rate; that quality of a thing which renders it useful, or which will produce an equivalent good in some other thing. The worth of a day's labour may be estimated in money, or in goods. The worth of labour is settled between the hirer and the hired. The worth of commodities is usually the price they will bring in market; but price is not always worth.—2. Value of mental qualities; desert; merit; excellence; virtue; usefulness; as, a man or magistrate of great worth.

> As none but she, who in that court did dwell,
> Could know such worth, or worth describe so well. Waller

> All worth consists in doing good, and in the disposition by which it is done. Dwight.

3. Importance; valuable qualities; applied to things; as, these things have since lost their worth.

WORTH, a. Equal in price to; equal in value to. Silver is scarce worth the labour of digging and refining. In one country, a day's labour is worth five shillings; in another, the same labour is not worth one shilling. It is worth while to consider a subject well before we come to a decision.

> If your arguments produce no conviction, they are worth nothing to me. Beattie.

2. Deserving of; in a good or bad sense, but chiefly in a good sense. The castle is worth defending.

> To reign is worth ambition, though in hell. Milton.

> This is life indeed, life worth preserving. Addison.

3. Equal in possessions to; having estate to the value of. Most men are estimated by their neighbours to be worth more than they are. A man worth ten thousand pounds, in one country or place, is called rich, but not so in another.—Worthiest of blood, an expression in law, denoting the preference of sons to daughters in the descent of estates.

WORTHIER, a. comp. More worthy.

WORTHIEST, a. superl. Most worthy.

WORTHILY, adv. In a manner suited to; as, to walk worthily of our extraction. [Bad.]—2. Deservedly; according to merit.

> You worthily succeed not only to the honours of your ancestors, but also to their virtues. Dryden.

3. Justly; not without cause.

> I affirm that some may very worthily deserve to be hated. South.

WORTHINESS, n. Desert; merit.

> The prayers which our Saviour made, were for his own worthiness accepted. Hooker.

2. Excellence; dignity; virtue.

> Who is sure he hath a soul, unless
> It see and judge and follow worthiness? Donne.

3. Worth; quality or state of deserving.

WORTHLESS, a. Having no value; as, a worthless garment; a worthless ship.—2. Having no value of character or no virtue; as, a worthless man or woman.—3. Having no dignity or excellence; as, a worthless magistrate.

WORTHLESSLY, adv. In a worthless manner.

WORTHLESSNESS, n. Want of value; want of useful qualities; as, the worthlessness of an old garment or of barren land.—2. Want of excellence or dignity; as, the worthlessness of a person.

WORTHY, a. [G. würdig; D. waardig; Sw. värdig.] 1. Deserving; such as merits; having worth or excellence; equivalent; with of, before the thing deserved. She has married a man worthy of her.

> Thou art worthy of the sway. Shak.

> I am not worthy of the least of all the mercies; Gen. xxxii.

2. Possessing worth or excellence of qualities; noble; illustrious; virtuous; estimable; as, a worthy citizen; a worthy magistrate; a worthy prince.

> Happier thou may'st be, worthier canst not be. Milton.

> This worthy mind should worthy things embrace. Davies.

3. Suitable having qualities suited to; either in a good or bad sense; equal in value; as, flowers worthy of paradise.—4. Suitable to any thing bad.

> The merciless Macdonald,
> Worthy to be a rebel. Shak.

5. Deserving of ill; as, things worthy of stripes; Luke xii. It is often used in an ironical sense.

WORTHY, n. A man of eminent worth; a man distinguished for useful and estimable qualities; a man of valour; a word much used in the plural; as, the worthies of the church; political worthies; military worthies.

WORTHY,† v. t. To render worthy; to exalt.

WOT,† v. i. [originally wat; the preterite of the obsolete verb to weet, Sax. witan, to know; formerly used also in the present, and in perfect tenses.] To know; to be aware. [See WEET.]

WOULD. (wood.) pret. of Will. [G. wollen; L. volo.] Would is used as an auxiliary verb in conditional forms of speech implying inclination, wish, or desire. "I would go, if I could." This form of expression denotes will or resolution, under a condition or supposition. You would go, or he would go, denote simply an event, under a condition or supposition. The condition implied in would is not always expressed. "By pleasure and pain, I would be understood to mean what delights or molests us;" that is, if it should be asked what I mean by pleasure and pain, I would thus explain what I wish to have understood. In this form of expression, which is very common, there seems to be an implied allusion to an inquiry, or to the supposition of something not expressed. Would has the sense of wish or pray, particularly in the phrases, "would to God," "would God we had died in Egypt," "I would that ye knew what conflict I have;" that is, I could wish such a thing, if the wish could avail. Here also there is an implied condition. Would is used also for wish to do, or to have. What wouldst thou? What would he?

WOULD' BE, a. Wishing to be; vainly pretending to be; as, a would be philosopher. [Colloq.]

WOULD'ING,† n. Motion of desire.

WOULD'INGNESS,† n. Willingness.

WOULFE'S APPARATUS, n. An apparatus named after the inventor, consisting of a series of bottles with several necks, used in the chemical laboratory in distillation, and for impregnating water and other liquids with gases or vapours. A common form of the apparatus is shown annexed: a is the Woulfe's apparatus.

retort, into which the materials required to generate the gas or vapour are introduced. It communicates with a receiver b, connected with the three necked bottles c and d, by means of bent tubes. These bottles are about half filled with the fluid to be impregnated, the gas flowing through one into the other, until it escapes by the bent pipe e, and is again collected under a pneumatic trough. In order to compensate for the pressure of the external air, when any absorption takes place which might tend to force the fluid from the bottles back into the receiver b, each one is provided with a safety tube f, open at the top, which dipping little more than half an inch under the surface of the fluid, permits sufficient air to enter as a compensation for absorption.

WOUND, n. (woond.) [Sax. wund; D. wond; G. wunde; W. gwanu, to thrust, to stab.] 1. A breach of the skin and flesh of an animal, or of the bark and wood of a tree, or of the bark and substance of other plants, caused by violence or external force. The self-healing power of living beings, animal or vegetable, by which the parts separated in wounds tend to unite and become sound, is a remarkable proof of divine benevolence and wisdom.—2. In sur., a wound is defined a solution of continuity in any of the soft parts of the body, occasioned by external violence, and attended with a greater or less amount of bleeding. Wounds are distinguished into incised, punctured, contused, lacerated, and poisoned. Wounds heal by adhesion, or by suppuration, granulation, and cicatrization.—3. Injury; hurt; as, a wound given to credit or reputation.

WOUND, v. t. (woond.) To hurt by violence; to cut, slash, or lacerate; as, to wound the head or the arm; to wound a tree.

He was wounded for our transgressions; Is. liii.

WOUND, pret and pp. of Wind.

WOUND'ED, pp. Hurt; injured. [Wounded is used plurally as a substantive in such phrases; as, the killed and wounded; but the sense is plainly adjective, the suppressed word persons being understood.]

WOUND'ER, n. One that wounds.

WOUNDILY, adv. Excessively. [Rustic or ludicrous.]

WOUND'ING, ppr. Hurting; injuring.

WOUND'ING, n. Hurt; injury; Gen. iv.

WOUND'LESS, a. Free from hurt or injury.

WOUND'WŎRT, n. The common name of several British plants of the genus Stachys. [See STACHYS.]

WOUND'Y, a. Excessive. [An old vulgar word.]

WOU'RALI, WOO'RALI, OU'RARI, n A corruption of Urari, the native S. American name of a very virulent poison, used on arrows and other weapons, and made by the Indians by a peculiar process of decoction, cooling, mixing, and reboiling from the bark and juices of several plants. The substance which enters most largely into its composition, and which is probably the only essential ingredient, is the bark of Strychnos toxifera, called the Urari Wourali poison tree (Strychnos toxifera).

vine, hence the name. Some accounts state ants, snake-fangs, and red pepper to be ingredients, but these do not at all events seem to be essential. The effects of this poison are very extraordinary, acting virulently when affecting the blood; while in small quantities it may be taken into the stomach with impunity. A well fed ox, inoculated with the poison in three non-vital parts of the body, died in twenty-five minutes. It has been suggested as likely to prove useful, when taken medicinally, in curing lock-jaw and hydrophobia.

WOU WOU, n. The Sumatra name for the long armed ape, the Ungka puti or Hylobates agilis.

WOVE, pret. of Weave, sometimes the participle. Woven is also used. [See WEAVE.]

WOX, WOX'EN,† for Waxed.

WRACK, WRECK, n. [See WRECK.] A popular name for sea-weeds generally, but more especially when thrown ashore by the waves. Those found most plentifully on our shores are the Fucus vesiculosus, and the Fucus nodosus, which are extensively gathered for manuring land.—2. In a more restricted sense, confined to such seaweeds as kelp is made from, chiefly belonging to the genus Fucus. The grass wrack is of the genus Zostera.—Wrack, and to wrack. [See WRECK.]

WRACK'FUL, a. Ruinous; destructive.

Note.—W before r is always silent.

WRAIN-BOLT. See WRING-BOLT.

WRAITH, n. An apparition in the exact likeness of a person, supposed by the vulgar to be seen before or soon after the person's death. [Scotch.]

WRANG, n. Wrong; injury. [Scotch.]

WRAN'GLE, v. i. [from the root of wring, Sw. vränga; that is, to wring-to twist, to struggle, to contend; or it is from the root of ring, to sound.] To dispute angrily; to quarrel peevishly and noisily; to brawl; to altercate.

For a score of kingdoms you should wrangle. Shak.

He did not know what it was to wrangle on indifferent points. Addison.

2. In old times, in the universities, to dispute publicly; that is, to defend, or oppose a thesis. Hence the term wrangler, still retained in the university of Cambridge.

WRAN'GLE, v. t. To involve in contention, quarrel, or dispute. [Little used.]

WRAN'GLE, n. An angry dispute; a noisy quarrel.

WRAN'GLER, n. An angry disputant; one who disputes with heat or peevishness; as, a noisy contentious wrangler.—Senior wrangler, in the university of Cambridge, the student who passes the best examination for the degree of Bachelor of Arts in the senate house. Then follow the second, third, &c., wranglers. At the close of the last day of examination, those who have distinguished themselves most, are divided into three classes, viz., wranglers, senior optimes, and junior optimes. The wranglers are the first in merit, and the individual who distinguishes himself most, is termed the senior wrangler, and is the most distinguished mathematician of his year. All who are in these three lists, (which are collectively called the tripos,) are said to take the Bachelor's degree with honours, or to go out in honours. The remainder are called the οἱ πολλοί, or the Pol, literally, the multitude.

WRAN'GLERSHIP, n. In the university of Cambridge, the honour conferred on those whose names are inscribed in the list of wranglers.

WRAN'GLESŎME, a. Contentious; quarrelsome.

WRAN'GLING, ppr. Disputing or contending angrily.

WRAN'GLING, n. The act of disputing angrily; altercation.

WRAP, v. t. pret. and pp. Wrapped or Wrapt. 1. To wind or fold together; John xx.—2. To involve; to cover by winding something round; often with up; as, to wrap up a child in its blanket; wrap the body well with flannel in winter.

I, wrapt in mist
Of midnight vapour, glide obscure Milton.

3. To involve; to hide; as, truth wrapt in tales.—4. To comprise; to contain.

Leontine's young wife, in whom all his happiness was wrapped up, died in a few days after the death of her daughter. Addison.

5. To involve totally.

Things reflected on in gross and transiently, are thought to be wrapped in impenetrable obscurity. Locke.

6. To inclose.—7. To snatch up; to transport. This is an error. It ought to be rapt. [See RAP and RAPT.]

WRAP'PAGE, n. That which wraps; act of wrapping.

WRAP'PED, WRAPT, pp. Wound; folded; inclosed.

WRAP'PER, n. One that wraps.—2. That in which any thing is wrapped or inclosed; an envelope.—3. A loose upper garment; applied sometimes to a lady's undress, and sometimes to a loose over-coat.

WRAP'PING, ppr. Winding; folding; involving; inclosing.—2. a. Used or designed for wrapping or covering; as, wrapping paper.

WRAP'PING, n. That in which any thing is wrapped; a cover: an envelope; act of one who wraps; a wrapper.

WRAP'-RASCAL, n. A cant term for a coarse upper-coat.

WRAPT. [This word is often erroneously used for rapt, a term of a totally different meaning. See RAPT.]

WRASSE, n. The English name of various species of fish, inhabiting the rocky parts of the coast, and belonging to the family Labridæ, (genus Labrus, Linn). They are prickly-spined, hard-boned fishes, with oblong scaly bodies and a single dorsal fin; their lips are large, double, and fleshy; hence the generic name Labrus; and their teeth strong, conical, and sharp. Many of the species present vivid colours, particularly in spring, just before the spawning season. Several species are natives of the British seas; as the Ballan wrasse, or old wife (L. tinca), which in length is often 18 inches; the green-streaked wrasse (L. lineatus); the cook wrasse, or blue striped wrasse, (L. variegatus); the rainbow wrasse (Julis vulgaris), &c.* As articles of food they are not much valued in this country.

Ballan wrasse (Labrus tinca).

WYCH'-HAZEL, n. The common name of plants of the genus Hamamelis, the type of the nat. order Hamamelaceæ. They are small trees, with alternate leaves on short petioles, and yellow flowers, disposed in clusters in the axils of the leaves, and surrounded by a three-leaved involucrum. They are natives of North America, Persia, or China, but their properties are unknown.

Wyvern.

WYND, n. An alley; a lane. [Scotch.]

WY'VERN, n. In her., an imaginary animal, a kind of flying serpent, sometimes represented in coats of arms.

X.

X, THE twenty-fourth letter of the English Alphabet, is borrowed from the Greek. In the middle and at the end of words, it has the sound of ks, as in wax, lax, luxury. At the beginning of a word, it has precisely the sound of z. It is used as an initial, in a few words borrowed from the Greek. As a numeral, X stands for ten. It represents one V, which stands for five, placed on the top of another. When laid horizontally, thus ⋈, it stands for a thousand, and with a dash over it, thus X̄, it stands for ten thousand. As an abbreviation, X. stands for Christ, as in Xn. Christian; Xm. Christmas.

XANG'TI, n. In China, a name for God.

XAN'THATE, n. A compound formed by the union of xanthic acid with a salifiable base; as, xanthate of potash.

XAN'THIC, a. [Gr. ξανθος, yellow.] Tending towards a yellow colour.

XAN'THIC ACID, n. The name formerly given to a sulpho-carbonate of ethule and water, from the yellow colour of its salts. It is a heavy oily liquid.

XAN'THIC-OXIDE, n. Uric oxide, a very rare ingredient of urinary calculi, and said to occur in small quantities in some kinds of guano.

XAN'THINE, n. The yellow dyeing matter contained in madder.

XAN'THITE, n. A mineral composed of silica, lime, alumina, with small portions of the peroxides of iron and manganese, and also magnesia and water. It occurs in Orange county, New York, North America.

XAN'THIUM, n. Bur-weed, a genus of plants; nat. order Compositæ. X. strumarium, broad-leaved bur-weed, is a British plant. It is rank and weed-like, and remarkable for the curious structure of its flowers, and the prickly involucres which surround the fertile ones, enlarging and becoming part of the fruit. It is found in waste ground in the south of England.

XAN'THO, n. [Gr. ξανθος, yellow.] Leach's name for a genus of brachyurous crustaceans.

XANTHOCHY'MUS, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Guttiferæ. X. pictorius, is a native of the East Indies, with white flowers and yellow fruit. The fruit yields a resinous juice of a yellow colour, which is used as a water colour, either alone for yellow, or with blues to form a green. The gamboge of commerce is supposed to be yielded by this plant.

XAN'THOGEN, XAN'THOGENE, n. The base of hydroxanthic acid procured by the action and re-action of carburet of sulphur and potash, and taking its name from the yellowish colour of some of its compounds.

XAN'THOPHYLLE, n. Bot. A peculiar waxy matter, to which some attribute the yellow colour of some leaves.

XANTHOPRO'TEIC ACID, n. An acid formed when proteine or any of its modifications is digested in nitric acid. It is of a yellow colour, and seems to combine both with acids and bases.

XANTHOR'NUS, n. Cuvier's name for a genus of Orioles. [See ORIOLE.]

XANTHORRHÆ'A, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Liliaceæ. The species are called grass-trees and are found in Australia. They yield a resinous matter, and the bases of the leaves are used for food. They give a peculiar feature to the vegetation of the countries in which they grow.

XANTHORRHIZ'A, n. A genus of North American plants, nat. order Ranunculaceæ. [See YELLOW-ROOT.]

XANTHOXYLA'CE'Æ, n. A nat. order of polypetalous exogenous plants, found chiefly in America, especially in the tropical parts. The species are trees or shrubs, with extipulate, alternate or opposite leaves, furnished with pellucid dots. The flowers are either axillary or terminal, and of a gray green, or pink colour. All the plants of the order to a greater or less extent possess aromatic and pungent properties, especially the species belonging to the genera Xanthoxylum, Brucea, Ptelea, Toddalia, and Ailanthus.

XANTHOXY'LUM, n. A genus of plants, the type of the nat. order Xanthoxylaceæ. The species are trees or shrubs, with the petioles, leaves, and branches usually furnished with prickles. On account of their aromatic and pungent properties, they are known in the countries where they grow under the name of peppers. X. fraxineum is called toothache-tree, as its bark and capsular fruit are much used as a remedy for toothache. The same name is also given to all the other species of the genus.

XYS'TER, n. [Gr. ξυστηρ, from ξυω, to scrape.] A surgeon's instrument for scraping bones.

Y.

Y, THE twenty-fifth letter of the English Alphabet, is taken from the Greek υ. At the beginning of words, it is called an articulation or consonant, and with some propriety perhaps, as it brings the root of the tongue in close contact with the lower part of the palate, and nearly in the position to which the close g brings it. Hence it has happened that in a great number of words, g has been changed into y, as the Sax. gear, into year; geornian, into yearn; gyllan, into yell; gealew, into yellow. In the middle and at the end of words, y is precisely the same as i. It is sounded as i long, when accented, as in defy, rely; and as i short, when unaccented, as in vanity, glory, synonymous. This latter sound is a vowel. At the beginning of words, y answers to the German and Dutch j. Y, as a numeral, stands for 150, and with a dash over it, Ȳ, for 150,000.

YACHT, n. (yot.) [D. jagt; G. jacht, from jagen. It is properly a boat drawn by horses.] A light and elegantly fitted up vessel, used either for pleasure or passage, or as a vessel of state to convey kings, princes, &c., from one place to another by sea. It is either propelled by steam, or by wind acting on the sails, and may be rigged according to taste, as a cutter, schooner, brig, &c.

YACHT'ER, n. One who commands a yacht; one who sails in a yacht.

YACHT'ING, n. Sailing on pleasure excursions in a yacht.

YACHT'ING, a. Relating to a yacht or yachts; as, a yachting voyage.

YÄGERS, n. [Ger. jäger, a huntsman.] A title of honour given to certain regiments of light infantry, in the armies of various German states. Such regiments were originally composed of jäger or huntsmen, whence the name. Jäger is also a name applied to a footman who stands behind a carriage, corresponding with the English tiger. It is likewise the general name for a huntsman; as, Jäger chor, the Huntsman's chorus.

YA'HOO, n. A name given by Swift, in one of his imaginary voyages, to a race of brutes, having the form of man and all his degrading passions. They are placed in contrast with the Houyhnhnms, or horses endowed with reason, the whole being designed as a satire on the human race. Chesterfield uses the term yahoo for a savage, or one resembling a savage.

YAK, n. A ruminant mammal of the bovine tribe, the Bos poephagus, or Poephagus grunniens, a small species of ox, with cylindric horns curving outward, long pendent hair, and villous, horse-like tail; the grunting ox of Pennant. This animal is found in Thibet among the mountains; its bushy tail, when white, is much prized, and is used in India as an emblem of authority and greatness, and as a distinguishing mark of wealth.

YAM, n. A large esculent tuber or root produced by various plants of the genus Dioscorea, growing in tropical climates. The common West Indian yam is produced by D. alata; the East Indian yams are produced by D. globosa

Yam (Dioscorea globosa).

rubella, and purpurea. The D. atropurpurea grows in Malacca, and produces tubers which, like those of D. purpurea, are of a purple colour. Yams, when roasted or boiled, form a wholesome, palatable, and nutritious food. The yam sometimes grows to the length of three feet, and weighs thirty pounds. [See DISCOREA.]

YÄM'A, or DHERMARA'JAH, n. The Hindoo Pluto, regent of the south or lower division of the world, mythologically called Patala, or the infernal YAR'AGE,† n. Furniture; equipage; tackling.

YÄRD, n. [Sax. geard, gerd, gyrd, a rod, that is, a shoot.] 1. A measure of three feet or 36 inches.—2. [Sax. gyrdan, to inclose; Dan. gierde, a hedge, an inclosure; gierder, to hedge in, Sw. gärda.] The British standard measure of length, equal to three feet or 36 inches. A square yard contains nine square feet, and a cubic yard 27 cubic feet.—2. A pole or rod three feet long for measuring a yard. The yard in front of a house is called a court, and sometimes a court-yard. A small piece of inclosed ground, particularly adjoining a house.—3. An enclosure within which any work or business is carried on; as a brick-yard, a wood-yard, a tanning yard, &c.—4. In ships, a long cylindrical piece of timber, having a rounded taper toward each end, and slung by its centre to a mast. The use of the yards is for spreading square sails upon. All yards are either square or lateen, the former being suspended across the masts at right angles, the latter obliquely.—Yard of land. [See YARD-LAND.]

YÄRD-ARM, n. [yard and arm.] Either half of a ship's yard, from the centre or mast to the end.—Yard-arm and yard-arm, the situation of two ships lying along side of each other, so near that their yard-arms cross or touch.

YÄRD-LAND, n. A quantity of land, in England, different in different counties. In some counties it was 15 acres; in others 20, or 24, and even 40 acres.

YÄRD-STICK, or YÄRD-MEASURE, n. [yard and stick.] A stick or rod three feet in length, used as a measure of cloth, &c.

YÄRD-WAND, n. [yard and wand.] A measure of a yard; now yard-stick.

YARE,† a. [Sax. gearw, prepared; from the root of gear. See EAGER.] Ready; quick; dextrous; eager. A term used by sailors; as, be yare at the helm.

YARELY,† adv. Readily; dextrously; skilfully.

YARN, n. [Sax. gearn; G. Ice. and Sw. garn; D. garen.] 1. Spun wool; woollen thread; but it is applied also to other species of thread, as to cotton and linen.—2. In rope-making, one of the threads of which a rope is composed. It is spun from hemp.—3. Among seamen, a story spun out by a sailor for the amusement of his companions; thus, to spin a long yarn, is to tell a long story.

YÄRR,† v. i. [Low L. hirrio; Celtic, gar, W. garw, rough.] To growl or snarl, as a dog.

YAR'RISH, a. Having a rough dry taste. [Local.]

YAR'ROW, n. [Sax. gearwe; Sp. yaro.] A name given to several British plants of the genus Achillæa. They are also known by the name of Mitfoil,—which see.

YAT'AGHAN, n. A sort of curved knife or short scimitar, much worn in Turkey. It is also written Ataghan.

YATE, in the north of England, is used for gate. [Scotch yett.]

YAUP, v. i. [Old Eng. yawlp.] To yelp; to cry out like a child or a bird. [Scotch.]

YAUP, a. Hungry. [Scotch.]

YAW, n. The African name of a raspberry.

YAW, v. i. To rise in blisters, breaking in white froth, as cane juice in the sugar works. [Qu. yew. See YEW.] —2. In navigation, to deviate from the line of her course in steering, as a ship.

YAW, n. A temporary deviation of a ship or vessel from the direct line of her course.

YAWL, n. A small ship's boat, usually rowed by four or six oars.—2. The smallest boat used by fishermen.

YAWN'ING, n. The act of gaping or opening wide.

YAWN'INGLY, adv. In a yawning manner.

YAWS, n. [African yaw, a raspberry.] A disease called, by Good, Rubula, from rubus, a raspberry. It is characterized by cutaneous tumours, numerous and successive; gradually increasing from specks to the size of a raspberry; one, at length, growing larger than the rest; core, a fungous excrescence; fever slight, and probably irritative merely. It is commonly supposed to be contagious, and to occur but once during life; but both of these points are doubtful. It is sometimes called frambœsia, a barbarous name, derived from the French framboise, a raspberry. There are two varieties of this disease, which differ considerably; the one occurring in Africa, the other in America. It is scarcely known in Europe.

YCLAD', pp. Clad. [This word and the following retain the y, which is the remains of the Saxon ge prefixed to verbs. But it is obsolete, except in poetry, and perhaps in burlesque only.]

Y-CLEP'ED, pp. of Sax. ge-clypian, clepan, to call. [See YCLAD.] Called; named. It is obsolete, except in burlesque.

YDRAD,'† pp. Dreaded.

YE, pron. [Sax. ge.] The nominative plural of the second person, of which thou is the singular. But the two words have no radical connection. Ye is now used only in the sacred and solemn style. In common discourse and writing, you is exclusively used.

But ye are washed, but ye are sanctified; 1 Cor. vi.

YEA, adv. (yē or yā.) [Sax. gea, geac; G. D. and Dan. ja; Sw. jaka, to consent. Qu. G. bejahen, to affirm.] 1. Yes; a word that expresses affirmation or assent. Will you go? yea. It sometimes introduces a subject, with the sense of indeed, verily, truly, it is so.

Yea, hath God said, Ye shall not eat of every tree in the garden? Gen. iii.

Let your communication be yea, yea; nay, nay; Matth. v.

2. It sometimes enforces the sense of something preceding; not only so, but more.

Therein I do rejoice; yea, and will rejoice; Phil. i.

3. In Scripture, it is used to denote certainty, consistency, harmony, and stability.

All the promises of God in him are yea, and in him are amen; 2 Cor. i.

[In this use, the word may be considered a noun.] Yea is used only in the sacred and solemn style. [See YES.]

YEA, n. (yē or yā.) An affirmative vote; one who votes in the affirmative. It is equivalent to Ay or Aye. The yeas and nays are those members of a legislative body, who vote in the affirmative and in the negative of a proposition.

YEAD, } YEDE, } † v. i To go.

YEAN, v. i. [Sax. eanian.] To bring forth young, as a goat or sheep; to lamb. [Obsolete or local.]

YEANED, pp. Brought forth.

YEANLING, n. The young of sheep; a lamb. [Obsolete or local.]

YEAR, n. [Sax. gear; G. jahr; Sans. jahran; probably a course or circle; the root gar, ger, signifying to run.] 1. The period of time during which the earth makes one complete revolution in its orbit, or it is the space or period of time which elapses between the sun's leaving either equinoctial point, or either tropic, and his return to the same. This is the solar year, and the year, in the strict and proper sense of the word. It is called also the tropical year. This period comprehends what are called the twelve calendar months. It is not quite uniform, but its mean length is about 365 days, 5 hours, 48 minutes, and 48 seconds. The return of the seasons depends upon it. In popular usage, however, the year consists of 365 days, and every fourth year of 366; a day being added to February, on account of the excess of the solar year above it.—2. The time in which any planet completes a revolution; as, the year of Jupiter or of Saturn.—3. The time in which the fixed stars make a revolution, is called the great year.—4. Years, in the plural, is sometimes equivalent to age or old age; as, a man in years. In popular language, year is often used for years. The horse is ten year old.—Sidereal year, the time between the sun's leaving any point among the fixed stars and his return to the same; that is, the time of the sun's apparent revolution in the ecliptic. This is 365 days, 6 hours, 9 minutes, and 11·5 seconds. The excess of the sidereal above the solar year, arises from the retrograde motion of the equinoctial points, owing to which the sun returns to either equinoctial point or either tropic, before returning to the same fixed star.—Anomalistical year, the time that elapses from the sun's leaving its apogee, till it returns to it; which is 365 days, 6 hours, 14 minutes nearly.—Civil year, the year of the calendar, consisting of 365 days, and every fourth year of 366 days.—Bissextile or leap year, the year consisting of 366 days.—Lunar year, consists of 12 lunar months.—Lunar astronomical year, consists of 12 lunar synodical months, or 354 days, 8 hours, 48 minutes, 36 seconds.—Common lunar year, consists of 12 lunar civil months, or 354 days.—Embolismic or intercalary year, consists of 13 lunar civil months, and contains 384 days.—Julian year, established by Julius Cesar, consists of 365 days, 6 hours.—Gregorian year, is the Julian year corrected, and is the year now generally used in Europe. From the difference between this and the Julian year, arises the distinction of Old and New Style. [See STYLE.]—Sabbatic year, among the Israelites, was every seventh year, when their land was suffered to lie untilled. The civil or legal year, in England, formerly commenced on the 25th day of March. This practice continued throughout the British dominions till the year 1752. [See TIME.]—A year and day, in law, the lapse of a year with a day added to it, a period which determines a right, or works prescription; as in the case of an estray, if the owner does not claim it within that time, it becomes forfeited to the lord; so of a wreck, &c. In Scots law, the lapse of a year and day, has several important effects, as in the case of marriage, adjudications, annus deliberandi, &c. &c.

YEAR-BOOK, n. [year and book.] A book containing annual reports of cases adjudged in the courts of England, from the time of Edward II. to that of Henry VII., published annually.* [This name has since been applied to various periodical publications, calendars, &c.; as, the Year-book of facts, &c.]

YEARED,† a. Containing years.

YEARLING, n. A young beast one year old, or in the second year of his age.

YEARLING, a Being a year old; as, a yearling heifer.

YEARLY, a Annual; happening, accruing, or coming every year; as, a yearly rent or income.—2. Lasting a year; as, a yearly plant.—3. Comprehending a year; as, the yearly circuit or revolution of the earth.

YEARLY, adv. Annually; once a year; as, blessings yearly bestowed.

YEARN, v. i. [Sax. geornian, giernan, gyrnan, earnian, to desire; to yearn; Sw. gerna, willingly; Dan. gierne, G. gern, D. gaarne. The sense is to strain, or stretch forward. We have earnest from the same root.] 1. To be strained; to be pained or distressed; to suffer.

Falstaff, he is dead,
And we must yearn therefore. Shak.

2. Usually, to long; to feel an earnest desire; that is, literally, to have a desire or inclination stretching toward the object or end; to feel great internal uneasiness from longing desire, from tenderness or pity; 1 Kings iii.

Joseph made haste, for his bowels did yearn upon his brother; Gen. xliii.

Your mother's heart yearns toward you Addison.

Anticlus, unable to control,
Spoke loud the language of his yearning soul. Pope.

YŌLD,† for Yielded.

YŌLK, n. 1. The yellow part of an egg; the vitellus. [See YELK.]—2. The unctuous secretion from the skin of sheep, which renders the pile soft and pliable. —3. The vitellus, a part of the seed of plants, so named by Gærtner, from its supposed analogy with the yolk of an egg. It is characterized as very firmly and inseparably connected with the embryo, yet never rising out of the integuments of the seed in germination, but absorbed, like the albumen, [see WHITE and PERISPERM,] for the nourishment of the embryo. When the albumen is present, it is always situated between it and the embryo. In the grasses it forms a scale between the embryo and albumen. It is considered by Smith as a subterraneous cotyledon.

YON, YOND,† YON'DER, a. [Sax. geond. This seems to be formed from gan, to go, or its root, and signifies properly gone; or it is from geonan, to open; whence distant. The G. jener, and D. gins, ginder, may be the same word or from the same root.] Being at a distance within view.

Yonder men are too many for an embassy. Bacon.

Read thy lot in yon celestial sign. Milton.

Yon flowery arbors, yonder alleys green Milton.

Note.—Yon is obsolete, except in poetry.

YON,† YOND,† YON'DER, adv. At a distance within view. When we use this word, we often point the hand or direct the eye to the place or object.

First and chiefest, with thee bring Him that yon soars on golden wing. Milton.

Yonder are two apple-women scolding. Arbuthnot.

YOU [Sax. eow, iu, iuch; G. euch; Arm. chuy; D. gu or yu, thou.] 1. The nominative and objective plural of thou. Although it is strictly applicable only to two or more persons, it is commonly used when a single person is addressed, instead of thou and thee; but properly with a plural construction; as, you are, you were, &c. When emphatical, it is pronounced with its full open sound, so as to rhyme with view; but when not emphatical, it falls into the sound of the antiquated form ye.

In vain you tell your parting lover,
You wish fair winds may waft him over. Prior.

He that despiseth you, despiseth me; Luke x.

2. You is used, like on in French, for any one. This at a distance looks like a rock; but as you approach it, you see a little cabin.

YOUNG, a. (yung.) [Sax. iong, geong; G. jung; Arm. yaouncq; W. ieuanc; Sans. yuwana; L. juvenis. Qu. Ch. Syr. Heb. and Sam. ינק, yunak, to suck, or Goth. yuggs, young. The Welsh makes the word a compound, and the origin is not evident.] 1. Not having been long born; being in the first part of life; not old; used of animals; as, a young child; a young man; a young fawn.—2. Being in the first part of growth; as, a young plant; a young tree.—3. Ignorant; weak; or rather, having little experience.

Come, elder brother, thou 'rt too young in this. Shak.

YOUNG, n. The offspring of animals, either a single animal, or offspring collectively. The cow will take care of her young, as will the hen. Animals make provision for their young.

YOUNGER, a. comp. (yun''ger.) Not so old as another. A person of ninety years old is younger than one of a hundred, though certainly not a young man, nor in the first part of life.

YOUR, a. pronom. (yure.) [from you; Sax. eower; G. euer.] 1. The possessive form of you when the thing possessed follows; as, your book, otherwise the possessive form is yours; as, this book is yours; I have no pen, give me yours. When emphatical it is always pronounced full and open, like the noun ewer; but when not emphatical, it generally sinks into yur, like the last syllable of law-yer. The same remark applies to yourself, yourselves. —2. Belonging to you; equally applicable to both numbers; as, your father; your heart; your prince; your subjects.—3. It is used indefinitely.

Your medalist and your critic are much nearer related than the world imagine. Addison.

YOURSELF, pron. plur. Yourselves. [your and self.] A word added to you, to express distinction emphatically between you and other persons. This work you must do yourself; or you yourself must do it; that is, you and no other person. Sometimes it is used without you.

Allow obedience, if yourselves are old. Shak.

2. It is used as the reciprocal pronoun. You love only yourself; you have brought this calamity on yourselves; be but yourselves.

YOUTH, n. (yūth.) [Sax. iuguth, iugoth, iogoth, geogath; Goth. yuggs; G. jugend; D. jougd.] 1. The part of life that succeeds to childhood. In a general sense, youth denotes the whole early part of life, from infancy to manhood; but it is not unusual to divide the stages of life into infancy, childhood, youth, and manhood. In this sense, the word can have no plural.

Those who pass their youth in vice, are justly condemned to spend their age in folly. Rambler.

2. A young man. In this sense it has a plural.

Seven youths from Athens yearly sent. Dryden.

YOUTHLY,† a. Young; early in life.

YOUTHY, a. Young. [Bad, and not used.]

YPIGHT,† a. Fixed, that is, pitched.

YPOINT'ING,† a. Pointing; directed to.

Heaven ypointing pyramid. Milton.

YT''TRIA, n. [so called from Ytterby, a quarry in Sweden.] A metallic oxide, or earth, having the appearance of a white powder, which is insipid, insoluble in water, and infusible. It dissolves in acids, forming sweetish salts, which have often an amethyst colour. It has no action on vegetable colours. Yttria seems to be a protoxide of yttrium, its metallic base. It was discovered in 1794, by Professor Gadolin, in a mineral found at Ytterby, called from him gadolinite. It also occurs in yttro-cerite and yttro-tantalite.

YT''TRIOUS, a. Pertaining to yttria; containing yttria; as, the yttrious oxide of columbium.

YT'TRIUM, n. The metallic base of yttria. It was first obtained pure in 1828, by Wöhler. Its texture is scaly, its colour grayish-black, and its lustre perfectly metallic. It is a brittle metal, and is not oxidized either in air or water, but when heated to redness it burns with splendour, even in atmospheric air, and with far greater brilliancy in oxygen gas. This metal, or rather its oxide, is so rare as not to admit of any useful application.

YTTRO-CE'RITE, n. A mineral occurring very sparingly at Finbo and Brodbo, near Fahlun in Sweden, imbedded in quartz. Its colour is violet-blue, inclining to gray and white. It is sometimes white. These colours generally alternate in layers, in the same specimen. It occurs crystallized and massive, and consists of fluoric acid, yttria, oxide of cerium, and lime. Before the blow-pipe it is infusible, but loses its colour and becomes white. It is acted on by acids, and the solution gives a precipitate soluble in carbonate of ammonia.

YTTRO-COL'UMBITE, YTTRO-TAN'TALITE, n. A mineral species, of which there are three varieties—the yellow, the dark, and the black—found at Ytterby, in Sweden. They are composed of columbic acid, tungstic acid, yttria, lime, oxide of uranium, and oxide of iron, the principal ingredients being columbic acid and yttria. The whole are infusible before the blow-pipe; but they decrepitate, and assume a light colour. They dissolve with borax; but are not acted upon by acids.

YU, n. The Chinese name for nephrite or jad,—which see.

YUC'CA, n. A genus of American plants, nat. order Liliaceæ. The species are handsome plants, with copious white panicled flowers, extremely elegant, but destitute of odour. The leaves are long, numerous, simple, rigid or coriaceous, and pungent. There are several species, known by the name of Adam's needle. Y. gloriosa, or common Adam's needle, is much prized on account of its panicle of elegant flowers, which attain a height of ten or twelve feet.

Yucca gloriosa.

YUCK, v. i. To itch. [Local.]

YUCK, n. The itch, or scabies. [Vulgar Scotch.]

YUFTS, n. Russia leather, prepared from ox hides in a peculiar manner.

YUG, } n. In the mythology of India, an YOG, } age; one of the ages into which the Hindoos divide the duration or existence of the world.

YU'LAN, n. A beautiful flowering tree of China. The Magnolia yulan, a tree of thirty or forty feet, in its native country; but, in European gardens, of not more than twelve feet.

YULE, n. [Sax, iule, geohol, gehul, geol; Arm. gouel, gouil, a feast; W. gwyl, a holiday.] The common Scottish name for Christmas, or the feast of the nativity of our Saviour. In ancient times it was the current name for Christmas in England, and also for the feast at Lammas-tide.

Note.—It would appear to have been originally one of the three great festivals in the year, observed by the ancient Goths, namely Yule or Jul, celebrated at the time of the winter solstice, in honour of the sun.

Masks, singing, dancing, yule-games. Burton, Anat. of Mel.

The mistletoe ceremonial of the yule festival continued from the time of the Druids. Stukely.

YULE'-LOG, } n. A large block of YULE'-BLOCK, } wood, often a tree-root, forming the basis of a Christmas fire in the olden time.

YUNX, n. A genus of scansorial birds; the wryneck,—which see.

YURT, n. The name given to houses or huts, whether permanent or movable, of the natives of northern Asia or Siberia.

YUX,† n. [Sax. yeox.] A hiccough.

YUX,† v. i. To hiccough.

Z.

Z, THE last letter of the English Alphabet, is a sibilant articulation, and is merely a vocal S. It bears the same relation to s, as v does to f. With us it has not a compound sound, nor is it a double consonant, as in the Italian and German. It is as simple in its sound as S. The words in English which begin with z, are all derived from other languages, mostly from the Greek. As a numeral, Z stands for 2000, and with a dash over it, $\bar{Z}$, for 2,000,000. It is pronounced zed, and its vulgar or local name is izzard.

ZA'BAISM. See SABIANISM.

ZABUCA'JO NUTS, n The fruit of Lecythis zabucajo, a South American plant, having a peculiar seed vessel which opens by a lid. [See PYXIDIUM.] The nuts are occasionally used as a dessert.

ZAC'CHO, n The lowest part of the pedestal of a column.

ZAFFAR, } n. Impure oxide of cobalt.
ZAFFIR, } The residuum of cobalt,
ZAF'FRE, } after the sulphur, arsenic, and other volatile matters, have been expelled by calcination; so that it is a gray or dark gray oxide of cobalt, mixed with a portion of silex. Zaffre is employed for painting pottery ware and porcelain of a blue colour. The blue of zaffre is the most solid and fixed of all the colours that can be employed in vitrification. It is also used in the manufacture of cobalt.

ZAIM, n. A Turkish chief or leader.

ZAM'BO, n. The child of a mulatto and a negro; also sometimes of an Indian and a negro.

ZA'MIA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Cycadaceæ. The species are found in the tropical parts of America, and also at the Cape of Good Hope and in New Holland. They consist of trees with a single cylindrical trunk, increasing by the development of a single terminal bud, and covered by the scaly bases of the leaves. The stems of all the Zamias abound in a mucilaginous juice which has a nauseous odour, and an unpleasant taste, arising from the existence in it of a peculiar proximate principle. This may be removed by boiling, roasting, &c., when some of them form a nutritious article of food. The pith of Z. cycadis, Bread-tree Zamia, after being prepared in a particular way, is formed into cakes, baked, and eaten by the Caffres and Hottentots. Z. spiralis produces large cones composed of nuts about the size of a chestnut, which are eaten by the natives of New Holland.

ZA'MITE, n. A fossil plant of the genus Zamia.

ZANNICHEL'LIA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Naiadaceæ. There is but a single species. Z. palustris, marsh horned-pond-weed; a native of ponds, ditches, and rivulets in most parts of Europe. The stem is from twelve to eighteen inches long, thread-shaped, branched, and floating.

ZANO'NIA, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Cucurbitaceæ. There is but a single species, Z. indica, the climbing Indian cucumber, the fruit of which has the flavour of the cucumber.

ZANTHOPIC'RINE, } n. A bitter
XANTHOPIC'RINE, } crystalline substance, obtained from the bark of Xanthoxylum clava Herculis. Its properties are little known.

ZAN'TIOTE, } n. A native of Zante,
ZAN'TIOT, } one of the Ionian islands.

ZA'NY, n. [It. zanni, a buffoon.] A merry-andrew; a buffoon.

ZA'NY, v. t. To mimic.

ZA'NYISM, n. The state or character of a zany.

ZAPH'ARA, n. A mineral used by potters to produce a sky colour in their wares.

ZAP'OTE, n. In Mexico, the general name of fruits which are roundish and contain a hard stone.

ZÄR'NICH, n. [See ARSENIC.] A name given to the native sulphurets of arsenic, sandarach or realgar, and orpiment.

ZAX, n. An instrument used by slaters for cutting and dressing slates.

ZA'YAT, n. A Burman caravansary or resting place for travellers.

ZEA, n. In nat. hist., the generic name of maize. Two species only of Zea are known; viz., Z mays and Z. caragua. The former is common Indian-corn; the latter is quite different as respects the ear and seeds. [See MAIZE.]

ZEAL, n. [Gr. ζηλος; L. zelus.] Passionate ardour in the pursuit of any thing. Excessive zeal may rise to enthusiasm. In general, zeal is an eagerness of desire to accomplish or obtain some object, and it may be manifested either in favour of any person or thing, or in opposition to it, and in a good or bad cause.

Zeal, the blind conductor of the will. Dryden.

They have a zeal of God, but not according to knowledge; Rom. x.

A zeal for liberty is sometimes an eagerness to subvert, with little care what shall be established. Johnson.

ZEAL, v. i. To entertain zeal.

ZEALED,† a. Filled with zeal.

ZEALLESS, a. Wanting zeal.

ZEALOT, n. (zel'ot.) One who engages warmly in any cause, and pursues his object with earnestness and ardour. It is generally used in dispraise, or applied to one whose ardour is intemperate and censurable. The fury of zealots was one cause of the destruction of Jerusalem.

ZEALOT'ICAL, a. Ardently zealous [Little used.]

ZEAL'OTISM, n. The character or conduct of a zealot.

ZEAL'OTRY, n. Behaviour of a zealot. [Rarely used.]

ZEALOUS, a. (zel'us.) Warmly engaged or ardent in the pursuit of an object.

Being thus saved himself, he may be zealous in the salvation of souls. Law.

ZEALOUSLY, adv. (zel'usly.) With passionate ardour; with eagerness.

It is good to be zealously affected always in a good thing; Gal. iv.

ZEALOUSNESS, n. (zel'usness.) The quality of being zealous; zeal.

ZE'BRA, n. A pachydermatous mammal, the Equus zebra, a quadruped of Zebra (Equus zebra).

Southern Africa, nearly as large as a horse, white, with numerous brownish-black bands of greater or less intensity, and lighter down the middle of each band. The zebras graze in herds on the steep hill side, and seek the wildest and most sequestered spots, so that they are extremely difficult of approach, not only from their watchful habits and great swiftness of foot, but also from the inaccessible nature of their abode. They are incapable of being tamed, unless they are taken very young. There is another species of zebra, E. burchellii, which inhabits the plains of South Africa, beyond the Orange river. It is a beautiful animal, having the ears and tail more like those of the horse than the preceding species, which approaches the ass in these particulars. It admits of being tamed to a certain extent, but even in its most tractable state it is described as wicked, treacherous, obstinate, and fickle. The zebras belong to the family that contains the horse and the ass.

ZE'BRA PLANT, n. The Calathea zebrina, called zebra plant from the stripes on its leaves.

ZE'BRA WOOD, n. A kind of wood used by cabinet-makers, produced by the Omphalobium lamberti, belonging to the nat. order Connaraceæ.

ZE'BU, n. A ruminant mammal of the bovid tribe, the Taurus indicus or Bos indicus of the naturalists. This bovine Zebu (Taurus indicus).

quadruped varies in size, from a large mastiff dog to a full grown European bull. It is ordinarily furnished with a fatty excrescence or hump on the shoulders, which has been said sometimes to reach the weight of fifty pounds. It is found extensively in India, and also in Northern Africa. It is often called the Indian bull or ox, and cow. The zebus are used as beasts of burden, and their flesh is used as an article of food, especially the hump, which is esteemed as a great delicacy.

ZE'BUB, n. A large and noxious fly of Abyssinia.

ZE'CHIN, n [It. zecchino; Fr. sequin.] A Venetian gold coin, worth about nine shillings sterling; usually written Sequin,—which see. If named from Zecha, the place where minted, this is the correct orthography.

ZECH'STEIN, n. [Ger.] In geol, a magnesian limestone. It lies immediately under the red sandstone and above the marl slate of the magnesian limestone formation.

ZED, ZEE, The names of the letter Z.

ZED'OARY, n. A medicinal root, belonging to Curcuma zedoaria, a plant growing in the East Indies, whose leaves resemble those of ginger, only they are longer and broader. It comes in oblong pieces, about the thickness of the little finger, and two or three inches in length. It is a warm stomachic.

ZEIN, ZEINE, n. The gluten of maize; a substance of a yellowish colour, soft, insipid, and elastic, procured from the seeds of Zea mays or Indian corn. It is said to differ essentially from the gluten of wheat.

ZEMIN'DAR, n. [from zem, zemin, land.] In India, a feudatory or landholder who governs a district of country and collects the revenues of his district for the government. To assist him in the collection of these, the police of the district is under his control, and he holds a police court. A portion of land is assigned to him as subsistence-allowance, and as collector of the revenue he has a per centage (generally ten per cent.) upon the amount collected. In those districts, however, which are in the possession of the British government, the zemindars are recognized as hereditary proprietors of the soil, and the amount of revenue to be paid to government is settled at a fixed rate.

ZEMIN'DARY, ZEMIN'DAREE, n. The office or jurisdiction of a zemindar; the land possessed by a zemindar.

ZENA'NA, n. The apartments of the ladies of a Mahomedan family; a seraglio.

ZEND, n. A language that formerly prevailed in Persia.

ZEND'AVESTA, n. [Pers. living word.] The sacred book of the Guebers or Parsees, ascribed to Zoroaster, and reverenced as a bible, or sole rule of faith and practice. It is written in the Zend language, and is often called Zend, by contraction.

ZEN'DIK, n. In Arabia, an infidel; an atheist.

ZE'NIK, n. In zool., a quadruped; the suricate or four-toed weasel.

ZE'NITH, n. [Fr.; It. zenit; Sp. zenit or cenit. We have not found the oriental original.] The top of the heaven or vertical point; the upper pole of the celestial horizon; that point in the visible celestial hemisphere, which is vertical to the spectator, and from which a line drawn perpendicular to the plane of the horizon, would, if produced, pass through the earth's centre, supposing the earth a perfect sphere. The opposite pole of the celestial horizon is termed the nadir, and a vertical line or plane will, if produced, pass through the zenith and nadir, the spectator's place being considered as the centre of the celestial sphere. A plumb line, hanging freely and at rest, is directed to the zenith and nadir. All vertical circles or azimuths necessarily pass through the zenith.

ZE'NITH DISTANCE, n. The zenith distance of a heavenly body is its distance from the zenith measured on the vertical circle which passes through the body. It is equal to the complement of the altitude when the body is above the horizon, and to the depression increased by 90° when the body is below the horizon.

ZE'NITH SECTOR, n. An astronomical instrument for measuring with great accuracy the zenith distances of stars which pass near the zenith. It is also used in trigonometrical surveys for determining the difference of latitude of two stations, by observing the difference of the zenith distances of the same star, at the two stations, as it passes the meridian. It consists essentially, as its name implies, of a portion of a divided circle. [See SECTOR.]

ZE'OLITE, n. [Gr. ζεω, to boil, to foam, and λιθος, stone.] A class of earthy minerals, so named originally by Cronstedt, from their boiling and swelling when heated by the blow-pipe. Many substances have been confounded under this name, particularly such as are fusible by the blowpipe without addition, and exhibit a phosphoric brilliancy at the moment of fusion. Haüy makes two species of zeolite, which he calls mesotype and stilbite. Werner makes four subspecies, which he calls mealy zeolite, fibrous zeolite, radiated zeolite, and foliated zeolite. He makes zeolite a generic name, and Jameson, who adopts this theory, arranges in this family prehnite, zeolite, apophyllite, cubicite, called by Haüy analcime, chabasite, cross-stone, laumonite, dipyre, natrolite, and wavellite. According to Dr. Thomson, the zeolites, chemically considered, are, double hydrous, aluminous silicates. Under this head are included apophyllite, talc, harmotome, ittnerite, karpholite, levyne, laumonite, mesolite, natrolite, pyrophillite, steatite, thomsonite, agalmatolite, analcime, chabasite, comptonite, stilbite, zeuxite, and various other minerals.

ZEOLIT'IC, a. Pertaining to zeolite; consisting of zeolite, or resembling it.

ZEOLIT'IFORM, a. Having the form of zeolite.

ZEPH'YR, ZEPH'YRUS, n. [L. zephyrus; Gr. ζεφυρος.] The west wind; and poetically, any soft, mild, gentle breeze. The poets personify Zephyrus, and make him the most mild and gentle of all the sylvan deities.

Mild as when Zephyrus on Flora breathes. Milton.

ZER'DA, n. An animal of the canine genus, found in the desert of Zaara, beyond mount Atlas. It is about ten inches in length, with a pointed nose, long whiskers, large black vivid eyes, and remarkably swift of foot. Its colour is a yellowish pale brown. It belongs to the genus Megalotis of Illiger.

ZE'RO, n. [It.] Cipher; nothing. The point of a thermometer from which it is graduated. Zero, in the thermometers of Celsius and Reaumur, is at the point at which water congeals. The zero of Fahrenheit's thermometer is fixed at the point at which the mercury stands when immersed in a mixture of snow and common salt, and is 32° below the freezing point of water. In Wedgewood's pyrometer, the zero corresponds with 1077° on Fahrenheit's scale. [See THERMOMETER.]

ZEST, n. [Pers. zistan, to peel.] 1. A piece of orange or lemon peel, used to give flavour to liquor; or the fine thin oil that spurts out of it when squeezed; also, the woody thick skin quartering the kernel of a walnut.—2. Relish; something that gives a pleasant taste; or the taste itself.

ZEST, v. t. To give a relish or flavour to; to heighten taste or relish.—2. To cut the peel of an orange or lemon from top to bottom into thin slips; or to squeeze the peel over the surface of any thing.

ZE'TA, n. A Greek letter, Z, ξ, or ζ, and corresponding to our zed. It is the sixth letter in the Greek alphabet.—2. A little closet or chamber, with pipes running along the walls, to convey into it fresh air, or warm vapour from below.

ZETET'IC, a. [Gr. ζητεω, to seek.] That seeks; that proceeds by inquiry. The zetetic method in mathematics, is that used in investigation, or the solution of algebraical problems. [The term is now disused.]

ZETE'TIC, n. A seeker. [This name was taken by some Pyrrhonists.]

ZETET'ICS, n. A name given to that part of Algebra which consists in the direct search after unknown quantities. It is now disused.

ZETIC'ULA, n. A small withdrawing room.

ZEUG'LODON, n. An extinct species of whale.

ZEUG'MA, n. [Gr. ζευγμα, from ζευγνυω, to join. See YOKE.] A figure in grammar by which an adjective or verb which agrees with a nearer word, is, by way of supplement, referred to another more remote. Thus in Virgil, "Hic illius arma, hic currus fuit;" where fuit, which agrees directly with currus, is referred also to arma.

ZEUS, n. A genus of acanthopterygious fishes, remarkable for their roundish or oval compressed form. To this genus belongs the species, called doree, dory, and John Dory, (Z. faber.) It grows to about 12 or 15 inches in length, and is well known on our coasts. Its flesh is esteemed delicious food. [See DOREE.] Another species is the Z. opah, or opah dory, which inhabits the seas of warm and temperate regions, and has occasionally been found in those of Britain. It measures between four and five feet in length.

ZEUX'ITE, n. A zeolitic mineral found in Cornwall.

ZEUZ'ERA, n. A genus of nocturnal moths, belonging to the family Hepialidæ. A British species, Z. æsculi, is known to collectors under the name of the wood leopard.

ZEY'LANITE, In mineral., Ceylanite,—which see.

ZIB'ET, ZIB'ETH, n. [See CIVET.] A digitigrade carnivorous mammal, belonging to the genus Viverra, the V. zibetha. This is a small quadruped somewhat resembling a weasel. It is found on the Asiatic coast, and in some of the larger islands of the Indian Archipelago. It differs in several respects from its African congener the civet, (V. civetta), but it secretes an odoriferous substance which resembles that of the civet, and is perhaps equally prized.

ZIBE'THUM, n. A name given to the unctuous odoriferous substance secreted by the zibet.

ZIG'ZAG, a. Having sharp and quick turns or flexures.—Zig-zag moulding, in arch., a species of moulding much used in early Norman architecture. It consists of diagonal lines placed in alternate order. It is also termed chevron and dancette. [See these terms.] —Zig-zag stem, in bot., a stem which forms angles alternately from right to left, and the reverse, as in statice reticulata.

ZIG'ZAG, n. Something that has short turns or angles, as a line, the stem of of a plant, &c.

ZIG'ZAG, v. t. To form with short turns or angles.

ZIG'ZAGGED, pp. Formed with short turns.

ZIG'ZAGGING, ppr. Forming with short turns.

ZIL'LAH, n. In the East Indies, a local division of a country; a shire or county.

ZIMB, n. [Arab.] An insect translated hornet in scripture, and which is considered to be identical with the zimb or dog-fly of Abyssinia, as described by Bruce. It is supposed to be a species of Tabanus.

Zimb, from Bruce's Travels.

ZI'MENT WATER, COP'PER WATER, n. A name given to water found in copper mines; water impregnated with copper.

ZIMOME. See ZYMOME.

ZINC, n. [G. Sw. and Dan. zink] A metal frequently called spelter in commerce. It has a strong metallic lustre, and a bluish white colour. Its texture is lamellated and crystalline, and its specific gravity about 7. It is a hard metal, being acted on by the file with difficulty; and its toughness is such as to require considerable force to break it when the mass is large. At low or high degrees of heat it is brittle, but between 250° and 300°, it is both malleable and ductile, and may be rolled or hammered into sheets of considerable thinness, and drawn into wire. Its malleability is considerably diminished by the impurities which the zinc of commerce contains. It fuses at 773°, and when slowly cooled, crystallizes in four or six sided prisms. Zinc undergoes little change by the action of air and moisture. When fused in open vessels, it absorbs oxygen and forms the white oxide called flowers of zinc. Heated strongly in air it takes fire and burns with a beautiful white light, forming oxide of zinc. Zinc is found in considerable abundance. It does not occur in the native state, but is obtained from its ores which are chiefly the sulphuret, or zinc blende, and the carbonate or calamine. The oxide of zinc is a fine white powder insoluble in water, but very soluble in acids which it neutralizes, being a very powerful base, of the same class as magnesia. It combines also with some of the alkalies. Several of the salts of zinc are employed in medicine, as the sulphate or white vitriol, the chloride or butter of zinc, the acetate and the cyanuret. Sheet-zinc is now largely employed for lining water cisterns, baths, &c., for making spouts, pipes, for covering roofs, and several other architectural purposes. Plates of this metal are used as generators of electricity in voltaic batteries, &c.; they have also been recently employed in the operation of transferring printing. Zinc is much employed in the manufacture of brass and other alloys. A new application of this metal has been lately announced, namely, that of producing what is termed the electric light, to be used as a substitute for gas.

ZINCIF'EROUS, a. [zinc and L. fero.] Producing zinc: as, zinciferous ore.

ZINCK'Y, a. Pertaining to zinc, or having its appearance.

> Some effervesce with acids, some not, though soluble therein, as to the zincky part. Kirwan.
> The zincky ores are said to be grayer than other ores. Kirwan

ZINC'ODE, n. The positive pole of a galvanic battery.

ZINCO'GRAPHER, n. [zinc, and Gr. γραφω, to write or engrave.] One who draws or writes on zinc plates.

ZIN'COGRAPHIC, ZIN'COGRAPHICAL, a. Relating to zincography.

ZINCOG'RAPHY, n. The art of drawing or writing on zinc plates as a substitute for stones.

ZINC'OUS, a. Pertaining to zinc, or to the positive pole of a voltaic battery.

ZIN'GIBER, n. Ginger, a genus of plants, nat. order Zingiberaceæ. The species are natives of hot climates, but the one best known to us, is the Z officinalis, the root of which is the well known Jamaica ginger of the shops. [See GINGER.]

ZINGIBERA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of plants, of which the genus Zingiber is the type. The species are all tropical plants or nearly so, the greater number inhabiting various parts of the East Indies. They are generally objects of great beauty, on account of the development of their floral envelopes, and the rich colours of their bracts; but they are chiefly valued for the sake of the aromatic and stimulating properties of the rhizoma or root, such as are found in ginger, galangale, zedoary, cardamoms, &c.

ZINK'ENITE, n. A steel-gray ore of antimony and lead.

ZI'ON, n. A mount or eminence in Jerusalem, the royal residence of David and his successors. Hence,—2. The theocracy or church of God.

ZIR'CON, n. Called also jargon of Ceylon, a mineral originally found in Ceylon, in the sands of rivers, along with spinel, sapphire, tourmalin, and iron sand. Zircon, hyacinth, and zirconite, are regarded as varieties of the same species. They are essentially composed of zirconia, with silex, and a minute portion of iron. The primitive form of the crystals is an octahedron, composed of two four-sided prisms. The common form is a rectangular four-sided prism.

ZIRCO'NIA, n. An oxide of the metal zirconium, discovered by Klaproth, the year 1789, in the zircon of Ceylon, and subsequently in the hyacinth of Expaily in France. It resembles alumine in appearance. It is so hard as to scratch glass. When pure it is a white powder. It forms salts with acids.

ZIR′CONITE, n. A variety of the zircon.

ZIRCO′NIUM, n. The metallic basis of zirconia. Berzelius first obtained zirconium in 1824; but Davy had previously rendered its existence quite probable. It is commonly obtained in the form of a black powder. Its metallic character is questioned by some.

ZIV′OLO, n. A bird resembling the yellow hammer, and by some considered as the same species.

ZIZA′NIA, n. The Greek name of Lolium temulentum or darnel. [See DARNEL.]

ZIZ′EL, n. A rodent mammal, the Arctomys citillus. It is found in Russia and Germany, and also in Asia. It is the suslik, often called the earless marmot. It is a small quadruped.

ZI′ZYPHUS, n. A genus of plants, nat. order Rhamnaceæ. The species are shrubs with alternate leaves, spiny stipules, and mucilaginous fruit, which is edible. Z. vulgaris, or common jubube, is a native of Syria, and is now cultivated in many parts of Europe. In Spain and Italy, the fruit is eaten as a dessert, and in the winter season as a dry sweetmeat. Z. spina Christi, is known under the name of Christ's thorn. It is a native of North Africa, Palestine, Ethiopia and Egypt. There are numerous other species.

Zizyphus vulgaris.

ZOANTHA′RIA, n. [Gr. ζωον, a living animal, and ανθος, a flower.] Animal flowers, the third class of Zoophytes, according to Blainville, corresponding with the Zoophyta Helianthoida of Johnston. They are flower-shaped, more or less elongated, very contractile, and have a terminal opening with variously shaped tentacula. They include four families, Lucernariadæ, Actiniadæ, Zoanthidæ, and Madreporidæ.

ZOAN′THUS. [See ZOANTHARIA.] A genus of Zoophytes, type of the group Zoantharia,—which see.

ZOC′CO, ZO′CLE, ZOC′COLO, n. [It. zoccolo; from L. soccus, a soak.] A square body under the base of a pedestal, &c., serving for the support of a bust, statue or column.

ZO′DIAC, n. [Fr. zodiaque; It. and Sp. zodiaco; L. zodiacus; Gr. ζωδιακος, from ζωον, an animal.] 1. An imaginary belt or zone in the heavens, extending about 8° on each side of the ecliptic. It is divided into 12 equal parts, called signs. [See SIGN.] It was distinguished by the ancients because the apparent places of the sun, moon, and the planets known to them were always within it. This, however, is not true of all the newly discovered planets.—2. A girdle.

ZODI′ACAL, a. Pertaining to the zodiac; as, zodiacal signs; zodiacal planets.—Zodiacal light, a luminous track of an elongated triangular figure, lying nearly in the ecliptic, its base being on the horizon, and its apex at varying altitudes. In the evening after twilight, it is in this latitude most conspicuous about the months of April and May, or at the opposite seasons before sun-rise. Its nature is unknown.

ZO′HAR, n. [Heb.] A Jewish book of cabalistic commentaries on scripture, and highly esteemed by the rabbis.

ZOIS′ITE, n. [from Van Zois, its discoverer.] A mineral regarded as a variety of epidote. It occurs in deeply striated rhomboidal prisms, much compressed and rounded; its colours gray, yellowish or bluish gray, brown, grayish yellow, or reddish white.

ZOLL′VEREIN, n. [Ger. zoll, toll, custom, duty; and verein, union or association.] The Prussian or German commercial or customs union, founded, through the example and efforts of the government of Prussia, in the year 1834, and having for its object the establishment of a uniform rate of customs duties throughout the various states joining the union.

ZONE, n. [L. zona; Gr. ζωνη.] 1. A girdle.

An embroider'd zone surrounds her waist. Dryden.

2. In geography, a division of the earth, with respect to the temperature of different latitudes. The zones are five, the torrid zone, extending from tropic to tropic; two temperate or variable zones, situated between the tropics and polar circles; and two frigid zones, situated between the polar circles and the poles.—3. In nat. hist., a band or stripe running round an object.—4. Circuit; circumference.—5. In bot., applied to the circles of wood in dicotyledonous or exogenous stems. Also different belts of vegetation which occur in mountains.—Ciliary zone, in anat., the black impression of the ciliary processes on the vitreous humour of the eye.

ZONED, a. Wearing a zone.—2. Having zones or concentric bands.

ZONELESS, a. Destitute of a zone.

ZON′NAR, ZO′NAR, n. A belt or girdle which the Christians and Jews in the Levant are obliged to wear, to distinguish them from the Mahomedans.

ZOOCARP. See ZOOSPERE.

ZOOCAR′PIA, n. In bot., a genus of plants.

ZOOG′RAPHER, n. [See ZOOGRAPHY.] One who describes animals, their forms and habits.

ZOOGRAPH′ICAL, a. Pertaining to the description of animals.

ZOOG′RAPHIST, n. One who describes or depicts animals.—2. A zoologist.

ZOOG′RAPHY, n. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and γραφω, to describe.] A description of animals, their forms and habits. [But zoology is generally used.]

ZOOL′ATRY, n. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and λατρεια, to worship.] The worship of animals.

ZO′OLITE, n. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and λιθος, stone.] An animal substance petrified or fossil.

ZOOL′OGER,† n. A zoologist.

ZOOLOG′ICAL, a. [from zoology.] Pertaining to zoology, or the science of animals.

ZOOLOG′ICALLY, adv. According to the principles of zoology.

ZOOL′OGIST, n. [from zoology.] One who is well versed in the natural history of animals, or who describes animals.

ZOOL′OGY, n. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and λογος, discourse.] That part of natural history which treats of the structure, habits, classification, habitations, &c., of all animals, from man to the lowest of all the tribes. Thus zoology treats of all those beings comprized in the term "animal kingdom." It embraces comparative anatomy, animal physiology, and all the great questions relating to the succession of species of animals upon the earth, the parts which they play in the theatre of nature, and the geographical distribution of existing species; another branch, termed descriptive zoology, is restricted to the outward characters, habits, properties, and the classification of animals. Various systems of classification have been framed by zoologists. Linnæus divided the animal kingdom into six classes, viz., mammalia, birds, fishes, amphibials, insects, and worms (vermes). Cuvier gives a more definite arrangement. He divides the animal kingdom into four sub-kingdoms, viz., vertebrata, mollusca, articulata, and radiata. [See these terms.] The term zoology is sometimes used in a more restricted sense, to signify the natural history of quadrupeds or mammalia, which, however, is more correctly termed therology, and is thus distinguished from ornithology, ichthyology, entomology, &c.

ZOON′IC, a. [Gr. ζωον, an animal.] Pertaining to animals; obtained from animal substances.—Zoonic acid, a name given by Berthollet to acetic acid, combined with animal matter, and obtained by distilling animal matter.

ZOON′OMY, n. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and νομος, law.] The laws of animal life, or the science which treats of the phenomena of animal life, their causes and relations.

ZOOPH′AGA, n. A name given to those tribes of animals which attack and devour living animals, such as the lion, the tiger, the wolf, &c.

ZOOPH′AGAN, n. One of the zoophaga.

ZOOPH′AGOUS, a. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and φαγω, to eat.] Feeding on animals.

ZO′OPHITE. See ZOOPHYTE.

ZOOPHOR′IC, a. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and φερω, to bear.] The zoophoric column is one which supports the figure of an animal.

ZOOPH′ORUS, n. [supra.] In ancient arch., the same with the frieze in modern architecture; a part between the architrave and cornice; so called from the figures of animals carved upon it.

ZO′OPHYTE, n. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and φυτον, a plant.] 1. In nat. hist., a body resembling an animal and a vegetable, and once supposed to partake of the nature of both, such as madrepores, millepores, corallines, &c.—2. The zoophytes, or zoophyta, form a great division of the animal kingdom, comprehending beings which are always evidently more simple in organization than in the other divisions, and which have their parts more or less distinctly arranged round an axis, a disposition which frequently gives them the shape of flowers, and hence the name, which signifies living plants, or plant-like animals. This division contains the starfishes and sea-eggs, as well as the actiniæ, corals, and corallines. Cuvier applies the name radiata to the zoophytes, and arranges them under five classes, viz., echinodermata, entozoa, or intestinal worms, acalepha, or sea-nettles, polypi, and infusoria.

ZOOPHYT'IC, ZOOPHYT'ICAL, a. Relating to zoophytes.

ZOOPHYTOLOG'ICAL, a. Pertaining to zoophytology.

ZOOPHYTOL'OGY, n. [zoophyte, and Gr. λογος, discourse.] The natural history of zoophytes.

ZOOSPERM. See ZOOSPORE.

ZO'OSPORE, n. A spore occurring in cryptogamic plants, having cilia or moving processes projecting from its surface. Such spores move about in water for a certain length of time.

ZOOTOM'ICAL, a. [See ZOOTOMY.] Pertaining to zootomy.

ZOOT'OMIST, n. [See ZOOTOMY.] One who dissects the bodies of animals; a comparative anatomist.

ZOOT'OMY, n. [Gr. ζωον, an animal, and τεμνω, to cut.] The anatomy of the lower animals; that branch of anatomical science which relates to the structure of brute animals; comparative anatomy.

ZOPH'ORUS. See ZOOPHORUS.

ZOPIS'SA, n. A sort of pitch scraped off the sides of ships, and tempered with wax and salt.

ZOR'IL, ZOR'ILLE, n. A fetid animal, a mere variety of the Mephitis Americana, or skunk, found in South America. [In Sp. zorro is a fox, and zorillo the whelp of a fox.]

ZOS'TER, n. [L. from Gr. ζωννυμι, to gird.] In med., a kind of erysipelas, which goes round the body like a girdle.

ZOS'TERA, n. The grass-wrack or sea-wrack, a genus of plants. [See GRASS-WRACK.]

ZOS'TERITE, n. A fossil plant of the genus Zostera.

ZOS'TEROPS, n. A genus of perching birds, closely allied to the warblers, and seemingly intermediate between them and the titmice. One distinguishing characteristic of the species belonging to this genus is, that the eyes are encircled by a ring of snow-white feathers. Hence they have been named white-eye. They are small birds, found chiefly in Africa, Asia, and Australia.

ZOTHE'CA. [Gr.] In ancient arch., a small apartment or alcove.

ZOUNDS. An exclamation, contracted from "God's wounds;" formerly used as an oath, and an expression of anger or wonder.

ZOZ'YMUS, n. The name given by Leach to a genus of brachyurous crustaceans.

ZUF'FOLO, n. [It. zufolo, from zufolare, to hiss or whistle, L. sufflo.] A little flute or flageolet, especially that which is used to teach birds.

ZU'MATE. See ZYMATE.

ZUMBOO'RUK, n. [Zumboor, a wasp.] In the East, a small cannon supported by a swivelled rest on the back of a camel, whence it is fired. There were many such in the Sikh armies.

ZU'MIC. See ZYMIC ACID.

ZUMOLOG'ICAL, a. [See ZUMOLOGY.] Pertaining to zumology. [This word should be written Zymological.]

ZUMOL'OGIST, n. One who is skilled in the fermentation of liquors. [This word should be written Zymologist.]

ZUMOL'OGY, n. [Gr. ζυμη, ferment, from ζυμοω, to ferment, and λογος, discourse.] A treatise on the fermentation of liquors, or the doctrine of fermentation. [This word should be written Zymology.]

ZUMO'METER, ZUMOSIM'ETER, n. [Gr. ζυμωσις, fermentation, or ζυμη, ferment, and μετρεω, to measure.] An instrument proposed by Swammerdam for ascertaining the degree of fermentation occasioned by the mixture of different liquids, and the degree of heat which they acquire in fermentation. [This should be written Zymometer or Zymosimeter.]

ZUR'LITE, n. A newly discovered Vesuvian mineral, whose primitive form is a cube, or according to some authors, a rectangular prism.

ZYGÆ'NA, n. A genus of chondropterygious fishes, belonging to the shark family, and distinguished by the horizontally flattened head, truncated in front, its sides extending transversely like the head of a hammer; whence the species have received the common name of hammer-headed sharks. They are found in the Mediterranean and Indian seas.

ZYGÆ'NIDÆ, n. A tribe of lepidopterous insects, of the family Crepuscularia, Cuvier. The antennæ, which are always terminated in a point destitute of a tuft, are sometimes simple in both sexes, fusiform or resembling a ram's horn, &c. The caterpillars live exposed on various leguminous plants. The Zygæna filipendula is a common British species.

ZYGODAC'TYLI, ZYGODAC'TYLES, n. The name given by Temminck and others, to an order of perching birds which have their feet composed of two anterior and two posterior toes, the external toe of the two latter being capable of a direction either forward or backward. The parrots, woodpeckers, toucans, cuckoos, &c., belong to this order.

ZYGODACTYL'IC, ZYGODAC'TYLOUS, a. [Gr. ζυγοω, to join, and δακτυλος, a finger.] Having the toes disposed in pairs; distinguishing an order of fowls which have the feet furnished with two toes before and two behind, as the parrot, woodpecker, &c.

ZYGO'MA, n. In anat., the process of the cheek-bone, a bone of the upper jaw.

ZYGOMAT'IC, a. [Gr. ζυγωμα, a joining.] Pertaining to a bone of the head, called also os jugale, or cheek bone, or to the bony arch under which the temporal muscle passes. The term zygoma is applied both to the bone and the arch.—Zygomatic arch. [See ZYGOMATIC.]—Zygomatic bone, the cheek bone.—Zygomatic muscles, two muscles of the face, which rise from the zygomatic bone, and are inserted into the corner of the mouth.—Zygomatic processes, the processes of the temporal and cheek bones, which unite to form the zygomatic arch.—Zygomatic suture, the suture which joins the zygomatic processes of the temporal and cheek bones.

ZYGOPHYLLA'CEÆ, n. A nat. order of polypetalous exogenous plants, nearly related to Oxalidaceæ and Rutaceæ. The species are herbs, shrubs, and trees, having a very hard wood, and the branches often articulated. The greater part of them are distributed throughout the temperate regions. To the order belong the Caltrops (Tribulus), the Bean-caper (Zygophyllina), Lignum vitæ (Guaiacum), honey-flower (Melianthus), &c.

ZYGOSTAT'ES, n. [Gr. ζυγμα and στατος.] The clerk of a market who examines the weights and measures.

ZYM'ATE, ZU'MATE, n. A supposed compound of the imaginary zymic acid with a base. As there is no such acid there can be no such salt.

ZYM'IC-ACID, ZU'MIC-ACID, n. [Gr. ζυμη, ferment.] A supposed peculiar acid obtained by the acetous fermentation of vegetable substances. No such peculiar acid exists.

ZYMOLOGY, n. See ZUMOLOGY, &c.

ZYM'OME, ZIM'OME, n. [Gr. ζυμη.] One of the supposed proximate principles of the gluten of wheat. It is a tough substance, insoluble in alcohol. There are doubts as respects the existence of zymome as a truly distinct substance.

ZYMO'METER. See ZUMOMETER.

ZYTHEP'SARY, n. A brewery, or brew-house.

ZY'THUM, n. [Gr. ζεω, to boil.] A beverage; a liquor made from malt and wheat.

CYCLOPEDIA OF AGRICULTURE,

PRACTICAL AND SCIENTIFIC;

IN WHICH

The Theory, the Art, and the Business of Farming,

IN ALL THEIR DEPARTMENTS, ARE THOROUGHLY AND PRACTICALLY TREATED.

BY UPWARDS OF

FIFTY OF THE MOST EMINENT FARMERS, LAND AGENTS, AND SCIENTIFIC MEN OF THE DAY.

EDITED BY

JOHN C. MORTON,

EDITOR OF "THE AGRICULTURAL GAZETTE."

With above One Thousand Illustrations on Wood and Steel.

"Practice with Science."

PROSPECTUS.

The object of this Work is to present to the Agricultural reader the whole of the truth immediately connected with his profession, so far as it is known to the men most familiar with the sciences it involves, the methods it employs, and the risks it incurs. For this purpose, every topic requiring discussion has been placed in the hands of those with whom it has been a matter of personal experience and study.

Agriculture is so extensive a subject, that no one writer can speak from personal knowledge on all its departments; and it is a subject so variable with circumstances, and therefore so liable to misrepresentation, that no other kind of knowledge is worth communicating. Many previous attempts have been made to condense in one Work all existing information on Agricultural affairs; but the Authors, or Editors, however skilful in recording their own experience, and however successful there, have never had equal success in conveying the experience of others. The Agriculturist, in daily contact with Nature, requires the assistance of those who have had personal acquaintance with her laws and requirements: writers retailing an experience at second hand upon these points, can neither be accurate nor full enough for his purpose.

In offering, therefore, to the Agriculturists of Great Britain a Cyclopedia of Agriculture, Practical and Scientific, intended to be a standard book of reference on all the subjects of which it treats, we should greatly mistake the exigencies of the times did we present a mere compilation of bygone information, which, however interesting in itself, can be of little real use to the practical man.

The only way in which the knowledge of his art can be brought down to the present day; its various methods—detailed with accuracy for his information; and the explanations given of their success or failure, which the now more perfect Theory of Agriculture has furnished; is to place every department of the wide subject in the hands of those who have made it their especial study.

To accomplish this desirable object has been the great aim of the Editor and Publishers of the CYCLOPEDIA OF AGRICULTURE; and for this purpose the assistance of our most distinguished agricultural writers has been engaged. Each separate topic will be discussed by its own student, in order that the whole may be presented as perfectly as possible. The reader will therefore receive no mere compilation of other works—he will, in every section of the subject, be instructed by the man who has made it his especial study. Thus, even in the "Calendar of Farm Operations," which might, perhaps harmlessly, have been a mere abstract of previous publications on farm practice, the successive sentences have been penned by those who have themselves carried out the processes described, or the instructions suggested: and in that one appendage to the Work, the details of farm operations are given as actually practised in twenty different counties of Scotland and England by more than twenty of our most successful farmers and cultivators.

As regards the body of the Work, the names of its writers,—a list of which is appended to this Prospectus,—are sufficient guarantee for the practical value of the performance. A Work on the Theory and Art of Agriculture, of which the several departments are undertaken by such contributors, may well command confidence.

The Dictionary form has been adopted, as the most accessible, and admitting of the easiest reference. But care will be taken to avoid frittering away the contents down to a succession of mere dictionary definitions: the various sections of the Science and Practice of Farming will be discussed in substantial readable articles; interspersed, however, with shorter illustrated statements descriptive of the grasses and the weeds of the farm; and the Entomological department will also be distributed through the Work, so as to destroy any risk of a dull or monotonous appearance pervading it. And it may be advisable to add, that while it will be the aim of every writer to give information to the cultivator which shall be useful in the field and in actual farm practice, the requisite clearness and precision of its arrangement will often render the use of scientific terms unavoidable, in consequence of those which are, in ordinary use, or are merely provincial, conveying different ideas in different localities. Thus, while the articles on the cultivation of oats, barley, rye, wheat, &c., are given under the ordinary names of their plants, about which no mistake can arise, those which describe our various weeds, grasses, and insects, will be given under their scientific names, for their popular names are too variable in their signification to be used with safety. The provincial names, wherever known, will be inserted in their proper alphabetical position, with references to the titles under which the subjects are treated. This seems necessary to be said, lest any one, by a cursory examination of the early numbers of the Work should be led, by the frequent appearance of botanical and entomological titles, to conceive that any of the articles it contains are written merely for the scientific reader. This would be altogether a mistaken idea: for we repeat, that the Work is designed strictly and exclusively for the useful information of the practical farmer and agricultural student.

Illustrations on wood and steel, of Farm Buildings, Insects, Plants, cultivated and uncultivated, Agricultural Machines, Implements and Operations, &c., will be given wherever it is presumed they can be useful.

CONDITIONS.

The Work will be published in Parts, 2s. 6d. each, Super Royal 8vo. It is expected that the whole will be completed in about 24 Parts; but a considerable portion of the Book being yet to be received from the Contributors, it is not possible to say the precise number of Parts to which it will extend. However, it is the desire both of the Editor and Publishers to restrict the Work as nearly to the extent indicated as may be found consistent with fully carrying out the plan sketched in the Prospectus.

A LIST OF THE WRITERS,

FOR

The Cyclopædia of Agriculture,

ARRANGED ACCORDING TO THE NATURE OF THEIR CONTRIBUTIONS.

THEORY OF AGRICULTURE.

Its BOTANY, including the PHYSIOLOGY of Plants and BOTANICAL DESCRIPTIONS of those which are cultivated in our climate, also of Grasses, Weeds, &c. (Fully Illustrated by Wood Engravings) . . .	JOHN LINDLEY, Ph.D., F.R.S., Professor of Botany, University College, London, &c.
DISEASES OF PLANTS, ...	Rev. M. J. BERKELEY, M.A., F.L.S., King's Cliffe, Wansford.
Its CHEMISTRY, ...	LYON PLAYFAIR, Ph.D., F.R.S. JOHN THOMAS WAY, Consulting Chemist to the Royal Agricultural Society of England, and Hon. Mem. R.A.S.E.
Its ENTOMOLOGY, including DESCRIPTIONS and ILLUSTRATIONS of the INSECTS which injure or benefit our Crops, and affect Cattle, ...	JOHN CURTIS, F.L.S., Author of "British Entomology," "Reports on Economic Entomology," in the Royal Agricultural Journal, &c. &c.
Its GEOLOGY, ...	JOHN MORTON, F.G.S., Tenant of Whitfield, Berkeley, Gloucestershire. JOSHUA TRIMMER, F.G.S., of the National Geological Survey.
Its HISTORY and GENERAL PHILOSOPHY,	C. WREN HOSKYNS, B.A.

ART OF AGRICULTURE.

The EDUCATION of its Practitioners, . .	C. WREN HOSKYNS, B.A.
Its PECULIARITIES, in ENGLAND, . . .	PHILIP PUSEY, Esq., M.P., Pusey, Berkshire.
FLANDERS, . . .	F. G. J. van den BOSCH, of Wilhelminadorp, Goes, Holland.
IRELAND, . . .	Rev. W. HICKEY, M.A., Rector of Mulrankin, Co. Wexford.
SCOTLAND, . .	JOHN HAXTON, Tenant of Drummond, Cupar Fife.
Its MACHINES, fully Illustrated by Engravings on Wood and Steel,	JOHN C. MORTON, Whitfield, Berkeley, Gloucestershire.
Its BUILDINGS and ROADS, .	JAMES NEWLANDS, C.E., Borough Engineer, Liverpool.
The SOIL: VALUATION, SURVEYING, ENCLOSURES,	JOHN BRAVENDER, Land Agent, Cirencester.
IMPROVEMENT of BOGS and WASTES,	Rev. W. HICKEY, M.A., Rector of Mulrankin, Co. Wexford.
DRAINING, ...	JOHN GIRDWOOD, F.R.S.S.A., Estate Agent and Agricultural Engineer, Chirk, North Wales.
MANURING, ...	J. HANNAM, Tenant, Kirk Deighton, Wetherby, Yorkshire.
CULTIVATION, ...	JOHN HAXTON, Cupar Fife, late Editor of the Dublin Farmer's Gazette.
DOMESTIC ANIMALS and their Management—
COMPARATIVE ANATOMY, DISEASES, &c. The HORSE, its Breeds and Management,	W. C. SPOONER, Veterinary Surgeon, Southampton.
The OX, its Breeds and Management, The SHEEP, its Breeds and Management,	Messrs. JAMES CAIRD, Baldoon, Wigtonshire; J. A. CLARKE, Long Sutton, Lincolnshire; Colonel LE COUTEUR, Bellevue, Jersey; H. STRAFFORD, Editor of the Short-horn Herd Book; G. TURNER, Farmer, of Barton, Exeter; E. F. WELLES, Pershore, Worcestershire; JOHN WILSON, Tenant, Edington Mains, Berwickshire; and A. T. WILSON, Dunse, Lammermuir.
The HOG, its Breeds and Management,	JOHN HANNAM, Kirk Deighton, Wetherby, Yorkshire.
The DOG, RABBIT, PIGEON, GOAT, ASS,	H. D. RICHARDSON, Dublin, Author of various works on the Domesticated Animals, "The Pests of the Farm," &c.
The ALPACA, ...	W. WALTON, Author of "The Alpaca, its Naturalization, &c. in Britain."
The BEE, ...	J. WIGHTON, Costessey Hall, Norfolk.
POULTRY, ...	Rev. E. S. DIXON, M.A., Rector of Intwood-with-Keswick, Norfolk.

ART OF AGRICULTURE (Continued).

THE DAIRY,	Messrs. HAXTON of Fifeshire; PALIN, Farmer, Stapleford Hall, Cheshire; STALLARD, of Leicester; TUCKER, of Bridport.
CULTIVATED PLANTS — including CROPS, GRASSES, and TREES,	Messrs. ROBERT BAKER, Land Agent and Tenant, Writtle, Essex; J. A. CLARKE, of Lincolnshire; HEWITT DAVIS, Land Agent, of 8, Frederick-place, Old Jewry, London; J. H. DICKSON, Flax-dressser and Agent, of Skinner-street, Bishopgate-street, London; WM. GORRIE, Farm Manager and Factor, Ford, Mid-Lothian; JOHN and JAS. GRIGOR, of the Norwich and Forres Nurseries; JOHN HAXTON, of Fife; J. C. MORTON, Whitfield, Gloucestershire; J. M. PAINE, of Farnham, Surrey; HUGH RAYNBIRD, Land Agent, Laverton, Hampshire; WM. ROACH, Farmer, of Whitfield, Gloucestershire; JAMES SMEED, of St. Peter's, Thanet, Kent; ROBERT THOMSON, of the Horticultural Society's Gardens, Chiswick, London; JOHN TOWERS, of Croydon, Surrey; T. TUCKER, of Bridport.
ROTATION OF CROPS,	J. CAIRD, Tenant of Baldoon, Wigtonshire.
PASTURE FARMING,	Messrs. J. A. CLARKE, of Lincolnshire; J. W. CLARK, Tenant of Timsbury, Romsey, Hampshire; J. HANNAM, Yorkshire.
CALENDAR OF OPERATIONS, in ARABLE, MEADOW, DAIRY, and STOCK FARMING,	Messrs. BRAVENDER, CAIRD, J. A. CLARKE, J. W. CLARK, GLENDINNING of Chiswick, GORRIE, HAXTON, J. C. MORTON, PAINE, PALIN, RAYNBIRD, RICHARDSON, ROACH, RUSSELL, SMEED, SPOONER, STALLARD, THOMSON, TOWERS, TUCKER, JOHN WILSON, A. T. WILSON, J. WIGHTON.
AGRICULTURAL SOCIETIES,	J. C. MORTON,
AGRICULTURAL STATISTICS,	J. C. MORTON.
EFFECT OF CLIMATE on the ART,	R. RUSSELL, Tenant, of Kilwhiss, Cupar-Fife.
DOMESTIC ECONOMY—BREAD, BEER, CIDER, MEAT, &c.,	J. TOWERS, Cor. Mem. of the Hort. Soc.; Croydon, Surrey. WILLIAM EWART, Cattle Salesman, Newcastle-on-Tyne.

BUSINESS OF FARMING.

RELATION of LANDLORD and TENANT,	C. WREN HOSKYNS, B.A. JOHN GRAY, Dilston, Agent for the Greenwich Hospital Estates in Northumberland. J. DEAN, Land Agent, Tottenham, Essex. JOHN MORTON, Land Agent and Tenant of Whitfield, near Berkeley, Gloucestershire. JOHN C. MORTON.
RELATION of TENANT and LABOURER,	J. ILDERTON BURN, of the Labourer's Friend Society. Rev. W. HICKEY, M.A. ALEXANDER SOMERVILLE, Manchester; late of Berwickshire. J. C. MORTON.
INVESTMENT of CAPITAL,	J. C. MORTON.
FARM ACCOUNTS,	THOMAS C. MORTON, Accountant, Manchester.
MARKETS, SALES, &c.,	J. HAXTON, Fifeshire.
LAWS RELATING to AGRICULTURE,	J. G. BALL, Solicitor, Stroud, Gloucestershire. J. BRIGHT, M.P., Rochdale. C. WREN HOSKYNS, B.A.
